The "Grenada," 684 tons register, bound from Singapore to Liverpool, with a general cargo, fell in, when about four days' sail from Chili, with the barque "Golondrina," 475 tons register, laden with a cargo of copper regulus, bound from Chanaval, in Chili, for Swansea, and in distress, her first and second mate having deserted her previously to her departure from Chanaval, and her master having jumped overboard in a deranged state of mind from drinking. At the request of the crew of the barque, the master of the "Grenada" put on board her his second mate, who, after great difficulty, brought the barque safely into Swansea. The value of the property saved amounted to 26,000*l.* The court awarded to the salvors 1,800*l.*—1,000*l.* to the owners, 300*l.* to the second mate, 200*l.* to the master, and 300*l.* to the crew, to be distributed according to their ratings. The Golondrina, L. R. 1 A. & E. 334.

Salvage services were rendered by four steamers; one had come into collision with the vessel salved, and was found to blame, and she rendered the principal services. The value of the property salved was 22,200*l.*:—Held, that the three vessels not to blame were entitled to reward. And the court awarded 310*l.* The Glengaber, 41 L. J., Adm. 84; L. R. 3 A. & E. 534; 27 L. T. 386; 21 W. R. 168.

Twenty-five men, the crews of four boats, saved the lives of ten men, and gave information to a steamboat, which rescued others. The services lasted about four hours, and were attended with much danger. Part of the cargo, of the value of 40,000*l.*, having been afterwards recovered, the court awarded the salvors of life 500*l.* Schiller, Cargo ex, 2 P. D. 145 ; 36 L. T. 714 ; 3 Asp. M. C. 226 ; 3 Asp. M. C. 439—C. A.

In a most meritorious case of salvage, where a steamship which had got aground on the shore of the Red Sea, ninety-five miles from Suez, in such a position that without help she must before many hours had elapsed have been lost with all hands on board her, was towed off the shore and to within a few miles of Suez by another steamship, the court, on a value of 62,000*l.*, awarded to the salvors 6,000*l.* The Lancaster, 9 P. D. 14 ; 49 L. T. 705 ; 36 W. R. 608 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 58—C. A.

In case of a salvage, where the services mainly consisted in towing a large steamer, disabled in her machinery, in the Atlantic Ocean, in the winter, for six and a half days into safety at Halifax, the value of the salved vessel, her cargo and freight being 90,000*l.*, and the owners of the salving vessel having incurred expenses in consequence of deviation and delay, the court made a salvage award of 5,350*l.*, awarding to the owners of the salving vessel 4,225*l.*, to her master 375*l.*, and to her crew 750*l.* The Edenmore, [1893] P. 79 ; 1 R. 574 ; 69 L. T. 230 ; 41 W. R. 654 ; 7 Asp. M. C. 334.

A vessel having got ashore on the Parkin rock, in the Red Sea, her master and part of the crew proceeded to Aden for assistance. During their absence the crew left on board were driven away by Arab wreckers, but the vessel was never permanently abandoned. Three steamers rendered valuable services to the vessel, and finally succeeded in getting her off the rocks and saving part of her cargo. The value of the vessel for the purposes of the action was taken to be 3,750*l.* The court awarded 2,000*l.* as salvage. The Erato, 57 L. J., P. 107 ; 13 P. D. 163 ; 59 L. T. 840 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 334.

The value of the property salved was 12,663*l.*, and the total award made by the court for salvage was 4,200*l.* The Killeena, supra, col. 630.

A mail steamer lost her propeller. 1,200*l.* awarded for towing her to Malta. The Ellora, Lush. 550.

A ship worth, with cargo, 13,400*l.*, struck on the Goodwins and came off leaking badly. She was assisted to Sheerness by two luggers, fourteen men pumping, and arrived with nine feet of water in her. 400*l.* awarded and the hire of two tugs. The Jan Hendrick, 1 Spinks, 181.

500*l.* awarded for towing property worth 40,000*l.* off a mud bank off Sumatra ; no risk. The Rajasthan, Swabey, 171.

A vessel was sunk at the mouth of the Thames with brandy on board. After great expense (2,300*l.*) and labour she was partly raised, and brandy worth 14,352*l.* recovered. 9,000*l.* was awarded to the salvors. The Jubilee, 3 Hag. Adm. 43, n.

A steamship bound to England fell in with another disabled in the Bay of Biscay. She towed the latter into Plymouth. The value salved was 4,060*l.* Tender of 800*l.* upheld with costs. The Paris, 1 Spinks, 289.

400*l.* awarded for getting a ship and cargo worth 17,337*l.* off the rocks, near Holyhead, by thirty-four hands and a pilot laying out anchors. The Persia, 1 Spinks, 166.

Tender of 50*l.* to three smacks for piloting a ship out of the sands at the mouth of the Thames to the Nore upheld. The Funchal, 3 Hag. Adm. 386, n.

A smack awarded 100*l.* for salvage, though she did little or no good, the real salvage being performed by others. The Albion, 3 Hag. Adm. 234.

A salvage service by smacks towing for five days : about one-fourth (1,100*l.*) of the value (4,600*l.*) awarded. The Albion, 3 Hag. Adm. 254.

A vessel supplying her mate to another in distress, her master having been drowned, awarded 1,000*l.* ; the mate having been satisfied. The Janet Mitchell, Swabey, 111.

Salvage of a steamship worth 75,000*l.*, with her shaft broken in the Red Sea, by towing her for ten days. 4,000*l.* awarded ; 3,000*l.* of which was awarded to the owners of the salving steamship. The Kenmure Castle, 7 P. D. 47 ; 47 L. T. 661 ; 30 W. R. 708 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 27.

Towing a dismasted vessel from off Ushant to Plymouth, value 12,000*l.* 1,500*l.* awarded—600*l.* to owners, 400*l.* to master, 500*l.* to crew. The Martin Luther, Swabey, 287.

Tender of twenty guineas to a pilot and six men for taking a ship ashore off Haslar into Portsmouth overruled, and eighty guineas awarded. The Nicolas Witzen, 3 Hag. Adm. 369.

Treasure to the amount of 150,000*l.* salved with difficulty by a king's ship from another king's ship sunk and abandoned. Award, 29,000*l.* for salvage and the expenses of the salving ship during the service. The Thetis, 2 Knapp, 390—P. C. See S. C., 3 Hag. Adm. 14, 98, 228.

Ship ashore on the coast of Ireland worth, with cargo, 3,960*l.* Award to coastguard officer and boat's crew who boarded the ship with some peril, 120*l.* ; to owners and crew of steamship that towed her to Cork, 330*l.* The Hebe, 7 Not. of Cas. Suppl. i.

A steamship towing another (value 21,000*l.*) with propeller broken, without much risk or difficulty, into safety, awarded 500*l.* for salvage. The Vulcan v. The Belin, 9 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 1057.

Capture from Enemy by Non-commissioned Captors.]—See The Hause, infra, col. 950.

10*l.* awarded to a boat for helping to pass a hawser from a ship ashore on a rock to a steam-tug. Walker v. North of Scotland Steam Navigation Co., 19 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 386.

A fire broke out on board a vessel which was lying alongside a jetty at the entrance to a dock. The vessel was under repairs, with no steam up, and had no one but her master and a watchman on board. At the request of her master a steamship, which had just arrived, hove alongside, and, getting her hose on board the burning vessel, extinguished the fire, which, if it had remained unchecked, would have caused very serious damage. The services were such as might have been rendered by a fire engine on shore. The value of the salved vessel was 9,500*l.* The defendants tendered 200*l.* The court upheld the tender, being of opinion that the services were not of such a character as to require that the award should be assessed upon the same liberal principles as obtain in the ordinary cases of sea salvage rendered by one ship to another. The City of Newcastle, 71 L. T. 848 ; 7 Asp. M. C. 546.

A ship and cargo worth 12,000*l.*, towed from a dangerous position on the East Hoyle bank to Hoylake in three hours by a tug or salving steamship worth 4,000*l.*, awarded 1,000*l.* The Traveller, 3 Hag. Adm. 370.

A steamship awarded 5,000*l.* for pulling another, worth 40,000*l.*, off a mud-bank (Sumatra Bank) in a position of danger, but with no danger, and delay of a few hours, to herself. The Rajasthan, Swabey, 171.

A moiety allotted to the master and sole owner. Ib.

The master and a boat's crew, at great risk to themselves, rowed to a dismasted vessel with some of her crew sick. They rigged a jury-mast, and, with their ship, a whaler, towed her for six days to Plymouth. Value, 7,000*l.* Award, 1,200*l.*; 700*l.* to owners, 200*l.* to master, 20*l.* to each boatman, and the rest to the crew according to their shares in the voyage. The Jane, 2 Hag. Adm. 338.

Two-thirds of the property awarded where the vessel sank after being got off the rocks by one set of salvors, and was afterwards weighed and brought into Harwich, and bullion on board saved. The Jonge Bastiaan, 5 C. Rob. 322. And see The Longford, supra, col. 628; The Peace, supra, col. 629.

A tubular craft, constructed for the purpose of bringing to England Cleopatra's Needle, was abandoned in the Bay of Biscay, and next day picked up and brought to England. Her value being 25,000*l.*, 2,000*l.* was awarded for salvage; 1,200*l.* to owners, 250*l.* to master, and the rest to the crew. The Cleopatra, 47 L. J., Adm. 72; 3 P. D. 144.

c. Derelict.

Rule as to Moiety.]—Derelict, being sine spe recuperandi, is distinguishable from salvage in the amount awarded. The Inca, Gore v. Bethel, 12 Moore, P. C. 189; Swabey, 370.

A moiety of the value of the vessel and cargo, in a case of the salvage of a derelict, was formerly the amount awarded, but the maritime courts now give only such amount as is fit and proper with reference to all the circumstances of the case, having regard especially to the value of the property salved. The Scindia, 4 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 84; L. R. 1 P. C. 241; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 534. S. P., The Splendid, 12 L. T. 585. The Minerva, 9 W. R. 81—P. C.

A ship on a voyage from Melbourne to London fell in with a derelict brigantine 220 miles to the westward of the Lizard, in the month of February, and put an officer and three hands on board her, who, under circumstances of great difficulty and danger, and after much hardship, brought her in safety to Liverpool. In a salvage suit instituted on behalf of the owners, master and crew of the ship, the court, after directing expenses incurred by the salvors to be paid to them out of the proceeds of the salved property, awarded more than a moiety of the residue as salvage reward. The Rasche, 42 L. J., Adm. 71; L. R. 4 A. & E. 127; 22 W. R. 240.

Two-fifths, and some additional sums to subsequent salvors, awarded. The Queen Mab, 3 Hag. Adm. 242.

A moiety of a derelict, brought in with great risk and courage, awarded. The R. M. Mills, 3 L. T. 513.

A moiety of the value awarded for salvage of a derelict. In no case where a claim has been given for a private owner has more than a moiety been awarded for salvage. L'Esperance, 1 Dods. 46.

The ancient rule of awarding salvors of derelict half the value of the property is no longer observed; the amount of salvage in such cases is now in the discretion of the court. The Aquila, 1 C. Rob. 37.

A moiety of the value of a derelict, after deduction of expenses of salvors for a tug and men to bring her in, awarded to salvors. A person who hired labourers to unload the stranded ship held not entitled to salvage award, but to remuneration for his services. The Watt, 2 W. Rob. 70.

A moiety of the value of a ship picked up derelict awarded for salvage: expense of appraisement paid out of the other moiety. The Britannia, 3 Hag. Adm. 153. Cf. The Effort, 3 Hag. Adm. 165.

Derelict Boiler.] — Where five men having found a derelict marine boiler floating in the sea, pulled it ashore and hauled it beyond high water, the court, in a default salvage action, out of 58*l.*, the net proceeds of the said boiler, awarded 50*l.* and costs. Elephant, Boiler ex, 64 L. T. 543.

See The Mark Lane, infra.

What is Derelict.]—A ship from which the crew and bullion were taken, she being in a sinking state, and her crew refusing to stay by her, treated as a derelict for salvage purposes. A moiety of the value of the bullion awarded. The Columbia, 3 Hag. Adm. 428.

—— Ship left Ashore.]—A ship and cargo are not necessarily derelict because they have been left on the Shipwash, an off-lying sand. The Barefoot, 14 Jur. 841.

—— Recapture.]—A British ship, recaptured by a man and boy from her French captors, claimed as derelict by a frigate that had rendered salvage service. One-sixth, 1,000*l.*, awarded to man and boy; 500*l.* to the king's ship:—Held, no derelict. The Beaver, 3 C. Rob. 292.

Spes Recuperandi.]—A vessel abandoned by her master and crew on the Hasborough Sands, in fear of their lives, is a derelict. The Sarah Bell, 4 Not. of Cas. 144.

For salvage purposes a ship may be derelict, though expectation of recovering her is entertained by her people. The Genessee, 12 Jur. 401.

A ship in great peril, and with women on board, was assisted by smacks, but the essential part of the salvage service was performed by a steamship that towed her clear of the sands:—Held, that the smacks were nevertheless entitled to a large award. Ib.

—— Ship Abandoned, and afterwards Returned to.]—A ship with four and a-half feet of water in her, and compasses and seamen's clothes taken away, held to be derelict. Though the master and seamen returned to her, the salvors were entitled to keep possession. The Gertrude, 30 L. J., Adm. 130.

Where the crew of a ship that had been in collision, at the moment of collision climbed on the other ship, thinking their own was sinking, and the master of the other ship refused to lend his boat for them to return to their own ship:—Held, not to be a case of derelict. The Cosmopolitan, 6 Not. of Cas., Suppl. 17.

Where during the performance of salvage services the master and crew of the salved ship went and remained on board the salving ship, which put men on the salved ship to steer her, the court refused to treat the salved ship as a derelict and award salvage on that basis. The Lepanto, [1892] P. 122; 66 L. T. 623; 7 Asp. M. C. 192.

Whole of Proceeds Awarded.]—The whole of the proceeds of a derelict of small value awarded to the salvors, no owners appearing. The William Hamilton, 3 Hag. Adm. 168.

Proceeds of a derelict brought into the Mersey by salvors, and sold as perishable, paid out upon first decree to the salvors. The Conception, 2 Hag. Adm. 175. And see The Britannia, supra, col. 642.

Amount of Award.]—The value of the property salved was 12,663*l.*, and the total award made by the court for salvage was 4,200*l.* The Anna Helena, 49 L. T. 204; 5 Asp. M. C. 142.

A derelict vessel was found in the North Atlantic Ocean, 800 miles from land, in a seriously damaged condition, and was navigated into Queenstown by salvors, who incurred great risk and hardship in rendering the service. The value of the derelict was 5,100*l.* The court awarded 2,300*l.* as salvage reward. The Craigs, 5 P. D. 186; 29 W. R. 446.

Where a derelict vessel and cargo of the value of 1,452*l.* were salved by a steamer, which, with her cargo, was of the value of 30,000*l.*, the vice-admiralty court awarded 300*l.* for salvage:—Held, that, under the circumstances, that sum was not sufficient, and the same increased to 450*l.* The True Blue, Papayanni v. Hocquard, 4 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 96; L. R. 1 P. C. 250.

Salvors having by meritorious services, rendered at the risk of their lives, salved a derelict vessel, her cargo and freight, valued together at 750*l.*, the court awarded 360*l.* as salvage remuneration. The Hebe, 4 P. D. 217.

A steamer laden with a valuable cargo, and having passengers on board, fell in with a derelict brig in the Bristol Channel, and with great difficulty, in spite of a strong wind and heavy sea, succeeded in towing her into port. The value of the brig, together with her cargo and freight, amounted to nearly 2,800*l.* The court awarded 900*l.* to the salvors. The Andrina, L. R. 3 A. & E. 286; 22 L. T. 488.

Derelict ship and cargo worth 15,000*l.* picked up by small schooner in the Irish Sea; 1,800*l.* salvage awarded: 600*l.* to owners of schooner, 400*l.* to master, 250*l.* to mate, and rest to the crew. The Caroline, 2 W. Rob. 124.

Although there is no rule fixing the amount to be awarded in cases of salvage of derelict vessels, the increased risk of loss to the salved property, the difficulty of boarding a derelict vessel without assistance from her crew, and the extra labour thrown upon those remaining on board of the salving ship by placing some hands on board the derelict, are elements tending to augment the award in such cases. The Janet Court, 66 L. J., Adm. 34; [1897] P. 59; 76 L. T. 172; 8 Asp. M. C. 223.

Where a tug was engaged by the crew of two smacks to tow a derelict into port, but through the mistake of the tug the vessel got aground, whereupon the tug went in search of assistance, and some beachmen took possession of the vessel and brought her into harbour, a liberal salvage was awarded to the smacksmen. The Atlas, 15 Moore, P. C. 329; 31 L. J., Adm. 210; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 753; 6 L. T. 737; 10 W. R. 850.

A derelict was found at sea by salvors, who were incapable of performing the attempted service, but remained by the wreck until a second set of salvors came up, who dispossessed these first and brought it into port. The court allotted to the first set a sufficient sum to cover the expenses to which they had been put. The Magdalen, 31 L. J., Adm. 22; 5 L. T. 807.

Abandonment of Derelict by Salvors—Right to Remuneration.]—The barque "N." fell in with the "K.," a derelict barque, in the Atlantic, and put five hands on board of her, who navigated her for three days. The "K." then fell in with the barque "B.," and the five hands on board of the "K." were, at their own request, taken on board the "B." The "B." then sent some of her own crew on board the "K.," and took her in tow, and towed her till the tow-rope broke, when the vessels parted company, and the hands on board the "K.," with the assistance of the "L.," a steamship which they afterwards fell in with, brought the "K." into Falmouth. In suits instituted on behalf of the masters, owners and crews of the "N.," the "B.," and the "L.," the court held, that the masters, owners and crew of the "N." were not entitled to salvage reward, but awarded salvage to the remaining plaintiffs. The Killeena, 51 L. J., Adm. 11; 6 P. D. 193; 45 L. T. 621; 30 W. R. 339; 4 Asp. M. C. 472.

Wrongful Dispossession of First Salvors.]—See The Kathleen, supra, col. 602.

Derelict must be Brought into the Admiralty.]—See The King v. Property derelict, supra, col. 594.

Apportionment in Case of Derelict.]—See The Livietta, infra, col. 649.

d. Appeal—Reviewing Award.

Insufficient Award.]—The court of appeal will increase the amount of a salvage award, if in its opinion, considering the value of the property salved, and of the salving vessel, the award of the court below is insufficient. The City of Berlin, 47 L. J., Adm. 2; 2 P. D. 187; 37 L. T. 307; 25 W. R. 793; 3 Asp. M. C. 491—C. A. See also The True Blue, supra.

Excessive Award.]—When the court of admiralty had awarded an exceptional and excessive amount of remuneration solely from regard to the value of property salved, the judicial committee, notwithstanding their general rule of non-interference upon a question of mere discretion, reduced the amount by two-fifths. The Amérique, L. R. 6 P. C. 468; 31 L. T. 854; 23 W. R. 488; 2 Asp. M. C. 460.

An award of 30,000*l.* on a value of 190,000*l.* in the case of a derelict ship reduced to 18,000*l.*, on the ground that the award was out of proportion to the services rendered. Ib.

Where a judge had awarded 3,500*l.* for losses and 5,000*l.* for remuneration (the property saved being 67,000*l.*):—Held, that a total of 6,000*l.* was sufficient. The De Bay, Bird v. Gibb, 52 L. J., P. C. 57; 8 App. Cas. 559; 49 L. T. 414—P. C.

The court of appeal is unwilling to interfere with the judicial discretion in cases of salvage, where the quantum awarded is alone the subject of appeal. Though there is no precedent for the reduction of an amount awarded, yet in principle there can be no difference between increasing and reducing such amounts, both being equally an interference with judicial discretion. And the amount must be reduced on appeal when the sum awarded is exorbitant or manifestly excessive. The Chetah, 5 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 278; 38 L. J., Adm. 1; L. R. 2 P. C. 205; 19 L. T. 621; 17 W. R. 233.

Therefore, where the judge of the admiralty court, acting upon his own unassisted judgment, greatly overrated the value of the services rendered by the salvors:—Held, that the amount of his award must be reduced. Ib.

Deviation of Vessel.]—The court of appeal will alter an award of salvage made by the court below, where there is reason to believe that the court below has not taken into consideration the circumstance that rendering a salvage service to property alone constitutes a deviation in point of law, however small the deviation may be in point of fact. The Farnley Hall, 46 L. T. 216; 4 Asp. M. C. 499—C. A.

Discretion.]—In appeals as to the quantum of salvage allowed, the court will not interfere with or moderate the amount awarded by the admiralty court, unless that amount was exorbitant or excessive, though the court of appeal may be unable to affirm the principle on which the amount was assessed, or would have awarded a less amount than that awarded by the admiralty court. The Woburn Abbey, 21 L. T. 707—P. C.

In appeals as to the quantum awarded, the difference ought to be very considerable (to the extent of one-third at least) in order to induce the court to interfere upon a question of mere discretion. The Glenduror, Arnold v. Cowie, L. R. 3 P. C. 589; 24 L. T. 499; 1 Asp. M. C. 31.

The court of appeal will hesitate to interfere with the decision of local authorities on a question of salvage, but nevertheless is bound to act upon its own judgment if it should be of opinion that the award is wholly inadequate. The Messenger, Swabey, 191.

The appellate court will not disturb an award of salvage on the ground of the court below having awarded too large a sum, unless satisfied, beyond all doubt, that the judge has made an exorbitant estimate of the salvage services. The Fusilier, Bligh v. Simpson, 3 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 51; 34 L. J., Adm. 25; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 289; 12 L. T. 186; 13 W. R. 592.

The judicial committee is always reluctant to review cases of salvage, which involve the exercise of the discretion of the judge of the court, but being a final court of appeal, will, if the justice of the case requires it, increase the amount. The Scindia, 4 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 84; 35 L. J., P. C. 53; L. R. 1 P. C. 241; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 534—P. C.

The court of appeal in a disputed question respecting the amount of remuneration awarded for a salvage service, is indisposed, except it appears that the judgment is clearly erroneous, to interfere with the compensation which the court in its discretion has awarded. The Clarisse, 12 Moore, P. C. 340.

The amount of compensation to be awarded is in the discretion of the judge of the court of admiralty, and the judicial committee will not interfere with the manner in which that discretion has been exercised, either by diminishing or increasing the amount awarded, except in a case of very extraordinary character. The Neptune, Green v. Bailey, 12 Moore, P. C. 346.

The court of appeal is very unwilling to interfere with the judicial discretion exercised by the judge below with regard to the amount awarded for salvage services, and will not do so unless the sum awarded is other than a reasonable remuneration for the services rendered, and unless the difference is very considerable. The England, 5 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 344; 38 L. J., Adm. 9; L. R. 2 P. C. 253; 20 L. T. 46.

From the Cinque Ports.]—An appeal to the court of admiralty under 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 76, from an award of the commissioners of the cinque ports in a salvage case, is in the nature of a rehearing rather than of an appeal, and it is obligatory on the court to allow a restatement of the case and to admit fresh evidence. The court will, however, in the exercise of its discretion as to costs, discourage the giving of fresh evidence unwarrantably. The Caledonia, L. R. 4 A. & E. 11, n.; 17 W. R. 626.

Rule of Court of Appeal.]—Where a salvage award is appealed against, the court of appeal adheres to the rule laid down in the privy council, and will not alter the sum unless it has been given on wrong principles, or with a misapprehension of the facts, or it is exorbitant and out of reason. 6,000*l.* was awarded for services rendered to a steamer which had run aground on a reef in the Red Sea, nearly five miles from Suez, and which, owing to the heavy sea, and the nature of her position, was in imminent peril. The services were rendered at much peril to the salving ship. The court of appeal refused to alter this award. The Lancaster, 9 P. D. 14; 49 L. T. 705; 36 W. R. 608; 5 Asp. M. C. 174—C. A.

The court of appeal will, in a salvage action, where it appears that the judge below has misapprehended the evidence, and consequently given a wrong award, increase or diminish the award as the justice of the case may require. The Star of Persia, 57 L. T. 839; 6 Asp. M. C. 220—C. A.

The barque "Star of Persia," having taken up a foul berth in bad weather in the Downs, collided with another barque. The tug "C." towed her clear after an hour's towing, during which time her anchor and chain were slipped. After she had been got clear the tug continued to tow ahead until another anchor had been brought off from the shore by other salvors, and she was ultimately saved. Her value and that of her cargo and freight amounted in all to 23,000*l.* The court, in a salvage action against the "Star of Persia," having awarded 150*l.*, the court of appeal held that the evidence as to the danger from which the "Star of Persia" had been saved had been misapprehended, and increased the award to 300*l.* Ib.

Salvage remuneration was reduced from $12,000 to $7,500, their lordships being of opinion that the difference between the sum awarded and that which would be liberal was so large as to require correction. The Glenduror, supra, col. 645, approved and followed. The Thomas Allen, 12 App. Cas. 118; 56 L. T. 285; 6 Asp. M. C. 99—P. C.

Where a judge had awarded 3,500*l.* for losses and 5,000*l.* for remuneration (the property saved being 67,000*l.*):—Held, that a total of 6,000*l.* was sufficient. The De Bay, Bird v. Gibb, ante, col. 636. And see The City of Chester, ante, col. 636.

Where the appeal is as to the amount awarded, the rule of the privy council is similar to that of common law courts in dealing with a verdict as to damages, where the jury have attended to the judge's direction. The Carrier Dove, 2 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 243; Br. & Lush. 113.

There is no essential distinction between river and sea salvage. Ib.

In salvage cases there is no rule binding a court of appeal not to interfere with an award unless the amount is so large, or so small, that no reasonable person could fairly arrive at that sum; but the amount awarded will be diminished or increased if, after a careful consideration of the facts, and after giving every possible weight to the view of the judge, the court is of opinion that the amount is so large as to be unjust to the owners of the ship which has been in distress, or so small as to be unjust to the salvors. The Accomac, [1891] P. 349; 66 L. T. 335; 7 Asp. M. C. 153—C. A.

The privy council will not interfere with an award in a salvage case except where the difference between what has been and what ought to have been awarded is very considerable. The Clarisse, Swabey, 129, 134; 12 Moore, P. C. 340.

Award reduced.]—Salvage award reduced on appeal from 1,000*l.* to 600*l.* The General Palmer, 2 Hag. Adm. 323.

Award of Justices.]—An award of justices for salvage will not be altered upon appeal unless excessive. The Cuba, Lush. 14; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 152.

The court is unwilling to disturb an award of justices on the mere ground of amount or wrong apportionment. The Vesta, 2 Hag. Adm. 189.

Magistrates' award of 15*l.* for getting a barge ashore on the Nore Sand afloat, and taking her to Sheerness, increased on appeal to 40*l.* The Harriett, Swabey, 218.

An agreement to pay 8*s.* 6*d.* for salvage services, there being real danger to the salvors, set aside as futile. The Phantom, L. R. 1 A. & E. 58; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 529; 14 W. R. 774.

14. Apportionment.

In what Shares.]—A ship built on purpose to convey the obelisk known as Cleopatra's Needle, was, whilst laden with the obelisk, abandoned about ninety miles N.E. of Ferrol, on the coast of Spain. A steamship discovered her and lay by her for a night, and the next day four of her crew volunteered and went to the ship, and after much difficulty and at considerable risk succeeded in getting the rudder clear and a hawser attached. The steamship, after towing her for fifty-two hours, brought her into port. The court appraised the ship and obelisk at 25,000*l.*, and awarded 2,000*l.*, and apportioned the latter sum as follows, viz. 1,200*l.* to the owners of the steamship, 250*l.* to her master, and the rest among the officers and crew according to their ratings, as follows, viz. double shares to the chief officer, second engineer and other volunteers, and three shares to the seamen immersed in water while clearing the shackles and towline; the rest among the others of the crew. The Cleopatra, 47 L. J., Adm. 72; 3 P. D. 145.

After deducting from the award the costs of repairs and detention during repairs, one half of the balance apportioned to the owner of the salving steamship, the other half to the master and crew. The Spirit of the Age, Swabey, 286. Cf. The Howard, 3 Hag. Adm. 356, n.

A brig was driven out to sea short-handed, and after she had been eighty days at sea and much damaged, with only four men on board, two of them disabled, a ship placed on board of her two hands, who assisted in working her till she was brought, after twelve days, into port. The brig and her cargo were of the value of 8,174*l.*:—Held, that this was a salvage service. An award was made of 400*l.*, and it was apportioned—to the owners, 50*l.*; to the master, 50*l.*; to the crew, 100*l.*; to the men placed on board the brig, 200*l.* The Charles, L. R. 3 A. & E. 536; 26 L. T. 594; 21 W. R. 13.

In apportioning 1,500*l.*, where the services were mainly the personal exertions of the master and crew of a sailing vessel, the court awarded 500*l.* to the owners, 650*l.* to the crew, and 350*l.* to the master. The Palmyra, 25 L. T. 804; 1 Asp. M. C. 278.

Special Reward to Mate.]—Two Norwegian barques, both bound to England, fell in with each other on the high seas, about 3,000 miles from Liverpool; one of the barques was in distress, her first mate having died, and her master, her second mate and one of the crew being sick with yellow fever. The other barque was short-handed, but her mate, with the consent of her master, went on board the distressed vessel and succeeded in navigating her to Liverpool. During the voyage the master, the second mate and two of the crew died. On the arrival of the vessel at Liverpool an action of salvage was instituted against her. At the hearing of the action, the value of the salved property was taken at 5,135*l.* 13*s.* 2*d.* The court awarded 600*l.* to the mate who had gone on board the distressed vessel, 100*l.* to the owners of the salving vessel, 50*l.* to her master, and 150*l.* amongst the remaining plaintiffs. The Shibladner, 47 L. J., Adm. 84; 3 P. D. 24; 38 L. T. 150; 3 Asp. M. C. 556.

Special Reward to Master.]—Where 3,500*l.* had been awarded for salvage services rendered by a steamship, 2,000*l.* was awarded to the owners and 700*l.* to the master for his skilful navigation in dangerous circumstances, the order of the vice-admiralty court of Bermuda being varied. The Castlewood, 42 L. T. 702; 4 Asp. M. C. 278—P. C.

Where the master undertakes the responsibility of deviating from his course, and so imperilling his insurance, for the purpose of rendering salvage service, he is entitled to considerable reward. The fact that a considerable sum has been awarded to the owners of the salving vessel does not diminish the amount to which the master and crew are entitled. The Aletheia, 13 W. R. 279.

Amount to Owners.]—In a suit instituted to recover salvage reward in respect of services rendered in towing a disabled vessel into safety, the court awarded a total sum of 4,000*l.*, of which 3,000*l.* was apportioned to the owners. The Kenmure Castle, 7 P. D. 47; 47 L. T. 661; 30 W. R. 708; 5 Asp. M. C. 27.

—— Sailing Vessel or Steamship.]—In apportioning salvage reward among the owners, master and crew of a sailing vessel which has rendered salvage services, the court will not allot to the owners the same proportion of the reward as in the case of services rendered by a steamship (usually one-half), unless the circumstances shew that the vessel itself, as where the services are effected by steam power, was the chief agent in effecting the salvage. The Palmyra, 25 L. T. 884 ; 1 Asp. M. C. 182.

The capability of steamers to perform services with greater rapidity and certainty entitles them as salvors to a higher scale of reward. The Otto Herman, 33 L. J., Adm. 189.

—— On Deviation having been Occasioned.]—In a service mainly rendered by the steam power of the salving ship, and which had occasioned a deviation in point of law, and in rendering which the crew were exposed to some peril, an apportionment of two-thirds to the shipowners and one-third to the master and crew, altered to five-ninths to the shipowners and four-ninths to the master and crew, and the total award increased from 600*l.* to 900*l.*; owner's share increased from 400*l.* to 500*l.*; master's share increased from 80*l.* to 100*l.*; crew's share increased from 120*l.* to 300*l.* The Farnley Hall, 46 L. T. 216 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 499—C. A.

Custom to Share Salvage—Disproportionate Risks.]—Where there is a custom to share in salvage awards in a particular manner according to the ratings of the salvors on board their ship, yet if some of the salving crew have exposed themselves to much greater risk than the rest, the court will give them a larger share on equitable principles. The Sarah, 3 P. D. 39 ; 37 L. T. 831.

Derelict.]—The master of a Norwegian brig bound to Cardiff, with a crew of nine men, fell in, in the North Sea between Heligoland and the Dogger Bank, with a derelict vessel in a very crippled condition, and put his mate and two of his crew on board her. The mate and the two men on board the derelict, shortly after they had boarded her, fearing that she was about to founder, endeavoured to leave her, but their boat was swamped, and one of the men drifted astern, and was picked up by a fishing smack. The mate and the other hand succeeded in bringing the derelict safely into the English Channel, and within three miles of Dungeness; she was then taken in tow by a steamship and towed to the entrance of Dover Harbour, within which she was subsequently placed in safety. Actions of salvage were instituted by the owners, master and crew of the brig, and by the owners, master and crew of the steamship, against the derelict vessel and her cargo, and the court awarded a moiety of the value of the property proceeded against, and apportioned three-fifths of the amount to the owners, master and crew of the brig. The Livietta, 8 P. D. 24 ; 48 L. T. 799 ; 31 W. R. 643 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 132.

In General.]—Two tugs rendered salvage services to a ship driven from her moorings in the Bristol Channel, by towing her, in a very heavy gale, into the river Usk. The services lasted for about three hours. The value of the salved ship was 4,000*l.*, of her cargo 900*l.*, and of her freight 288*l.*; 450*l.* was awarded. The Monarch, 56 L. J., Adm. 114 ; 12 P. D. 5 ; 56 L. T. 204 ; 35 W. R. 292 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 90.

A vessel having got ashore on the Parkin Rock in the Red Sea, her master and part of the crew proceeded to Aden for assistance. During their absence the crew left on board were driven away by Arab wreckers, but the vessel was never permanently abandoned. Three steamers rendered valuable services to the vessel, and finally succeeded in getting her off the rocks and saving part of her cargo. The value of the vessel for the purposes of the action was taken to be 3,750*l.* The court awarded 2,000*l.* as salvage. The Erato, 57 L. J., Adm. 107 ; 13 P. D. 163 ; 59 L. T. 840 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 334. See also The City of Chester, ante, cols. 636, 637 ; The Agamemnon, ante, col. 637 ; and The Anna Helena, ante, col. 608.

No Fixed Rule.]—There is not any fixed rule as to apportioning a salvage award. The Gipsy Queen, 64 L. J., Adm. 86 ; [1895] P. 176 ; 11 R. 766 ; 72 L. T. 454 ; 43 W. R. 359 ; 7 Asp. M. C. 586.

Half-Shares to Non-navigating Part of Crew—Discretion.]—A large passenger steamship rendered salvage services to another passenger steamship, the amount being agreed at 12,000*l.* The court apportioned 9,200*l.* to the owners, 800*l.* to her master, and the remainder amongst the officers and crew according to their ratings, half-shares to be allotted to the surgeon, stewards, cooks and other non-navigating members of the crew. The Spree, [1893] P. 147 ; 1 R. 584 ; 69 L. T. 628 ; 7 Asp. M. C. 397.

Between Owners and Salvors.]—Apportionment of salvage, the seamen being dissatisfied with their shares. The Beulah, 1 W. Rob. 477.

Life and Property Salvors.]—Out of 1,660*l.* awarded for salvage of life and property, 980*l.* apportioned to life and 480*l.* to property salvors. The Eastern Monarch, Lush. 81.

Share of Shipowners—Policy Vitiated.]—The possible vitiating of a policy of insurance upon the salving vessel:—Held, not a reason for increasing the share of the shipowner as against the share of the crew in apportioning a sum tendered to and accepted by salvors (not now followed). The Deveron, 1 W. Rob. 180.

Expenses of Salvors.]—In apportioning the amount awarded as salvage, the court will not allow the owners of the vessel performing the service to deduct any expenses except those claimed in the petition in the salvage suit. The Wigtownshire, 36 L. J., Adm. 11.

Distribution of Salvage paid to Master—Remedy of Shipowner.]—A master receiving, under an award, salvage money from the owners of property to which he, the ship and crew, have rendered salvage services, is not bound to hand over to his owner the portion he bonâ fide conceives to be his own proper share ; the remedy of the owner is to apply to the court under s. 498 for a distribution of salvage. The Princess Helena, Lush. 190 ; 30 L. J., Adm. 137 ; 4 L. T. 869.

An owner of a ship refused to pay wages due to a master for a voyage, unless credited with salvage money received by the master under an award, and kept by him for his own share ; the master refusing to account for a subsequent voyage, except on condition of a settlement for the former voyage, without reference to the salvage money :—Held, that the payment of wages was improperly withheld, and that the master was entitled to ten days' double pay. Ib.

Where an owner thinks that a proper share of the salvage reward has not been paid to him, his proper course is to bring the share so paid to him into court, to pray for a monition to the master to do the same, and to apply for an order of distribution. Ib.

Agreement to Apportion.]—See infra.

15. AGREEMENTS TO APPORTION.

Agreement for Apportionment of Salvage.]—The 182nd section of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, does not prevent seamen who are entitled to recover salvage remuneration from entering into an arrangement, through their solicitor, for the apportionment of the amount due to them. Where the owners of a ship have received a lump sum in respect of services rendered by their ship, master and crew, and have paid over to the crew a portion of such sum, which the crew, acting under the advice of their own solicitor, have accepted in settlement of their claims for salvage, the court will not, where the portion so paid over is not extravagantly small, disturb the settlement in the absence of fraud or concealment. The Afrika, 49 L. J., Adm. 63; 5 P. D. 192; 42 L. T. 403; 4 Asp. M. C. 266.

Under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 498, the court will decree an equitable apportionment, unless an equitable agreement is proved or any equitable tender has been made. The Enchantress, Lush. 93; 30 L. J., Adm. 15; 2 L. T. 574.

When salvors have entered into an agreement as to the apportionment of salvage, which in the opinion of the court is equitable, and not obtained by coercion, the court will uphold the agreement, and apportion the salvage awarded in accordance therewith. The James Armstrong, L. R. 4 A. & E. 380; 33 L. T. 390; 3 Asp. M. C. 46.

When persons agree to render a salvage service and to apportion the salvage in a particular way, and further salvage services are rendered not contemplated by the agreement, the whole body of salvors is entitled to share in the reward, and not only those actually engaged in the further salvage operations. The Cadiz and The Boyne, 35 L. T. 602; 3 Asp. M. C. 332.

Costs of all parties were ordered to be paid out of fund in court, except a defendant's, in consequence of his misconduct to the co-salvors. Ib.

By 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 182, every stipulation by which any seaman consents to abandon any right which he may have or obtain in the nature of salvage shall be wholly inoperative. By 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 18, this section "does not apply to the case of any stipulation made by the seamen belonging to any ship which, according to the terms of the agreement, is to be employed on salvage service, with respect to the remuneration to be paid to them for salvage services to be rendered by such ship to any other ship":—Held, that these sections do not fetter the discretion of the court upon the subject of these agreements, but that their effect is to render such agreements not illegal, and to place them on the same footing on which they stood before any legislation on the subject. The Ganges, 38 L. J., Adm. 61; L. R. 2 A. & E. 370; 22 L. T. 72; 4 Asp. M. C. 317.

The plaintiff was temporary master of a steam tug in the place of B., and without any extraordinary exertion or peril rendered salvage services to a vessel in distress. The steam tug belonged to a company whose business it was to render towage and salvage services to vessels in distress. The seamen employed by the company were paid, according to a special agreement, certain fixed wages, and a fixed rate of poundage on all towage and salvage money earned by the tug. The plaintiff knew that B. was employed under this agreement. The plaintiff claimed salvage remuneration independently of the agreement:—Held, that the agreement, as it did not appear to be inequitable, was valid, and the plaintiff was bound by it, and therefore could not maintain his claim for salvage. Ib.

By the ancient law of the court of admiralty, as well as by statute law prior to 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 18, any stipulation by which a seaman agreed to abandon a claim for salvage was invalid. The Pride of Canada, 9 L. T. 546; Br. & Lush. 208.

The burden of proof is upon those who assert such an agreement to shew, not merely the existence of the agreement, but that the seamen were fully aware of all its consequences. Ib.

A steam trawler is not a vessel "to be employed on salvage service" within s. 18 of the Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act, 1862, though the agreement between the owners and seamen provides for an apportionment of any salvage earned. Sect. 182 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, does not invalidate an equitable agreement between the shipowner and seamen as to the apportionment of any salvage earned. The Wilhelm Tell, 61 L. J., Adm. 127; [1892] P. 337; 1 R. 551; 69 L. T. 199; 41 W. R. 205; 7 Asp. M. C. 329.

By articles of agreement in the form sanctioned by the board of trade under the above act, ". . . every member of the crew, including apprentices, shall be regarded as entitled to participate in any sum or sums of money arising from any salvage or salvage services performed for any ship in distress or otherwise, in the proportion set forth opposite to their respective names in this agreement." The master and mate were paid wages on the footing of a share of the fishing profits, but the boatswain received so much per week; and the owners of the trawler, in arriving at the net sum to be apportioned, claimed to deduct the cost of repairs for damage sustained by the vessel in rendering the salvage services, and as against the boatswain, certain other sums for loss of profits, time, &c.:—Held, that these deductions could not be allowed, as the agreement for a certain share of the salvage meant a share of the sum awarded, less any unrecovered costs in obtaining the award. Ib.

Semble, the provisions of s. 182 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, and of s. 18 of the amending act of 1862, do not apply to a master. Ib.

Power to Set Aside.]—The admiralty court has power to set aside agreements entered into by seamen as to sharing salvage earned by the ship, notwithstanding 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 214, and 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 18. The Pensacola, Br. & Lush. 306. And see The Pride of Canada, and cases supra, col. 625.

An agreement between the owners of a steam tug and her master and crew as to the giving up by the latter of their claims to salvage, in consideration of a higher rate of wages, held invalid. The Mary Anne, 11 L. T. 85.

Receipt for Salvage given in Ignorance.]—An ignorant salvor who has signed a receipt in full of all demands for salvage, will be relieved in admiralty. Silver Bullion, 2 Spinks, 70.

Set Aside as Unfair.]—An agreement for apportionment, entered into previously to the service performed, set aside as unfair. The Louisa, 2 W. Rob. 22; 2 Not. of Cas. 149.

Agreement between Shipowners and Crew as to Deductions—Validity.]—An agreement between shipowners and crew that before apportionment of salvage the shipowners shall be entitled to deduct from the sum awarded for salvage the amount of any damages sustained by the ship or her gear in the performance of the salvage service, and by reason of her loss of fishing, is inoperative. The Saltburn, 6 R. 702; 71 L. T. 19; 7 Asp. M. C. 474.

16. Assignment of Right to Salvage.

An assignment by a seaman of his right to salvage reward already acquired is wholly void and inoperative by the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), s. 182, although such assignment is for valuable consideration, and in an action for distribution of salvage a defence setting up such an assignment is bad. The Rosario, 46 L. J., Adm. 52; 2 P. D. 41; 35 L. T. 816; 3 Asp. M. C. 334.

Sixteen of the crew of a steamship sued her owners for distribution of salvage. The owners answered that after the date of the salvage services, but before the distribution of the salvage money, fourteen had assigned to the defendants for good consideration all their shares:—Held, that the fourteen were nevertheless entitled to sue. Ib.

17. Salvage Agreements.

Inequitable Agreements.]—The master of the "London" agreed for 400*l.* to tow the "Waverley" into Lisbon, about twenty-five miles. The weather, which was bad at the time of the agreement, subsequently became worse, and much difficulty was experienced in performing the salvage. In a suit for salvage the owners of the "Waverley" tendered 400*l.*, the amount agreed upon for salvage, and 123*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.* for quarantine expenses and consequent detention of the "London":—Held, that the agreement was equitable at the time when it was made, and was therefore valid notwithstanding the subsequent circumstances. The Waverley, 40 L. J., Adm. 42; L. R. 3 A. & E. 369; 24 L. T. 713; 1 Asp. M. C. 47.

Held, also, that the agreement was not affected by the tender of the amount of the extra expenses. Tender pronounced for, with costs from the time of making the tender. Ib.

An English steamship, bound from Sumatra to Jedda, having on board as passengers 550 pilgrims, was wrecked in the Red Sea. The pilgrims took refuge on a rock where, if bad weather had set in, they would have been exposed to imminent danger. In answer to signals of distress a steamship came up, and her master refused to rescue the pilgrims for a less sum than 4,000*l.*, which was the amount of the passage-money to be paid to the owners of the wrecked vessel for carrying the pilgrims from Sumatra to Jedda. Ultimately the master of the wrecked vessel signed an agreement to pay 4,000*l.* to the master of the steamship to take the pilgrims to Jedda, and the pilgrims were taken in his ship to Jedda in safety. In an action to enforce the agreement:—Held, that it must be set aside as inequitable, and the court awarded 1,800*l.* as salvage remuneration. The Medina, 2 P. D. 5; 35 L. T. 779; 25 W. R. 156; 3 Asp. M. C. 219—C. A. Affirming 45 L. J., Adm. 81.

Where, in the opinion of the court, a salvage agreement is exorbitant, the court will refuse to enforce it. In a case where the master of a disabled ship at sea about 340 miles from Queenstown, requested assistance from a mail steamer, and agreed in writing to make his owners responsible to the extent of 15,000*l.*, provided the master of the mail steamer would tow the disabled ship to Queenstown, and the service was performed, the court declined to enforce the agreement, and awarded to the salvors by way of salvage reward 7,000*l.*, in addition to a sum sufficient to cover penalties which had become payable by the owners of the mail steamer by reason of the vessel deviating to perform the service. The Silesia, 5 P. D. 177; 43 L. T. 319; 29 W. R. 156; 4 Asp. M. C. 338.

An agreement between salvors and the agent of the salving ship to leave the amount of their reward to his determination is inequitable and void. The Enchantress, Lush. 93; 30 L. J., Adm. 15; 2 L. T. 574.

Fair Agreements Upheld.]—Where an agreement is clearly established, the court will uphold it unless wholly inequitable, and will not set it aside on the ground that it is a hard bargain. The Firefly, Swabey, 240. S. P., The Mulgrave, 2 Hag. Adm. 78.

An agreement dishonestly made by the master to secure, to so-called salvors, an excessive reward, is not valid against the owner of the ship. The Theodore, Swabey, 351.

An agreement will be upheld, unless proved to be very exorbitant, or to have been obtained by compulsion or fraud. The Helen and George, Swabey, 368.

It is competent to the master to make an agreement with salvors as to the remuneration for their services, and if the agreement is fair, it will bind the owners. The Arthur, 6 L. T. 556.

The burden of proof is upon the parties alleging the agreement. Ib.

It is no reason for setting aside a salvage agreement that the salvors were not aware of the exact value of the cargo. The Henry, 15 Jur. 183.

Agreement for Particular Sum—Liability of Shipowners for Salvage of Cargo.]—A vessel, the value of which was 3,500*l.*, and the cargo of which was worth 14,000*l.*, having been for three days on rocks in Castraes Bay, in the Gulf of Tartary, the master entered into an agreement with the salvors to pay them 200*l.* for each day of service, and a further sum of 2,000*l.* in the event of the vessel being got or coming off the rocks during the continuance of the attendance of the salvors:—Held, that the agreement was fair and reasonable and binding on the owners of the vessel, and that the owners of the vessel were liable for the whole amount agreed upon without any deduction in respect of the salvage of the cargo. The Raisby (infra) distinguished. The Prinz Heinrich, 57 L. J., Adm. 17; 13 P. D. 31; 58 L. T. 593; 36 W. R. 511; 6 Asp. M. C. 273.

Where Sum too Small.]—An agreement for a sum of 8*s.* 6*d.* overruled as utterly futile, where it appeared that there was danger incurred by the salvors in rendering the service. The Phantom, L. R. 1 A. & E. 58 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 529 ; 14 W. R. 774.

Execution more Difficult than Expected.]—When an agreement to fix the amount of the remuneration to be paid for salvage services has been deliberately entered into at the time of the commencement of the danger between perfectly competent parties, the court will not allow the agreement to be set aside merely because the execution of it has turned out more difficult than was anticipated at the time of making the contract. The Waverley, 40 L. J., Adm. 42 ; L. R. 3 A. & E. 369 ; 24 L. T. 713 ; 1 Asp. M. C. 47.

A foreign vessel, fifty miles off the Dutch coast, being in difficulty, in consequence of the boisterous state of the weather, and being leaky, called in the assistance of an English fishing smack, and engaged the captain, by a written agreement, "to pilot and to sail ahead for 50*l.*" After four days' boisterous weather, during which the captain of the smack worked at the pumps, the vessel was got into port. The owners of the smack refused the tender of 50*l.*, and brought an action for salvage services rendered to the vessel. The court was of opinion that the agreement being to perform a service for a specific sum, was not to be set aside because the weather became tempestuous, and by reason thereof, that the vessel was longer in arriving at a port of safety than might reasonably be anticipated ; and held, that salvage was barred by the agreement, as nothing was done to convert pilotage service into a salvage service, and that the sum specified in the agreement was a sufficient compensation. The Jonge Andries, Swabey, 303 ; 11 Moore, P. C. 313 (nom. Alsey v. Albertuszen) ; 6 W. R. 198—P. C.

Agreement not to Claim.]—An agreement entered into between the master of a salving ship and the officer commanding the distressed vessel, by which the latter acknowledges the receipt of the men, and undertakes "to pay all expenses attached thereby, as my vessel is in distress for want of men, and I cannot bring her in without help," is not such an agreement as will oust the right of the salvors to reward, but is an agreement to pay expenses in all events. The Charles, L. R. 3 A. & E. 536 ; 26 L. T. 594 ; 21 W. R. 13.

Agreement Unperformed—Right to Salvage.]—A ship that performs a salvage service is entitled to salvage reward ; and not the less so because her master has entered into an agreement to take the ship in distress to a place of safety, which, owing to no fault of his own, he does not do. The Hestia, 64 L. J., Adm. 82 ; [1895] P. 193 ; 11 R. 808 ; 72 L. T. 364 ; 43 W. R. 669 ; 7 Asp. M. C. 599. And see The Samuel, infra, col. 657.

Agreement—Supervening Circumstances.]—The plaintiffs' steamer fell in with the defendants' steamer, which was disabled, about 260 miles from Gibraltar, and sixty miles from Carthagena. The weather at the time was described as "moderately" bad. An agreement was entered into between the captains of the two vessels by which it was agreed that the defendants' steamer should be towed to Gibraltar for the sum of 600*l.*, and that she should provide ropes and hawsers. The next day the weather became much worse, the wind blowing like a hurricane. The hawsers were several times broken, and, at length, one sound rope only was left. The plaintiffs' steamer, therefore, towed the disabled vessel to Carthagena instead of to Gibraltar. In an action of salvage the court held that the contract had been put an end to by supervening circumstances, and awarded the salvors 900*l.* The defendants appealed :—Held, that the circumstances had made the service wholly different from that contemplated by the parties ; that the court had authority to deal with the question as though no contract had been made ; and that the decision was therefore right. The Westbourne, 58 L. J., Adm. 78 ; 14 P. D. 132 ; 61 L. T. 156 ; 38 W. R. 56 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 405—C. A.

—— Average Bond.]—The "G." fell in with the "R.," which was in distress. The following agreement was signed by the two captains : "At my request the captain of the 'G.' will tow my ship, the 'R.' to St. Nazaire, that being the nearest port, for repairs. The matter of compensation to be left to arbitrators at home." The "G." towed the "R." safely to St. Nazaire. The "R." discharged her cargo at Dunkirk, and an average bond in the usual form was taken from the consignees of the cargo. The owners of the "G." brought an action for salvage of the ship and freight against the "R.," and were awarded salvage. They also brought an action in France for the salvage of the cargo against the cargo owners, but failed in it. They then brought this action in personam against the owners of the "R." to recover salvage in respect of the services to the cargo, or, in the alternative, damages from the defendants, for not taking a proper bond to secure salvage from the cargo owners :—Held, that the defendants were not primarily liable to pay salvage in respect of the cargo, that they had not bound themselves by the above agreement to do so, and that it was not their duty to obtain a bond from the cargo owners for the proportion of any salvage which might be due. The Raisby or Cardiff Steamship Co. v. Barwick, 54 L. J., Adm. 65 ; 10 P. D. 114 ; 53 L. T. 56 ; 33 W. R. 938 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 473.

Implied Authority of Master.]—Observations as to the implied authority of shipmasters to enter into salvage agreements. The Renpor, 52 L. J., Adm. 49 ; 8 P. D. 115 ; 48 L. T. 887 ; 31 W. R. 640 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 98.

Validity—Action by Seamen.]—An agreement was made between the masters of the "W." and the "N.," which was in need of assistance, that the "W." should tow the "N." to Queenstown for the sum of 200*l.* There was no evidence at the trial to shew that the master of the "W." consulted the officers and crew as to the terms of the agreement. The service was duly performed, and subsequently thirteen of the officers and crew of the "W." brought an action of salvage against the "N." The defendants pleaded, inter alia, that they had tendered 200*l.* to the owners of the "W.," but this sum was not paid into court :—Held, that the agreement must be upheld, and the 200*l.* apportioned amongst the owner and crew of the "W." Held, also, that when a fair salvage agreement has been made in a bonâ fide manner by the masters of the salving and the salved vessels the officers and seamen of the salving ship ought not to bring an action of salvage, and that the plaintiffs must therefore pay the costs of the action. The Nasmyth, 54 L. J., Adm. 63; 10 P. D. 41; 52 L. T. 392; 33 W. R. 736; 5 Asp. M. C. 364.

Liability of Shipowner for Value of Ship, Freight and Cargo.]—An agreement made by the master of a vessel in distress to pay salvors a fixed sum is an agreement made on behalf of and pledging the credit of the shipowners, so as to make them liable to the salvors for the whole amount so agreed upon, and not merely for such proportion of such amount as the value of the ship and freight bears to the value of the cargo. The Raisby, supra, distinguished. The Cumbrian, 57 L. T. 205; 6 Asp. M. C. 151.

£500 for half-an-hour's Towage—Enforcement.]—An agreement by the master of a valuable steamship in the South Atlantic to pay 500*l.* for half-an-hour's towage by a large mail steamship in order to get his engines, which were partially disabled and would not turn over the centres, under way:—Held, to be fair and reasonable, and enforced by the court. The Strathgarry [1895] P. 264; 11 R. 783; 72 L. T. 900; 8 Asp. M. C. 19.

Owners Cited—Agreement to Pay Salvage.]—Owners cited to shew cause why salvage awarded by arbitrators abroad by arrangement between consignees and salvors should not be awarded. The Sir Francis Burton, 2 Hag. Adm. 156.

Agreement Binding on Salvors.]—An agreement to render salvage services for a named sum is binding, and ordinarily prevents further salvage being claimed. The Musgrave, 2 Hag. Adm. 77.

Salvage agreement upheld. The True Blue, 2 W. Rob. 176; 2 Not. of Cas. 413.

Agreement to stand by—Ship lost.]—The steamship "W." having found the "A." on February 12th off Finisterre in a disabled state, took her in tow until February 14th, when, owing to the condition of the "A.," the master of the "W." proposed to abandon her. The master of the "A." persuaded the master of the "W." to enter into an agreement in writing to "stand by the 'A.' as long as possible, and that the 'W.' and owners are to be paid for the time and towing already done and to be done from the 12th February, 1883." The "W." then took the "A." again in tow, but on February 16th, owing to the weather, it was found necessary to abandon her, and she was totally lost. In an action for towage against the owners of the "A." it was held that the agreement was reasonable, and one which the master had authority to make, and 400*l.* was awarded for the towage. The Alfred, The Wellfield (Owners) v. Adamson, 50 L. T. 511; 5 Asp. M. C. 214.

Unsuccessful Attempt—Agreement—Subsequent Salvors.]—Two agreements were made with salvors, both of which, after some services rendered, had to be abandoned; other salvors then came up, but the owners gave notice to two of them that no assistance was required:—Held, that the first salvors were entitled to salvage, apart from the agreements; that the subsequent salvors not having had notice that their services were not needed, were also entitled to salvage. The Samuel, 15 Jur. 407.

Concealment of Damage—Towage Agreement—Salvage Awarded.]—The master of a brig which had suffered some damage to her compass and lost an anchor, agreed with a tug to tow him to London for 40*l.*, without disclosing the damage. On discovering the damage, the tug owners brought a suit for salvage:—Held, that salvage cannot be engrafted on extraordinary, though it may be on ordinary towage; distinction between towage services and agreements:—Held, also, that the concealment of the damage to the brig vitiated the towage contract. Salvage awarded. The Kingalock, 1 Spinks, 267.

Power of Salving Owners to Bind their Crew by Agreement with Salved Ship.]—The master of a salving vessel, a part owner, agreed with the owners of the salved vessel in the presence of the other part owners to accept 800*l.* for the salvage services; and that sum was paid to him. The crew of another vessel engaged in the salvage service being dissatisfied with the share of the 800*l.* offered to them, brought an action for salvage:—Held, that neither the master nor the owners have power to bind the crew of the salvor without their consent, and further salvage awarded. The Sarah Jane, 2 W. Rob. 110.

An agreement between the owner of the salving ship and the owner of the ship in distress does not preclude the master and crew of the salving ship from suing for salvage. The William Lushington, 7 Not. of Cas. 361.

Burden on those who set up Agreement to Prove it.]—The burden of proving an agreement in a salvage action is on those who rely upon it. An agreement pronounced against as not proved, the court not coming to any decision as to whether as alleged, it was a forgery. The Resultatet, 17 Jur. 353.

—— And to Prove that it was Fair.]—It lies upon the shipowner setting up an agreement with the salvor that he should accept a stipulated sum to prove that it was just. The British Empire, 6 Jur. 608.

Agreement Cancelled by Consent.]—An agreement was made between the masters of two steamships that one should assist the other, which was aground, and the service completed under that agreement. It was subsequently cancelled by mutual consent of the two masters. The agreement cannot be set up as a bar to a salvage action. The Africa, 1 Spinks, 299.

No Duty to make Agreement.]—Salvors are entitled to the judgment of the court as to the amount of their remuneration, and are not under any obligation to negotiate. The Tritonia, 2 W. Rob. 529.

Master of Salvor can bind Owner but not Crew.]—The master of a salving vessel can by agreement, as to the amount of salvage, with those on board the salved ship, bind his own interest as salvor and that of his owners, but not those of the crew, except with their concurrence. The Britain, 1 W. Rob. 40.

An agreement to tow a ship in distress from the Queen's Channel to London for 50*l.* attempted to be set aside by persons claiming as salvors upon the ground that it had been cancelled either by mutual consent or by supervening bad weather, but upheld. Danger of setting aside towage or salvage contracts except for exceptional circumstances. The Betsey, 2 W. Rob. 167; 2 Not. of Cas. 409.

An agreement between a Thames tug and a ship ashore off Shoebury that the tug should get her afloat and take her to Gravesend for 80*l.* upheld; although the ship had to be lightened and another tug employed, and the service was longer than expected. The Cato, 35 L. J., Adm. 116.

Unfair Agreements set aside.]—The court will set aside an agreement for salvage services where it is satisfied, first, that the parties were not contracting upon equal terms; and secondly, that the sum demanded and insisted on by the salvors is exorbitant. The Rialto, 60 L. J., Adm. 71; [1891] P. 175; 64 L. T. 540; 7 Asp. M. C. 35.

A steamer fell in with another steamer in the Atlantic, which had lost part of her propeller, was leaking, and could not use her engines. The vessel in distress was towed by the other vessel to Halifax, a distance of about 350 miles. Before the service was begun the masters of the salving and salved vessels signed an agreement that the owners of the salved vessel should pay 5,000*l.* for the service or a sum for work done if it was unsuccessful. The master of the salving vessel would not take a less sum, and the master of the salved vessel had reasonable grounds for believing, and believed, that his vessel would be abandoned if he did not sign the agreement. The sum of 5,000*l.* was more than one-fifth of the total value of the salved vessel, her cargo and freight:—Held, that the agreement must be taken to have been made under compulsion, and could not be enforced, having regard to the fact that the sum stipulated for was exorbitant. The court, treating the agreement as inoperative, awarded the salvors 3,000*l.* as a fair remuneration for the services, and allowed them their costs of the action. The Mark Lane, 15 P. D. 135; 63 L. T. 468; 39 W. R. 47; 6 Asp. M. C. 540.

The commander of a Queen's ship sent to assist a ship in distress cannot impose terms and refuse to give salvage assistance unless his terms are accepted. Woosung, Cargo ex, 1 P. D. 260; 35 L. T. 8; 25 W. R. 1; 3 Asp. M. C. 239—C. A.

Grounds for Setting Aside Agreement.]—Contract to stand by and see the distressed vessel into safety for 500*l.* upheld. Fraud or cancellation by consent are the only grounds for avoiding contracts to salve. The Repulse, 2 W. Rob. 396.

Corrupt Agreement by Vice-Consul.]—An agreement to render salvage service to a Portuguese ship ashore at Dungeness, made by the agent of the Portuguese vice-consul upon the terms that he should receive 50*l.* out of the 600*l.* agreed to be paid for salvage, set aside as corrupt. The Crus V, Lush. 583.

Agreement to Salve Ship and not Cargo.]—Agreement for salvage of the ship apart from the cargo on board not allowed by the court. The Westminster, 1 W. Rob. 229.

Arrest not superseded—Alleged Agreement.]—A warrant of arrest in a salvage suit will not be superseded upon an allegation of an agreement between the salvor and shipmaster to refer the claim to arbitration. La Purissima Concepcion, 13 Jur. 545.

Salvage for Sum fixed—Issue Directed.]—In an action for salvage claiming 2,000*l.* the defence was that the service was rendered under a contract for 50*l.* made between the masters of the ships, which was a fair contract. Issue directed to try the case. Buchanan v. Barr, 5 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (3rd ser.) 973.

18. Jurisdiction.

a. High Court.

Locality.]—Semble, salvage on the Leigh Middle Sand in the Thames is not within the ancient jurisdiction of the admiralty. The Eleanor, 6 C. Rob. 39.

Or salvage on the Black Tail Spit on the Essex coast. See The Hercules, Baxter v. Reeder, 6 C. Rob. 39, n.

—— Services where Rendered.]—Defendants in a cause of salvage, instituted against the cargo of a foreign ship to recover for salvage services rendered in saving the lives of a number of the crew and passengers on board such ship, alleged in their statement of defence that the vessel in which the cargo proceeded against had been laden was not, at the time the salvage services were rendered, stranded or in distress on the shore of any sea or tidal water within the limits of the United Kingdom. The plaintiffs demurred, on the ground that the facts therein stated were not sufficient to exclude the jurisdiction of the court. The court sustained the demurrer. The Deutschland, 25 W. R. 755.

The admiralty court had jurisdiction in a salvage case where part of the services were performed on shore, as unloading cargo after the ship has been brought in. The Rosalie, 1 Spinks, 188.

—— Onus of Proof of Distance.]—To oust the court of its municipal jurisdiction, it lies upon the defendant to prove that the vessel was at a distance from shore to which the powers of the court do not extend. The Gertrude, 30 L. J., Adm. 130.

—— 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65.]—Monition to owner of timber picked up adrift in Yarmouth harbour to shew cause why he should not pay salvage rejected, on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 6. Raft of Timber, 2 W. Rob. 251.

Agreement made on Land.]—A ship sunk at the Nore was raised by divers, and a salvage suit brought against her. The owners appeared under protest to the jurisdiction, alleging that the services were performed under an agreement made on land:—Protest overruled. The Catherine, 12 Jur. 682; 6 Not. of Cas. Suppl. xliii.

Cinque Ports.]—The 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104. s. 460, does not alter the jurisdiction of the court of admiralty and the cinque ports in cases of salvage services performed within the limits of the cinque ports. The Maria Luisa, Swabey, 67; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 264; 4 W. R. 376.

Salvage of a Whale.]—Royal fish taken within the jurisdiction of the cinque ports belong to the warden. Cinque Ports (Lord Warden) v. Rex, 2 Hag. Adm. 438.

Extent of—Value.]—The court of admiralty and the admiralty court of the cinque ports have both jurisdiction over claims for salvage where the value of the property salved does not exceed 1,000*l.* The Jeune Paul, 36 L. J., Adm. 11; L. R. 1 A. & E. 336; 16 L. T. 125; 15 W. R. 776.

The words in 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 49, determining the jurisdiction of the court of admiralty by the value of the property saved, mean the value of the property when first brought into safety by the salvors, and not its value at any subsequent period. The Stella, 36 L. J., Adm. 13; L. R. 1 A. & E. 340; 16 L. T. 335; 15 W. R. 936.

A salvage suit was instituted in the court of admiralty, in a sum exceeding 900*l.*; the value of the property saved was less than 1,000*l.*:—Held, that the court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The Empress, 41 L. J., Adm. 32; L. R. 3 A. & E. 452; 25 L. T. 885; 20 W. R. 553; 1 Asp. M. C. 183.

By 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 460, and 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, ss. 49, 50, the court of admiralty has not jurisdiction to determine and award the amount of salvage due if the value of the property saved is proved not to exceed 1,000*l.*, but nevertheless it retains jurisdiction to condemn in costs and damages salvors so wrongfully arresting property, and for other collateral purposes. The Kate, Br. & Lush. 218; 33 L. J., Adm. 122; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 444; 9 L. T. 782.

A claim for less than the sum of 200*l.* was made for salvage service rendered within the limits of the United Kingdom, i.e. within three miles from the shore:—Held, that, under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 460, the court of admiralty had not jurisdiction to adjudicate on the claim. The Leda, Swabey, 40; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 119; 4 W. R. 322.

Where the value of the property saved does not exceed 1,000*l.*, the court of admiralty will, notwithstanding an absolute appearance is given by the defendant, refuse to proceed in the salvage suit, on the ground that 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 460, and the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 49, prohibit the court from exercising jurisdiction. The Louisa, Br. & Lush. 59; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 676; 11 W. R. 614. See also The William and John, post, col. 663.

—— Owner.]—It is immaterial to this question that the party defending is the mortgagee, not the owner of the ship. The word "owners" in 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 460, if necessary, extends to all persons interested in the property. Ib.

—— Estoppel.]—In a salvage suit the defendants entered an absolute appearance. The vessel being arrested, was released on the 11th January, on an undertaking by the proctors of the owners to file an affidavit of value within a week. On the 15th they filed an affidavit stating the value of the vessel, freight and cargo to be over 1,000*l.* On the 19th a receiver of wreck made an affidavit that the value was under 1,000*l.* On the 1st February the defendants applied to dismiss the suit with costs, on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction, which in such a case lay with the justices, under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 49:—Held, that, under the circumstances, the defendants had estopped themselves from objecting to the jurisdiction, and the application was dismissed with costs. The Dart, 21 L. T. 765.

Agreement giving.]—Two causes of salvage against a vessel were consolidated upon motion by the defendants, and with the consent of all parties. On a petition being subsequently filed, the defendants moved for its dismissal, with costs and damages, on the ground that the value of the property salved was under 1,000*l.*:—Held, that the proceedings in reference to the consolidation must be construed as an agreement which gave the court jurisdiction under 31 & 32 Vict. c. 71, s. 9. The Herman Wedel, 39 L. J., Adm. 30; 23 L. T. 876.

Damages against Salvors for Arresting.]—The court will not decree for damages unless the circumstances shew mala fides or crassa negligentia on the part of the salvors in arresting, whereof the fact that salvors arrested without first obtaining a valuation of the property from the receiver of wreck (as provided for by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 50) is not conclusive evidence. The Kate, Br. & Lush. 218; 33 L. J., Adm. 122; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 444; 9 L. T. 782.

Objection, when taken.]—The objection to the jurisdiction of the court on the ground that the property is under 1,000*l.*, should be alleged when the appearance is entered; but where a defendant appeared absolutely, and raised the objection after the petition was filed, the court entertained it, but refused costs. The Louisa, Br. & Lush. 59; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 676; 11 W. R. 614.

Release by Receiver of Wreck.]—After release by the receiver of wreck of salved property upon security given by the owner under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 468, the salvors have no right to detain the property or to arrest it by admiralty warrant. The Lady Katherine Barham, Lush. 404; 5 L. T. 693.

Jurisdiction does not depend on Salvors' Possession.]—The rights of the admiralty court to enforce salvage did not depend upon the salvors retaining possession. The Eleonora Charlotta, 1 Hag. Adm. 156.

Proceedings before Justices—Subsequent Proceedings in High Court.]—The master of a vessel agreed to pay 140*l.* for salvage services to be rendered to his ship. The salvors took proceedings before justices to enforce payment; the justices held the agreement invalid and reduced the sum to be paid to 70*l.* A cause of salvage was then instituted in the high court of admiralty:—Held, under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 460, and 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 49, that the suit be dismissed, the sum claimed being under 200*l.* The William and John, Br. & Lush. 49; 32 L. J., Adm. 102; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 284; 8 L. T. 56; 11 W. R. 535.

Award of Commissioners—Subsequent Action.]—See The Elise, supra, col. 664.

Capture—Ransom—Hostage.]—The master of a ship captured by a French privateer ransomed the ship and cargo and went himself as hostage. On the ship's arrival in England he arrested the cargo for payment of the ransom bill. Prohibition to the admiralty before appearance of the cargo-owner, refused. Tranter v. Watson, 6 Mod. 11.

b. Justices.

"Ship or Boat Stranded or otherwise in Distress."]—Justices awarded salvage in respect of services rendered to a hopper barge, which had been found adrift without any person on board of her in the Wash, about three miles from Boston. The barge was not furnished with any means by which she could be propelled, and was used for dredging purposes:—Held, that the barge was a "ship in distress on the shore of a sea or tidal water," within the meaning of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, s. 458, and that the justices had jurisdiction to award salvage. The Leda (Swabey, 40) followed. The Mac or Macadam v. Saucy Polly, 51 L. J., Adm. 81; 7 P. D. 126; 46 L. T. 907; 5 Asp. M. C. 555—C. A.

"Sum Claimed."]—The 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 460, and 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 49, being read together, enact, that all disputes as to the amount of salvage, where either the sum claimed does not exceed 200*l.* or the value of the property saved does not exceed 1,000*l.*, shall be referred to justices of the peace, and thereby in those cases exclude the jurisdiction of the court of admiralty. The William and John, Br. & Lush. 49; 32 L. J., Adm. 102; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 284; 8 L. T. 56; 11 W. R. 535.

By "the sum claimed" is meant the sum claimed by the salvors before the dispute is referred. Ib.

The words "disputes as to the amount of salvage" extend to cases where an agreement stipulating for a fixed amount has been made. Ib.

The existence of an agreement does not confer jurisdiction upon the court of admiralty, but where that jurisdiction exists, and has been properly set in motion, it may induce the court to give costs to the salvors, although they recover a sum less than 200*l.* See also Cases ante, cols. 653, seq.

"Sum in Dispute."]—The words "sum in dispute" in 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 464, do not mean the sum awarded by the justices and appealed against; and where the only evidence of the sum in dispute is, that the salvors claimed before the justices a certain amount of salvage, not exceeding 200*l.*, an appeal from the award of the justices lies in the admiralty court. The Andrew Wilson, Br. & Lush. 56; 32 L. J., Adm. 104; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 474; 8 L. T. 177.

Salvors, having sent in a formal demand in writing for 40*l.*, afterwards, before the justices, claimed a sum not exceeding 200*l.* The justices found that no salvage was due, and from that decision the salvors appealed:—Held, that the sum in dispute was the sum formally demanded, and that as that was under 50*l.*, an appeal did not lie. The Mary Anne, 34 L. J., Adm. 73; 12 L. T. 238.

When the sum in dispute exceeds 50*l.*, the court has jurisdiction to entertain an appeal, even though the value of the property salved is under 1,000*l.* The Generous, 37 L. J., Adm. 37; L. R. 2 A. & E. 57; 17 L. T. 552; 16 W. R. 519.

Appeal—Varying Order.]—The court will not entertain an appeal from the salvage award of justices upon the mere question of amount, unless plainly exorbitant. The Cuba, Lush. 14; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 152.

The salvors brought a barge off a dangerous position near the Nore sand, and claimed 80*l.* The magistrates at Maidstone awarded 15*l.*:—Held, that the latter sum was quite inadequate, and the court gave 40*l.* The Harriett, Swabey, 218.

Unless the amount awarded is wholly inadequate, the court will not disturb the award, even though it is of opinion that the magistrates should have given a somewhat larger sum. The Jeune Louise, 37 L. J., Adm. 32.

—— Practice.]—The court rarely admits new evidence on the hearing of an appeal from an award of magistrates. The Generous, supra.

Estoppel.]—The value stated by the owners of salved property in proceedings before commissioners is not conclusive upon the salvor though assented to at the time. The Hope, 14 W. R. 467. And see The Elise, Swabey, 436.

Appeal from Justices—Sum in Dispute.]—There was no appeal from justices in salvage cases under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 464, unless "the sum in dispute" was over 50*l.* The salvors claimed 40*l.* in substance, but formally a sum not exceeding 200*l.* The justices awarded nothing:—Held, that there was no appeal. The Mary Anne, Br. & Lush. 334.

17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 460.]—The words "at or near the place where such ship or boat is lying" in the above section refer to justices residing at or near the place to which the ship is brought immediately after the salvage service. Summers v. Buchan, 18 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 879.

c. County Court.

Extent of.]—By 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, ss. 458, 460, and 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 49, where certain services are rendered to a ship or a boat in distress on the seashore, there shall be payable to the parties by whom the service is rendered a reasonable amount of salvage, the amount, in case of dispute, where the sum claimed does not exceed 200*l.*, or the value of the property saved does not exceed 1,000*l.*, to be referred to the arbitration of two justices or a county court judge:—Held, that a county court judge may exercise this jurisdiction where there has been a salvage agreement for a fixed sum, and that a rule by which such proceedings are to be commenced in the county court by plaint and summons is valid. Beadnell v. Beeson, 9 B. & S. 315; 37 L. J., Q. B. 171; L. R. 3 Q. B. 439; 18 L. T. 401; 16 W. R. 1008.

Distribution of Salvage.]—A county court, having admiralty jurisdiction, has jurisdiction to entertain a suit of distribution of salvage where the amount which the court is asked to apportion does not exceed 300*l.*, notwithstanding that the value of the property saved exceeds 1,000*l.* The Glannibanta, Elemore v. Trim, 46 L. J., Adm. 75; 2 P. D. 45; 36 L. T. 27; 25 W. R. 513.

The admiralty jurisdiction of the county courts extends to the distribution of salvage, although there has been no original claim in the county court for salvage. Ib.

Enforcing Bonds given to Receivers of Wreck.]—As it is a matter of doubt whether the county courts having admiralty jurisdiction have power to enforce salvage bonds given to receivers of wreck under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), s. 468, the court of admiralty will, on the application of a salvor in respect of whose services such a bond has been given, grant leave to proceed in the high court under the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71), s. 9. The John Evans, 43 L. J., Adm. 9; 30 L. T. 308; 2 Asp. M. C. 234.

19. SALVAGE LIEN.

Sum paid to release Ship.]—A shipowner who has paid a sum of money, under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 99, in order to release the ship and cargo from a claim for salvage, has a lien on the cargo for the proportion of those expenses payable to him by the owners of the goods, and an insurable interest in the cargo in respect of such lien. Briggs v. Merchant Traders' Ship Loan and Assurance Association, 13 Q. B. 167; 18 L. J., Q. B. 178; 13 Jur. 787.

Of Finder.] — The deputy vice-admiral, who received an anchor and a hawser, alleged to have been left at sea, from the finder, refused on application by the real owner to deliver them up, until the salvage was paid, or security given for the payment of it:—Held, that this was a conversion, but that if he had merely refused to deliver them up until it was ascertained whether salvage was due or not, it would not have amounted to a conversion. Clark v. Chamberlain, 2 M. & W. 78; 2 Gale, 217.

Solicitors' Costs — Expenses of Crew — Priority.]—Solicitors for defendants in a salvage action against a foreign ship, who are entitled to a charge upon the ship, or the proceeds thereof, for their costs and expenses incurred in the preservation of the property, do not take priority of the claim of the foreign government, who, on the abandonment of the ship by her owners, are entitled, by the provisions of their code, to a lien upon the ship, or the proceeds, for the expenses of sending back the ship's crew to their own country. An Italian ship was brought into a British port by salvors. A salvage action having been instituted, the ship was sold by order of the court, and a sum was awarded out of the proceeds to the salvors. After payment of that sum, and the costs of the plaintiffs, a balance of 60*l*. 10*s*. 3*d*. remained in court. The defendants' solicitors had incurred expenses in pumping the ship, paying the marshal's possession fees, &c., and claimed a charging order upon the balance in court for such expenses, and sought payment out of such balance to them. The Italian government, through their consul in this country, had sent home the crew of the ship, and had incurred expenses by so doing. By Italian law such last-mentioned expenses are a lien upon the ship. The Italian consul opposed payment out to the defendants' solicitors, and claimed priority for the lien of the Italian government:—Held, that the Italian government was entitled to such priority. The Livietta, 52 L. J., Adm. 81; 8 P. D. 209; 49 L. T. 411; 5 Asp. M. C. 157.

Cargo raised from Wreck.]—H. & Co., owners of copper ore, employed T. to convey it in his barge from Liverpool to Birkenhead, and to deliver it there to L., to be crushed in his mills, L. having agreed to indemnify H. & Co. against all risk of such transit. The barge with the ore on board, having afterwards, without any fault of T., sunk in the Mersey, he informed H. & Co. of the accident, and requested to be employed to raise the ore, when he was told that H. & Co. had nothing to do with it, and that he should see L., who had the management of it. L., when applied to by T. as to getting the ore up, said that he was insured with S., and that T. must therefore go to S. for orders. T. having accordingly obtained from S. directions to do the work, raised the ore, and afterwards conveyed it to Birkenhead, and then claimed a lien on it as against H. & Co. for the expenses of raising it:—Held, that he had no right to such lien, on the ground either of any contract with H. & Co., or of general average loss or of salvage. Castellain v. Thompson, 13 C. B. (N.S.) 105; 32 L. J., C. P. 79; 7 L. T. 424; 11 W. R. 147.

Priority.]—Salvage lien precedes a wages lien. The Sabina, 7 Jur. 182. As to damage lien, see The Selina, supra, col. 632; Att.-Gen. v. Nørstedt, supra, col. 164.

Cargo Sold—Following Proceeds.]—Where a suit for salvage of life is instituted against a cargo a part of which had been sold before action brought, the court perhaps has power to follow the proceeds. The General Maclean, 13 W. R. 728.

Judgment for Salvage—Action for Amount Paid for Salvage against Underwriter—Salvage not caused by Perils insured against.]—See Ballantyne v. Mackinnon, post, col. 1321.

20. PRACTICE.

a. Generally.

See also XXVI. ADMIRALTY LAW AND PRACTICE, infra.

Trinity Masters.] — In salvage actions the presence of Trinity masters is desirable. The James Dixon, 2 L. T. 696.

Compromise—Mistake of Fact.]—A compromise of a salvage action agreed to by the salvors under a mistake of fact is not binding upon them. The Monarch, 56 L. J., Adm. 114; 12 P. D. 5; 56 L. T. 204; 35 W. R. 292; 6 Asp. M. C. 90.

Several Salvors—Cross-examination.]—Rival salvors have a right to cross-examine each other's witnesses, but only on a point at which they are at issue. Ib.

In a suit by rival salvors being heard together the witnesses called on behalf of one set of salvors will be liable to cross-examination; first on behalf of the rival plaintiffs, and then on behalf of the defendants. The Philadelphia, Br. & Lush. 28.

Right to begin.]—The right to begin does not shift with the burden of proof, but is almost universally with the claimant. The Magdalen, 31 L. J., Adm. 22; 5 L. T. 807.

Where there are rival salvors, the salvor who first enters his suit has the right to begin, unless special circumstances are shewn. The Morocco, 24 L. T. 578; 1 Asp. M. C. 46.

Service of Writ on Solicitors for Party not appearing.]—An order made for leave to serve the writ in a collision action upon solicitors who had acted for the owners of the other ship in an action for the same collision, which action had been discontinued, and upon evidence that the solicitors no longer acted for the owners, set aside. The Pommerania, 48 L. J., Adm. 55; 4 P. D. 195; 39 L. T. 642.

Service of Notice of Writ.]—Where in an action in personam for alleged salvage services rendered to ship, freight and cargo, the plaintiffs, the owners, master and crew of the salving vessel, had served the writ upon the owners of the salved ship resident within the jurisdiction:—Held, that under R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XI. r. 1, leave might be obtained to serve the cargo-owners, out of the jurisdiction, with notice of the writ. The Elton, 60 L. J., Adm. 69; [1891] P. 265; 65 L. T. 232; 39 W. R. 703; 7 Asp. M. C. 66.

Salvage after Collision—Owner of wrongdoing Ship intervening.] — Where a ship has been found to blame in a collision suit and a salvage suit has been instituted against "B.," the other ship, "B." has a right to intervene in the salvage suit; and if they put in bail to answer the salvor's claim in lieu of the bail given by the owners of "B.," the court will give them the conduct of the defence of the salvage suit. The Diana, 31 L. T. 202; 2 Asp. M. C. 366. And see The Kathleen, infra, col. 672.

Action in personam.] — Monition decreed against the owner of ship and cargo salved, to shew cause why salvage should not be pronounced for; the salved property being at sea. The Meg Merrilies, 3 Hag. Adm. 346. S. P., The Trelawney, 3 C. Rob. 216, n. S. C., 4 C. Rob. 223. Duncan v. Dundee, Perth and London Shipping Co., 5 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 742. The Hope, 3 C. Rob. 215. Five Steel Barges, supra, col. 626.

The court refused to allow proceedings in personam to be commenced against the owners of a ship that had received salvage assistance from a Queen's ship, and had on a subsequent voyage been lost. The Chieftain, 4 Not. of Cas. 459.

Effect of Judgment in rem in Salvage Action.]—See Ballantyne v. Mackinnon, post, col. 1321.

Court of Passage—Distribution of Salvage by High Court.]—See The Theresa, infra, col. 945.

Salvage paid to Master—Recovery by Shipowner.]—See The Princess Helena, supra, col. 650.

b. Parties.

Several Salvors.]—The court will protect owners where the expenses have been increased by separate suits having been brought by two sets of salvors, and the interest of the one set has been denied by the other. The Bartley, Swabey, 198.

Who to Sue.]—Two suits afterwards consolidated were brought, one by the owner and the other by the charterer of the salving ship, for salvage to a ship also chartered to the same charterer:—Held, that as under the terms of the charterparty the charterer of the salving ship was for the time being the owner, he, and not the owner, was entitled to institute the suit. The Scout, 41 L. J., Adm. 42; L. R. 3 A. & E. 512; 26 L. T. 371; 20 W. R. 617; 1 Asp. M. C. 258.

Third Party—Procedure.]—In an action for damage by collision brought by a vessel at anchor against a vessel in tow of a tug, the owners of the tug were made third parties under Ord. XVI. r. 18, as the defendants claimed to be indemnified by the owners of the tug against the plaintiffs' claim, on the ground that the improper navigation, if any, was that of the tug. An application for directions under Ord. XVI. r. 21, was subsequently made, and the plaintiffs thereupon asked that the third parties should be dismissed from the action on the ground that the plaintiffs would be embarrassed by the proceedings between the defendants and the third parties:—Held, that the third parties must be dismissed, as under the circumstances questions would probably arise between them and the defendants by which the plaintiffs might be embarrassed, as they were different from those upon which the action between the plaintiffs and defendants would turn. The Bianca, 52 L. J., Adm. 56; 8 P. D. 91; 48 L. T. 440; 31 W. R. 954; 5 Asp. M. C. 60.

Shipowners—Cargo-owners.]—Salvors of a ship engaged as a common carrier between Dundee and London, sued the shipowners for salvage of ship and cargo, the cargo being the property of various owners. The salvors averred that the salvage was rendered necessary by the negligence of the master:—Held that the action was rightly brought against the shipowners. Duncan v. Dundee, Perth and London Shipping Co., 5 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 742.

Joinder of Plaintiffs—R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XVI. r. 1; Ord. XVIII. r. 1.]—The plaintiffs, owners, masters and crews of four tugs issued a writ of summons, claiming salvage for services rendered to a ship, her cargo and freight. The owners of the ship and cargo appeared under protest, and moved to set aside the writ, or in the alternative to strike out all the plaintiffs but one set, upon the ground that the causes of action were separate:—Held, that the motion be dismissed; and that the above rules of the supreme court, as interpreted by Smurthwaite v. Hannay, [1894] A. C. 494, do not apply to admiralty practice. The Maréchal Suchet, 65 L. J., Adm. 94; [1896] P. 233; 74 L. T. 789; 45 W. R. 141; 8 Asp. M. C. 108.

c. Consolidation.

When allowed.]—Salvage suits may be consolidated on the motion of the plaintiffs and without the consent of the defendants. The Melpomene, 42 L. J., Adm. 45; L. R. 4 A. & E. 129; 28 L. T. 76; 21 W. R. 956; 1 Asp. M. C. 575. S. P., The Jacob Landstrom, 4 P. D. 191; 40 L. T. 36; 4 Asp. M. C. 58 (not followed in The Strathgarry, infra).

Wherever it appears to the court convenient to do so, salvage actions brought by different salvors against the same property in respect of services rendered upon the same occasion will be consolidated without regard to the consent of the parties. The Jacob Landstrom, supra, not followed; The William Hutt (Lush. 25) and The Melpomene (L. R. 4 A. & E. 129) followed. The Strathgarry, 64 L. J., Adm. 59; [1895] P. 264; 11 R. 732; 72 L. T. 202; 7 Asp. M. C. 573.

A salvor who saves life in addition to rendering other salvage services is not bound to consolidate against his will. The Morocco, 24 L. T. 598; 1 Asp. M. C. 46.

Motion to dismiss after Consolidation.]—When a vessel had been arrested in two causes of salvage, which upon motion by consent of all parties had been consolidated, and a petition was afterwards filed, a motion to dismiss the suit with costs and damages, as the value of the property saved was under 1,000*l.*, was rejected with costs. The Herman Wedel, 39 L. J., Adm. 30; 23 L. T. 876.

Counsel.]—When the interests of one of the parties in a consolidated salvage suit are adverse to the interests of the others, separate counsel on his behalf may be heard at the hearing of the consolidated cause. The Scout, 41 L. J., Adm. 42; L. R. 3 A. & E. 512; 26 L. T. 371; 20 W. R. 617; 1 Asp. M. C. 258.

d. Tender.

Tender.]—In a case where two actions of salvage were instituted against the same vessel, on behalf of plaintiffs having adverse interests, to recover salvage reward in respect of services rendered on the same occasion, the court on the plaintiffs refusing to consent to a consolidation order, allowed the defendants to make a single tender in respect of the claims in both actions. The Jacob Landstrom, 4 P. D. 191; 40 L. T. 38; 4 Asp. M. C. 58.

A defendant may, by act in court, tender a sum of money in satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim, and reserve the question whether he is liable to pay costs. The Hickman, 39 L. J., Adm. 7; L. R. 3 A. & E. 15; 21 L. T. 472; 18 W. R. 151.

Where no tender has been made in a salvage suit for services which were actually towage, the amount of claim could not be recovered. The Strathnaver, 1 App. Cas. 58; 34 L. T. 148; 3 Asp. M. C. 113—P. C.

On Appeal against Award.]—The sum of 800*l.* had been awarded by the cinque port commissioners to salvors for services rendered to a brig and her cargo. The owners of the brig and cargo, pursuant to 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 76, instituted an appeal against this award in the court of admiralty, and afterwards tendered 100*l.* by act in court:—Held, on motion to direct the notice of tender to be taken off the file, that the appellants were entitled to make such tender by act in court, notwithstanding that no tender had been made prior to the institution of the appeal. The Annette, 42 L. J., Adm. 13; L. R. 4 A. & E. 9; 28 L. T. 372; 21 W. R. 552; 1 Asp. M. C. 577.

Tender upheld.]—Tender upheld, though the salvors took out a commission of appraisement, and the salved ship was appraised for considerably more than her stated value. Costs of appraisement allowed. The Batavier, 1 Spinks, 169.

Salvage claims by smacksmen and boatsmen rendering trivial services to ships in distress, offers of 30*l.* and 50*l.* having been made for the services, dismissed. The Black Boy, 3 Hag. Adm. 386, n.; The Funchal, 3 Hag. Adm. 386, n.

Tender without Payment into Court.]—See The Nasmyth, infra, col. 673.

Taxation of Costs after Tender pronounced for.]—A tender in respect of salvage services was made and pronounced for by the court, nothing being said as to costs. Upon a subsequent day the plaintiffs moved for an order for taxation and payment of their costs up to tender:—Held, that the defendants and their bail having been dismissed from the suit, no order could be made. The Countess of Levin and Melville, 5 L. T. 290.

Tender admits Salvage.]—A tender in a salvage suit is an admission that salvage services were rendered. The Portia, 9 Jur. 167.

e. Arrest and Sale—Bail.

Bail.]—When a ship has been found to blame in a cause of collision, and a cause of salvage has been instituted against the other (the injured) ship, the owners of the ship found to blame have a right to intervene in the salvage cause to protect their own interest; and if they choose to put in bail to answer the claim of the salvors in lieu of the bail given by the owners of the injured vessel, the court will give them the conduct of the defence of the salvage suit; under such circumstances the owners of the injured vessel are entitled to have their bail released, and to be paid their costs up to the time when the new bail is put in. The Diana, 31 L. T. 203; 2 Asp. M. C. 366.

What Liable to Arrest.]—Services were rendered, by means of which a vessel and the goods on board were saved from total loss, and the lives of a number of passengers also were saved. Suits were instituted on behalf of the persons who rendered the services, against the vessel and her cargo, to recover salvage reward:—Held, that the wearing apparel of the passengers, and other things belonging to them ejusdem generis, on board the vessel, were privileged from arrest. The Willem III., L. R. 3 A. & E. 487; 25 L. T. 386; 20 W. R. 216; 1 Asp. M. C. 129.

Release of Property.]—A vessel which had been saved was valued by a receiver of wreck at less than 1,000*l.* The salvors obtained an order for a commission of appraisement, but did not execute it, and after three weeks gave notice that they proceeded no further in the suit:—Held, that they might, within four days of obtaining the order, have ascertained the value, and that therefore they must be condemned in damages for detention of the vessel during the rest of the three weeks. The Margaret and Jane, 38 L. J., Adm. 38; L. R. 2 A. & E. 345; 20 L. T. 1017; 17 W. R. 1064.

After release of salved property by the receiver of wreck upon security to his satisfaction, salvors have no right to detain the property, or to arrest it. The Lady Katherine Barham, Lush. 404; 5 L. T. 693.

Perishing Cargo—Order for Sale.]—When a ship and cargo are brought into port by salvors, and a suit is instituted in the court of admiralty to recover salvage reward, that court will, on the application of the salvors, acting with the assent of the owners of the cargo, order a sale of the cargo to prevent deterioration from damage done, although the shipowner, desirous of carrying on the cargo so as to earn freight, opposes the sale and offers to give substantial bail for both ship and cargo; but such sale will be ordered subject to all questions of right to freight. The Kathleen, —— Derelict—Default Action.]—Where in a salvage action, in which no appearance had been entered, it was alleged upon affidavit that the ship and cargo were daily deteriorating in value, and that large expenses were being incurred in respect of the charge of the property, and that the plaintiffs had been in communication with the owners as to a sale, the court, on motion by the plaintiffs prior to decree, ordered an appraisement and sale of the property. The Anna Helena, 48 L. T. 681; 5 Asp. M. C. 61.

Bringing in Account of Freight.]—A ship was arrested, after discharge of cargo, in a suit for salvage; bail was given for ship and freight:—Held, that the owners of the vessel proceeded against were bound to bring in an account of freight on oath, and to set forth when, and the names of the parties by whom, such freight had been paid. The Peace, Swabey, 85.

Action in rem—Judgment for an Amount in Excess of Bail—Liability for Balance.]—Owners who have appeared as defendants in an action in rem, and have given bail, are still personally liable for any amount which the judgment of the court may find to be due to the plaintiffs in excess of the amount for which bail has been given, and execution may be issued against them for such balance and costs. The Dictator, 61 L. J., Adm. 73; [1892] P. 304; 67 L. T. 563; 7 Asp. M. C. 251.

Monition to bring in Freight—Foreign Law.]—In a salvage suit a foreign ship was sold, no appearance being entered for her. The proceeds were insufficient to meet all the claims. The master applied for a monition to the consignees of cargo to bring in the freight, upon which by the foreign law the master had a lien for wages and primage; enforcement of the monition refused, upon the ground that under the circumstances application of the foreign law would be unjust. The Johannes Christoph, 2 Spinks, 93.

Appraisement.]—See The R. M. Mills, Venus, Cargo ex, supra, col. 633.

Excessive Bail.]—Disapprobation of court where excessive bail demanded. The Earl Grey, 1 Spinks, 180. And see The George Gordon, infra, col. 1023.

f. Pleadings.

Agreement with Shipowner—Suit against Cargo.]—In a cause of salvage against ship, freight and cargo, the shipowner, after the institution of the cause, paid a sum in settlement of the claim against him, which was accepted by the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs proceeded against the cargo, and pleaded in their petition the payment of this sum by the shipowner, and stated the amount:—Held, that they were not entitled to plead the amount so accepted by them, although they might plead the fact that they had so settled with the shipowner. The Due Cheechi, L. R. 4 A. & E. 35, n.; 26 L. T. 593; 20 W. R. 686; 1 Asp. M. C. 294.

—— Amount Paid to Third Parties.]—In a suit instituted on behalf of the owners, master and crew of a steam-tug, to recover salvage reward for salving a disabled vessel and her cargo, it appeared by the petition that persons other than the plaintiffs in the cause had assisted in the service, and in an article in the answer filed on behalf of the owners of the salved vessel and her cargo, the defendants alleged that they had been ordered by a court of competent jurisdiction to pay to such other persons 240*l.* in respect of the assistance so rendered by them. The plaintiffs moved to strike out this article. The court, holding that the article was relevant to the matters in issue in the suit, rejected the motion. The Antelope, 42 L. J., Adm. 42; L. R. 4 A. & E. 33; 28 L. T. 74; 21 W. R. 464; 1 Asp. M. C. 511. S. P., The Due Cheechi, supra.

Specific Expenses.]—When in a salvage cause the petition states expenses to have been incurred in rendering the services without stating their amount and the answer admits all the allegations of the petition, the court of admiralty will not allow evidence to be called by the plaintiff to shew the amount of the expenses. If specific amounts are claimed they must be pleaded so as to give the defendant the opportunity of admitting or denying them. The Eintracht, 29 L. T. 851; 2 Asp. M. C. 198.

Inferences.]—When in a salvage suit the defendants admit all the allegations of fact in the petition, but deny the inferences of fact made therefrom in the petition, the plaintiffs may call evidence to establish those inferences. Ib.

Separate Petitions—Repeating Allegations.]—Where in a cause of salvage against a derelict ship, rival salvors institute separate causes and file separate petitions, alleging misconduct against one another, the court of admiralty will not allow the defendants, in their answer to the petition of one set of salvors, to plead that in the petition of the other set there are allegations of misconduct, and that they, for the purpose of the cause, and not otherwise, adopt those allegations; they must either make the allegations of misconduct as their own statements, or omit them. The Kathleen, 43 L. J., Adm. 39; L. R. 4 A. & E. 209; 31 L. T. 204; 2 Asp. M. C. 367.

When rival salvors file separate petitions, alleging misconduct against each other, and the defendants in their separate answers repeat the charges of misconduct made by each salvor against the other, so that the answers are contradictory, the defendants will not be allowed, on the hearing of both causes at the same time, to cross-examine one set of salvors to shew that they and not the other set had been guilty of misconduct. Ib.

Negligence.]—Negligence, though not specifically pleaded in the answer, may be proved to negative a claim to salvage upon a simple traverse of salvage services; but if the defendants mean to charge the claimants with purposely having brought the ship in danger, such defence must be specifically pleaded in the answer. The Minnehaha, Ward v. McCorkill, Lush. 335; 15 Moore, P. C. 133; 30 L. J., Adm. 211; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1257; 4 L. T. 810; 9 W. R. 925.

General Denial that Salvage Due.]—On a motion by salvors, on objection to certain articles of the defendants' answer, which averred, that though the services rendered might be of the nature of salvage service, yet that because the owners of the salving and the charterers of the salved vessel were the same persons, no salvage was due; the court ordered the article denying that any salvage was due to be struck out, but not the other articles detailing the facts, which, if proved, might not bar the claim for salvage, but might affect the quantum. The Collier, L. R. 1 A. & E. 83; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 789; 16 L. T. 155.

Amending and Adding.]—The court refused to allow defendants to add to their pleas an allegation that the salvors, since the commencement of the suit, had assaulted some of the witnesses who were going to give evidence on behalf of the owners. The Fielden, 11 W. R. 156.

Statement of Claim.]—A statement of claim in a salvage action was drawn in the Form No. 6 of Appendix C. to the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883; on motion by the defendants under Ord. XIX. r. 7, for a further and better statement of claim or particulars:—Held, that the plaintiffs must deliver a fuller statement of claim, and that in salvage actions a fuller form than that given in Appendix C. No. 6, should generally be followed. The Isis, 53 L. J., Adm. 14; 8 P. D. 227; 49 L. T. 444; 32 W. R. 171; 5 Asp. M. C. 155.

Plea of Tender—Payment into Court.]—A plea of tender without payment into court is bad. The Nasmyth, 54 L. J., Adm. 63; 10 P. D. 41; 52 L. T. 392; 33 W. R. 736; 5 Asp. M. C. 364.

g. Evidence.

Amount—Different Suit.]—In a salvage suit evidence of the amount in which another suit has been instituted in another court for services rendered at the same time is not admissible. The Antelope, 27 L. T. 663; 1 Asp. M. C. 477.

Agreed Value.]—When, in a salvage action, the defendants filed affidavits of value of their ship, freight and cargo, which values have been accepted and agreed to by the plaintiff, the defendants will not be allowed at the hearing to give evidence to decrease the values. The Hanna, 37 L. T. 364; 3 Asp. M. C. 503.

Deposition before Receivers of Wreck.]—A receiver of wreck, in taking depositions under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), s. 448, should put down the facts deposed to as given by the deponent, and should not correct any statement made by the deponent which, within the personal knowledge of the receiver, is erroneous. The Lancashire, L. R. 4 A. & E. 198; 29 L. T. 927; 2 Asp. M. C. 202.

The examination of the crew of a salved vessel taken by the receiver of wreck under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, s. 448, is not admissible as evidence in a salvage suit for the purpose of proving the facts stated in the examination. The Little Lizzie, L. R. 3 A. & E. 56; 23 L. T. 84; 18 W. R. 960.

Contradictory.]—When the evidence is directly contradictory, the court considers only on whom the onus of proof lies, and whether that party has discharged it. The court seldom, if ever, attributes perjury to either side. The Nymphe, 5 L. T. 365.

Protest.]—In salvage suits the protest should always be brought in. The Emma, 2 W. Rob. 315.

On Appeal from Justices.]—Appeals from justices in salvage cases proceeded upon act on petition; further evidence admissible in admiralty on appeal. The Thomas Wood, 1 W. Rob. 18.

Facts Admitted.]—See The Hardwick, infra, col. 1000.

h. Costs.

Tender—Costs of Proceedings subsequent to.]—A salvage suit was brought, and a sum less by 18*l.* than the limit of 300*l.* of the county courts jurisdiction was recovered. The agreed value of the property saved was 2,200*l.*; the claim was for 700*l.*; there was considerable conflict of evidence as to the degree of meritoriousness of the services, and questions of some difficulty arose:—Held, having regard especially, though not solely, to the smallness of the difference between the sum awarded and the limit of the jurisdiction of the county court, that the case was proper for a certificate to entitle the plaintiffs to costs. The Hickman, 39 L. J., Adm. 7; L. R. 3 A. & E. 15; 21 L. T. 472; 18 W. R. 151.

When a tender is made in a salvage suit, it should state that it is a tender for salvage and costs, or should specify the ground upon which costs are not tendered, and refer the question of costs to the consideration of the court. Ib.

The master of the "London" agreed for 400*l.* to tow the "Waverley" into Lisbon, about twenty-five miles. The weather, which was bad at the time of the agreement, subsequently became worse, and much difficulty was experienced in performing the salvage. In a suit for salvage the owners of the "Waverley" tendered 400*l.*, the amount agreed upon for salvage, and 123*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.* for expenses and detention:—Held, that the agreement was equitable and must be upheld, with costs from the time of making the tender. The Waverley, 40 L. J., Adm. 42; L. R. 3 A. & E. 369; 24 L. T. 713; 1 Asp. M. C. 47.

See also XXVI. ADMIRALTY LAW AND PRACTICE, infra, col. 1019.

Sufficiency of Tender.]—If in an action for salvage services rendered in the United Kingdom a tender under 200*l.*, "with such costs (if any) as may be due by law," for the services rendered, is accepted, the court will not certify for costs, except for special cause shown. The John, Lush. 11; 1 L. T. 495.

Where a tender in a salvage suit is pronounced for, the usual practice is to condemn the plaintiffs in the costs incurred since the time of tender, but this practice is not invariable, and where the court is of opinion that the tender is not a liberal one, it will in its discretion make no order with regard to such costs. The Lotus, 7 P. D. 199; 47 L. T. 447; 30 W. R. 892; 4 Asp. M. C. 595.

One of several salvors sued for salvage services rendered in the United Kingdom. The defendants tendered, by act of court, 40*l.*, "with costs up to time of tender," which the plaintiff refused. The defendants then resisted the claim, partly on the question of amount, and partly on the ground (which they failed to support) that the plaintiff had been party to a settlement of the whole claim with one of the co-salvors. The court overruled the tender, and gave 100*l.*:—Held, that, notwithstanding the question of agreement, the case was not a fit one to be tried in the superior court, and accordingly refused to certify for costs, under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 460. The Comte Nesselrood, Lush. 454; 31 L. J., Adm. 77; 6 L. T. 57.

Held, also, that thereby, notwithstanding the form of tender, the plaintiff was not entitled to his costs up to the time of tender. Ib.

Whenever defendants intend to rely upon 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 460, as governing the question of costs, the facts material for that purpose should be distinctly pleaded and proved. When a tender is pronounced sufficient, costs do not, as a rule, follow the decision. The Favourite, 5 L. T. 773.

Although the ordinary practice of the court is to recognise only such tenders as are made in acts of court, provided they are of a fixed sum with costs, and without any condition, still if it should appear in any case that the salvors, before action brought, have, with a full knowledge of all the circumstances, rejected a liberal offer of remuneration, an actual tender of money, and a smaller sum is awarded, they will lose the costs of the suit. The Sovereign, Lush. 85; 29 L. J., Adm. 113; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 832; 2 L. T. 669.

When a tender of 200*l.* for the services has been made and accepted, the plaintiff is entitled to costs, notwithstanding the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 460. The Germ, 15 W. R. 937.

Where in a salvage action the defendants with their defence tender and pay into court a sum of money in satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim, and plead such payment into court, and the sum paid in is held to be sufficient, the court will order the defendants to pay the plaintiff's costs up to the date of the delivery of the defence, unless the circumstances of the case render it just and expedient to order otherwise. The William Symington, 54 L. J., Adm. 4; 10 P. D. 1; 51 L. T. 461; 33 W. R. 371; 5 Asp. M. C. 293.

In a salvage action it is not necessary that a tender should be accompanied with an offer to pay the plaintiff's costs up to the date of tender. Ib.

Salvors rejected a tender which was afterwards pronounced for:—Held, that the salvors were entitled to no costs. The John and Thomas, 1 Hag. Adm. 157, n.

In order to escape paying salvors' costs, a tender in a salvage suit should be in regular form, as early as possible, by act of court. The Vrouw Margaretha, 4 C. Rob. 103.

Where a tender in a salvage action is upheld costs will be given. The Emu, 1 W. Rob. 15.

Costs of Appraisement.]—A salved vessel was valued by a receiver of wreck at 746*l.* on the 3rd of December. On the 8th the salvors instituted a suit in 2,500*l.*; on the 18th they applied for an appraisement of the vessel; on the 14th of January following they gave notice that they proceeded no further in the suit:—Held, that the salvors must have been aware within a short time of taking out the appraisement that the value fixed by the receiver was substantially correct, and that they must therefore be condemned in costs, and in damages from the 22nd of December to the 14th of January. The Margaret and Jane, 38 L. J., Adm. 38; L. R. 2 A. & E. 345; 20 L. T. 1017; 17 W. R. 1064.

Salvors are entitled to the costs of a commission of appraisement when it appears that there is a substantial difference between the appraised value and that alleged by the defendants. The Paul, 35 L. J., Adm. 16; L. R. 1 A. & E. 57; 14 L. T. 192.

The value of ship, as appraised by the officer of the court, was less, and of the cargo more, than the values tendered by the defendant. The court condemned the defendant in the costs of the appraisement. The Magdalen, 5 L. T. 692.

The owner alleged the value of a ship to be one-fifteenth less than it afterwards was found to be; the amount claimed was less than the sum for which the owners were willing to give security, but the costs of the suit would extend the claim beyond that sum:—Held, that the costs of the appraisement should be costs in the cause. The Rapid, 18 W. R. 150.

If salvors take out a commission of appraisement without cause, they will have to pay the costs; as where the owners put the value at 865*l.*, and upon appraisement it was found to be 880*l.* The Commodore, 1 Spinks, 175, n.; The Wilhelmina, 1 Not. of Cas. 376.

17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, ss. 458, 460—Salvage within Three Miles of Shore.]—Where the ancient jurisdiction of the admiralty is limited by statute, it is for those who deny the jurisdiction to prove the circumstances which limit it. Owners of a vessel salved claimed that no costs were due to the salvors, on the ground that the service was within three miles of the shore, and that under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, ss. 458, 460, the justices alone had jurisdiction. The locality of the salvage service not being proved, costs were allowed. The Argo, Swabey, 112.

Consolidated Actions.]—Where three separate salvage suits were instituted for services rendered on the same occasion, and not consolidated, full costs were not allowed to the third claimant. The Belle of Lagos, 20 L. T. 1019; 17 W. R. 899.

Where separate salvage actions against the same ship were consolidated, leave being given to the various plaintiffs to appear separately at the hearing, as their interests were conflicting, and the defendants with their defence tendered and paid into court a sum of money as being sufficient to satisfy all claims, but did not apportion it to the separate plaintiffs, the court, having upheld the tender, ordered all parties to pay their own costs incurred subsequently to the tender, the defendants paying the costs previous to the tender. The Lee, 60 L. T. 939; 6 Asp. M. C. 395.

Damages and Costs for Arresting in High Court.]—No general rule as to damages and costs for arresting property of less value than 1,000*l.* for salvage in the high court, contrary to 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 49. The Eleonore, Br. & Lush. 185; 33 L. J., Adm. 19; 9 L. T. 397; 12 W. R. 218.

Salvage out of United Kingdom.]—Salvage services were rendered to a vessel beyond three miles from the shore of the United Kingdom. The sum of 100*l.* only was awarded:—Held, that since the salvage was not in the United Kingdom, the provision in 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 460, did not apply so as to bar the salvors of their costs. The Actif, Swabey, 237; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 893; 5 W. R. 547.

Proceedings through Default of other Side.]—The costs of salvors, incurred in taking affidavits before issue joined, are allowed when the defendants have not unreservedly admitted the facts pleaded in the petition, and supported by the affidavits. The Fairlina, 14 W. R. 869.

Where a master refuses to go on shore and refer to the local justices the amount of salvage due for services rendered in the United Kingdom, and removes the vessel from the local jurisdiction, and an action is thereon brought in the court of admiralty, the court, awarding only 50*l.*, will certify for the salvor's costs under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 460. The Alpha, Lush. 89; 2 L. T. 521.

Interest.]—Although execution has not issued, interest upon a salvage award is recoverable from the date of the judgment, and interest on the solicitor's taxed bill of costs from the date of the allocatur of the taxing-master. The Jones Brothers, 46 L. J., Adm. 75; 37 L. T. 164; 3 Asp. M. C. 478.

The court has no power to refuse interest because the judgment recovered is for salvage. Ib.

Costs of Parties against whom no Claim made out.]—When parties have been summoned to appear against whom no claim to contribution is made out, the parties so summoned are entitled to their costs. Sarpedon, Cargo ex, 3 P. D. 28; 37 L. T. 505; 26 W. R. 374; 3 Asp. M. C. 509.

Award Reduced on Appeal.]—Award of Cinque Ports commissioners reduced; costs of appeal to be borne by the party incurring them. The Henry of Philadelphia, 1 Hag. Adm. 264.

Costs of Appeal.]—Where in an action of salvage the amount awarded is reduced on appeal, the general practice is to give no costs of the appeal, but this is not a hard-and-fast rule so as to deprive the court of all discretion in the matter. The Gipsy Queen, 64 L. J., Adm. 86; [1895] P. 176; 11 R. 766; 72 L. T. 454; 43 W. R. 359; 7 Asp. M. C. 586—C. A.

—— Amount.]—Although the sum awarded by the appellate court for salvage services is under 200*l.*, costs will be allowed if the case is a fit one to be brought before the appellate court. The Minnehaha, Lush. 335; 15 Moore, P. C. 133; 30 L. J., Adm. 211; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1257; 4 L. T. 810; 9 W. R. 925.

—— General Rule.]—Though in appeals as to the amount of salvage the privy council generally did not give a successful appellant his costs of the appeal, such appeals under the Judicature Act form no exception to the general rule that a successful appellant is entitled to his costs. The City of Berlin, 47 L. J., Adm. 2; 2 P. D. 187; 37 L. T. 307; 25 W. R. 793; 3 Asp. M. C. 491—C. A.

Misconduct of Salvors.]—Punished by order to pay costs. The Cadiz and The Boyne, 35 L. T. 602; 3 Asp. M. C. 332.

Separate Appearances.]—Where in a salvage suit, where the mate appeared separately from the owners and rest of the crew, half costs only given to each. The Nicolina, 2 W. Rob. 175.

Two Actions for Salvage against the same Property.]—In a case where the defendants, in two actions of salvage instituted against the same property, were ordered to pay only one set of costs, to be apportioned between the plaintiffs in the two actions, the court directed that the apportionment should be made according to the amount of the plaintiff's respective bills of costs. The Pasithea, 5 P. D. 5.

Where separate salvage suits have been unnecessarily prosecuted, the court will only allow one set of costs, and direct the amount allowed to be distributed ratably amongst the plaintiffs in the separate suits. The Sarah, 3 P. D. 39; 37 L. T. 831; 3 Asp. M. C. 542.

Allowance and Taxation of Costs and Charges.]—The practice of bringing in on taxation in salvage suits two separate bills of costs—one containing the expenses incident to the employment of an agent at the out-port, and the other the remaining charges incurred in respect of the conduct of the suit—though formerly prevailing among the proctors of the court of admiralty, is no longer to be followed, and in future one bill only, containing all charges, whether out-port or otherwise, is to be delivered into the registry. The City of Brussels, 42 L. J., Adm. 72; L. R. 4 A. & E. 194; 29 L. T. 312; 22 W. R. 71; 2 Asp. M. C. 192.

A proctor retained to conduct a salvage suit may legally employ a person who is not a solicitor or proctor as his agent at the out-port, but for the performance of other than proctorial acts only; and charges for work done and disbursements made by such agent in the capacity of a clerk will, if unobjectionable in other respects, be allowed to the proctor on taxation. Ib.

A charge of 10*l.* 10*s.* for agency allowed in such a case. Ib.

Apportionment—Ship and Cargo.]—In apportioning the costs of the salvor, payable by the owners of the salved ship and cargo respectively, The Peace (Swabey, 115) followed. The Elton, [1891] P. 265; 65 L. T. 232; 7 Asp. M. C. 66.

Apportionment—Parties not Interested.]—On appeal against apportionment of salvage reward, the owners of the salved vessel were cited and asked for an indemnity for their costs, which the appellants refused, and gave notice that no relief would be applied for against the owners. The owners were held to be entitled to their costs up to the time of such notice. The Castlewood, 42 L. T. 702; 4 Asp. M. C. 278.

Paid out of Fund in Court.]—Costs of all parties were ordered to be paid out of fund in court, except a defendant's, in consequence of his misconduct to the salvors. The Cadiz, 35 L. T. 602; 3 Asp. M. C. 332.

Certificate for Costs.]—Although a suit for salvage might have been tried in a county court, the judge of the court of admiralty will certify for costs if it is less expensive to try there than in the county court. The Beaumaris Castle, 40 L. J., Adm. 41; 24 L. T. 448; 1 Asp. M. C. 19.

To enable a salvor who does not recover more than 200*l.* to get his costs of suit in the court of admiralty, the court must certify that the case was proper to be brought there. Certificate granted where the claim was resisted by charges of misconduct or negligence in the salvors. The Cherubim, Ir. R. 2 Eq. 172. S. P., The Avenir, Ir. R. 2 Eq. 111; 1 L. T. 495.

Certificate for costs refused where the matter (salvage) might have been decided by justices under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 460. The John, Lush. 11.

Where the master of a ship to which salvage services had been given refused to go on shore and refer the case to the justices under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 460, and carried his ship out of the jurisdiction, and it is brought into the admiralty court, the costs will be certified for. The Alpha, Lush. 89; 2 L. T. 521.

Excessive Claim.]—Costs given against salvors where ship arrested for 5,000*l.* and 15*l.* awarded. The Agamemnon, 48 L. T. 383; 5 Asp. M. C. 92.

Inflated and exaggerated claims dismissed with costs. The Towan, 2 W. Rob. 259.

Trivial Claims.]—A trivial case of salvage brought in admiralty; 5*l.* and no costs awarded. The Red Rover, 3 W. Rob. 150.

Fraudulent Claim.]—Fraudulent salvage case dismissed with costs. The Susannah, 3 Hag. Adm. 345, n.

Several Issues.]—The plaintiffs having towed a vessel into greater comparative safety, the hawser then broke, and it was dangerous to take her again in tow. In an action for salvage:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to the general costs of the action, but not to those of a special issue as to damage to machinery on which they had failed. The Camellia, 53 L. J., Adm. 12; 9 P. D. 27; 50 L. T. 126; 32 W. R. 495; 5 Asp. M. C. 197.

XIX. TOWAGE.

The Contract—Fitness of Tug.]—The plaintiff, a master mariner, contracted with the defendants for a lump sum to be paid him by the defendants, to take a certain specified steam tug of the defendants', towing six sailing barges, from Hull to the Brazils, the plaintiff paying the crew and providing provisions for all on board for seventy days. The engines of the steamtug were damaged and out of repair at the time of the contract, but neither the plaintiff nor defendants were then aware of this. The consequence, however, of the engines being so defective was that the time occupied in the voyage was increased, and the plaintiff's gain in performing his contract was much less than it would otherwise have been:—Held, by Brett and Cotton, L.JJ., that as the contract related to a specified vessel, there was no implied undertaking by the defendants that it should be reasonably efficient for the purposes of the voyage, and that therefore the defective state of the engines gave the plaintiff no cause of action, it not appearing that the engines were in a worse state when the plaintiff took possession of the vessel than they were at the time of the contract. Robertson v. Amazon Tug and Lighterage Co., 51 L. J., Q. B. 68; 7 Q. B. D. 598; 46 L. T. 146; 30 W. R. 308; 4 Asp. M. C. 496—C. A.

Held, contra, by Bramwell, L.J., that the defective state of the engines gave the plaintiff a cause of action, as there was an implied undertaking by the defendants that the engines were not so defective. Ib.

There is an implied obligation in a contract of towage, that the tug shall be efficient and properly equipped for the service, and a proviso in the contract that the owners will not be responsible for the default of the master, does not release them from such implied obligation. The Undaunted, 55 L. J., Adm. 24; 11 P. D. 46; 54 L. T. 542; 34 W. R. 686; 5 Asp. M. C. 580.

Validity — Commission to Master.] — The master agreed with a tug for towage from Sea Reach, in the Thames, to a London wharf, and agreed to pay 6*l.* and give an order upon the owner of the wharf for the amount usually allowed by him (under the name of "towage") as a premium to vessels of the kind coming to his wharf. The service was performed by the tug, and the master paid the money, but refused to give the order on the owner of the wharf. The amount actually paid by the owner of the wharf, according to his practice, was proved; and it was also proved that if an order, signed by the master of the vessel towed, was presented by the master of the tug, the money would be (as a matter of practice) paid to him:—Held, that the master of the vessel had no authority to agree to transfer to the master of the tug an uncertain sum payable to the owners of the vessel; and that the court had no authority to enforce such a contract or give damages for the breach of it. The Martha, Lush. 314.

Evidence of Making.]—A master of a steam tug, of which the defendant was owner, was employed by the plaintiff to tow his smack out of a harbour. In so doing the smack was stranded, through the negligence of the master. The plaintiff had on previous occasions hired the defendant's steam tug, and on paying the charge had received a receipt, upon the back of which was printed a notice that the defendant would not be answerable for damage occasioned by any supposed negligence of his servants:—Held, that it was a question for the jury whether the contract was made on the terms printed on the back of the receipts. Symonds v. Pain, 6 H. & N. 709; 30 L. J., Ex. 256.

Concealment of Damage—Fraudulent Engagement of Ship to Tow.] — See The Kingalock, supra, col. 658.

Performance—Delay—Extra Pay.]—When a contract is entered into to tow a vessel from one point to another for a fixed sum, the tug cannot claim extra remuneration in the nature of payment for towage in respect of a delay which occurs during the transit without any fault on the part of the tug or the tow. The Hjemmett, 49 L. J., Adm. 66; 5 P. D. 227; 42 L. T. 514; 4 Asp. M. C. 274.

Towage Completed by another Tug.] — An agreement to tow from Dover to Gravesend; the tug broke down, and the towage completed by another tug of the same owners:—Held, that the original agreement was performed. The Lady Flora Hastings, 3 W. Rob. 118.

Agreement to Tow—Unsuccessful Attempt.] — See The Benlarig, supra, col. 597.

Indemnity to Hirer—Recovery against Underwriters — Insurance against Collision.] — The owner of a Thames tug agreed with the hirer of the tug to insure against damage she, or barges in tow of her, might suffer or do to other ships, and to indemnify the hirer in respect of any such damage to the extent of all moneys received by him under such insurance. The tug was sued for damage done to a steamship at anchor by a barge alleged to be in tow of the tug. The hirer admitted liability, and paid to the steamship owner the amount of the damage. He then applied to the tug-owner for the moneys payable under a policy which had been effected by the tug-owner in pursuance of the agreement. The tug-owner applied to the underwriters for the policy moneys, but they declined to pay, alleging that the damage was not done by a barge in tow of the tug. The tug-owner, having received nothing under the policy, refused to pay anything to the hirer. Thereupon the hirer sued the tug-owner for breach of the contract to indemnify:—Held, that as the burden of compelling the underwriters to pay did not rest on the tug-owner, the contract had not been broken. The Lord of the Isles, 64 L. J., Adm. 15; [1894] P. 342; 11 R. 736; 71 L. T. 92; 7 Asp. M. C. 500.

Agreement by Salving Steamship to Stand by—Payment for Unsuccessful Salvage Service—Authority of Master.]—The steamship "W." having found the steamship "A.," on the 12th February, off Cape Finisterre, in a disabled condition, towed her off in heavy weather until the 14th February, when, in consequence of the condition of the "A.," the master of the "W." proposed to abandon her. However, at the request of the master of the "A." it was agreed in writing that the "W." should "stand by the 'A.' as long as possible, and that the 'W.' and owners are to be paid for the time and towing already done and to be done from the 12th February, 1883." The "W." therefore again took the "A." in tow, but on the 16th February, owing to stress of weather, it was found necessary to abandon her, after which she was totally lost. In an action for towage against the owners of the "A.," the court held that the agreement entered into by the master of the "A." was a reasonable one, and one which in his position of agent ex necessitate for his owners, he had an authority to enter into; and awarded the plaintiffs the sum of 400*l.* in respect of the services rendered prior to and after the agreement. The Alfred, Wellfield (Owners) v. Adamson, 50 L. T. 511; 5 Asp. M. C. 214.

Condition Exempting from Liability—Negligence of Tug Owners or Servants.]—The master of a steam tug, who had contracted to tow a fishing smack out of the harbour of Great Yarmouth to sea on the terms that his owners should not be liable for damage arising from any negligence or default of themselves or their servants, after the towage had been in part performed, took in tow, in addition to the smack, six other vessels, and in consequence was unable to keep the fishing smack in her course, so that she went aground and was lost. By having more than six vessels in tow at once, the master of the tug disobeyed a regulation made by the harbour-master of Great Yarmouth under statutory authority. The owners of the fishing smack brought an action against the owners of the steam tug to recover damages:—Held, that the loss of the smack was occasioned by the negligence of the master of the tug; that the defendants were protected from liability by the terms of the towage contract, and that the action must be dismissed. The United Service or Cole v. Great Yarmouth Steam Tug Co., 53 L. J., Adm. 1; 9 P. D. 3; 49 L. T. 701; 32 W. R. 565; 5 Asp. M. C. 170—C. A.

Collision—Implied Agreement as to Liability.] —A tug while towing the plaintiff's vessel came into collision with and sank her. The tug was chartered by the defendants, a company, to work with their own tugs, and one of the terms on which the company towed vessels was that they would not be answerable for loss or damage to any vessel in tow of their tugs (which were specified by name) whether occasioned by the negligence of their servants or otherwise. The tug in question was not one of those specified, but the plaintiff was a director of the defendant company, and was aware of the chartering of the tug:—Held, that the plaintiff must be taken to have impliedly agreed to employ the tug on the same terms as the other tugs of the company, and that his claim was therefore barred by the condition. The Tasmania, 57 L. J., Adm. 49; 13 P. D. 110; 59 L. T. 263; 6 Asp. M. C. 305.

Liability for Collision—Compulsory Pilot.]—Where a steam tug towing a vessel under a towage contract is so negligently navigated as to come into collision with a vessel belonging to third parties, the owners of the steam tug are liable for the damage done, even if at the time of the collision the vessel in tow was in charge of a duly-licensed pilot by compulsion of law, whose default solely occasioned the collision. The Mary, 48 L. J., Adm. 66; 5 P. D. 14; 41 L. T. 351; 28 W. R. 95; 4 Asp. M. C. 183.

—— Liability of Vessel in Tow.]—A tug with a vessel in tow came into collision with another vessel, which was seriously injured by the tug, but not injured by the vessel in tow. The collision might have been avoided had there been a good look-out on the vessel in tow, and had she warned the tug that the latter was in danger of collision by continuing on her course:—Held, that the owners of the vessel in tow were liable. The Niobe, 57 L. J., Adm. 33; 13 P. D. 55; 59 L. T. 257; 36 W. R. 812; 6 Asp. M. C. 300.

Under an ordinary contract of towage, the vessel in tow has control over the tug, and is therefore liable for the wrongful acts of the latter, unless they are done so suddenly as to prevent the vessel in tow from controlling them. Ib.

Admiralty Jurisdiction.]—The court has jurisdiction to entertain a suit instituted by the owners of a vessel against a steam tug engaged to tow the vessel, for negligently towing the vessel so as to cause her to come into collision with and do damage to another vessel. The Energy, 39 L. J., Adm. 25; L. R. 3 A. & E. 48; 23 L. T. 601; 18 W. R. 1009.

A damage to a vessel whilst being towed, caused by the improper navigation of the tug which was towing it, is within the Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 63), s. 54, sub-s. 4, notwithstanding such damage occurred also through a breach of the towing contract, and the owner of the tug is therefore entitled to the limitation of liability given by that section if such damage occurred without his actual fault or privity. Wahlberg v. Young, 45 L. J., C. P. 783; 24 W. R. 846: 4 Asp. M. C. 27, n.

Semble, that if the damage occurred from a mere breach of the contract to tow, the owner of the tug would not be entitled to the benefit of such section. Ib.

Claim for Salvage—Negligence.]—A tug under contract to tow a ship is not entitled to salvage remuneration for rescuing the ship from danger brought about by the tug's negligent performance of her towage contract. A tug agreed to tow a ship from Liverpool to the Skerries for a fixed sum. The tug imprudently towed the ship in bad weather too near a lee shore, and the weather becoming worse during the performance of the agreed towage service, the hawser parted and the ship was placed in a position of danger and was compelled to let go her anchors to avoid being driven on shore. From this position she was rescued by the tug, having been compelled to slip her anchors and chains, which were lost: —Held, that the tug was not entitled to claim salvage remuneration, and that her owners were liable to pay for the loss of the anchors and chains. The Robert Dixon, 5 P. D. 54; 42 L. T. 344; 28 W. R. 716—C. A.

Tug bound to follow Directions, and not Liable for Consequent Danger.]—Semble, if a tug receives positive directions from the ship she is towing as to the course she is to steer, she is bound to obey them; and if the ship gets into danger in consequence of such directions the tug is not liable. Ib.

Damage by Tug—Jurisdiction.]—The words of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 6, "claim in the nature of towage," do not include a claim by a towed vessel against her tug for misconduct. The damage referred to by that section and by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 10, s. 7, is that which results from a collision. The Robert Pow, Br. & Lush. 99; 32 L. J., Adm. 164; 9 L. T. 237.

Stranding of Tow—Responsibility for Course Set—Contributory Negligence.]—In a case of towage, where no directions are given by those on board the tow, the tug is responsible for the direction of the course; but the master or other person in charge of the tow is not justified in allowing the tug to continue unchecked upon a course which will lead the vessels into danger. The Altair, 66 L. J., Adm. 42; [1897] P. 105; 76 L. T. 263; 45 W. R. 622; 8 Asp. M. C. 224.

Liberty to Tow—Effect of, in Charterparty.]—See Potter v. Burrell, supra, XI. CHARTERPARTY, col. 239.

Maritime Lien.]—Mere towage services are not the subject of a maritime lien. Westrup v. Great Yarmouth Steam Carrying Co., 59 L. J., Ch. 111; 43 Ch. D. 241; 61 L. T. 714; 38 W. R. 505; 6 Asp. M. C. 443.

1. Negligence.

a. Generally.

Contributory Negligence at Common Law.]—In an action for running down a ship neither party can recover when both are in the wrong; but the plaintiff may recover, although he might have prevented the collision, provided that he was in no degree in fault in not endeavouring to prevent it. Vennall v. Garner, 1 Car. & M. 21; 3 Tyr. 85.

A plaintiff cannot recover unless the injury is attributable entirely to the fault of the defendant; if he was partly in fault, but the plaintiff might with care have prevented the accident, he cannot maintain his action. Vanderplank v. Miller, M. & M. 169.

The question is, whether the plaintiff by his negligence or improper conduct substantially contributed to the occurrence of the injury of which he complains; not to the amount of it, but to its occurrence. Sills v. Brown, 9 Car. & P. 601. S. P., The Lady Anne, 15 Jur. 18.

If in an action for the negligence of the defendant's servants in managing a barge, so that the plaintiff's barge was run down, it appears that the accident happened from circumstances which persons of competent skill could not guard against, the plaintiff will not be entitled to recover; nor will he if his men had put his barge in such a place that persons using ordinary care would run against it; nor if the accident could have been avoided but for the negligence of the plaintiff's own men, in not being aboard his barge at the time when it was lying in a dangerous place. Luck v. Seward, 4 Car. & P. 106.

Before a plaintiff in a collision cause can be deprived of his right of recovery against a negligent defendant by reason of an act done by the plaintiff, without which the collision would not have occurred, it must be shown that such an act of the plaintiff was negligent. The Sisters, 45 L. J., Adm. 39; 1 P. D. 117; 34 L. T. 338; 24 W. R. 412; 3 Asp. M. C. 122—C. A. S. P., The Hornet, infra.

Negligence of Plaintiff—Question for Jury.]—In an action to recover damages for an injury occasioned by a collision between two vessels, the proper question for the jury is whether the damage was occasioned entirely by the negligence or improper conduct of the defendant, or whether the plaintiff himself so far contributed to the misfortune by his own negligence or want of ordinary and common care and caution, that, but for such negligence or want of ordinary care and caution on his part, the misfortune would not have happened; in the first case the plaintiff would be entitled to recover; in the latter not, as, but for his own fault, the misfortune could not have happened. Tuff v. Warman, 5 C. B. (N.S.) 573; 27 L. J., C. P. 322; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 222; 6 W. R. 693—Ex. Ch.

—— Verdict for Reduced Damages.]—A jury found that the plaintiffs' barge was sunk partly by swell caused by the defendants' steamship navigating at too high a rate of speed, and partly because she was not properly trimmed, and gave damages for less than the total loss:—Held, that the verdict was properly entered for the plaintiffs, and new trial refused. Smith v. Dobson, 3 Man. & G. 59; 3 Scott (N.R.) 336.

—— Overloading—Swell from Steamer.]—In an action against the captain of a steam vessel for swamping a loaded wherry on the river, by a swell produced by a too rapid rate of passage, the jury, to find for the plaintiff, must be satisfied that the mischief was occasioned by the swell alone; and if they think it doubtful whether it was or not, or think that the plaintiff contributed to the injury he sustained by his own improper conduct, either in mismanaging or overloading the boat, they must find their verdict for the defendant. Luxford v. Large, 5 Car. & P. 421. See also The Batavier, Netherlands Steamboat Co. v. Styles, post, col. 691.

New Trial.]—If a vessel is damaged by another running foul of it, and the jury finds a verdict for the plaintiff, the court will not send the case for a new trial, because there may be some ground to believe that the plaintiff was negligent in navigating his vessel as well as the defendant. Collinson v. Larkins, 3 Taunt. 1.

Passenger—Whether he may Recover where his own Ship in Fault.]—One who sustains an injury from a collision with a vessel cannot maintain an action against the owners of such vessel, if negligence either on his own part or on the part of those having the guidance of the vessel in which he is a passenger conduced to the accident, and such injury might have been avoided by the exercise of reasonable care on his part or their part. Thorogood v. Bryan, 8 C. B. 115; 18 L. J., C. P. 336. Overruled, The Bernina, infra, col. 687.

One who sustains an injury in a collision cannot maintain an action against the owners of the vessel if negligence on his part or on the part of those in charge of the ship in which he is a passenger contributed to the collision. Cattlin v. Hills, 8 C. B. 115.

A passenger on board a steamboat was injured by an anchor falling upon him in a collision caused by the fault of the other ship:—Held, that the passenger could recover, although the injury was caused in part by his own negligence in being where he was, or by the negligence of the people of his own ship in stowing the anchor where it was. Greenland v. Chaplin, 5 Ex. 243; 19 L. J., Ex. 293.

A passenger and an engineer on board the "Bushire" were killed in a collision between the "Bernina" and the "Bushire," caused by fault in both ships, but without fault on the part of the deceased:—Held, that their representatives could recover full damages against the owners of the "Bernina." Thorogood v. Bryan, supra, overruled. The Bernina, Mills v. Armstrong, 57 L. J., Adm. 65; 13 App. Cas. 1; 58 L. T. 423; 36 W. R. 870; 6 Asp. M. C. 257; 52 J. P. 212—H. L. (E.)

Remoteness of Plaintiff's Negligence.]—A plaintiff cannot recover for mischief done to his ship by its being struck by the defendant's ship in consequence of the latter being improperly managed, if it appears that the plaintiff's ship was improperly managed, and that such improper management directly contributed in any degree to the accident, however much the defendant may also be in fault; though, if there is negligence on the part of the plaintiff only remotely connected with the accident, the question is, whether the defendant by ordinary care and skill might have avoided the accident. Dowell v. General Steam Navigation Co., 5 El. & Bl. 195; 26 L. J., Q. B. 59; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 800; 3 W. R. 492. And see General Steam Navigation Co. v. Morrison, 13 C. B. 581; 22 L. J., C. P. 178; 17 Jur. 673; 1 W. R. 330. The Jane Bacon, 27 W. R. 35.

Negligence where both Ships in Fault.]—As to whether such negligence would be negligence at common law, see The Margaret, 50 L. J., Adm. 67; 6 P. D. 76; 44 L. T. 291; 29 W. R. 533; 4 Asp. M. C. 375; The Margaret, Cayzer v. Carron Co., 9 App. Cas. 873, infra; The Fenham, 6 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 501; L. R. 3 P. C. 212; 23 L. T. 329; The Friends, infra; The Meteor, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 507.

Negligence—No Difference between Rules of Common Law and Admiralty as to.]—See. per Campbell, C., The Friends, General Steam Navigation Co. v. Tonkin, 4 Moore, P. C. 314. Per Lord Blackburn, The Margaret, Cayzer v. Carron Co., 9 App. Cas. 873, 880; 54 L. J., Adm. 18; 52 L. T. 361; 33 W. R. 281; 5 Asp. M. C. 371.

Vessel Disabled by Prior Collision.]—When a ship seeks to excuse her failure to comply with the sailing regulations and with a seamanlike precaution, by showing that such a failure was in consequence of her being disabled in a prior collision, it is material to inquire whether the prior collision was due to her default or was the result of inevitable accident. The Kjobenhavn, 30 L. T. 136; 2 Asp. M. C. 213—P. C.

Semble, that if the prior collision was due to the default of the ship so seeking excuse, and if her subsequent failure to comply as aforesaid contribute to the collision proceeded for, she will be to blame. Ib.

The owners of a disabled vessel are answerable for damage done by its accidentally drifting, when so disabled, against another vessel. Seccombe v. Wood, 2 M. & Rob. 290.

When it is the duty of a ship to keep out of the way of another, but she is unable to do so by reason of being disabled in a former collision, and the other ship being unaware of her disabled condition continues her course, a collision ensuing is the result of inevitable accident. The Aimo and The Amelia, 29 L. T. 118; 21 W. R. 707; 2 Asp. M. C. 96—P. C.

Not taking a Tug.]—A vessel getting her anchors in Dover bay in bad weather neglected to employ a tug, until too late, when the tow rope parted, and she damaged some sewage works:—Held, that she was liable. The Gertor, 70 L. T. 703; 7 Asp. M. C. 47.

Dolphin Damaged owing to its own Weakness.]—A steamship, about to make fast alongside a pier, overturned a mooring dolphin. The dolphin ought to have been stronger:—Held, that the steamship was not liable. The Albert Edward, 44 L. J., Adm. 49; 24 W. R. 179.

Collision caused by Want of Look-out—Improper Position of other Craft Immaterial.]—In an action for damages brought by the widow of a man in a boat killed in a collision with a steamship, the jury found that the man had acted rashly in anchoring the boat where he did, and (2) that if a proper look-out had been kept on the steamship the boat might have been seen. Verdict for plaintiff. Motion for new trial on the ground that the deceased contributed by his negligence to the collision:—Held, that the verdict was not inconsistent with the findings of fact, the want of look-out being the cause of collision, and the earlier negligence of the deceased immaterial. Carse v. North British Steam Packet Co., 22 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 475.

Sudden Peril caused by Wrongful Act of the other Ship.]—Where one ship has by wrong manœuvres placed another ship in a position of extreme danger, that other ship will not be held to blame if she has done something wrong, and has not been manœuvred with perfect skill and presence of mind. The Bywell Castle, 4 P. D. 219; 41 L. T. 747; 28 W. R. 293; 4 Asp. M. C. 207—C. A. The Nor, 30 L. T. 576; 22 W. R. 30; 2 Asp. M. C. 264; Hine Brothers v. Clyde Trustees, 15 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 498; The Meanatchy, infra, col. 696.

Negligence by Salving Vessels.] — When damage is inflicted upon a ship by another engaged in rendering salvage services to the former, the court regards the negligence of the salvor less severely than it does the negligence of a vessel wholly unconnected with the injured vessel, but will condemn the salvor in the damage where he has been guilty of gross negligence and want of proper navigation. The C. S. Butler, The Baltic, 43 L. J., Adm. 17; L. R. 4 A. & E. 178; 30 L. T. 475; 22 W. R. 759.

What Amounts to Negligence of Master.]—When the master of a ship takes all such precautions as a man of ordinary prudence and skill, exercising reasonable foresight, would use to avert danger, his owners are not held responsible because he may have omitted some possible precaution which the event suggests that he might have resorted to. The William Lindsay, Doward v. Lindsay, L. R. 5 P. C. 338; 29 L. T. 355; 22 W. R. 6; 2 Asp. M. C. 118—P. C.

The master of a ship is bound to take all such precautions as a man of ordinary prudence and skill, exercising a reasonable foresight, would use to avert danger in the circumstances in which he may happen to be placed. Ib.

Duty of Harbour-master—Damage caused by Sunken Vessel.]—The D., in consequence of the sole default of her master and crew, had sunk in the Thames, and had become a wreck obstructing the navigation of the river. Her mate sent a message to the harbour-master at G. to inform him of the accident, who said that he would cause the wreck to be lighted. A few hours afterwards, the wreck not having been lighted, a vessel, without any fault on the part of those on board her, came into collision with the wreck and sustained damage. An action of damage having been instituted on behalf of the owner of the damaged vessel against the owners of the D., the judge at the trial, refused to admit the evidence showing that the mate of the D. had sent a message to the harbour-master, and that the latter had promised to light the wreck:—Held, that the evidence was wrongly rejected, that the collision had not been caused by the negligence of the owners of the wreck, and that they were not liable for the damage done. The Douglas, 51 L. J., Adm. 89; 7 P. D. 151; 47 L. T. 15; 5 Asp. M. C. 15—C. A.

Negligence Causing Loss but not Collision.]—A bumb barge in the Thames by her own fault struck a schooner fast to a buoy. The schooner, contrary to the Thames Rules, had her anchor hanging from her hawse pipe in such a position that it pierced the barge, which filled and sank. But for the improper position of the anchor the barge would not have been injured:—Held, that both vessels were in fault. The Margaret, 50 L. J., Adm. 67; 6 P. D. 76; 44 L. T. 291; 29 W. R. 533; 4 Asp. M. C. 375—C. A.

A barge in the Thames came into collision with a brig, carrying away her anchor, in a position forbidden by by-laws, and in consequence of the anchor being in that position the barge was injured:—Held, that, notwithstanding the improper position of the anchor, the brig owners were not liable, if the barge substantially contributed to the collision, as distinguished from the amount of the loss. Sills v. Brown, 9 Car. & P. 601. And see The Gipsy King, 2 W. Rob. 537.

b. In Particular Cases.

i. Sufficiency of Crew.

For a sailing barge in the Thames two hands are enough. The Minna, L. R. 2 A. & E. 97.

In dock or harbour it is enough to have sufficient hands on board to tend her under ordinary conditions of weather. The Excelsior, 37 L. J., Adm. 54; L. R. 2 A. & E. 268; 19 L. T. 87; The Patriotto and The Rival, 2 L. T. 301.

A vessel on her trial trip is not required to have on board her full complement of officers and men, provided she has a crew sufficient to work her safely. Clyde Navigation Co. v. Barclay, 1 App. Cas. 790; 36 L. T. 379; 3 Asp. M. C. 390.

A new steamer, not yet out of the builders' hands, was sent on a trial trip, manned by a sufficient number of men to work the ship, but they were not regularly constituted officers and crew:—Held, not to amount to contributory negligence. Ib.

Duty of master or officer to be on board in bad weather though the ship is at moorings in the river. The Kepler, 2 P. D. 40, n.

And to take charge when a ship is approaching with risk of collision. The Independence, Maddox v. Fisher, 14 Moore, P. C. 103; Lush. 270; 4 L. T. 553; 9 W. R. 587; The Khedive, Stoomvart Maatschappy Netherland v. P. & O. Co., 52 L. J., Adm. 1; 5 App. Cas. 876; 42 L. T. 610; 29 W. R. 173; 4 Asp. M. C. 567—H. L. (E.)

In fog there must be sufficient strength at the wheel to put it hard over at once. The Europa, 14 Jur. 627.

Whilst a barge was by night lying astern of a steamship, in a dock, the latter moved her propeller and cut a hole in the barge. It appeared that there was no one on board the barge at the time of the accident. In a collision action:—Held, that although the steamer was to blame, the barge was also to blame for not having anyone on board of her, as, had there been, the collision might have been avoided, and in any event the barge might have been beached before she sank; the plaintiffs therefore could only recover half their damages. The Scotia, 63 L. T. 324; 6 Asp. M. C. 541.

In an action for the negligence of the defendant's servants in managing a barge so that the plaintiff's barge was run down, the plaintiff will not be entitled to recover if the accident could have been avoided, but for the negligence of the plaintiff's own men in not being aboard his barge at the time when it was lying in a dangerous place. Leech v. Seward, 4 Car. & P. 106.

A collision occurred in a dock between a tug and a barge that was moored head and stern alongside the dock wall. It was contended, on behalf of the tug, that the barge was guilty of negligence in not having any person on board:—Held, that, whether that was so or not, the presence of a person on board would not have prevented the collision or minimized its effects, and that the tug was therefore liable. The Scotia (supra), distinguished. The Hornet, [1892] P. 361; 1 R. 549; 68 L. T. 236; 7 Asp. M. C. 262.

It is the duty of a sailing smack during the day to have more than one hand on deck, and where a collision occurs between her and another smack, the primary cause of which is the wrongful manœuvre of the other smack, she will also be held to blame if it appears that had she had two hands on deck they might have taken means to have obviated the other's wrongful manœuvre. The General Gordon, 68 L. T. 469; 7 Asp. M. C. 317—H. L. (E.)

ii. Speed.

Coast of Ireland.]—An Atlantic steamship proceeding at full speed on a dark night thirty-five miles off the coast of Ireland, came into collision with and sank a barque, which was sailing in the same course with itself. In an action for damages brought by the owners of the barque:—Held, that, having regard to the state of the night, and the probability of there being other vessels in the way, the steamship was proceeding at an unjustifiable rate of speed. The City of Brooklyn, 1 P. D. 276; 34 L. T. 932; 24 W. R. 1056—C. A.

Mersey.]—A steamer going ten knots an hour on a dark night up the Horse Channel, at the entrance of the Mersey, saw a sail three points on her port bow, less than half a mile distant. She ported her helm, but did not ease her engines: —Held, that the steamer was in fault for the collision which ensued, for not having stopped or eased her engines when she made out the other vessel, and that maintaining such speed was unwarrantable. The Despatch, Swabey, 138.

Excuse—Carrying Mails.]—It is no excuse for a vessel steaming at the rate of twelve knots, on a dark night, through a fair way, where vessels are accustomed to anchor, that she was under contract to carry government mails at the rate of thirteen knots. The Vivid, Swabey, 88; 4 W. R. 504. S. C. in P. C., 10 Moore, P. C. 472; 4 W. R. 755.

General Rule.]—Those who navigate a public river at too great a speed, or negligently, are as much liable as if the death were caused by negligence on a highway on land. Reg. v. Talor, 9 Car. & P. 672.

Swell raised by Excessive Speed.]—A steamship held in fault for raising a swell by going too fast in the river and thereby sinking a barge. The Batavier, Netherlands Steamship Co. v. Styles, 1 Spinks, 378; 9 Moore, P. C. 286. S. P., Luxford v. Large, infra, col. 701.

Crowded Channel.]—A steamship, proceeding at an improper rate in a channel crowded with ships, incurs the responsibility of damage occasioned by her being unable to keep out of the way of the sailing vessel. The Germania, 21 L. T. 44—P. C. Affirming, 37 L. J., Adm. 59.

Fishing Ground.]—In the case of a cutter with her trawl down, and a ship under sail, the presumption is against the latter sailing at six and a half knots on a very dark night, and aware that she was crossing a fishing-ground. The Pepperell, Swabey, 12.

Clear Weather—North Sea.]—A steamer being in the North Sea, and the weather fine and clear, though the night was dark, was proceeding at the rate of eight to nine knots an hour:—Held, that she was not, under the circumstances, going at too high a rate of speed. The Pacific, 53 L. J., Adm. 67; 9 P. D. 124; 51 L. T. 127; 33 W. R. 124; 5 Asp. M. C. 263.

Steamship.]—A steamship going ten knots held in fault for not having seen a barque in time to avoid her. The Ericsson, Swabey, 38.

Speed in Fog.]—See 11. THE REGULATIONS, infra, cols. 799 seq.

iii. Look-out.

The greater the darkness or thickness of weather, the more vigilant must be the look-out. The Mellona, 3 W. Rob. 7.

The look-out should be in the bows. The Diana, Stuart v. Tremonger, 4 Moore, P. C. 11; The Batavier, supra; The Glannibanta, 1 P. D. 283; 34 L. T. 934; 24 W. R. 1033; 3 Asp. M. C. 339—C. A.

Or on the bridge, in case of ferry boats. The Wirral, 3 W. Rob. 56.

An anchor watch should be kept in frequented roadsteads, or in bad weather. See Luck v. Seward, 4 Car. & P. 106; Vanderplank v. Miller, M. & M. 169; The Pladda, 46 L. J., Adm. 61; 2 P. D. 34.

One hand not sufficient look-out for a steamship in thick weather off Dungeness. The Germania, supra.

Aliter, in the Clyde in daylight. Clyde Navigation Co. v. Barclay, 1 App. Cas. 790; 36 L. T. 379; 3 Asp. M. C. 390.

It is the duty of a ship dropping up the Thames in the neighbourhood of the docks at night to have a look-out astern, and to warn an approaching vessel bound down of her presence. The Juno, 11 R. 679; 71 L. T. 341; 7 Asp. M. C. 506.

Unless there is apparent danger, it is not the duty of a vessel ahead to look out for, or show a light to, vessels following in her wake, so as to make her guilty of contributory negligence in the event of a collision between her and one of such vessels. The City of Brooklyn, 1 P. D. 276; 34 L. T. 932; 24 W. R. 1056; 3 Asp. M. C. 230—C. A.

A tug with ship in tow must keep a look-out for her tow as well as for herself. The Jane Bacon, 27 W. R. 35.

It is not necessarily negligence for the look-out of a vessel up the river not to report a vessel coming out of dock. The Calabar, Moss v. African Steamship Co., L. R. 2 P. C. 238; 19 L. T. 768.

Before going about a ship must see that she can do so without damage to other ships. The Allan and The Flora, 14 L. T. 860.

The master is not criminally responsible for a collision caused by want of look-out. Rex v. Allen, 7 Car. & P. 153.

Heavy responsibility of steamship going twelve or fourteen knots in frequented waters at night as to look out. The Londonderry, 4 Not. of Cas. Suppl. xxxi.

iv. Coming to an Anchor.

It is the duty of a ship before rounding to to bring up to see that she does not endanger ships under way in her neighbourhood. The Ceres, Swabey, 250; The Shannon, 1 W. Rob. 463; The Philotaxe, 37 L. T. 540; 3 Asp. M. C. 512.

A ship was held in fault for attempting to bring up in the Downs in heavy weather without the assistance of a tug which she might have taken; she having only one anchor available, from which she parted. The Annot Lyle, 55 L. J., Adm. 62; 11 P. D. 114; 55 L. T. 576; 34 W. R. 647; 6 Asp. M. C. 50.

Duty to shorten sail in time before bringing up in a crowded roadstead. The Neptune the Second, 1 Dods. 467; The Secret, 26 L. T. 670; 1 Asp. M. C. 318; The Earl Spencer, L. R. 4 A. & E. 431; 32 L. T. 370; 23 W. R. 661; 2 Asp. M. C. 523.

A ship delaying to bring up until night time when she might have brought up in the day time in safety, held in fault. The Egyptian, 1 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 373; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1159; 8 L. T. 776.

A ship held in fault for attempting to bring up with one anchor chain unshackled, where, if the second anchor had been ready to let go, the collision would have been avoided. The City of Peking, 58 L. J., P. C. 64; 14 App. Cas. 40; 61 L. T. 136; 6 Asp. M. C. 396—P. C.

Ship under way must keep clear of Ship at Anchor.]—The Batavier, 2 W. Rob. 407; 10 Jur.

19; The Secret, 26 L. T. 670; 1 Asp. M. C. 318; The Kjobenhavn, 30 L. T. 136; 2 Asp. M. C. 213—P. C. And see cases infra, cols. 703, 704.

Bringing up in a Fairway.]—A ship will not necessarily be held in fault for a collision caused by her having improperly brought up in a fairway, if fog or other reasonable cause compelled her to do so. The Kjobenhavn, 30 L. T. 136; 2 Asp. M. C. 213—P. C. The Agwadillana (fog), 60 L. T. 897; 6 Asp. M. C. 390.

It is not negligence to bring up in the Mersey directly in the track of the ferry steamers. The Lancashire, L. R. 4 A. & E. 198; 29 L. T. 927; 2 Asp. M. C. 202.

—— In Exposed Position.]—A barge in the Thames brought up in a place where she was exposed to the swell of steamships, and was thereby sunk:—Held, that she was alone in fault. The Duke of Cornwall, 1 Pritch. Ad. Digest, 301.

A ship brought up in an exposed position does not thereby contribute to a collision caused by another ship driving in to her. The Despatch, 14 Moore, P. C. 83; Lush. 98; 3 L. T. 219.

Stopping in Fairway—Whistle.]—Where a steamship under way at night in the Firth of Clyde stops her way and puts herself across the line of navigation for the purpose of coming to an anchor, she is to blame for not warning vessels coming up behind her of her manœuvres. The Queen Victoria, 64 L. T. 520; 7 Asp. M. C. 9—C. A.

v. Anchor ready to let go.

During a very violent gale a brig adrift in the Tyne drove down on a steamer which was lying properly moored to mooring-buoys placed there by the harbour authorities. On the brig striking the steamer, the ring of one of the buoys was carried away, and the steamer got adrift and drove down the river, and ultimately came in contact with and did damage to a barque, whose owners instituted a cause of damage against the steamer in the county court, to recover for the damage done to their vessel by the steamer. At the hearing it was proved that the chain cables of the steamer had been unbent at the time she got adrift, and that no look-out had previously been kept on deck, though it was known that the weather was getting worse:—Held, that a defence of inevitable accident, set up by the owners of the steamer, was not sustained, and that the steamer was alone to blame for the collision. The Pladda, 46 L. J., Adm. 61; 2 P. D. 34.

When the captain of a steamer, upon a vessel being reported ahead, immediately gives orders to stop and reverse, but is unable to stop the way of his ship in time to prevent a collision, he is not proved to have been guilty of negligence because he did not immediately drop his anchor. The C. M. Palmer and Larnax, Tyne Steam Shipping Co. v. Smith, 29 L. T. 120; 21 W. R. 702; 2 Asp. M. C. 94—P. C.

Where a ship, having been moored to a buoy, under the sanction of the authorities in the port where she was, broke loose in consequence of a latent defect in the buoy, and, being prevented by an inevitable accident from letting go her anchor, came into collision with another ship:—Held, that no negligence could be imputed to the master. The William Lindsay, L. R. 5 P. C. 338; 29 L. T. 355; 2 Asp. M. C. 118—P. C.

Where collision was attributable to the effect of an exceptional current, known to be a possible though improbable contingency, but it was shown that the port anchor of the steamer was not in readiness, and that delay arose in dropping the starboard anchor:—Held, that the steamer had neglected ordinary precautions and could not be absolved from blame. The City of Peking, 58 L. J., P. C. 64; 14 App. Cas. 40; 61 L. T. 136; 6 Asp. M. C. 396—P. C.

In the absence of any regulation or custom, there is no duty on the part of a keel or barge drifting up river to keep out of the deep water navigation and navigate in the shallow water, even though by remaining in the deep water she obstructs the passage of steamships which can only navigate in the deep water. A keel with her mast lowered may drive up on a flood tide in any part of a river lashed to another keel, but it is her duty in such circumstances to go up dredging with her anchor down, in order that she may thereby have the means in an emergency of bringing herself up if necessary; and whilst two keels may drive up lashed together there is no less duty imposed on them to dredge. The Ralph Creyke, 55 L. T. 155; 6 Asp. M. C. 19.

A steamship in the Thames at night passed a schooner, and when three hundred yards ahead of her ran ashore; the schooner ran into her:—Held, that the schooner was not in fault for not having dropped her anchor to avoid the collision. The Elizabeth and The Adalia, 22 L. T. 74. S. P., The C. M. Palmer and The Larnax, supra.

Duty to have Chains bent and Anchor ready to let go.]—The Kepler, 2 P. D. 40, n.

vi. Foul Berth.

If one ship has given another a foul berth, the owners of the ship giving the foul berth have no right to demand that extraordinary precaution should be taken on board the other ship to avoid a collision. The Vivid, 42 L. J., Adm. 57; 28 L. T. 375; 1 Asp. M. C. 601.

The "Victor" gave the "Vivid" a foul berth, and the "Vivid," in swinging, came into collision with and damaged the "Victor." The usual and ordinary precautions had been taken on board the "Vivid":—Held, that the "Vivid" was not answerable for the collision. Ib.

The "W. A." in charge of a pilot came to anchor in the Mersey, and gave the "B. T." a foul berth. Various remonstrances were from time to time made by those on board the "B. T.," and after a few days the vessels, in swinging to the tide, came into collision:—Held, that the owners of the "W. A." were liable. The Woburn Abbey, 38 L. J., Adm. 28; 20 L. T. 621.

One ship brought up during a gale in a fair berth in the Downs, and another ship coming up, anchored within a cable's length of her, riding at one anchor. The gale increasing, drove both ships from their anchors, when the last ship came into collision with the first ship, so that the first ship had to be taken to the roads in a sinking state and beached:—Held, that the ship last coming up was solely liable for the collision, from having given the first ship a foul berth in riding so close to her at single anchor. The Maggie Armstrong v. The Blue Bell, 14 L. T. 340.

"B." took up a berth in the Tyne, with the view of discharging cargo. "C." took up a berth close alongside, and, as the tide fell, heeled over upon "B.," and damaged her :—Held, that "C." was responsible for the damage so received by "B." The Lidskjalf, Swabey, 117.

The proximate cause of collision was the parting of a steamer's cable while anchoring :—Held, that the steamer was to blame, for if she had not delayed taking measures for anchoring till so late at night, the collision would not have been inevitable. The Egyptian, 1 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 373 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1159 ; 8 L. T. 776.

A vessel gave another a foul berth, but got into collision with her because of a hurricane, that caused her to drive :—Held, inevitable accident. The Innisfail and The Secret, 35 L. T. 819 ; 3 Asp. M. C. 337.

A vessel that grounds alongside another against which she falls over and so injures her :—Held, in fault. The Indian and The Jessie, 12 L. T. 586 ; The Lidskjalf, Swabey, 117 ; The Patriotto and The Rival, 2 L. T. 301 ; and see The Vivid, supra.

A vessel bringing up so as not to swing clear of another will be held in fault for fouling her. The Northampton, 1 Spinks, 152 ; The Vivid, 42 L. J., Adm. 57 ; 29 L. T. 375 ; 1 Asp. M. C. 601.

In the Mersey a cable's length is a clear berth. The Princeton, 47 L. J., Adm. 33 ; 3 P. D. 90 ; 38 L. T. 260 ; 3 Asp. M. C. 562.

A ship should not, without necessity, bring up directly ahead of another, so that if she parts or drives she cannot clear the latter. See The Egyptian, supra ; The Volcano, 2 W. Rob. 337 ; The Maggie Armstrong and The Blue Bell, 14 L. T. 340.

A ship brought up too near another, and with one anchor only, held in fault for a collision with the other to leeward. The Volcano, 2 W. Rob. 337.

vii. When at Anchor or Moored.

In Heavy Weather.]—A ship that drives when at anchor because her yards have not been sent down, or because she was not properly tended, will be held in fault for a collision so caused. The Excelsior, 37 L. J., Adm. 54 ; L. R. 2 A. & E. 268 ; 19 L. T. 87 ; The Christiana, 7 Moore, P. C. 160 ; The Peerless, Lush. 30 ; The Ruby Queen, Lush. 266.

Or where the collision is caused by her not having moored, when she ought to have done so. The Gipsy King, 2 W. Rob. 537.

Insufficient Ground Tackle.]—A ship will be held in fault for a collision so caused. The Massachusetts, 1 W. Rob. 371 ; The Despatch, Lush. 98 ; 14 Moore, P. C. 83 ; 3 L. T. 219 ; The Volcano, 2 W. Rob. 337 ; Allen v. Quebec Warehouse Co., 56 L. J., P. C. 6 ; 12 App. Cas. 101 ; 56 L. T. 30 ; The William Tell, 13 L. T. 13.

Duty to Shift Berth where another Ship Endangered.]—See The Woburn Abbey, 38 L. J., Adm. 28 ; 20 L. T. 621 ; The Despatch, supra.

Duty to Avoid Collision, if possible — Duty of Colliding Vessel.]—When a vessel under way comes into collision with a vessel at anchor exhibiting a proper light, the onus is on her to justify her conduct. She cannot be excused when it is shown that she had not a sufficient look-out. The vessel at anchor is also bound to keep a competent person on watch, whose duty it is to see that the anchor light or lights are properly exhibited, and to do everything in his power to avert or minimise a collision. If that person acts in error of judgment, when placed by the colliding vessel in a position of difficulty calling for instant decision, he is entitled to favourable consideration and it must be shown that any alternative course would have prevented or mitigated the collision. The Meanatchy, 66 L. J., P. C. 92 ; [1897] A. C. 351—A. C.

Slipping to avoid Collision.]—A vessel drove against the breakwater at Falmouth and damaged it. She might have avoided the damage by slipping from her anchor in time :—Held, that she was in fault. The Uhla, 37 L. J., Adm. 10, n. ; L. R. 2 A. & E. 29 ; 19 L. T. 89.

viii. Getting under Way.

Coming out of Dock.]—A ship coming out of dock improperly allowed herself to be caught by the tide and carried against another proceeding down the river. She was held in fault for not having her jib to keep her head straight. The Ulster, 1 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 31 ; 6 L. T. 736.

Hauling Out of Tier.]—A vessel coming into a tier at Constantinople, and not hauling out when bad weather came on, by which means alone damage to the vessel alongside could be prevented :—Held, in fault for damage done in collision with her. The Patriotto and The Rival, 2 L. T. 301.

A vessel casting off from her moorings at night held in fault for not exhibiting a light to an approaching vessel. The John Fenwick, 41 L. J., Adm. 38 ; L. R. 4 A. & E. 500 ; 26 L. T. 322 ; 1 Asp. M. C. 249.

In Bad Weather.]—A vessel getting under way unnecessarily in bad weather or darkness and thereby doing damage, will be held in fault. The Carrier Dove, Br. & Lush. 113 ; 2 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 260 ; 19 L. T. 768 ; The Borussia, Swabey, 94.

Obstruction by Ship at Wharf.]—A. was possessed of a wharf and of a ship lying there, whose mast projected over the river. B. moored his ship at an adjoining wharf with her bowsprit overhanging A.'s wharf. On the tide falling, B.'s bowsprit struck A.'s mast, and carried it away : Held, that B. was not liable. Dalton v. Denton, 1 C. B. (N.S.) 672.

ix. At a Launch.

Where a launch is about to take place, reasonable notice must be given to vessels navigating the river. The Blenheim, 2 W. Rob. 421 ; 4 Not. of Cas. 393 ; The Vianna, Swabey, 405.

Persons in charge of a launch are bound to take the utmost precautions to avoid injury to passing vessels, such precautions being in the circumstances, no more than reasonable. It is their duty to have a tug in attendance on a launch in the Mersey, decorated so as to indicate that a launch is imminent, and, if necessary, to warn approaching vessels. The George Roper or Bentinck Steamship Co. v. Potter, 52 L. J., Adm. 69 ; 8 P. D. 119 ; 49 L. T. 185 ; 31 W. R. 953 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 134.

In the river Mersey, to give notice of a launch taking place, it is customary to have the ship dressed in flags for an hour or more before high water (about which time the launch takes place); to have tugs, one at least also dressed in flags, plying about some time before the launch in front of the yard where the ship is lying. When in launching a vessel the usual precautions and the usual general notice have been given, the persons in charge of the launch have done all they are required to do by law. The Glengarry, 43 L. J., Adm. 37; 2 P. D. 235; 30 L. T. 341; 23 W. R. 110; 2 Asp. M. C. 230.

When a vessel is launched in a river, the law casts upon the persons in charge of the launch the obligation of conducting the launching operations with the utmost precautions, and of giving such notice as is reasonable and sufficient to prevent any injury to passing vessels. The Andalusian, 46 L. J., Adm. 77; 2 P. D. 231.

The "Angerona," proceeding down the river in tow of a tug, came into collision with the "Andalusian," which was being launched from a shipbuilding yard. The yard had not been in use for some time. The "Andalusian" was properly decorated, but gave no other warning to vessels passing during the launch: — Held, that the "Andalusian" was alone to blame. Ib.

Where a launch was about to take place in the river Mersey at high water, and the usual general notice had been given, and the launch was dressed with flags and all usual precautions taken, and in due time before the launch a tug proceeded to a vessel lying at anchor off the place where the launch was about to take place and warned her thereof, and subsequently in sufficient time offered to tow her out of the way; but, owing to the conduct of those on board the vessel at anchor, whose pilot was aware before she anchored that the launch was about to take place, that vessel was still in the way, when the launch, which was delayed as long as it was prudent to do so, took place, and the launch struck the vessel and sank her:—Held, that the owners of the launch had taken every possible precaution and were not to blame for the collision, and that the vessel at anchor was alone to blame. The Cachapool, 7 P. D. 217; 46 L. T. 171; 4 Asp. M. C. 502.

Semble, a vessel at anchor in the track of a vessel about to be launched is bound to get out of the way of the launch if she has had warning of the launch in due time and facilities for moving out of the way in time (such as a tug offering and being ready to tow her) are afforded by those in charge of the launch. Ib.

A tug steamer, when being launched in the river Tyne, ran stern foremost into the starboard side of a steamer passing down the river, and negligently being at that place:—Held, notwithstanding the steamer's negligence, the tug might, by ordinary care, such as giving a signal before launching, have avoided the consequences of such negligence, and therefore, both being to blame, half the damage only was payable by the tug. The United States, 12 L. T. 33—P. C.

x. Going About.

Duty of a ship not to go about so as to embarrass or damage other ships. See The Sea Nymph, Lush. 23; 15 L. T. 103; The Allan and The Flora, 14 L. T. 860. But see The Palatine, 27 L. T. 631; 1 Asp. M. C. 468.

And to stay rather than wear, if possible. The Falkland and The Navigator, 1 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 379; Br. & Lush. 204; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 113—P. C.

If she misses stays it is the duty of those on board to get her under command as soon as possible. The Kingston-by-the-Sea, 3 W. Rob. 152; The Lake St. Clair and The Underwriter, 2 App. Cas. 389; 36 L. T. 155; 3 Asp. M. C. 361—P. C.

A ship whose duty it is to keep out of the way must not stand so close to the other before going about that, if she misses stays, a collision is inevitable. The Kingston-by-the-Sea, 3 W. Rob. 152; The Mobile, Swabey, 69, 127; 10 Moore, P. C. 467; nom. Bates v. Don Pablo Sora, 4 W. R. 708.

As to the duty of a ship working to windward, in company with another, to watch for the other going about, so as to be ready to go about at the same time. The Priscilla, L. R. 3 A. & E. 125; 23 L. T. 566; 1 Asp. M. C. 468. And see The Lake St. Clair and The Underwriter, supra.

xi. Wrong Act of other Ship.

When one ship is, by the improper navigation of a second ship compelled to alter her course, and so does damage to a third ship, the ship which compelled the alteration of course is liable for the damage; and that liability remains if the damaged ship was not actually negligent, even though by taking another course she might have avoided the collision. The Sisters, 45 L. J., Adm. 39; 1 P. D. 117; 34 L. T. 338; 24 W. R. 412.

A steamship meeting three barges was compelled by the negligent management of the foremost barge to take a course which brought her into collision with the other two barges:—Held, that the owners of the first barge were liable to those of the other two barges for the damage done by the collision. Ib.

A vessel which, having performed her own duty, is thrown into immediate danger of collision by the wrongful act of another, is not to be held liable if at that moment she adopts a wrong manœuvre. The Nor, 30 L. T. 576; 22 W. R. 30; 2 Asp. M. C. 264—P. C. The Bywell Castle, 4 P. D. 219; 41 L. T. 747; 28 W. R. 293; 4 Asp. M. C. 207—C. A.

—— Does not Excuse.]—One who can avoid a collision made imminent by the fault of another is bound to do so. The Jane Bacon, 27 W. R. 35.

Other Ship crossing Bows.] — A steamship striking a barge held not to blame, her manœuvre having been caused by a third ship wrongly crossing her bows. The Thames, 32 L. T. 343; 2 Asp. M. C. 512. S. P., The Schwan and The Albano, infra, col. 706.

xii. Various Cases.

Small Craft and Heavy Ships.]—Heavy ships have no right in law to require small craft to keep out of their way. See The La Plata, Swabey, 220, 298; The Independence, Lush. 270; 14 Moore, P. C. 103; 4 L. T. 563; 9 W. R. 582.

Moving Propeller in Dock.]—A steamship was held in fault for damaging a barge improperly moored astern of her by moving her propeller. The Scotia, 63 L. T. 324; 6 Asp. M. C. 541.

On Fishing Grounds.]—Extra precautions are required when passing over. Murphy v. Palgrave, 21 L. T. 209; The Margaret and The Tusear, 15 L. T. 86. See also The Pacific, 53 L. J., Adm. 67; 9 P. D. 124; 51 L. T. 127; 33 W. R. 124; 5 Asp. M. C. 263.

Warping down the Thames against the Flood.]—See The Hope, 2 W. Rob. 8; The Trident, 1 Spinks, 217.

Dredging with Anchor.]—Duty as to under certain circumstances. The Aguadillana, 60 L. T. 897; 6 Asp. M. C. 390; The Ralph Creyke, 55 L. T. 155; 6 Asp. M. C. 19.

Duty to wait under the Point when Navigating a winding River against Tide or Stream.]—In an action for collision between two vessels under steam in the river Scheldt, it appeared that the vessels were proceeding in opposite directions, the one up and the other down the river, and that the vessel going up the river had the tide against her. The collision took place at a strong bend of the river. It did not appear that any positive rule had been printed and circulated with regard to the navigation of the river; but, by the practice of navigation there, it was the duty of a vessel navigating against the tide to wait until a vessel coming in the opposite direction had cleared her at the bend:—Held, upon proof that the vessel navigating against the tide had disregarded this practice, that she must be taken to have been to blame for the collision. The Talabot, 15 P. D. 194; 63 L. T. 812; 6 Asp. M. C. 602. S. P., The Smyrna, 2 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 447; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 977; 11 L. T. 74.

Assisting Helm with Sail.]—A ship held in fault for not setting an outer jib to assist in turning. The Ulster, 1 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 31; 6 L. T. 736.

Where the helm alone will not take a ship clear of the other it must be assisted by handling sheets and braces. The Lady Anne, 15 Jur. 18; The Stranger, 6 Not. of Cas. 36; The Marpesia, 8 Moore, P. Two Vessels making for same Port—Dangerous Manœuvre by Foremost Vessel—Liability.]—When two vessels are making for the same port, and that which is in front, regardless of the position of that which is behind, executes a manœuvre which is under the circumstances dangerous, the result of which is a collision, she is not free from liability, although if the hindermost vessel had reversed her engines at once on seeing the object of the manœuvre the collision would probably have been avoided. SS. "Nord Kap" v. SS. "Sandhill," [1894] A. Coming Alongside to Speak.]—A trader undertaking to speak a fishing coble, both being under sail in the North Sea, held in fault for attempting to do so without heaving to. The Thames, 5 C. Rob. 345.

A ship approaching another for the purpose of speaking her, or for other purposes, does so at her own risk. The Bellerophon, 44 L. J., Adm. 7; 33 L. T. 412; 3 Asp. M. C. 58.

Where Risk of Smelling the Ground.]—Where a steamer is navigating a reach in which there is a risk of her smelling the ground, it is her duty to be under such control by occasionally stopping her engines or otherwise, so that she may be able to avoid collision with other craft in case she does smell the ground and fails to answer her helm. The Ralph Creyke, 55 L. T. 155; 6 Asp. M. C. 19.

Unusual Mode of Navigating—Warping down River.]—A vessel navigating in an unusual manner—warping down a river against tide—does so at her own risk in case of collision. The Hope, 2 W. Rob. 8.

Ship ashore in a fairway—Duty to warn others.]—Those in charge of a vessel ashore at night in a fairway are bound to warn others approaching her. The Industrie, 40 L. J., Adm. 26; L. R. 3 A. & E. 303; 19 W. R. 728; 1 Asp. M. C. 17.

Standing too close to other Craft.]—A ship held in fault for approaching another so close that she could not see a third ship in time to avoid her. The Zollverein, Swabey, 96; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 429.

So close in squally weather that, on being struck by a squall, a collision was inevitable. The Globe, 6 Not. of Cas. 275.

A steamer met at night in the river Thames, two brigs advancing in parallel courses from fifty to sixty fathoms apart from each other. The steamer, instead of porting her helm, attempted to pass between them, and thereby caused a collision, by which one of the brigs was lost. The steamer held to blame. The Schwalbe, 14 Moore, P. Fog—Alteration of Helm.]—There is no general rule that a vessel when proceeding in a fog is not entitled to act with her helm, but each case must depend upon the special circumstances. The Vindomora, [1891] A. C. 1; 63 L. T. 749; 6 Asp. M. C. 569—H. L. (E.)

The plaintiffs' vessel while proceeding in a dense fog heard the whistle of the defendants' vessel about 3½ points on her starboard bow, and thereupon starboarded her helm. A collision, however, occurred, as the defendants' vessel struck her on her starboard quarter:—Held, that, under the circumstances, the plaintiffs' vessel was not to blame for starboarding her helm. Ib.

Vessel Dangerous to Others.]—A ship of war with a projecting ram under water, held in fault for not warning another approaching her to speak of the danger. The Bellerophon, supra; and see The Batavier, 1 Spinks, 378; 9 Moore, P. C. 286; 28 L. T. 429; The Underwriter, 2 App. Cas. 389; 36 L. T. 155; 3 Asp. M. C. 361.

c. Proof of Negligence.

The burden of proof lies on a party seeking to recover compensation for damage occasioned by a collision, and that party must establish that the loss was attributable to the neglect or default of the other party. The London or City of London, Morgan v. Sim. 11 Moore, P. C. 307; Swabey, 300; 5 W. R. 678.

The plaintiff in a collision cannot recover where the defendant was not negligent, or where there is doubt as to the cause of collision—Per Lord Stowell. The Catherine of Dover, 2 Hag. Adm. 145.

If the evidence does not satisfy the court that one or both vessels are in fault for the collision, the suit will be dismissed. The Maid of Aukland, 6 Not. of Cas. 240.

A vessel, whilst being towed into a harbour by a steam-tug, got aground, and the defendant's vessel, which was being towed in at the same time by the same tug, astern of the plaintiff's vessel, without any active default on the defendant's part, struck and damaged the plaintiff's vessel:—Held, no evidence of negligence for which the defendant was liable. Harris v. Anderson, 14 C. B. (N.S.) 499.

The owners of a ship that has been damaged by collision are not entitled to recover in admiralty damages against the owners of the other ship unless the collision is proved to have been caused by the fault of the other ship. The Ligo, 2 Hag. Adm. 356. S. P., The Itinerant, 2 W. Rob. 236.

Burden of Proof.]—In an action of damage by collision, the plaintiffs, in their statement of claim, in substance alleged that their vessel was at anchor when the defendants' steamer ran into her in broad daylight. The defendants, in their pleading, made no charge of negligence against the plaintiffs, but alleged that the collision was caused by the steering gear of their vessel not acting in consequence of some latent defect or obstruction, which could not have been ascertained or prevented by the exercise of any reasonable care or skill on their part, and that the collision and damage were caused by inevitable accident:—Held, that the onus to disprove negligence lay on the defendants, and, therefore, that they must begin. The Merchant Prince, [1892] P. 9; 67 L. T. 251; 7 Asp. M. C. 208—C. A.

Where the issue is, whether a collision was caused by defective look-out or insufficient moorings, the burden of proving the sufficiency of the look-out or moorings is upon the vessel, which alone can do so. The John Harley and The William Tell, 13 L. T. 413.

In a damage cause, brought by the owners of a sailing vessel against a steam vessel, it is not incumbent upon them to plead that the sailing vessel, after observing the steam vessel, kept her original course. The burden of proof, and therefore of plea, is in this respect upon the defendant, to show that the course of the sailing vessel was altered, and the collision caused thereby. The West of England, 36 L. J. Adm. 4; L. R. 1 A. & E. 308.

Plea, that a steamer overtaking a sailing vessel could not comply with the 17th Art. in consequence of the state of the weather, and the neglect on the part of those on board the sailing vessel to take proper precautions to avoid a collision:—Held, that the proof of such a plea was entirely on the steamer, who must make out in her defence that it was impracticable for her, in consequence of the state of the weather, to have seen the sailing ship in time to avoid her; and that the steamer was pursuing her course at a reasonable speed, such weather considered. The Hannah Park and The Lena, 14 L. T. 675.

The onus of proving negligence in the ship proceeded against is on the plaintiff; if the defendant alleges "inevitable accident" the onus still rests on the plaintiff; it is not shifted until he shews a primâ facie case of negligence in the defendant. The Bolina, 3 Not. of Cas. 208.

Where the plaintiff proves facts which would lead to the conclusion that the other ship is in fault, the burden of proof is shifted, and it lies on the defendant to show that his ship was not in fault. This applies in the case of a collision between a ship under way and another at anchor. The Secret, 26 L. T. 670; 1 Asp. M. C. 318.

Failure of Proof—Cross Actions.]—Where there were cross actions and each party failed to prove negligence against the other, both actions were dismissed with costs. The Gabriel, 4 W. R. 91.

—— Lights—Infringement of Rules as to.]—A vessel that has infringed a rule as to lights made by competent authority must show that the infringement did not contribute to the collision. The Swansea and The Condor, 48 L. J., Adm. 33; 4 P. D. 115; 40 L. T. 442; 27 W. R. 748; 4 Asp. M. C. 115.

In an action for damage by collision it appeared that the defendants' vessel while in motion came into collision with the plaintiffs' vessel which was at anchor:—Held, that the fact that the plaintiffs' vessel at the time of the collision was at anchor and could be seen was primâ facie evidence of negligence on the part of the defendants, and that the burden of proof was then upon them to rebut the presumption of liability, by showing either that the collision was occasioned by no fault on their part, or that it was due to inevitable accident, or that it was solely the fault of a pilot who was on board their vessel by compulsion of law. Clyde Navigation Co. v. Barclay (1 App. Cas. 790) considered. The Indus, 56 L. A plaintiff, whose vessel has been run down at anchor, may charge negligence generally, and the burden of proof, the collision proved, is thrown upon the defendant to establish his defence. The Bothnia, Lush. 52.

Vessels A. and B. coming into collision while B. is at anchor, the burden of proof is upon A. to account for the collision, and the burden is not shifted by the fact that at such time A. was drifting in consequence of a prior collision. The Annapolis, 5 L. Where a vessel under steam runs down a ship at her moorings in broad daylight, that fact is by itself primâ facie evidence of fault, although such steamer is well equipped, and both officers and men are shown to have been at their posts and on the outlook. The City of Peking, 58 L. J., P. C. 64; 14 App. Cas. 40; 61 L. T. 136; 6 Asp. M. C. 396—P. C.

The burden is upon a ship that is under way to prove that she was not negligent for a collision with another at anchor. The George, 2 W. Rob. 386; 9 Jur. 670.

Collision at night between ship under way and ship at anchor. Upon proof that the latter was brought up in a proper place and had a proper light up, the burden shifts to the other ship to show that she was not negligent. The Telegraph, 1 Spinks, 427.

A collision occurred between a ship under way and another at anchor. The latter was carrying a bull's eye lantern showing a light only in one direction:—Held, under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 29, that the burden was upon her to show that the collision was not caused by the infringement of the statute. She discharged this burden and recovered full damages. The Palestine, 13 W. R. 111.

d. Inevitable Accident.

Definition of.]—Inevitable accident is where the collision could not possibly have been prevented by proper care and seamanship. So that where the defence of inevitable accident is set up on behalf of a vessel primâ facie to blame for a collision, the defence, to succeed, must be supported by proof that everything was done which could and ought to have been done to avoid the collision; and this, though the vessel is in some degree disabled, and so less manageable than she would otherwise have been. The Calcutta, 21 L. T. 768—P. C.

Inevitable accident is that which the party charged with the damage could not possibly prevent by the exercise of ordinary care, caution, and maritime skill. The Marpesia, 8 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 468; L. R. 4 P. C. 212; 26 L. T. 333; 1 Asp. M. C. 261.

When in a cause of collision the defence of inevitable accident is raised, the onus of proof lies, in the first instance, on those who bring the suit against the vessel and seek to be indemnified for damage; and does not attach to the vessel proceeded against until a primâ facie case of negligence and want of due seamanship is shown. Ib.

Two sailing vessels approaching stem on in such a manner as that, under the sailing rules, each would be bound to port, being in a dense fog, only sighted each other at a distance of about two hundred yards. The defendant's vessel, having been close-hauled on the port tack, was then preparing to go about, and had eased off her head sheets. Both vessels immediately ported, but came into collision. Only one minute elapsed between the time of sighting and the collision. The plaintiff's petition alleged, that the defendant's vessel neglected to port, and it was stated, in answer to a question by the judge of the admiralty court, that the head sheets of the defendant's vessel were not again hauled aft. On this evidence that vessel was held to blame by the admiralty court, on the ground that she had not executed all the proper manœuvres which she might have executed after sighting the other vessel:—Held, that the collision was the result of an inevitable accident, the defendant's vessel having done all that could be effected by ordinary care, caution, or maritime skill in the short space of time that elapsed; and that the plaintiff, if he meant to rely upon the fact that the head sheets had not been again hauled back, ought to have alleged that fact in his petition as to the case of the collision; the allegation of neglect to port not sufficiently indicating the nature of such omission. Ib.

Inevitable accident is where the collision could not have been prevented by proper care and seamanship in the particular circumstances of the case. The Secret, 26 L. T. 670; 1 Asp. M. C. 318.

A defendant, in order to support a defence of inevitable accident, is bound to show that everything was done which could and ought to have been done to avoid a collision. Ib.

Inevitable accident is that which a party could not possibly prevent by the exercise of ordinary care, caution, and maritime skill. It is not enough to show that the accident could not be prevented by the party at the very moment it occurred, but the question is, what previous measures have been adopted to render the occurrence of it less probable. The Uhla, 37 L. J., Adm. 16, n.; L. R. 2 A. & E. 29, n.; 19 L. T. 89.

Where damage might have been avoided by shipping cable and setting sail:—Held, that it was not an inevitable accident, but the result either of negligence or the absence of proper nautical skill. Ib.

Tempestuous weather is an excuse for the failure to exercise proper nautical skill which should be received with the greatest possible caution. Ib.

A schooner ran foul of a ship, whereby the latter became unmanageable. Her anchor was let go, when she swung round upon and came in collision with a brig lying at anchor:—Held, that the collision was inevitable, those on board the ship having done what they could to avoid it. The Hibernia, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1244.

An inevitable accident is such as could not have been prevented by the exercise of ordinary care, caution and maritime skill. The Pladda, 46 L. J., Adm. 61; 2 P. D. 34.

Latent Defect.]—The owners of a vessel are not liable for damage caused to another vessel in a collision occasioned by the sudden breaking down of an apparatus in which there was an inherent latent defect, in the absence of any negligence in the user of the apparatus. The Virgo, 35 L. T. 519; 25 W. R. 397; 3 Asp. M. C. 285.

Disabled Vessel.]—When a ship seeks to excuse her failure to comply with the sailing regulations, and with a seamanlike precaution, by shewing that such a failure was in consequence of her being disabled in a prior collision, it is material to inquire whether the prior collision was due to her default or was the result of inevitable accident. The Kjobenhavn, 30 L. T. 136; 2 Asp. M. C. 213—P. C.

When it is the duty of a ship to keep out of the way of another ship, but she is unable to do so by reason of being disabled in a former collision, and the other ship being unaware of her disabled condition continues her course, a collision ensuing is the result of inevitable accident. The Aimo, The Amelia, 29 L. T. 118; 21 W. R. 707; 2 Asp. M. C. 96—P. C. And cp. Seecombe v. Wood, 2 M. & Rob. 290.

Ring of Buoy Carrying Away.]—A vessel in port was moored to a buoy, the use of which was sanctioned by the authorities, and, a storm being expected, she also had her anchor ready to drop. The mooring buoy broke and the vessel drifted. She attempted to cast anchor, but was prevented by inevitable accident. She came into collision with another vessel which was properly moored:—Held, that the first vessel had not contributed by negligence to the collision. The William Lindsay, Doward v. Lindsay, L. R. 5 P. C. 338; 29 L. T. 355; 22 W. R. 6; 2 Asp. M. C. 118. S. P., The Toward and The Turkistan, 13 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 342.

Jamming of Wheel Chains.]—In an action of damage by collision, it appeared that the plaintiff's vessel was at anchor in the Mersey when the defendant's steamer ran into her in broad daylight. The defence was that the steam steering gear of the defendants' vessel failed to act in consequence of some latent defect, or obstruction, which could not have been ascertained or prevented by the exercise of any reasonable care or skill on the part of the defendants, and that the collision and damage were caused by inevitable accident. The steam steering gear in question was good of its kind; it had never previously failed to act, and the cause of the defect in the machine, or of the obstruction in the working, could not be discovered by competent persons. Part of the gear, including some portion of the chain running between the wheel and the rudder, had been recently renewed, and it was admitted that new chain is liable to stretch, but it was proved that before the vessel left her anchorage to proceed on her voyage, the whole of the gear had been tested and found in good order, and that the chain had been tightened up as occasion seemed to require:—Held, that the defendants were liable, as they had not satisfied the burden of proof, for, in order to support the defence of inevitable accident, and disprove the primâ facie evidence of negligence, it was necessary for them to shew that the cause of the accident was one not produced by them, and the result of which they could not avoid, but the defendants knew of the tendency of new chain to stretch, and therefore that an accumulation of links at the leading wheels might possibly cause jamming, and considering the crowded condition of the river where the accident occurred, the use—or readiness for immediate use—of hand, instead of steam, steering gear, was a means by which the result could have been avoided.—Per Fry, L.J.: The defendants had failed to sustain the plea of inevitable accident, as it was necessary for them either to shew what was the cause of the accident, and that, though exercising ordinary care, caution and maritime skill, the result of that cause was unavoidable, or to enumerate all the possible causes, one or other of which might have produced the effect, and shew with regard to every one, that the result was unavoidable. The definition of inevitable accident in The Marpesia, supra, col. 704, approved. The Merchant Prince, [1892] P. 179; 67 L. T. 251; 7 Asp. M. C. 208—C. A.

The jamming of the cable on the windlass may occur without negligence. The Peerless, Lush. 30. S. P., The William Lindsay, L. R. 5 P. C. 338; 29 L. T. 355; 22 W. R. 6; 2 Asp. M. C. 118.

Third Ship crossing Defendants' Bows.]—By reason of the improper navigation of the "S." in crossing the bows of the "A.," the latter sustained damage by coming into collision with the "M." In an action by the "M." against the "A." it was held that the collision was an inevitable accident; by Esher (Lord), M.R., because it had been proved that something happened over which those in charge of the "A." had no control, and the effect of which could not be avoided by the "greatest" care and skill; by Fry and Lopes, L.JJ., because the accident being one which those in charge of the "A." could not possibly prevent by the exercise of "ordinary" care, caution and maritime skill, it was inevitable with the definition given in The Marpesia, supra, col. 704. The Schwan, The Albano, [1892] P. 419; 69 L. T. 34; 7 Asp. M. C. 347—C. A.

Steam Steering Gear Breaking Down.]—A steamship fitted with a patent steam steering gear ran into a vessel at anchor in the Thames, owing to the steering gear suddenly not acting; every effort was unavailingly made to avoid the collision. A few days before, on the previous voyage of the same steamship, the same apparatus had similarly refused to act, but no cause for it so doing could be seen on examination. Large numbers of the gears were in use on steamers. In an action of damage:—Held, first, that the defendants were not liable for damage caused by the use of this apparatus without negligence. Secondly, that the use of this apparatus on the Thames after it had acted wrongly on a previous occasion, was evidence of negligence, and that the defendants were liable for the damage caused thereby. The European, 54 L. J., Adm. 61; 10 P. D. 99; 52 L. T. 868; 33 W. R. 937; 5 Asp. M. C. 417.

If the defence of inevitable accident is relied on, and the allegation is that the ship's steam steering gear failed to act and she failed to answer her helm and so came into collision, without negligence on the part of those on board, the shipowner is liable. The Indus, 56 L. J., Adm. 88; 12 P. D. 46; 56 L. T. 376; 35 W. R. 490; 6 Asp. M. C. 105. And see The Warkworth, 53 L. J., Adm. 65; 9 P. D. 145; 51 L. T. 558; 33 W. R. 112; 5 Asp. M. C. 326—C. A.

Whistle not Heard.]—It was proved at the trial that a fog-horn was blown on the "Z." but not heard on the "I.":—Held, that this was not primâ facie evidence of negligence of those on the "I." The Elysia, 46 L. T. 840; 4 Asp. M. C. 540.

The fact of a steam-whistle alleged to have been blown in a fog not being heard by those on an approaching ship is not necessarily proof that there was a bad look-out on the approaching ship, as the direction in which and the distance from which the sound would be heard is uncertain. The Rosetta, 59 L. T. 342; 6 Asp. M. C. 310.

Vessel Disabled by prior Collision.]—Where a vessel whose duty it is under the regulations to keep out of the way is unable to do so by reason of damage received in a prior collision, and a collision occurs with a third ship, it is inevitable accident. The Aimo and The Amelia, 29 L. T. 118; 21 W. R. 707; 2 Asp. M. C. 96. And see The Kjobenhavn, supra.

Darkness of Night.]—A collision between a sailing ship rounding to before anchoring and a steamship:—Held, an inevitable accident "from the darkness of the night alone." Both actions dismissed, each party paying his own costs. The Shannon, 1 W. Rob. 463.

Vessel Forging over Sand.]—A collision between a vessel that had been ashore on the Nore Sand and having forged over it with the flood tide struck another at anchor in the channel just clear of the sand:—Held, an inevitable accident. The Thornley, 7 Jur. 659.

2. Presumption of Fault.

a. Infringement of the Regulations.

i. Under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 79.

Collision between ship under way and another at anchor. The latter had not the statutory light exhibited. The jury found that the absence of the light contributed to the collision:—Held (under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 79, s. 28), that the owners of the ship at anchor could not recover. Morrison v. General Steam Navigation Co., 8 Ex. 733; 22 L. J., Ex. 233—Ex. Ch.

Under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 79, s. 28, neither ship could recover if the statutory rules for preventing collisions were not observed; and although neither ship alleged in her pleading against the other that she had no lights, it being proved that neither ship had lights:—Held, that neither could recover anything. The Aliwal, 18 Jur. 296.

Under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 79, if a ship failed to comply with the admiralty regulations as to lights, she was not held in fault for collision unless it was caused by her non-compliance. The Telegraph, 1 Spinks, 427.

Under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 79, if a collision occurred by the fault of both ships, and the fault of one was the not having the statutory lights, she could recover half her loss, but no more, although the deficient lights did not contribute to the collision. The Swanland, 2 Spinks, 107.

If there was in fact risk of collision, a ship was in fault, under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 79, for not porting her helm, even if the master did not "perceive" the risk and ought to have perceived it. General Steam Navigation Co. v. Mann, 14 C. B. 127.

In summing-up in a case of collision between a barque and a brig at anchor, the judge told the jury that if the collision was caused wholly or in part by the brig not having a light at the mast-head in accordance with the admiralty regulations, the defendants, the owners of the barque, were not liable; and that the substantial question was, whether the brig had a light exhibited or not. Verdict for the plaintiff, the owner of the brig. Upon an application for a new trial:—Held, that the judge's direction was right. Whittel v. Crawford, 4 W. R. 654—Ex. Ch.

ii. Under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104.

A ship, "A.," was held in fault for a collision caused partly by her infringement of the law as to lights; the other ship, "B.," was held in fault for bad look-out:—Held, under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, ss. 295, 298, that "A." could recover nothing, and that "B." could recover half her loss. The Robert Ingram, Lush. 327.

A vessel infringing the regulations as to lights could under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, recover nothing for a collision, though the other ship was also in fault. The Urania, Swabey, 253.

The penal consequences of not porting the helm in accordance with 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 269, do not follow where the master was not able to make out the course of the other ship. The Inflexible, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 782.

The effect of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 298, was to prevent either of two ships, both being in fault for the collision, from recovering anything. The James, Lawson v. Carr, 10 Moore, P. C. 162; Swabey, 60; 4 W. R. 563. S. P., The City of Carlisle, Br. & Lush. 363; 11 L. T. 33.

A vessel not carrying the lights required by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, held in fault for the collision. The Livingstone, Swabey, 519.

iii. Under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63.

Where there has been a breach of the regulations, and a collision ensues, the presumption is that it was occasioned thereby; and it lies on the ship that infringed the law to shew that it did not in fact occasion the damage. The Palestine, 13 W. R. 111; 1 Asp. M. C. 468.

iv. Under 36 & 37 Vict. c. 85.

Materiality of Regulation Infringed.]—The infringement must be one having some possible connection with the collision; or, in other words, the presumption of culpability may be met by proof that the infringement could not by any possibility have contributed to the collision; and the burden of shewing this lies on the party guilty of the infringement; proof that the infringement did not in fact contribute to the collision being excluded. The Fanny M. Carvill (infra) approved. The Duke of Buccleuch [1891] A. C. 310; 65 L. T. 422; 7 Asp. M. C. 68—H. L. (E.)

The presumption of fault created by s. 17 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1873, does not arise where the infringement could not by possibility have contributed to the collision. Thus: Where a ship infringed art. 3 of the sailing regulations by carrying her side-lights with screens shorter than the length prescribed thereby, but it was proved that such breach of the regulation could not possibly have contributed to the collision:—Held, that the ship could not be deemed to be in fault. The Fanny M. Carvill, 44 L. J., Adm. 34; 13 App. Cas. 455, n.; 32 L. T. 646; 24 W. R. 62; 2 Asp. M. C. 569—P. C. Approved, The Hochung and The Lapwing, 51 L. J., P. C. 92; 7 App. Cas. 512; 47 L. T. 485; 31 W. R. 303.

Where the regulation infringed could by no possibility have contributed to the collision, the ship will not be held in fault under 36 & 37 Vict. c. 85, s. 17. The Duke of Sutherland, L. R. 4 A. & E. 422; 32 L. T. 129; 2 Asp. M. C. 478.

Presumption of Fault, not of being Alone in Fault.]—Although a ship must be deemed to be in fault for an infringement of the regulations preceding but not occasioning the collision under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1873, s. 17, she is not necessarily wholly in fault; but if the other ship has been guilty of negligence or a breach of the regulations, the latter will also be held to blame and the damages divided between them. The Hibernia, 31 L. T. 803; 24 W. R. 60; 2 Asp. M. C. 454—P. C.

Vessel Towing deemed in Fault for Infringement by Vessel in Tow.]—A pilot boat in tow of a brigantine had a masthead light and no side lights up:—Held, that the brigantine was in fault under 36 & 37 Vict. c. 85, s. 17, for the infringement of the law as to lights by the pilot boat. The Mary Hounsell, 48 L. J., Adm. 54; 4 P. D. 204; 40 L. T. 368; 4 Asp. M. C. 101.

Wrong Lights—No Look-out on other Ship.]—Where there was no look-out on the other ship:—Held, that the absence of side-lights in the plaintiff's ship could not have contributed to the collision, and that 36 & 37 Vict. c. 85, s. 17, did not apply. The Englishman, 47 L. J., Adm. 9; 3 P. D. 181; 37 L. T. 412; 3 Asp. M. C. 506.

Stern Light.]—See The Palinurus, 37 W. R. 266—C. A.

There must be an opportunity of applying the Regulations.]—A ship failing to obey one of the regulations for preventing collisions whereby a collision occurs, is not to be deemed to be in fault within the Merchant Shipping Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 85), s. 17, if the circumstances were such that a competent seaman exercising reasonable care could not have discovered that the regulation was in fact applicable. The Theodore H. Rand, Baker v. The Theodore H. Rand, 56 L. J., Adm. 65; 12 App. Cas. 247; 56 L. T. 343; 35 W. R. 781; 6 Asp. M. C. 122—H. L. (E.)

Of two sailing ships approaching one another, the "S." was running free, and the "T." was close-hauled on the port tack. It was therefore the duty of the "T." to keep her course in accordance with arts. 14, 22, of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea (1884), but those navigating the "T.," in the belief that the "S." was close-hauled on the starboard tack, ported, whereby a collision occurred:—Held, that since with ordinary skill and by the exercise of reasonable care those navigating the "T." could not have ascertained that the "S." was running free, the "T." was not to be deemed to be in fault within the Merchant Shipping Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 85), s. 17. Ib.

Short Screens.]—See The Fanny M. Carvill, supra.

Light Intercepted by Sails.]—Where a ship's side-light was fixed in the rigging, but was not proved to have been intercepted by the foresail or otherwise:—Held, that there was no infringement of art. 3 (b) of the regulations, and no presumption of fault. The Glamorganshire, 13 App. Cas. 454; 59 L. T. 572; 6 Asp. M. C. 344—P. C.

Lights not Burning.]—Where there has been a departure from an important rule of navigation, if the absence of due observance of the rule can by any possibility have contributed to the accident, then the party in default cannot be excused. Where the lights of the complaining vessel were not properly burning, and were not visible on board the other vessel:—Held, that in the absence of proof that this latter was also to blame, the suit must be dismissed. The Arklow, Emery v. Cichero, 53 L. J., P. C. 9; 9 App. Cas. 136; 50 L. T. 305; 5 Asp. M. C. 219—P. C.

Wrong Light of Trawler not seen by other Ship.]—Where a steamship having come into collision with a trawler, which, in violation of the regulations for preventing collisions at sea, was carrying a white masthead light in addition to side-lights, and it appeared that those on board the steamship had not seen the white light, the court refused to hold the trawler to blame for the breach of the regulations, on the ground that it could not possibly have contributed to the collision. The Chusan, 53 L. T. 60; 5 Asp. M. C. 476.

Slight Obscuration of Light.]—The starboard light of the plaintiffs' vessel was obscured by the cathead to an extent of from two-and-a-half to three degrees; but with this exception her side lights shewed an unbroken light over ten points of the horizon:—Held, that there was no such infringement of art. 3 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea as to oblige the court, under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1873, s. 17, to hold the vessel to blame for the collision. The Fire Queen, 56 L. J., Adm. 90; 12 P. D. 147; 57 L. T. 312; 36 W. R. 15; 6 Asp. M. C. 146.

Only Chance of avoiding Collision.]—A steamship, approaching another vessel, so as to involve risk of collision, may be justified in keeping her engines going full speed ahead, where she is placed in a position of danger by the neglect of the other vessel to exhibit one of her lights whilst shewing the other and there is no other chance of escaping collision. The Benares, 53 L. J., Adm. 2; 9 P. D. 16; 49 L. T. 702; 32 W. R. 268; 5 Asp. M. C. 171—C. A.

Presumption of Fault though no Negligence in Fact.]—The Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, made under the authority of the Merchant Shipping Acts, 1854 to 1873, must under the 17th section of the 36 & 37 Vict. c. 85, be strictly followed. Actual necessity, not considerations of discretion and expediency, even though skilfully acted on, can alone excuse their non-observance. The Khedive, Stoomvart Maatschappy Nederland v. P. and O. Steam Navigation Co., 52 L. J., Adm. 1; 5 App. Cas. 876; 43 L. T. 610; 29 W. R. 173; 4 Asp. M. C. 567—H. L. (E.)

The Court must Decide whether the Infringement could have caused Collision.]—In considering whether a breach of the regulations for preventing collisions could possibly have contributed to a collision, the court must take into consideration the whole of the evidence, even where there is a conflict, subject to the qualification that the onus of proof lies on those infringing the regulations; and if upon such evidence the court comes to the conclusion that the breach could not possibly have contributed to the collision, the ship committing it is not to be deemed to blame in respect thereof. The Hermod, 62 L. T. 670; 6 Asp. M. C. 509.

In an action of collision it was proved that the lights carried by one of the vessels were so fixed as to be partially obscured, and that there was therefore an infringement of art. 6 of the regulations:—Held, by the court below, that, under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1873, s. 17, the vessel whose lights were thus obscured must be held to have been in fault, without any inquiry as to whether such obscuration could possibly have been a cause of the collision:—But held, by the court of appeal, that, in the circumstances, it was the duty of the court to inquire into the facts in order to ascertain whether the infringement of the regulations could possibly have contributed to the collision, and that inasmuch as it appeared from inquiry into the relative positions of the two vessels that the obscuration of the lights could not possibly have caused the accident, the vessel carrying such lights was not to blame. The Duke of Buccleuch, [1891] A. C. 310; 65 L. T. 422; 7 Asp. M. C. 68—H. L. (E.)

Reckless Negligence by one Ship—Slight Infringement of Regulations by other Ship.]—Where in a collision it appeared that one vessel had been navigated with reckless negligence, and the other had committed a comparatively venial error in not slackening speed in good time:—Held, that a regulation for preventing collisions at sea having been infringed by the latter vessel without necessity, it could not be absolved from the consequences prescribed by statute, and must be held to be liable. The Arratoon Apcar, Ocean Steamship Co. v. Apcar, 59 L. J., P. C. 49; 15 App. Cas. 37; 62 L. T. 331; 38 W. R. 481; 6 Asp. M. C. 491—P. C.

Infringement of Mersey Rules.]—An infringement of the rules in force in the Mersey sea channels, under 37 & 38 Vict. c. 52, is within the penalty of 36 & 37 Vict. c. 85, s. 17. The Lady Downshire, 48 L. J., Adm. 41; 4 P. D. 26; 39 L. T. 236; 27 W. R. 648; 4 Asp. M. C. 25.

Obscuration of Lights.]—A brig was carrying her lights aft in a position in which they were obscured to the extent of a point in a point and a half on either bows. She came into collision with a barque on the other tack. The brig was in fault, under 36 & 37 Vict. c. 85, s. 17. The Tirzah, 48 L. J., Adm. 15; 4 P. D. 33; 39 L. T. 547; 27 W. R. 584; 5 Asp. M. C. 55.

Foreign Ships.]—A foreign ship held in fault for a collision on the high seas, her lights having been partially obscured, under 36 & 37 Vict. c. 85, s. 17. The Magnet, L. R. 4 A. & E. 417; 32 L. T. 129; 2 Asp. M. C. 478.

b. Not standing by, after Collision.

Failure to render Assistance.]—The Merchant Shipping Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 85), s. 16, having imposed upon the master of every ship, in case of collision with another ship, a duty, "if and so far as he can do so without danger to his own vessel, crew and passengers (if any), to stay by the other vessel until he has ascertained that she has no need of further assistance, and to render to the other vessel, her master, crew and passengers (if any), such assistance as may be practicable and as may be necessary to save them from any danger caused by such collision"; this duty is not discharged by a steamship where, it being practicable and safe to lower a boat to render assistance, although possibly dangerous to stay by the injured ship, she continues her voyage without lowering her boat, and merely hails and signals for other vessels to go to the assistance of the injured ship. The Adriatic, 33 L. T. 102; 3 Asp. M. C. 16.

A ship failing to render assistance to another with which she has been in collision, and shewing no reasonable cause for such failure, will be held to blame for the collision, unless proof is given to the contrary on her behalf. Ib.

When a collision takes place which might probably endanger life, it is the duty of the vessel to stay by until the extent of the damage is ascertained. The Queen of the Orwell, 7 L. T. 839; 11 W. R. 499.

If it does not stay by, the burden of proof that the collision did not take place by its default is thrown upon the owners. Ib.

The first duty of any vessel that by collision injures another vessel, is to wait to ascertain the extent of that injury, and to render what assistance it may be able to protect life and property. The Germania, 21 L. T. 44—P. C.

—— When Risk of Capture Imminent.]—Although it is the duty of every vessel, whether British or foreign, to render assistance to another which she has injured in collision, the rule will not compel a ship to remain alongside another so injured so as to run risk of capture by an enemy's fleet. The Thuringia, 41 L. J., Adm. 44; 26 L. T. 446; 1 Asp. M. C. 283.

Compulsory Pilotage.]—Under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 33, in the case of collision between two ships it was declared to be the duty of the person in charge of each ship to render assistance to the other, and in case he failed to do so without reasonable excuse, the collision in absence of proof to the contrary was to be deemed to have been caused by his wrongful act. Two steamships, the "Queen" and "Lord John Russell," each under the charge of a compulsory pilot, came into collision in the Thames. The "Queen" was solely to blame, and after the collision she rendered no assistance to the other vessel, and shewed no excuse for having failed to do so :—Held, that the mere fact of her having a pilot on board did not exempt her from liability. The Queen, 38 L. J., Adm. 39 ; L. R. 2 A. & E. 354 ; 20 L. T. 855.

The person in charge intended by that section is the master. Ib.

Salvage.]—A vessel which has caused a collision is not entitled to salvage services for assistance rendered after such collision. The Glengaber, 41 L. J., Adm. 84 ; L. R. 3 A. & E. 534; 27 L. T. 386; 21 W. R. 168; 1 Asp. M. C. 401.

Standing-by Rule applies to Collision with Open Sea-going Boat—What is a "Ship."]—A collision took place between a steamship and a fishing coble. The coble sank, and three men on board were lost. The coble was of ten tons burden, twenty-four feet in length, decked forward only, with two movable masts and a sail for each. She was accustomed to go twenty miles out to sea, and to remain out for some hours at a time, and was usually under sail, but was sometimes propelled by oars when convenient. An inquest was held on the body of one of the men who were lost, and a solicitor appointed by the board of trade took notes of the evidence, and forwarded them to the board, who applied to two justices to hold an inquiry into the collision. The justices held the inquiry, decided that the coble was a sea-going ship, that there was a collision between two ships, and that the master and mate of the steamer did not duly render assistance to save life, and ordered that the certificates of the master and mate of the steamer should be suspended for three months :—Held, first, that if the coble was a ship, one ship had caused loss to another ; and even if she was not, there was a casualty to the steamship, and therefore there was a case for investigation by the justices under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104 (the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854), s. 433. Ferguson or Hutchinson, Ex parte, 40 L. J., Q. B. 105 ; L. R. 6 Q. B. 280 ; 24 L. T. 96 ; 19 W. R. 746 ; 1 Asp. M. C. 8.

Held, secondly, that the word "ship" applied to all craft which substantially went to sea, and only used oars as an auxiliary power, and that there had been a collision between two ships within the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 33, and that therefore the order was good. Ib.

Not answering Blue Lights of other Ship.]—The "E. H.," after a collision with the "M.," burnt rockets and blue lights as signals of distress, but the "M." did not, as she might have done, reply to these signals :—Held, a breach of the statutory duty of rendering assistance under 36 & 37 Vict. c. 85, s. 16, and that the "M." was therefore to be deemed to blame. The Emmy Hause, 53 L. J., Adm. 43 ; 9 P. D. 81 ; 50 L. T. 372 ; 32 W. R. 880 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 216.

Application to Foreign Ships.]—The rule contained in the Merchant Shipping Amendment Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 63), s. 33, that the omission by any ship, after a collision, to render all practicable assistance to another, shall be presumptive evidence against the former that she is in fault, does not apply to United States ships, because that rule has not been adopted by the United States. The Nevada, 27 L. T. 720 ; 1 Asp. M. C. 477.

3. Liability.

a. Personal Liability of Shipowner.

Ship must be in Fault.]—The shipowner is not liable unless his ship is in fault for the collision. The Catherine of Dover, 2 Hag. Adm. 154. And see 1. Negligence, supra, cols. 685 seq.

Owner not Liable quâ Owner.]—Owner not liable quâ owner ; only as employer of wrongdoer or as wrongdoer himself. Per Lord Cairns. Wear River Commissioners v. Adamson, 47 L. J., Q. B. 193 ; 2 App. Cas. 743, 751 ; 37 L. T. 543 ; 26 W. R. 217 ; 3 Asp. M. C. 521—H. L. (E.)

And see Simpson v. Thompson, 3 App. Cas. 279 ; 38 L. T. 1 ; 3 Asp. M. C. 567. Hibbs v. Ross, 9 B. & S. 655 ; 35 L. J., Q. B. 193 ; L. R. 1 Q. B. 534 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 812 ; 15 L. T. 67.

Ship or Owner may be sued in Admiralty.]—In admiralty the shipowner may be sued personally, or the ship in rem. Per Dr. Lushington. The Griefswald, Swabey, 430, 435.

Master Towing Ship without Authority.]—Where a master without express authority from his owners took a disabled ship in tow and damaged her by collision :—Held, that his owners were liable. The Thetis, 38 L. J., Adm. 42 ; L. R. 2 A. & E. 365 ; 22 L. T. 276.

Malicious Act of Master.]—Owners are not liable for collision caused by malicious act of the master. The Druid, 1 W. Rob. 391. The Ida, Lush. 6. See also McGhee v. Anderson, supra, col. 72. The Dunlossit, Currie v. McKnight, infra, col. 924.

—— Of Crew.]—If one of a ship's crew does a wilful act of injury to another ship, without any direction from or privity of the master, an action cannot be maintained against the master, although he was on board at the time. Bowcher v. Noidstrom, 1 Taunt. 568 ; 10 R. R. 608.

Infringement of the Regulations by Master—Owners Liable.]—The owner is liable for a breach of the regulations by his servants. Grill v. General Iron Screw Collier Co., 37 L. J., C. P. 205 ; L. R. 3 C. P. 476 ; 18 L. T. 485 ; 16 W. R. 796. The Franconia, 2 P. D. 8 ; 35 L. T. 721; 25 W. R. 197 ; 3 Asp. M. C. 295—C. A. The Seine, Swabey, 411.

Damage by Tug hired by Harbour Authority.]—Action against a harbour authority by owner of ship injured by the fault of her tug, whose owners had contracted with the harbour authorities to tow vessels in at a reduced rate :—Held, that the harbour authorities were not liable. Cuthbertson v. Parsons, 12 C. B. 304 ; 21 L. J., C. P. 165.

Lessee of Ferry.]—The lessee of a ferry hired a tug to work the ferry, and a passenger was injured by the negligence of the tug's crew :—Held, that although the ferryman paid the tug's crew, they were the servants of her owner, and that he was liable. Dalyell v. Tyrer, El. Bl. & El. 899.

Barge Lent to One who Navigates her by his own Servants.]—The owners of a barge lent to one who navigates her by his own servants are not liable for damage done by her. Per Best, J. Scott v. Scott, 2 Stark. 438; 20 R. R. 711.

Ship Damaging Harbour Works.]—Notwithstanding the Harbours, Docks and Piers Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 27, s. 74), the owners of a ship that damages harbour works without negligence of those on board are not liable. Wear River Commissioners v. Adamson, 46 L. J., Q. B. 83; 2 App. Cas. 743; 37 L. T. 543; 24 W. R. 872; 3 Asp. M. C. 521—H. L. (E.) Overruling The Merle, 31 L. T. 447, and Dennis v. Tovell, 42 L. J., M. C. 33; L. R. 8 Q. B. 10; 27 L. T. 482; 21 W. R. 170; 2 Asp. M. C. 402.

Ship worked by Skipper—Owner sharing Profits.]—Where the ship was worked entirely by the skipper, under an agreement with the owner that the latter should take one-third of the profits, the owner held liable for damage done by the ship. Steel v. Lester, 47 L. J., C. P. 43; 3 C. P. D. 121; 37 L. T. 642; 26 W. R. 212; 3 Asp. M. C. 537. And see McGhee v. Anderson, 22 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 274.

Towage Contract—Condition exempting from Liability for Negligence of Servants.]—The master of a steam tug, who had contracted to tow a fishing smack out of the harbour of Great Yarmouth to sea on the terms that his owners should not be liable for damage arising from any negligence or default of themselves or their servants, after the towage had been in part performed, took in tow in addition to the smack six other vessels, and in consequence was unable to keep the fishing smack in her course, so that she went aground and was lost. By having more than six vessels in tow at once the master of the tug disobeyed a regulation made by the harbour-master of Great Yarmouth under statutory authority. The owners of the fishing smack brought an action against the owners of the steam tug to recover damages:—Held, that the loss of the smack was occasioned by the negligence of the master of the tug; but that the defendants were protected from liability by the terms of the towage contract, and that the action must be dismissed. The United Service (or Cole) v. Great Yarmouth Steam Tug Co., 53 L. J., Adm. 1; 9 P. D. 3; 49 L. T. 701; 5 Asp. M. C. 170—C. A.

Personal Remedy where Res Insufficient.]—If the value of the defendant's vessel and freight is not equal to the damage done, the plaintiff may, after judgment, obtain a monition against the defendant personally to satisfy the deficiency. The Zephyr, 11 L. T. 351.

Liability for Fault of Waterman.]—The owner of a barge employed M., a freeman of the Waterman's Company, and W., an apprentice of a freeman, to navigate it from the Pool to Lambeth and back, and they were to receive 7*s.* each for the voyage. By the Waterman's Act, none but freemen and apprentices of freemen or of the widows of freemen are allowed to act as watermen or lightermen on the river Thames within certain limits. While under the care and management of M. and W., and by their misconduct, the barge injured another barge:—Held, that the owner was liable, M. and W. being in point of law his servants; and that he was not protected from his primâ facie liability in respect of the injury occasioned by their misconduct, by the Waterman's Act restraining him to select his servants in the particular trade from a privileged class. Martin v. Temperley, 4 Q. B. 298; 3 G. & D. 497; 12 L. J., Q. B. 129; 7 Jur. 150.

Harbour-Master.]—Where a master and crew are bound by statute to obey the directions of a harbour-master in going into dock, and a collision is occasioned by the ship being conducted according to the harbour-master's directions, the ship is not liable. The Bilbao, Lush. 149; 3 L. T. 338.

Ship under Charter.]—A steam vessel was under charterparty for six months, the owners to keep it in order, for the conveyance of goods from Newcastle and Goole, or such other coasting station as the charterer might from time to time employ it in. The crew was appointed by the owners, but paid by the charterer, who was also to pay all disbursements. The charterer did not interfere with the navigation of the vessel; but while he was on board, through the negligence of the crew, it ran against and injured the plaintiff's keel:—Held, that the owners were liable. Fenton v. Dublin Steam Packet Co., 1 P. & D. 103; 8 A. & E. 835; 8 L. J., Q. B. 28.

Vessel Chartered to the Navy Commissioners.]—If a ship is chartered to the commissioners of the navy as an armed vessel, and an injury is done to another vessel by the misconduct of the persons on board the former, while a commander of the navy and a king's pilot are on board, an action for the injury may be sustained against the owners of the chartered ship. Fletcher v. Braddick, 2 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 182; 9 R. R. 633.

—— Master Obeying Orders.]—A. and B. were respectively owners of vessels which, with many others, were taken up by government for the conveyance of troops upon an expedition of war in the Black Sea. The transports were towed by steamers to their destination, each steamer having attached to her two transports, the masters of which were under her immediate order and control. The commander of the steamer to which B.'s vessel and another were attached, on reaching the anchoring ground in the evening, having dropped his anchor, desired the masters of his tows to hold on by their warps or hawsers; but, in the course of the night, a storm arose, which caused B.'s vessel to swing with violence against A.'s vessel, whereby it was considerably damaged. In an action for the damage so caused, the judge told the jury that B. would not be responsible if the injury complained of resulted from a strict obedience on the part of the master to the orders of the officer in command of the steamer; but that, assuming that the master was justified by the orders he received in abstaining from anchoring in the first instance, it was for them to consider whether he had not been guilty of negligence and want of good seamanship in continuing to hold on by his warp under the altered state of circumstances, there being some evidence to shew that the accident might have been averted if he had dropped his anchor when the storm came on :—Held, no misdirection. Hodgkinson v. Fernie, 2 C. B. (N.S.) 415 ; 26 L. J., C. P. 217 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 818.

Shipowner Liable by Maritime Law.]—A British and a Spanish ship were in collision on the high seas. The British owners sued the Spanish owners, who had an office in England. The Spanish owners pleaded that by Spanish law shipowners are not personally liable in such case :—Held, that the plea was bad, as by the general maritime law, which was the law applicable, the shipowners are liable. The Leon, 50 L. J., Adm. 59 ; 6 P. D. 148 ; 44 L. T. 613 ; 29 W. R. 916 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 404.

Ship in Charge of Compulsory Pilot.]—See 10. COMPULSORY PILOTAGE, infra.

b. Liability of Ship in Admiralty—Maritime Lien.

Damage Lien.]—All civilised nations recognise the validity of maritime lien, and will enforce it when it has been declared by a foreign court ; but it is essential that it should appear from the proceedings of the foreign court that the object of the suit was the sale of the ship, and not a personal remedy against the captain or owners. The Bold Buccleugh (infra) considered. The City of Mecca, 50 L. J., Adm. 53 ; 6 P. D. 106 ; 44 L. T. 750 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 412—C. A.

Damage creates a lien on the ship causing the collision. The Bold Buccleugh, Harmer v. Bell, 7 Moore, P. C. 267.

A Scotch steamer ran down an English vessel in the Humber. An action was commenced in the court of admiralty in England by the owners of the English vessel against the owners of the steamer, and a warrant of arrest issued against the ship ; but before the ship could be arrested she had sailed for Scotland. A suit was then commenced by the owners of the English vessel against the owner of the steamer, in the court of session in Scotland, for the damage, and the steamer was arrested under process of that court, but subsequently released upon bail. Afterwards, and pending these proceedings, the steamer was sold, without notice to the purchaser of this unsatisfied claim against her. The proceedings in the court of session were still pending, when the steamer, having come within the jurisdiction of England, was again arrested under process of the high court of admiralty in England, and an action for damage commenced in that court for the same cause of action as was still pending in Scotland, instructions being sent to Scotland to abandon the proceedings in the court of session. The owner of the steamer appeared under protest in the admiralty court, and pleaded, first, lis alibi pendens ; and, secondly, that he was a purchaser for value without notice :—Held, first, that the plea of lis alibi pendens was bad, as the suit in Scotland was, in the first instance, in personam, the proceedings being commenced by process against the persons of the owners of the vessel, and the arrest of the steamer only collateral to secure the debt, while the proceedings in the admiralty court in England were, in the first instance, in rem, against the vessel, and therefore the two suits being in their nature different, the pendency of one suit could not be pleaded in suspension of the other. Secondly, that as, by the civil law, a maritime lien does not include or require possession, but being the foundation of proceedings in rem (a process requisite only to perfect a right inchoate from the moment the lien attaches), such lien travels with the thing into whosesoever possession it may come, and when carried into effect by a proceeding in rem, relates back to the period when it first attached ; the steamer was liable for the damage committed by her, though in the hands of a purchaser without notice of the damage, or the proceedings instituted against her. Ib.

—— Scotch Law—Semble.]—The maritime law of Scotland is the same as that of England as regards lien for damage. The Bold Buccleugh (supra) approved. The Dunlossit, Currie v. McKnight, 66 L. J., P. C. 19 ; [1897] App. Cas. 97 ; 75 L. T. 457 ; 8 Asp. M. C. 193—H. L. (Sc.)

Cutting the other Ship Adrift—Wilful Act of Crew.]—In order to render the ship liable, she must herself be the instrument with which the damage is done. Thus, where the crew of one ship, in order to facilitate her getting under way, wilfully cut the moorings of another, whereby the latter subsequently went ashore and was damaged, it was held that no damage lien attached to the former. Ib.

Lien follows Ship.]—A maritime lien for damage caused by a collision follows the ship causing the damage, into whosesoever hands she may go, and can be enforced at any time, provided there has been no improper delay, or laches, in enforcing such lien. The Europa, Dean v. Richards, 2 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 1 ; Br. & Lush. 89 ; 32 L. J., Adm. 188 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 690 ; 8 L. T. 368. The Mellona, 3 W. Rob. 16. The Nymph, Swabey, 86.

Lien Attaches on Collision.]—The damage lien attaches at the instant of collision ; per Dr. Lushington. The Mary Anne or Ann, 35 L. J., Adm. 6 ; L. R. 1 A. & E. 8, 11 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 31 ; 13 L. T. 384 ; 14 W. R. 136.

Laches in Enforcing Lien.]—A delay of three years to arrest the ship was held not to be an unreasonable delay, the owners of the damaged vessel having used reasonable diligence to discover her whereabouts. The Europa, supra.

Reasonable diligence means not doing everything possible, but doing that which, under ordinary circumstances, and having regard to expense and difficulty, could be reasonably required. Ib.

A collision having occurred between a foreign vessel and an English vessel, the master of the foreign vessel admitted his liability, and gave, in satisfaction of the damage, a bill of exchange, payable on the arrival of his vessel at her port of destination in Scotland. Her master, however, took her to France, where, her owner becoming bankrupt, she was sold by the assignees of his estate to the defendants, who brought her to England, where she was arrested by the owners of the English vessel in respect of the collision, the bill of exchange never having been paid :—Held, that the owners of the English vessel had not lost their lien for damage by reason of laches, or by the subsequent sale of the vessel. The Charles Amelia, 38 L. J., Adm. 17 ; L. R. 2 A. & E. 330 ; 19 L. T. 429 ; 17 W. R. 624. And see The Europa, supra.

In a collision action in rem the plaintiffs are not limited to any specified time during which they must institute their action, but where there has been a long lapse of time between the collision and the institution of the action, and the defendants seek to have the action dismissed on the ground of laches and delay, the question for the court in each case is whether it is inequitable to allow the action to proceed, and in determining this question, the court will consider the opportunities the plaintiffs have had of arresting the defendants' ship, the availability of the defendants' witnesses, and all other circumstances affecting the possibility of securing a fair trial, and should the action be allowed to proceed, every reasonable presumption will be made at the hearing in favour of the defendants. The Kong Magnus, [1891] P. 223; 63 L. T. 715; 6 Asp. M. C. 583.

Damage, but no Collision.]—The damage lien attaches, though there is no collision with the ship arrested, if she causes damage to another. Semble. The Sisters, 45 L. J., Adm. 39; 1 P. D. 117; 34 L. T. 338; 24 W. R. 412; 6 Asp. M. C. 583. But see The Dunlossit, supra.

—— Damage by Fault of Third Ship.]—The "Intrepide," entering Sunderland harbour under sail, was overtaking the "Wheatsheaf," in tow of a tug. The "Intrepide" struck the tow-rope, and the tug to save herself cast off the "Wheatsheaf," which went ashore and was damaged:—Held, that the "Intrepide" was liable in admiralty in rem. The Wheatsheaf and The Intrepide, 13 L. T. 612. And see The Industrie, 40 L. J., Adm. 26; L. R. 3 A. & E. 303; 24 L. T. 446; 19 W. R. 728; 1 Asp. M. C. 17.

Damage to Harbour Works.]—To a ship that damages harbour works the damage lien attaches by virtue of 10 & 11 Vict. c. 27. The Merle, 31 L. T. 447; 2 Asp. M. C. 402.

Order of Damage Claimants.]—Claimants for damage rank in the order of their judgments. The Clara, Swabey, 1. S. P., The Union, Lush. 128; 30 L. J., Adm. 17; 3 L. T. 280.

Damage Lien—Priority over Wages.]—The owners of a vessel, who have recovered judgment against another ship in an action for damage by collision, have a prior right against the proceeds of such ship to seamen who have recovered judgment against the same ship for wages earned before and after the collision. The Elin, 52 L. J., Adm. 55; 8 P. D. 129; 49 L. T. 87; 31 W. R. 736; 5 Asp. M. C. 120—C. A. S. P., The Benares, 7 Not. of Cas. Suppl. 50. The Linda Flor, Swabey, 309; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 172; 6 W. R. 197. The Duna, 5 L. T. 217. The Chimæra, cited, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 172; 8 P. D. 46, 131.

—— Priority over Mortgage, Bottomry and Repairs.]—The lien for damage has priority over the claim of a mortgagee or bondholder under an instrument of prior date to the collision. But a lender in good faith has a prior lien to the extent of the increased value of the ship effected after the collision. The Aline, 1 W. Rob. 111.

As to increase of value by repairs, see The St. Olaf, 38 L. J., Adm. 41; L. R. 2 A. & E. 360; 20 L. T. 758; 17 W. R. 743.

—— Ship Liable in rem where Owners not Liable at Law.]—A ship chartered by her owners to another person who has, under the charter, the sole control and management of the ship and crew, whom he employs and pays, is liable in a proceeding in rem for damage done to another ship by collision caused by the fault of the crew. The Lemington, 32 L. T. 69; 23 W. R. 421; 2 Asp. M. C. 475. See also, per Selwyn, L.J., The Halley, 5 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 263; 37 L. J., Adm. 33; L. R. 2 P. C. 193, 201; 18 L. T. 879; 16 W. R. 998. And per Brett, M.R., The Parlement Belge, 5 P. D. 197, 218; 42 L. T. 273; 28 W. R. 642; 4 Asp. M. C. 234.

—— Yacht in Hands of Agent for Sale.]—A yacht was intrusted to yachting agents for sale, and, by their servants, moored in the winter season without striking her top gear, whereby, on a gale occurring, the yacht drifted and fouled another yacht:—Held, that she was liable in a proceeding in rem in the court of admiralty. The Ruby Queen, Lush. 266.

—— Ship under Charter.] — The "Ticonderoga," under charterparty to the French government, was towed by a steamer athwart the hawse of the "Melampus." The "Ticonderoga" alleged that she was not liable for the damage done, as her charterparty obliged her to obey orders and put herself in tow of the steamer:—Held, that such obligation was no compulsion, so as to lay the ground for exemption from liability for damage done, as it arose from a voluntary stipulation entered into by the owners themselves. The Ticonderoga, Swabey, 215.

—— Damage by Tug to Tow—Ship not Liable where her Owners are not.]—A tug damaged the ship in tow by the negligence of the master of the tug. It was a term of the towage contract that the owners (charterers) of the tug were not to be liable for damage to ships in tow, whether caused by the negligence of the servants of the tug owners or not:—Held, that the tug was not liable in rem. The Ticonderoga (supra) explained. The Tasmania, 57 L. J., Adm. 49; 13 P. D. 110; 59 L. T. 263; 6 Asp. M. C. 305.

To what the Lien attaches.]—The lien attaches to the ship's apparel, furniture and fishing-gear. The Dundee, 1 Hag. Adm. 109.

And to the fragments of the ship, if wrecked. The Neptune, 1 Hag. Adm. 227, 238.

—— To what Craft.]—The lien does not attach to a Thames lighter for collision in the body of a county. Everard v. Kendall, col. 941.

But it attaches to all craft for damage at sea. The Sarah, Lush. 549. See Purkis v. Flower, 43 L. J., Q. B. 33; L. R. 9 Q. B. 114; 30 L. T. 90; 22 W. R. 239; 2 Asp. M. C. 226.

—— It attaches to Freight, but not to Cargo.]—A cargo laden on board a vessel at the time of collision is in no case liable to be sued for the damage. The Victor, Lush. 72; 29 L. J., Adm. 110; 2 L. T. 331.

A cargo arrested for freight will be released upon payment of the freight into court, with an affidavit of value. Ib.

Where a cargo is improperly detained under arrest, the owner is entitled to costs and damages. Ib.

The owner of cargo on board a ship sued for collision is only compellable to pay into court the freight due from him to the shipowner. The Leo, Lush. 444; 31 L. J., Adm. 78; 6 L. T. 58. And see The Flora, 35 L. J., Adm. 15; L. R. 1 A. & E. 45; 14 L. T. 192.

Deductions, as by charter, from gross freight will be allowed; and if the cargo is delivered at a place short of destination by reason of the collision, such reasonable deduction as may have been agreed upon between the shipowner and the owner of cargo. Ib.

Costs of paying freight into court may also be deducted. Ib.

—— Collision on Outward Voyage—Freight for Homeward Voyage Liable.]—A vessel under charterparty as to both her outward and homeward cargo, whilst on the outward voyage came into collision with another vessel:—Held, that the freight for the homeward voyage was liable to arrest for the damage. The Orpheus, 40 L. J., Adm. 24; L. R. 3 A. & E. 308; 23 L. T. 855.

—— Part of Cargo Discharged when Arrested.]—All the cargo on board a vessel at the time of a collision belonged to the same owner, but only a part of the cargo was on board when the vessel was arrested:—Held, that the lien for the whole freight extended to every part of the cargo on board at the time of the collision. The Roecliff, 38 L. J., Adm. 56; L. R. 2 P. 363; 20 L. T. 586; 17 W. R. 745.

Sale of Cargo to pay Marshal's Fees.]—The cargo will be detained by the court as security for payment of freight, and, if necessary, sold to realise the amount of freight. The Gettysburg, 52 L. T. 60; 5 Asp. M. C. 347.

c. Damage by Sunken Ship.

Damage by Vessel Sunk by her own fault—Duty to Light—Warning to Harbour-master.]—The "D.," in consequence of the sole default of her master and crew, had sunk in the Thames, and had become a wreck obstructing the navigation of the river. Her mate sent a message to the harbour-master at G. to inform him of the accident, who said that he would cause the wreck to be lighted. A few hours afterwards, the wreck not having been lighted, a vessel, without any fault on the part of those on board her, came into collision with the wreck, and sustained damage. An action of damage having been instituted on behalf of the owner of the damaged vessel against the owners of the "D," the judge at the trial refused to admit the evidence shewing that the mate of the "D." had sent a message to the harbour-master, and that the latter had promised to light the wreck:—Held, that the evidence was wrongly rejected, that the collision had not been caused by the negligence of the owners of the wreck, and that they were not liable for the damage done. The Douglas, 51 L. J., Adm. 89; 7 P. D. 151; 47 L. T. 502; 5 Asp. M. C. 15—C. A. Reversing 30 W. R. 692.

Maritime Lien.]—In order to fix the owners of a wreck with liability, two things must be shewn: first, that in regard to the particular matters in respect of which default is alleged, the control of the vessel is in them; and secondly, that they have, in the discharge of their legal duty, been guilty of wilful misconduct or neglect. The Utopia (Owners) v. The Primula (Owners), 62 L. J., P. C. 118; [1893] A. C. 492; 1 R. 394; 70 L. T. 47; 7 Asp. M. C. 408—P. C.

Where the owners of a wreck had not abandoned possession, but had properly transferred the control of the lighting thereof to the harbour authority, and, by reason of imperfect lighting, a ship entering the harbour had collided with the wreck:—Held, (i.) that the owners of the wreck were not guilty of negligence, and therefore not to blame; and further, no negligence at the time of the collision having been proved against the owners or their servants, no maritime lien arose; (ii.) the colliding ship having been navigated with reasonable care and skill in circumstances of instant peril, was also not to blame. Ib.

Liability of Harbour Authority.]—A harbour authority having power to remove wrecks, and taking tolls for the use of their harbour, is liable for damage done by a sunken ship which they have neglected to remove or mark. Dormont v. Furness Ry., 52 L. J., Q. B. 331; 11 Q. B. D. 496; 49 L. T. 134; 5 Asp. M. C. 127.

Damage by Grounding.]—See The Mooreock and cases, post, col. 880. The Rhosina and cases, post, cols. 910, seq.

d. Liability of Pilotage and Harbour Authorities.

Negligence of Pilot—Liability of Pilotage Authority.]—A pilotage authority is not liable for a collision caused by the fault of a pilot licensed but not employed by them. Dudman v. Brown and Dublin Port and Docks Board, Ir. Rep. 7 C. L. 518.

The Harbours Act, 1878, by s. 49, empowers the harbour board to appoint a harbour-master, pilots, and other officers to assist in the execution of the act. Sect. 76 empowers the board to appoint or license pilots to act within the districts attached to the harbour. The appellants employed a licensed pilot, who was also deputy harbour-master, to navigate their ship, which was sunk through want of due care in navigating:—Held, first, that the sole duty of the board as constituted by the statute in respect of pilots was to license pilots; secondly, that the board had no power to enter into pilotage contracts, and was not responsible for the default of their officer in respect of pilotage. Shaw, Savill & Co. v. Timaru Harbour Board, 59 L. J., P. C. 77; 15 App. Cas. 429; 62 L. T. 913; 6 Asp. M. C. 521—P. C.

Harbour authority held liable for damage by boatman employed by them to pilot ship. Holman v. Irvine Harbour Trustees, 4 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 406.

—— Vessel under Orders of Dock or Harbour-master.]—When a vessel enters docks with the permission and under the general directions of the dock-master, and within the space over which his authority by statute extends, they who are on board of her are bound to use diligence and care to carry out the directions of the dock-master in such a manner as to avoid doing damage to other vessels. The Cynthia, 46 L. J., Adm. 58; 2 P. D. 52; 36 L. T. 184; 3 Asp. M. C. 378.

A steamship under the directions of the dock-master, and within the limits of his jurisdiction when entering the St. Katharine docks, came into collision with two barges, and drove them against a steamship lying alongside the wharf, which steamship crossed a skiff and sunk it. In the City of London court, where a cause of damage was instituted, it was found by the judge as a fact that the steamship was not liable for the damage to the skiff, because she was bound by statute to obey the dock-master, and could not do anything but under his orders. The owner of the skiff appealed, and the court held that the master contributed to the damage by negligence in carrying out the orders of the dock-master, and therefore that the steamship was liable for the damages proceeded for. Ib.

A vessel leaving dock with a pilot on board and within the space over which the dock-master's authority extends by statute, is responsible for damage resulting from the use of a tug of insufficient power by her master, even when such tug is in the general employment of the dock company, there being no obligation on the dock company to supply a tug. The Belgic, 2 P. D. 57, n.; 35 L. T. 929; 3 Asp. M. C. 348. See also The Rhosina, and cases infra, col. 910.

e. Damage by Queen's Ship.

Actual Wrongdoer alone Liable.]—Where a Queen's ship is in collision the actual wrongdoer is alone liable. The Birkenhead, 3 W. Rob. 75.

Commander and Officers.]—Commander of a Queen's ship condemned in a collision cause. The Volcano, 2 W. Rob. 337.

The captain of a sloop of war is not answerable for damage done by her to another vessel; the mischief appearing to have been done during the watch of the lieutenant, who was upon deck, and had the actual direction and management of the steering and navigating of the sloop at the time, and when the captain was not upon deck, nor was called by his duty to be there. Nicholson v. Mouncey, 15 East, 384; 13 R. R. 501. And see Huggett v. Montgomery, 2 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 446; Rose v. Miles, 4 M. & S. 101; 16 R. R. 405.

Lords of the Admiralty.]—The lords of the admiralty cannot be sued for a collision by the owners of a merchant vessel that has been in collision with one of H.M. ships. The Athol, 1 W. Rob. 374.

Government Transport.]—No action is maintainable against an owner of a transport vessel employed by the government for damage done in the execution of positive orders of an officer of the royal navy under whose command she was. Hodgkinson v. Fernie, 2 C. B. (N.S.) 415; 26 L. J., C. P. 217; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 818.

Where a vessel of the royal navy towing two transports, anchored by the order of the admiral, and the captain ordered the vessels in tow to hold on by their warps, and afterwards a breeze sprang up, and one of the transports, swinging to it, came into collision with another transport in another column; and the captain stated, that after the order to hold on by the warps, it would have been proper for the master of the transport to let go his anchor if anything occurred which would have made it dangerous to his own ship if he did not do so:—Held, that in an action against the owner of the transport for damage done by the collision, the judge was right in leaving it to the jury to say whether the master was not guilty of negligence in not dropping his anchor on the wind changing. Ib. And see Fletcher v. Braddick, supra, col. 716.

Pilot.]—The pilot of a king's ship is liable for a collision caused by his fault, although he is subject to the orders of a superior officer. Stort v. Clements, Peake, 144.

f. Damage by Ship of Foreign Sovereign.

Jurisdiction of Court of Admiralty.]—A steam vessel belonging to the Khedive of Egypt had come to England to be repaired, with a cargo on board. She was not a man-of-war. Upon her trial trip she came into collision with and sunk the "Batavier"; the owners of the "Batavier" caused her to be arrested by a warrant of the court of admiralty. An application having been made for a prohibition:—Held, that the court of admiralty was the proper tribunal to determine whether the steam vessel was entitled to the immunity allowed to the vessels of a sovereign state, and that a prohibition ought not to issue. Charkieh, In re, 42 L. J., Q. B. 75; L. R. 8 Q. B. 197; 28 L. T. 190; 21 W. R. 437.

The "Charkieh" belonging to the Khedive of Egypt, and usually employed in carrying mails and passengers, came to England with merchandise and for repairs. Having completed her repairs, and whilst on a trial trip down the Thames, she came into collision with the "Batavier." On arrest by the owners of the "Batavier":—Held, first, that his highness the Khedive is not entitled to the privileges of a sovereign prince. The Charkieh, 42 L. J., Adm. 17; L. R. 4 A. & E. 59; 28 L. T. 513.

Held, secondly, that even the privileges of a sovereign prince would not extend to immunity from arrest in a suit for damage by collision. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that if the privileges did extend to such an immunity, they would have been waived in this case by the employment of the ship at the time as a trader. Ib.

—— Exemption from Arrest.]—A vessel of war commissioned by the government of a foreign state, and engaged in the national service of her government was stranded on the coast of England. She had a cargo of machinery on board her alleged to belong to private individuals of which her government had for public purposes charged itself with the care and protection. Important and efficient salvage services were rendered to the ship and cargo. A suit was instituted on behalf of certain of the salvors against the ship and her cargo. The court refused to order a warrant to issue for the arrest of the ship or cargo, and held that it had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The Constitution, 48 L. J., Adm. 13; 4 P. D. 39; 40 L. T. 219; 27 W. R. 739; 4 Asp. M. C. 79.

A steam packet conveying mails and carrying on commerce, and which belongs to the sovereign of a foreign state, and is officered by officers commissioned by him, comes within the category of vessels which are exempt from process of law, and cannot therefore be arrested so as to give a British subject a right to proceed against her. The Parlement Belge, 5 P. D. 197 ; 42 L. T. 273 ; 28 W. R. 642 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 234—C. A.

4. Persons Entitled to Recover.

Shipowners.]—Owners of the injured ship, whether registered as owners or not. The Ilos, Swabey, 100.

Passengers and Crew.]—Passengers or crew in respect of baggage or clothes lost. The Cumberland, 5 L. T. 496.

Posthumous Child.]—A posthumous child for the loss of his father lost in the collision. The George and Richard, L. R. 3 A. & E. 460 ; 24 L. T. 717 ; 1 Asp. M. C. 50.

For Personal Injury.]—Seamen hurt in the collision. The Borodino, 5 L. T. 291 ; Taylor v. Dewar, 2 B. & S. 58. And see infra, col. 925.

Indorsee of Bill of Lading.]—Indorsee of bill of lading of cargo. The Marathon, 40 L. T. 163 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 75.

Loss of Life.]—See infra, cols. 876, 925.

Bailees of Injured Barge.]—In a cause of collision instituted by the bailees of a barge against a steamship, they were competent to sue in rem in the admiralty court ; but in order to protect the defendants from the possibility of another suit by other parties on the same subject, the court directed that the money awarded as compensation for the damage should not be paid until it should be satisfactorily established that such payment would release the defendants from all claims by the owners of the barge in respect of the collision. The Minna, L. R. 2 A. & E. 97.

Cargo Owners.]—Can recover half their loss although the carrying ship is also in fault. The Milan, Lush. 388 ; 31 L. J., Adm. 105 ; 5 L. T. 590 ; The City of Manchester, 49 L. J., Adm. 81 ; 5 P. D. 221 ; 42 L. T. 521 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 412—C. A.

Underwriters.]—Can sue in the name of the owner of the injured ship after payment of the insurance, but not in their own names. Simpson v. Thompson, 3 App. Cas. 279 ; 38 L. T. 1 ; 3 Asp. M. C. 567.

In the case of a collision between two ships belonging to the same owner, by which one was totally lost through the exclusive fault of the other :—Held, that the underwriters could make no claim against the sum paid into court, under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 54), the insured being himself the person who had caused the damage. Ib.

Passengers and Others on Board Wrongdoing Ship.]—A passenger on board the "Bushire" and one of the crew lost their lives by drowning in consequence of a collision with the "Bernina." Both vessels were to blame, but neither of the deceased had anything to do with the negligent navigation of the "Bushire" :—Held, that their representatives could maintain actions under Lord Campbell's Act against the owners of the "Bernina," and could recover the whole of the damages ; s. 25, sub-s. 9, of the Judicature Act, 1873, not being applicable to such actions. Thorogood v. Bryan (8 C. B. 115), and Armstrong v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Ry. (L. R. 10 Ex. 47) overruled. The Bernina, Mills v. Armstrong, 57 L. J., Adm. 65 ; 13 App. Cas. 1 ; 58 L. T. 423 ; 36 W. R. 870 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 257 ; 52 J. P. 212—H. L. (E.)

Collision between two Ships belonging wholly or in part to same Owners.]—See Chartered Mercantile Bank of India, China and London v. London and Netherlands India Steam Navigation Co., infra, col. 737 ; Simpson v. Thompson, supra.

Master.]—The master of a ship that has been damaged by collision abroad has power to institute an action in a foreign court for recovery of damages on behalf of ship and cargo owners. The Reinbeck, 60 L. T. 209 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 366—C. A.

Damage by Tug.]—See 8. Tug and Tow, infra, cols. 754, seq.

Common Employment.]—A compulsory pilot is not fellow servant of crew, and may recover against the shipowner for injury suffered in collision through fault of crew. Smith v. Steele, 44 L. J., Q. B. 60 ; L. R. 10 Q. B. 125 ; 32 L. T. 195 ; 23 W. R. 388 ; 2 Asp. M. C. 487.

Where the captain is the wrongdoer. See Hedley v. Pinkney and Sons' Steamship Co., ante, col. 73 ; Ramsay v. Quinn, ante, col. 73.

Purchase of Ship—Damage done before Purchase.]—A., the purchaser of a ship from B., sued C. in his own name and as assignee from B. for damage done to the ship before the purchase. The day after the summons was served, B. assigned to A. all his claims against C. :—Held, that the action would not lie. Symington v. Campbell, 21 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 434.

5. Damages.

a. Generally.

Full Compensation.]—The sufferer by collision is entitled to full compensation. Mode of estimating the value of the injured vessel. The Ironmaster, Swabey, 441.

Increased Value by Repairs.]—The owners of a ship damaged by collision are entitled to the full expenses of repairing her and fitting her for sea, though such repairs may make her more valuable than she was before the collision. The Pactolus, Swabey, 173 ; 5 W. R. 167.

—— No Deduction of "One-third New for Old."]—There is no deduction of "one-third new for old" in the cost of repairs of damage by collision, as in the case of insurance. The wrongdoer pays in full. The Gazelle, 2 W. Rob. 279.

In assessing the value of seamen's clothes lost in collision, one-third deducted off cost price. The Cumberland, 5 L. T. 496.

Objection to registrar's report in respect of amount allowed for repairs. The Alfred, 3 W. Rob. 232.

Cost of Repairs—Restitution in integrum—Lloyd's Survey.]—A successful plaintiff in a collision action is entitled to have his ship put into the same condition in which it was previous to the collision at the cost of the wrongdoer, irrespective of the fact that some of the repairs necessitated by the collision would shortly have been necessary to enable the ship to pass her classification survey, and in estimating the amount of the wrongdoer's liability, no deduction can be made on this account. The Bernina, 55 L. T. 781 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 65.

Consequential Damage — Rotten Wood.]—Where a ship is damaged by collision, and on opening her up to effect the repairs rendered necessary by the collision, certain parts of her not injured by the collision are found to be rotten, and to require renewing, the cost of such renewal cannot be charged to the collision damage, although such parts but for such opening up would have lasted for some years. The Princess, 52 L. T. 932 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 451.

Condition of Injured Vessel.]—If a portion only of the damage is clearly attributable to the wrongdoer, and that portion cannot be distinguished from the rest, the wrongdoer is responsible for the whole damage. The Egyptian, 10 L. T. 910.

Even though the injured vessel may have been at the time of collision in such a condition that the collision occasioned an unusual amount of damage, a wrongdoer is nevertheless responsible for all the consequences. Ib.

Ship Sunk—Total Loss—No further Damages.]—Where a vessel is sunk in collision, and damages are awarded upon the footing of a total loss, nothing further by way of demurrage or loss of wages will be allowed as damages. The Columbus, 3 W. Rob. 158.

Damage to Reputation of Ship.]—A yacht belonging to the plaintiff having been sunk in a collision, and evidence having been given that her marketable value was depreciated :—Held, that, in addition to the claims made for repairs, the plaintiff was entitled to be paid such sum as would compensate for the impaired value. The Georgiana v. The Anglican, 21 W. R. 280.

Ship Sunk and Raised.]—Where a ship carrying cargo was sunk in a collision, and afterwards raised and repaired, and the costs of repairs exceeded the original value of the ship, which might have been ascertained before the repairs were commenced :—Held, that the owner could not recover upon a principle of partial loss, but that the measure of damages was the value of the ship before the collision, with interest from the date when the cargo would, in ordinary course, have been delivered, together with the costs of raising, and the cost of placing the ship in dock for inspection, less the value of the wreck as raised. The Empress Eugénie, Lush. 138. See also The Emerald, The Greta Holme, infra, cols. 735, 894.

Improper Abandonment.]—Where, in a collision action for which the defendants were held to blame, the court found that, after the collision, the plaintiff's vessel had been improperly abandoned, and it appeared that, in consequence thereof, she sank and was afterwards raised by the plaintiffs, whereas she might have been beached, the court directed the registrar in assessing the damages, that, as the only ascertainable extra cost arising from the abandonment was the cost of raising, he was to disallow that amount. The Hansa, 58 L. T. 530 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 268.

When a collision takes place between two vessels by the negligence of the crew of the defendant's vessel, whereby the plaintiff's vessel is injured, and afterwards and before any effort has been made to save the plaintiff's vessel her master and crew unjustifiably abandon her, and she is consequently totally lost, the defendant will not be liable for such total loss of the plaintiff's ship, but only for the expense which would have been incurred in making good the actual damage occasioned by the collision. The Thuringia, 41 L. J., Adm. 44 ; 26 L. T. 446 ; 1 Asp. M. C. 283.

The master and crew of a vessel injured by collision are bound to shew ordinary courage and nautical skill in endeavouring to save their vessel from total loss, and the defendant will not, on a reference to the registrar and merchants to assess the damages, be held liable for any loss which might have been avoided by the exercise of such ordinary skill and courage. Ib.

The wrongdoer in a collision is liable for loss arising from the abandonment of the injured ship, under reasonable fear of danger. The Blenheim, 1 Spinks, 285.

If, in consequence of the collision, the crew of the injured ship abandon her under a reasonable fear of their lives, and she is totally lost, the owners of the wrongdoing ship are liable for damage and salvage expenses. The Pensher, Swabey, 211.

A vessel, after collision, was abandoned by her crew, under reasonable fear of their lives, and lost ; the wrongdoing ship doing nothing to assist :—Held, that damages for the total loss could be recovered against the other ship. The Lindsay, Ir. R. 1 Eq. 259.

Where the injured ship was abandoned by her crew, after the collision, unjustifiably, and she was afterwards salved, the salvage cannot be recovered as damages in the collision action. The Linda, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 146 ; 6 W. R. 196.

Jettison of Cargo—Claim for General Average.]—In a collision between a Dutch and an English steamer, the former was sunk, and the latter so injured that she had to jettison cargo to keep the part of the ship damaged out of the water whilst making for a port of refuge. In an action in rem for damage by collision brought by the owners of the Dutch steamer against the English steamer, to which the owners of the latter appeared and counter-claimed, the Dutch steamer was found alone to blame. On the reference as to damages, the owners of the English steamer claimed (inter alia) to recover against the owners of the Dutch steamer the balance due in general average contribution from ship to cargo in respect of the jettison, after deducting the amount due from cargo to ship, in respect of the damage to the ship :—Held, that the claim must be disallowed, as the loss sustained by the ship in having to make the general average contribution was not directly due to the collision, but arose from the obligation to contribute, resulting from the relation between ship and cargo. The Marpessa, 61 L. J., Adm. 9 ; [1891] P. 403 ; 66 L. T. 356 ; 40 W. R. 239 ; 7 Asp. M. C. 155.

Insurance does not Affect.]—The defendants condemned in damages in a collision action are not entitled to deduct from such damages the amount received by the plaintiff in respect of such damage, under a policy. Yates v. Whyte, 4 Bing. (N.C.) 272; 5 Scott, 640; 7 L. J., C. P. 116.

—— Plaintiff paid by Insurers.]—The injured party is entitled to full compensation, although the jury find that he has been paid by insurers for part of the damage; the insurers having assigned to him their rights against the defendants. Morrison v. Bartolomeo, 5 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (3rd ser.) 848.

Expense of Detaining Witnesses.]—Costs of detaining witnesses until the trial, agency and interpretation, are allowed to the successful party in a collision suit. The Karla, Br. & Lush. 367; 13 W. R. 295.

Lien for Cost of Repairs—Bankruptcy of Shipowner.]—Where, in the registrar's report in a collision action, it appears that the claimant claims (inter alia) as part of his damages the cost of repairing his ship, but has not paid the shipwright, and has, since the repairs were effected, become insolvent, and the registrar allows such item, the court has no power to do anything to ensure the money being paid over by the claimant to the shipwright, and will not retain the money in the registry until the claimant has given satisfactory evidence that he has paid the shipwright. The Endeavour, 62 L. T. 840; 6 Asp. M. C. 511.

Specific Agreement for Liquidation of Damages.]—The ship "G.," having come into collision with the ship "W.," the owner of the ship "W." caused the ship "G." to be arrested, but, in consideration of the insurers agreeing to pay to the owners the amount of damage which the ship "W." had received by the collision, her owners released the ship "G." from arrest:—Held, that the word "damage" included not only the damage to the ship itself, but consequential damage, such as loss of freight and costs in the admiralty court. Heard v. Holman, 19 C. B. (N.S.) 1; 34 L. J., C. P. 239; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 544; 12 L. T. 455; 13 W. R. 745.

Interest on Damages.]—In a collision action in rem not instituted till twelve years after the collision, the court allowed interest for twelve years on the damages awarded. The Kong Magnus, [1891] P. 223; 65 L. T. 231; 7 Asp. M. C. 64.

Interest upon money paid for repairs of the injured ship allowed from the date of payment, not only from the date of decree. The Hebe, 2 W. Rob. 530; 5 Not. of Cas. 176. And see cases infra, col. 742.

Loss of Cargo after Transhipment, in consequence of Collision.]—See The Bernina, supra, col. 561.

Loss of Life and Personal Injury.]—See The Beta and cases, infra, col. 925.

Limit of Damages.]—See 7. LIMITATION OF LIABILITY, infra, cols. 738, et seq.

b. Plaintiff's Negligence after Collision.

Loss by Plaintiff's Negligence after Collision.]—If a collision takes place between two vessels by the negligence of the crew of the defendant's vessel, whereby the plaintiff's vessel suffers damage and is necessarily run aground, and afterwards and before any expenses are incurred, by the negligence of the plaintiff's servants, a total loss of his ship ensues, the defendant is not liable for such total loss of the ship, but is liable for the expense which would have been incurred in making good the partial damage. H.M.S. Flying Fish, 2 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 77; Br. & Lush. 436; 34 L. J., Adm. 113; 12 L. T. 619.

Cargo not Unloaded.]—Damage to cargo on board a ship run ashore after collision:—Held, not recoverable from the wrongdoing ship, because it might have been avoided by unloading the cargo sooner. The Eolides, 3 Hag. Adm. 367.

Subsequent Stranding—Remoteness.]—The defendants' ship, which was admitted to have been solely to blame, collided with the plaintiffs' barque, cutting off her starboard quarter, the captain of the barque losing his usual means of navigating his ship—namely, his steering compass, log-line and charts—and being left with an inefficient compass and chart. The captain, in order to save his ship, made for the Thames, and, without any want of care or skill in navigating his ship, mistook a certain lightship which he saw, and, the course of his ship being altered, she almost immediately afterwards stranded:—Held, that the defendants were liable for the ultimate loss of the plaintiffs' ship, and that the damages claimed in respect thereof were not too remote, as the stranding was the natural and reasonable result of the defendants' wrongful act, and was such a consequence as, in the ordinary course of things, would flow from their act. The City of Lincoln, 59 L. J., Adm. 1; 15 P. D. 15; 62 L. T. 49; 38 W. R. 345; 6 Asp. M. C. 475—C. A.

Where a ship, after receiving damage in a collision, goes ashore, the loss is primâ facie to be attributed to the collision. The Mellona, 3 W. Rob. 7.

Loss of Life.]—A brig, by the negligence of those on board her, came into collision with a barque in January, about 5 a.m. off the Lizard. In the collision the main rigging of the barque was carried away, and shortly afterwards her fore and main masts went by the board. Towards evening the wind increased in violence, and about two the next morning the barque was driven on shore, and some of her crew were drowned:—Held, that the loss of life was occasioned by the collision. The George and Richard, L. R. 3 A. & E. 466; 24 L. T. 717; 20 W. R. 246; 1 Asp. M. C. 50.

c. Salvage Expenses.

Salvage Expenses.]—Salvage expenses incurred, by reason of the collision, are recoverable as damages against the wrongdoer. The Pensher, Swabey, 211.

Costs of Action for Salvage.]—In an action for running down a vessel, it appeared that the plaintiff had been compelled to employ a steam-tug, the owners of which demanded 150*l.* for salvage, and commenced a suit in the admiralty court for its recovery, in which suit the plaintiff paid 20*l.* into court, and a decree was ultimately made, awarding 45*l.* and costs. The question of the liability of the defendant to pay these costs, and also the costs of the plaintiff in defending that suit, having been reserved upon these facts for the opinion of the court:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover them. Tindall v. Bell, 11 M. & W. 228; 12 L. J., Ex. 160.

The vessels "C." and "L." came into collision, in consequence of which salvage services were rendered to the "C." The salvors brought a suit, and recovered 50*l.* The "L." was condemned in a suit for damage brought by the "C.," and on reference to the registrar and merchants as to the amount, they struck out the costs of the salvage suit incurred by the "C.," because her owners had made no tender to the salvors:—Held, that such costs are, by the practice of the court, a proper item in the amount to be accorded in a suit for damage, and that there is no general principle laid down (in Tindall v. Bell, supra, which had been relied upon to induce the court to depart from its usual practice. The Legatus, Swabey, 168; 5 W. R. 154.

Commission on Bail—Salvage Action.]—Commission paid for bail in a salvage action will not be allowed as part of the damages recoverable by the salved vessel in an action of damage. The British Commerce, 53 L. J., Adm. 72; 9 P. D. 128; 51 L. T. 604; 33 W. R. 200; 5 Asp. M. C. 335.

Demurrage is allowed to the owners of a ship damaged by collision during the time that she has been necessarily delayed for the purpose of effecting the repairs rendered requisite by the collision, and of transacting business unquestionably connected with the collision. The City of Buenos Ayres, 25 L. T. 672; 1 Asp. M. C. 169.

As the master has, in some circumstances, the duty cast upon him of acting as agent for the cargo as well as the ship, the making a protest and obtaining the necessary official documents in a foreign port relating to the damage done to both ship and cargo is business unquestionably connected with the collision. Delay in their preparation caused by the dilatoriness of the foreign authorities, and by no default of the master, is chargeable to the collision. Ib.

The rate of demurrage allowed to steam vessels of the ordinary class, carrying cargo, is 6*d.* per ton on the gross tonnage, or 9*d.* per ton on the nett tonnage, per day. This estimate is arrived at by doubling the amount of the wages of the crew and of the cost of their provisions, so as to include both expenditure and loss of trade. Ib.

To entitle the owners of a ship injured in collision to damages for detention during repairs, it must be shewn that actual, not probable, loss of freight or earnings occurred. The Clarence, 3 W. Rob. 283.

Demurrage or payment for detention of the ship during repairs and loss of probable earnings; towage to London in consequence of collision; detention of Lascar crew of ship engaged in East India trade; all allowed as damages for collision. H.M.S. Inflexible, Swabey, 200.

In the case of a steamship that was one of a class sailing at fixed intervals, damages for demurrage was allowed during the time she was detained by the repairs beyond the date for her sailing in regular course. The Black Prince, Lush. 568.

The appellant ship being found to blame for a collision with the respondents' ship, the respondents claimed demurrage in respect of the time their ship was under repair. It appeared that during repair the respondents substituted another ship of the company in the place of the damaged ship, and that the company sustained no actual loss by demurrage:—Held, that the respondents were not entitled to demurrage, there being no actual loss. The Black Prince, supra, considered and approved. The City of Peking, 59 L. J., P. C. 88; 15 App. Cas. 438; 63 L. T. 722; 39 W. R. 177; 6 Asp. M. C. 572—P. C.

e. Loss of Freight, Profits, or Charterparty.

Hire of another Ship.]—Hire of another vessel in the place of the injured ship, which was engaged to perform a contract to bring lobsters, allowed. The Yorkshireman, 2 Hag. Adm. 30, n.

—— Increased Freight.]—The "K.," which was on a voyage under charter from Cardiff to Bombay with coals, was run into by the "B." shortly after leaving Penarth Docks. The "K.," which was considerably damaged, returned to Cardiff, where her cargo was taken out of her in order that she might be repaired. The owners of the cargo proposed that the coals, which were also damaged, should be sold and a fresh cargo shipped. The shipowner, however, refused to ship a fresh cargo except "on fresh terms as to freight, &c.," and the charterer, without inquiring what the fresh terms would be, reshipped the damaged cargo, which was carried to Bombay:—Held, that the shipowner, having a lien on the cargo for freight, was entitled to insist on the original cargo being reshipped if it was capable of being carried to its destination, and that the cargo-owner was not entitled to insist on its delivery without payment of freight:—Held, further, that in order to ascertain the amount to be paid by the owners of the wrongdoing ship, it was necessary to estimate what the increased freight would have been, before comparing the loss on the damaged cargo at Bombay with the loss which would have arisen on the sale of the cargo at Cardiff and shipping a fresh one. The Blenheim, 54 L. J., Adm. 81; 10 P. D. 167; 53 L. T. 916; 34 W. R. 154; 5 Asp. M. C. 522.

Measure of Damages as to Loss of Freight.]—Where the ship and freight are lost, the measure of damages, in respect of freight, is the amount of the freight, less the cost of earning it saved to the shipowner by the collision. The Canada, Lush. 585.

Loss of Market.]—A ship having been damaged by a collision with another ship, the owners of cargo on the former claimed damages from the owners of the latter ship. The cargo-owners claimed, inter alia, for damages in respect of the loss of market in consequence of a portion of the cargo having been delayed in its arrival at the port of destination:—Held, that loss of market was too remote a consequence to be considered as an element of damage, and that there was no difference in the principles which regulate the measure of damages in an action of collision, and an action for a breach of duty under a shipping contract. The Notting Hill, 53 L. J., Adm. 56; 9 P. D. 105; 51 L. T. 66; 32 W. R. 764; 5 Asp. M. C. 241—C. A.

Fishing Interrupted.]—A French fishing brig of 142 tons, employed in the cod fishery off the banks of Newfoundland, came into collision on the 6th of July, 1881, with an Italian barque, and in consequence of the collision was compelled to put into port for repairs, but her repairs having been completed, returned to the fishing ground before the close of the fishing season. In an action for damages instituted on behalf of the owners of the brig against the barque, the court pronounced the barque solely to blame for the collision, and referred the question of damages to the registrar and merchants. At the reference the plaintiffs claimed 1,200*l.* for demurrage of their vessel from the date of the collision to the 26th August, 1881, the date of her return to the fishing ground; and of the amount so claimed, the registrar, by his report, allowed the plaintiffs 880*l.* as the loss sustained by the interruption of their fishing. The defendants moved the court in objection to the report:—Held, that the motion must be dismissed. The Risoluto, 52 L. J., Adm. 46; 8 P. D. 109; 48 L. T. 909; 31 W. R. 657; 5 Asp. M. C. 93.

A claim for loss of fishing by a fishing boat whose fishing year was lost in the collision, upheld. The Gleaner, 38 L. T. 650; 3 Asp. M. C. 582.

Loss of Salvage.]—Loss of salvage, the injured vessel was engaged in earning, allowed as damages. The Betsey Caines, 2 Hag. Adm. 28.

Loss of Charterparty.]—In estimating the loss sustained by a ship in a collision, a charterparty entered into contingently on the arrival of the ship at a fixed date at another place should be taken into consideration, the amount recoverable being the freight that would have been earned under the charterparty, less any expenses which would naturally be incurred in the performance of it. The Star of India, 45 L. J., Adm. 102; 1 P. D. 466; 35 L. T. 407; 25 W. R. 377; 3 Asp. M. C. 261.

The "Star of India" and the "Cheviot" came into collision on the 1st of May, by which the latter vessel was unable to load cargo by the time stipulated for in the charterparty, which was accordingly cancelled. She was not sufficiently repaired to obtain another charterparty until the 4th of July. The collision was the fault of the "Star of India":—Held, first, that the owners of the "Cheviot" were entitled to some compensation for loss of the charterparty. Ib.

Held, secondly, that such compensation was not included in the usual allowance of fourpence per ton a day for demurrage. Ib.

Damages for loss of a beneficial charterparty may be recovered in a collision action. The Matchless, 10 Jur. 1017.

The vessel, "C.," which was proceeding in ballast to Montreal to load a cargo of grain for the United Kingdom, pursuant to charterparty, was injured by collision with another vessel, and compelled to put into port to repair. The repairs necessarily occupied so long a time that it was not reasonably possible for the "C." to have arrived at Montreal in time to fulfil her charter before the navigation of the St. Lawrence was stopped by ice for the winter. In these circumstances the owners of the "C." abandoned the charter, and it was found that they acted prudently in so doing:—Held, that the loss arising from the abandonment of the charter was a loss caused by the collision. The Consett, 5 P. D. 229; 5 Asp. M. C. 34, n.

Claim for Loan on Security for Freight.]—The master of the ship "C.," bound from Philadelphia to Antwerp, obtained at Philadelphia from M. a loan of money on freight upon the security of an instrument signed by him, by which it was stipulated that the loan should be repaid after arrival of the "C." at Antwerp or other intermediate port at which the voyage should end, and that if there should be no payment of freight the loan should not be paid back. The "C.," whilst on the course of her voyage to Antwerp, came into collision with another ship and sank, and her cargo was lost. The collision was occasioned by the negligence of those in charge of the other ship, and her owners instituted an action for limitation of their liability. In such action a sum of money was awarded out of the proceeds paid into court to the owners of the "C." for loss of freight. M. claimed a portion of this sum in respect of his loan:—Held, that his claim was well founded. Semble, where, in an action for limitation of liability a sum of money is awarded as compensation for loss of freight to the owners of a vessel run down by the plaintiff's ship, the holder of a bottomry bond on the freight of the vessel run down, is entitled to claim, in respect of the loan of bottomry, a portion of the sum awarded for loss of freight. The Empusa, 48 L. J., Adm. 36; 5 P. D. 6; 41 L. T. 383; 28 W. R. 263; 4 Asp. M. C. 185.

Loss of Profits—Agreement to provide Vessel for particular Voyage—Remoteness.]—A collision occurred between two vessels, the "A." and the "G.," shortly after a contract had been made by the owners of the "A." that upon the completion of her then voyage she should proceed upon another voyage. The repairs to the "A." made necessary by the collision could not be completed in time to enable her to fulfil the contract. In an action by the owners of the "A." against the owners of the "G.," the former claimed damages in respect of the loss of the earnings which would have been derived from the employment contracted for:—Held, that the damages claimed were not too remote, but flowed directly and naturally from the collision, and that such damages should be allowed as would represent the loss of ordinary and fair earnings of such a ship as the "A.," having regard to the fact that the contract had been entered into. The Argentino, The Gracie (Owners) v. The Argentino (Owners), 59 L. J., Adm. 17; 14 App. Cas. 519; 61 L. T. 706; 6 Asp. M. C. 433—H. L. (E.) Affirming 37 W. R. 210—C. A.

Advanced Freight—Security on Cargo.]—A ship, "A.," and her cargo, belonged to the same owners, and the plaintiffs advanced 1,000*l.* as a loan to such owners, and received as security the bill of lading, on which the master indorsed the receipt for 1,000*l.* as advanced freight, and also a policy of insurance on advanced freight. Ship "A." was lost through a collision with the defendant's vessel, whose negligence was admitted. It was proved that the difference between the value of the cargo at the port of destination and at the port of loading would have considerably exceeded 1,000*l.* In an action by the holders of the bill of lading for 1,000*l.* against the defendant's ship:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the sum, though it was not, strictly speaking, advanced freight, but a prospective increase in the value of the cargo, and that the insurers were subrogated to the rights of the plaintiffs. The Thyatira, 52 L. J., Adm. 85; 8 P. D. 155; 49 L. T. 406; 32 W. R. 276; 5 Asp. M. C. 147.

Freight in Captain's hands.]—Freight in the captain's hands, lost in the collision, allowed as damages. The Cumberland, 5 L. T. 496.

Cost of Raising Wreck—Public Body.]—A public body, with statutory public duties to discharge and power to levy rates for the purpose of discharging those duties, is entitled, though it is not a profit-earning body, to substantial damages in respect of the loss of the use of property injured by the negligence of another; and for the recovery of such damages it is not necessary to prove direct pecuniary loss. The Greta Holme, 66 L. J., Adm. 166; [1897] A. C. 596; 77 L. T. 23; 8 Asp. M. C. 317—C. A.

A dredger, the property of the Mersey docks and harbour board, the conservancy authority of the port of Liverpool, was sunk by the negligence of those in charge of the "Greta Holme." The wreck was raised, and in addition to other items the board claimed 1,500*l.* damages for the loss of the use of the dredger during the fifteen weeks she was under repair. There was evidence that the dredger might have been let at the rate of 100*l.* a week, and that during its disablement the work of deepening the river had been retarded:—Held (Lord Morris dissenting), that the board were entitled to substantial damages, which the house of lords assessed at 500*l.* Ib.

6. Division of Loss.

Statement of the Rule.] — Statement of admiralty law as to the four cases of collision, by fault of one ship, both ships, or neither ship, and the liability for damages in each case. Loss is divided where both ships in fault. The Lord Melville, cited, 2 Shaw's Sc. App. 395. The Woodrop, 2 Dods. 83.

Its Justice questioned.]—The justice of the rule questioned. See per Denman, C.J., De Vaux v. Salvador, 4 A. & E. 420; 6 N. & M. 713; 5 L. J., K. B. 134. Per Selborne, C., The Khedive, infra.

Reason for the Rule.]—The reason for the rule is to avoid interminable litigation. See per Lord Blackburn, The Khedive, infra.

Equal Division—One Ship more in Fault than the Other.]—Rule of equal division of loss applied. The Petersfield and The Judith Randolph, cited in Hay v. Le Neve, 2 Shaw's Sc. App. 395.

The rule of admiralty is that if there is blame causing the accident on both sides, they are to divide the loss equally . . . however small the blame may be on one side. Per Lord Blackburn, The Margaret, Cayzer v. Carron Co., 54 L. J., Adm. 18; 9 App. Cas. 873, 881; 52 L. T. 361; 33 W. R. 281; 5 Asp. M. C. 371—H. L. (E.) Hay v. Le Neve, supra. The Woodrop, supra.

Principle of the Rule.]—The principle of the rule is equality of participation in a loss arising from a common fault. See per Lord Stowell, The Woodrop, supra. Cf. per Selborne, C., The Khedive, infra.

The Common Fault.]—May be partly on shore and partly afloat; as where one ship was negligently launched and the other negligently placed in her way. The United States, 12 L. T. 33.

The common fault need not conduce to the collision if it conduces to the damage; as where one ship was negligently navigated and the other holed her with her anchor, which was a cock-bill. The Margaret, 50 L. J., Adm. 67; 6 P. D. 76; 44 L. T. 291; 29 W. R. 533; 4 Asp. M. C. 375—C. A.

Whilst a barge was by night lying astern of a steamship, in a dock, the latter moved her propeller and cut a hole in the barge. It appeared that there was no one on board the barge at the time of the accident. In a collision action:—Held, that although the steamer was to blame, the barge was also to blame for not having any one on board of her, as, had there been, the collision might have been avoided, and in any event the barge might have been beached before she sank; the plaintiffs therefore could only recover half their damages. The Scotia, 63 L. T. 324; 6 Asp. M. C. 541.

Difficulty of applying Common Law Definition of Negligence.]—See The Monte Rosa, 62 L. J., Adm. 20; [1893] P. 23; 68 L. T. 299; 41 W. R. 304; 7 Asp. M. C. 326.

Fault of not standing by.]—The rule formerly did not apply where one ship was in fault for the collision and the other for not standing by to assist. The Celt, 3 Hag. Adm. 321. But see, as to present law, 57 & 58 Vict. c. 60, s. 422.

Both or one Ship Foreign.]—The rule applies where one or both ships are foreign. The North American and The Tecla Carmen, Swabey, 358; Lush. 79. Chartered Mercantile Bank of India v. Netherlands India Steam Navigation Co., 52 L. J., Q. B. 220; 10 Q. B. D. 521; 48 L. T. 546; 31 W. R. 445; 5 Asp. M. C. 65; 47 J. P. 260—C. A. The Washington, 5 Jur. 1067. The Monarch, 1 W. Rob. 21. The Khedive, Stoomvaart Maatschappy Nederland v. Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Co., 52 L. J., Adm. 1; 7 App. Cas. 795; 47 L. T. 198; 31 W. R. 249; 5 Asp. M. C. 360, 567. The Seringapatam, 3 W. Rob. 38. Chapman v. Royal Netherlands Steam Navigation Co., 49 L. J., Ch. 449; 4 P. D. 157; 40 L. T. 433; 27 W. R. 554; 4 Asp. M. C. 107—C. A.

Cargo-owner suing Owner of carrying Ship.]—Rule of division of loss where both ships in fault does not apply to an action by the owner of cargo against the owner of the carrying ship upon the contract to carry. The Bushire, 52 L. T. 740; 5 Asp. M. C. 416.

The Rule applied.]—Both vessels being in fault for a collision, a moiety of the damage suffered by each pronounced for. The Immaganda Sara Clasina, Vaux v. Sheffer, 8 Moore, P. C. 75. The Independence, 14 Moore, P. C. 103; Lush. 270; 4 L. T. 503; 9 W. R. 582.

Insurance—Running Down Clause.]—Liability of underwriters where both ships in fault. See London Steamship Association v. Grampian Steamship Co., post, col. 1084.

Fault of one Ship that of her Compulsory Pilot.]—The "A." and the "H." were in collision by the fault of the crew of the "A." and the compulsory pilot of the "H.":—Held, that the rule of division of loss applied; but that the "A." owners could recover 4,000*l.* (half her loss being 8,000*l.*), and not only 2,500*l.*, the balance between 4,000*l.* and 1,500*l.* (half the loss of the "A."). The Hector, 52 L. J., Adm. 51; 8 P. D. 218; 48 L. T. 890; 31 W. R. 881; 5 Asp. M. C. 101—C. A. See also The Demetrius, 41 L. J., Adm. 69; L. R. 3 A. & E. 523; 26 L. T 329; 20 W. R. 761; 1 Asp. M. C. 251.

Both Ships in Fault by Agreement of Shipowners — Cargo Owners not bound by Agreement.]—An agreement between the shipowners that both ships were in fault does not prevent the owner of cargo on board one ship from asserting in an action by the owner of the other ship to limit his liability that the last-mentioned ship was alone in fault. The Karo, 57 L. J., Adm. 8; 13 P. D. 24; 58 L. T. 188; 6 Asp. M. C. 245.

Collision between Ships of same Owners—Rights of Cargo Owners.]—Where a collision occurred between ships belonging to the same owners, and the shipowner was protected by bill of lading against collision, and also against negligence of those navigating the carrying ship:—Held, that he was liable in tort for the negligence of those on board the other ship to the extent of half the loss of the cargo owner; and that he was protected by the bill of lading from further liability. Chartered Mercantile Bank of India v. Netherlands India Steam Navigation Co., 52 L. J., Q. B. 220; 10 Q. B. D. 521; 48 L. T. 546; 31 W. R. 445; 47 J. P. 260; 5 Asp. M. C. 65—C. A.

Collision between Tug and Third Ship — Liability of Owners of Tug and Tow.] — A tug with a ship in tow struck and injured a third ship, the ship in tow not touching her. All three vessels were found to blame for proceeding at an improper speed:—Held, that the owners of the tug and of the tow were jointly and severally liable to the owners of the third vessel for one-half of the damage that vessel had sustained, less one-half of the tug's damage:—Held, also, that the total liability of tug and tow was not limited to the statutory amount on the tonnage of the tug. The Englishman and The Australia, 63 L. J., Adm. 133; [1894] P. 239; 6 R. 743; 70 L. T. 846; 43 W. R. 62; 7 Asp. M. C. 603.

Cargo Owner can recover only Half his Loss—Both Ships in Fault.]—In admiralty the owner of cargo on board one of two ships both of which are in fault for the collision could recover only half his loss. The Milan, Lush. 388; 31 L. J., Adm. 105; 5 L. T. 590. But see The Bernina, 57 L. J., Adm. 65; 13 App. Cas. 1; 58 L. T. 423; 36 W. R. 870; 6 Asp. M. C. 257; 52 J. P. 212—H. L. (E.)

One Ship deemed in Fault for Infringement of Regulations.] — The rule of division of loss applies where fault is presumed under 36 & 37 Vict. c. 85, s. 17, by reason of infringement of the regulations. The Khedive, supra; Chartered Mercantile Bank of India v. Netherlands India Steam Navigation Co., supra; The Hochung and The Lapwing, 51 L. J., P. C. 92; 7 App. Cas. 512; 47 L. T. 455; 31 W. R. 303; 5 Asp. M. C. 39—P. C.

Action under Lord Campbell's Act.] — The rule does not apply to actions under Lord Campbell's Act. The Bernina, Mills v. Armstrong, supra.

Division of Loss where Liability Limited.]—See The Khedive, Stoomvaart Maatschappy Nederland v. Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Co., infra, col. 743. See also Chapman v. Royal Netherlands Steam Navigation Co., infra, col. 743. Overruling The Khedive, supra.

7. Limitation of Liability.

a. By General Law, no Limitation.

Liability Unlimited by General Law.]—By the maritime law the shipowner was liable to the full extent of damage done by the negligence of his servants. The Wild Ranger, Lush. 553; 32 L. J., Adm. 49; 7 L. T. 724. See also The Dundee, 1 Hag. Adm. 109, 120; The Aline, 1 W. Rob. 111; The Volant, 1 W. Rob. 283; The Mellona, 3 W. Rob. 16, 20; Gale v. Laurie, 5 B. & C. 156, 164; 7 D. & R. 711; 4 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 149; The Khedive, 7 App. Cas. 795, 814; infra, col. 743.

b. Under 53 Geo. 3, c. 159.

Under 53 Geo. 3, c. 159, the owners of a ship that sank after wrongfully damaging another were not exempt from liability. Brown v. Wilkinson, 15 M. & W. 391; 16 L. J., Ex. 34.

The harpoons and fishing gear of a whaler went to augment the sum to which shipowners' liability was limited by 53 Geo. 3, c. 159. Gale v. Laurie, 5 B. & C. 157; 7 D. & R. 711; 4 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 149. S. P., The Dundee, 1 Hag. Adm. 109.

The shipowner was liable for costs of a collision suit beyond the value of his ship. Rayne, Ex parte, 1 G. & D. 374; 10 L. J., Q. B. 354; 1 Q. B. 982. S. P., The Dundee, 2 Hag. Adm. 137.

A ship having been wrongfully sold by the master so that the voyage was not completed, the liability of the shipowner was held to be the value of the ship when sold, together with the freight she would have earned. Cannan v. Meaburn, 1 Bing. 465; 8 Moore, 127; 2 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 60.

The liability of shipowners for collision was the value of the ship before, not after, collision. The Mary Caroline, 3 W. Rob. 101.

As to the form and date of affidavits required to be filed by the above act, see Walker v. Fletcher, 1 Ph. 115; 12 Sim. 420; 11 L. J., Ch. 103; 6 Jur. 4.

The value of the ship to which by the above act and by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 104, the shipowner's liability is limited is the price at which she could be sold; and that price must be ascertained, not by making deductions from her cost price, proportioned to her age, but by a valuation and appraisement, and such value must be ascertained as at the time of the accident. Dobree v. Schreiber, 2 Myl. & Cr. 489. Affirming 6 Sim. 291.

As to the mode of calculating the ship's value, prepaid freight, and the liability, where the master, one of the part owners, caused the loss. See Wilson v. Dickson, 2 B. & Ald. 2; 20 R. R. 331.

c. Under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104.

When damage is done by a ship both to persons and goods, the ship is to be estimated at not less than 15*l.* per ton, for the purpose of adjusting the compensation to be paid to claimants in respect of loss of life or personal injury. Nixon v. Roberts, 1 J. & H. 739; 30 L. J., Ch. 844; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 820; 4 L. T. 679; 9 W. R. 890.

But where all demands in respect of personal injury or loss of life have been settled, and the only claimants against the ship are the owners of property which has been damaged, the ship is not to be estimated at more than her actual value, notwithstanding the fact that loss of life or personal injury has occurred. Ib.

Where claimants of both kinds appear, the owners of property are entitled to have the compensation for loss of life and personal injury marshalled, so as to throw it primarily on the excess (if any) of the value of 15*l.* per ton over the actual value of the ship. Ib.

The 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, did not repeal, but only modified, the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93 (Lord Campbell's Act), so far as the latter created liability for the loss of life by collision at sea. Glaholm v. Barker, 35 L. J., Ch. 259; L. R. 1 Ch. 223; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 82; 13 L. T. 653; 14 W. R. 296—C. A.

By the joint operation of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93, and the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 54, the liability of the owner of a sailing vessel for loss of life occasioned by collision with another vessel at sea is limited to 15*l.* per ton of the registered tonnage of his vessel. Ib.

The liability of a shipowner in respect of loss of life to the seamen of a vessel run down by his ship is not limited to 30*l.* for damages payable in each case of death; and this rule applies to all cases, whether the board of trade does or does not institute proceedings in respect of such loss of life. Glaholm v. Barker, 35 L. J., Ch. 657; L. R. 2 Eq. 598; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 764; 14 L. T. 880; 14 W. R. 1006.

The amount of damages being paid by order of the court into the registry, the party finally adjudged to receive the same was not allowed interest from the date of such payment into court. The North American and the Teela Carmen, Lush. 79; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 659.

The owners of a ship causing a collision are liable, in chancery as well as in admiralty, to pay interest upon the sum payable as damages, although such damages may amount to the maximum sum limited by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 54, and if the ship injured is in ballast at the time of the accident, such interest will be calculated from the date of the collision. Straker v. Hartland, 2 H. & M. 570; 34 L. J., Ch. 122; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1143; 11 L. T. 622.

Where a sum is awarded as damages for collision, the liability to have paid such sum dates from the time at which the loss is considered to have arisen, and the sum awarded bears interest from that date. The Amalia, 34 L. J., Adm. 21; 13 W. R. 111; 5 N. R. 164, n.

The value of a ship within the meaning of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 504, was what she would have fetched if sold immediately before the collision, without deduction in respect of costs of sale. Leycester v. Logan, 4 K. & J. 725; 6 W. R. 849. S. P., African Steamship Co. v. Swanzy, 2 K. & J. 660; 25 L. J., Ch. 870; 4 W. R. 210, 692; The Europa, Br. & Lush. 210; 9 L. T. 781.

The provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), s. 503, limiting shipowners' liability, did not apply to foreign ships. General Iron Screw Collier Co. v. Schurmanns, 29 L. J., Ch. 877; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 883; 8 W. R. 732. S. P., The Wild Ranger, infra, col. 747; Cope v. Doherty, 2 De G. & J. 614; 27 L. J., Ch. 600; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 699; 6 W. R. 695.

In a bill filed under the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, to stay actions in other courts for damages occasioned by a collision with the plaintiff's ship, and to have the alleged damage ascertained, the plaintiff must aver that he has incurred liability. Hill v. Audus, 1 K. & J. 263; 3 Eq. R. 422; 24 L. J., Ch. 229; 3 W. R. 230; aliter Miller v. Powell, 2 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 976. And see The Amalia, Br. & Lush. 151; The Sisters, infra, col. 749.

Form of order made on motion for injunction in a suit by shipowner to restrain actions for damage occasioned by loss of the ship and cargo under the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, part 9. African Steamship Co., In re, 1 K. & J. 326; 3 W. R. 316.

In a suit instituted by a shipowner, under the 514th section of the Merchant Shipping Act, to determine the amount of his liability in respect of the losses there mentioned, to have such amount distributed ratably amongst the several claimants, and to stop actions at law in relation to the same subject-matter, there being no adverse litigation amongst the claimants themselves, nor any other special circumstance occasioning an increase of costs, and over which the plaintiff has no control, the shipowner, as the party eased by the proceedings, must pay all the costs of all claimants whose claims are established, including the costs of actions at law commenced by any of such claimants, but stayed by injunction in the suit. African Steamship Co. v. Swanzy, supra.

In such a suit, the court has no power to give interest upon money ordered to be paid into court. Ib.

The provisions of the 504th section of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, limiting the liability of a shipowner to the value of his ship and freight, and the provisions of the 514th section, giving the court of chancery jurisdiction to stop actions and suits pending in any other court in relation to the same subject-matter, are applicable notwithstanding the circumstance that the adverse claimant has obtained a definitive sentence or judgment of the court of admiralty condemning the ship; and the utmost to which the latter is entitled under such a judgment, in respect of the loss he has sustained, is to share ratably with the other claimants in the value of the ship and freight. Leycester v. Logan, 3 K. & J. 446; 26 L. J., Ch. 306; 5 W. R. 334.

d. Under subsequent Acts, and Generally.

To what Damages Limitation extends—Loss of Goods—Delay.]—A railway company, known to be also shipowners, contracted to carry passengers and goods from London to Guernsey. The passengers and goods were taken by railway from London to Southampton, and were there put on board a ship which belonged to the company. The ship, on her way to Guernsey, came into collision with another ship and sank with several of the passengers and all the goods. Actions were brought against the company by surviving passengers for loss of luggage and for delay, by shippers of goods for loss of goods, and by the administrators of lost passengers for damages:—Held, that, as to all the damages (except those for delay), the liability of the company was, by the Merchant Shipping Acts, limited to the amount of 15*l.* per ton on the tonnage of the ship; that the amount so payable should be distributed by the court of chancery, and that all the actions against the railway company (except those for delay) should be restrained. The Andalusian, 47 L. J., Adm. 65; 3 P. D. 182; 39 L. T. 204; 27 W. R. 172; 4 Asp. M. C. 22.

Two Vessels Injured by same Act.]—By reason of the improper navigation of a steamship she ran into and damaged a ship, and immediately afterwards ran into and sank a steam-tug which was near the ship, and about to take the ship in tow. In a suit for limitation of liability, instituted on behalf of the owner of the steamship, it was held that the whole of the damage so caused by such improper navigation as aforesaid to the ship and steam-tug and goods on board the ship and steam-tug was caused substantially at the same time and on the same occasion, and that the plaintiff, who was entitled to have his liability limited according to s. 54 of the Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act, 1862, was entitled to have his liability in respect of the whole of such damage limited to an amount not exceeding 8*l.* per ton for each ton of his steamship's tonnage. The Rajah, 41 L. J., Adm. 97; L. R. 3 A. & E. 539; 27 L. T. 102; 21 W. R. 14.

Damage "arising on distinct occasions."]—By improper navigation the "S." in starboarding across the bows of the "A.," caused the "A." to come into collision with the "M.," and by reason of the "S." continuing under a starboard helm, she came into collision with the "D." In an action by the "D." against the "S.," the latter was found to blame, and her owners obtained a decree limiting their liability for damage. The owners of the "A." commenced an action against the "S." for the damage caused by the collision between the "A." and the "M.:" the owners of the "S." contended that the only remedy of the "A." was against the fund paid into court under the decree limiting their liability:—Held, that the onus was on the "S." to shew that it was the same act of improper navigation; that the evidence established that there was time and opportunity to have corrected the starboarding, and by the use of ordinary care and skill to have avoided the collision with the "D.," and that therefore the damage to the "D." was caused on a "distinct occasion" from the starboarding across the bows of the "A.," and that the "S." was liable to the "A." to the same extent as if no other damage had arisen. The Schwan, The Albano, [1892] P. 419; 69 L. T. 34; 7 Asp. M. C. 347—C. A.

—— Collision with Two Ships.]—Where a ship comes into collision with two vessels one after the other, there being a short interval between the two collisions, the shipowner will be entitled to limit his liability to 8*l.* per ton (there being no loss of life) if the first collision is the substantial cause of the second, and there is no separate act of negligence on the part of those in charge of the plaintiff's ship in respect of the second collision. The Creadon, 54 L. T. 880; 5 Asp. M. C. 585.

Settled Claims—Whether to be taken as subsisting.]—The owner of the wrongdoing ship settled out of court his liability to the owners of the other ship, and then petitioned to limit his liability. The other claimants, owners of cargo in the innocent ship, claimed to be entitled to the whole amount of the statutory liability, on the ground that the claim of the owner of the injured ship was no longer subsisting:—Held, that for the purpose of calculating the amount of the petitioner's liability the settled claim must be taken as subsisting. Rankine v. Raschen, 4 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 725.

Interest on Statutory Amount.]—The owners of a ship, though their liability to damages in respect of the loss of goods owing to a collision is confined, by the Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act, 1862, s. 54, to an aggregate amount not exceeding 8*l.* per ton of the ship's tonnage, are liable to pay interest on that amount from the date of the collision. Smith v. Kirby, 1 Q. B. D. 131; 24 W. R. 207; and see cases, col. 729.

The owners of a ship claiming in the court of admiralty to have their liability limited, under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 54, in respect of damages occasioned by collision, to an aggregate amount not exceeding 8*l.* for each ton of the ship's tonnage, are liable to pay interest on such aggregate amount from the date of the collision. The Northumbria, 39 L. J., Adm. 3; L. R. 3 A. & E. 6; 21 L. T. 681; 18 W. R. 188.

Under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, interest and costs payable in addition to statutory amount. African Steamship Co. v. Swanzy, supra, col. 740.

Claims in respect of Loss of Life.]—In actions for limitation of liability for a collision where loss of life has occurred, the wrongdoer is liable, in addition to the 7*l.* per ton payable in respect of such loss of life, to pay interest thereon from the date of the collision until payment into court. The Crathie, 66 L. J., Adm. 93; [1897] P. 178; 76 L. T. 534; 45 W. R. 631.

Compulsory Pilotage.]—Sect. 54 of the Merchant Shipping Amendment Act, 1862, which limits the liability of a shipowner to a certain amount per ton, does not apply to a case where two ships are to blame for a collision, and where the owners of one ship are relieved from all liability by the owners of the other, under s. 388 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, on the ground that the damage done to the other ship was caused by the fault of a compulsory pilot; but under the admiralty rules, inasmuch as both ships are to blame, the owners of the ship so relieved from liability are only entitled to be paid by the owners of the other ship a moiety of the damage caused to their ship. The Hector, 52 L. J., Adm. 51; 8 P. D. 218; 48 L. T. 890; 31 W. R. 881; 5 Asp. M. C. 101—C. A.

Mode of Distribution—Rule of Division of Loss.]—Two ships, "V." and "K.," having come into collision, the owners of the "V." brought an action in rem in the admiralty division against the owners of the "K.," who counter-claimed, and both ships were held to blame. The owners of the "K." brought an action in the admiralty division to limit their liability under the Merchant Shipping Amendment Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 63), s. 54, and paid the amount of their liability into court. The damage to the "V." was greater than that to the "K.," and the fund in court was not sufficient to satisfy all the claims for which the owners of the "K." were answerable in damages:—Held (Lord Bramwell doubting), that the owners of the "V." were entitled to prove against the fund for a moiety of their damage, less a moiety of the damage sustained by the "K.," and to be paid in respect of the balance due to them after such deduction pari passu with the other claimants out of such fund. Chapman v. Royal Netherlands Steam Navigation Co. (infra) overruled. The Khedive, Stoomvaart Maatschappy Nederland v. P. & O. Steam Navigation Co., 52 L. J., Adm. 1; 7 App. Cas. 795; 47 L. T. 198; 31 W. R. 249; 4 Asp. M. C. 567—H. L. (E.)

In an action of collision in the admiralty division, where both ships have been injured and both ships have been held to blame, and have accordingly been condemned to pay the moiety of each other's damage, and either of the parties to the collision has applied to have his liability limited under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1862, s. 54, no set-off is allowed between the two amounts for which they are liable in damages until the limitation of liability imposed by that statute has been applied. The "S." and "V." came into collision, both ships were damaged, but the "V." was sunk with her cargo and lost. In an action by the owners of the "V.," and counter-claim by the owners of the "S.," both ships were held to blame, and condemned to pay the moiety of each other's damage. Under this judgment the damage payable by the "S." was 14,000*l.*, and that payable by the "V." was 2,000*l.* The owners of the "S." then brought an action in the chancery division for limitation of their liability, and paid into court 5,212*l.*, the aggregate amount of 8*l.* a ton on her registered tonnage:—Held (Brett, L.J., dissenting), that the owners of the "V." must prove for 14,000*l.* against the fund in court, and must pay the 2,000*l.* in full to the owners of the "S." Chapman v. Royal Netherlands Steam Navigation Co., 48 L. J., Ch. 449; 4 P. D. 157; 40 L. T. 433; 27 W. R. 554; 4 Asp. M. C. 107—C. A.

Mode of Distribution.]—Where the damage sustained by all the claimants exceeds in the aggregate the whole amount for which the shipowner is liable (viz. at the rate of 15*l.* per registered ton of his ship), the fund must be distributed ratably amongst all the claimants in proportion to the damages sustained by them respectively; but where the whole amount of damages is less than the whole amount for which the shipowner is liable, the amount of damages sustained by each claimant is to be paid in full. Glaholm v. Barker, 35 L. J., Ch. 657; L. R. 2 Eq. 598; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 764; 14 L. T. 880; 14 W. R. 1006. See Leycester v. Logan, infra, col. 745.

"Improper Navigation."]—The words "improper navigation" in 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 54, sub-s. 4, are not to be restricted to the negligent navigation of a vessel by her master and crew, for the statute includes all damage wrongfully done by a ship to another whilst it is being navigated where the wrongful action is due to the negligence of a person for whom the owner is responsible. Therefore, when a vessel, owing to the negligence of a person on shore in overlooking the machinery, steered so badly that she came into collision with another vessel, in an action for limitation of liability the court gave a decree in her favour on the ground that the statute applied to such a case. The Warkworth, 53 L. J., Adm. 65; 9 P. D. 145; 51 L. T. 558; 33 W. R. 112; 5 Asp. M. C. 326—C. A.

Expenses of Salvage of Cargo.]—The payment into court of 8*l.* a ton under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 54, does not place the shipowner in the position of a person who has not done wrong. The owner of a ship sunk by a collision in the Thames admitted it to be his fault, and paid into court 8*l.* a ton in a suit to limit his liability. The Thames conservators having powers under the Removal of Wrecks Act, 1877, and the Thames conservancy acts, raised the ship and delivered the ship and cargo to the owner, he undertaking to pay the expenses of raising. Part of the cargo was some wool, which was damaged by being sunk:—Held, that the shipowner was bound to deliver the wool to the owner of the wool without claiming from him by way of contribution to salvage any part of the expenses of raising the ship and cargo. The Ettrick, Prehn v. Bailey, 6 P. D. 127; 45 L. T. 399; 4 Asp. M. C. 465—C. A. Affirming 50 L. J., Adm. 65.

Parties—Master—Part Owner.]—In a cause of limitation of liability, one of the owners of the vessel sued, being master as well as part owner, but not having been on deck at the time of the collision:—Held, that there was no obligation upon the master to be upon deck; that the fact of the master being part owner was no reason for charging the other owners with blame; and that there was no evidence to shew that the collision took place by the fault or with the privity of the master. The Obey, L. R. 1 A. & E. 102; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 817.

The ground of forfeiture of the statutory exemption from unlimited liability is personal blame; the fault of one owner does not, therefore, involve in its consequences a forfeiture by his co-owners. The Spirit of the Ocean, 34 L. J., Adm. 74; 12 L. T. 239.

The owners of a ship, who are entitled to the privilege of limited liability, are not necessarily those whose names appear upon the ship's register. Ib.

A master, also part owner of a ship, sold his shares, but before the transfer had been registered the ship, through his default, came into collision with and damaged another vessel:—Held, that the master was not an owner so as to affect the privilege of limited liability. Ib.

In an action by shipowners to limit their liability in respect of a collision with their vessel, and where it appears that the master, who was on board at the time of the collision, was a part owner, and the collision occurred without the negligence or privity of the remainder of the owners, they have a right to have their liability limited, with a reservation of any right of action there may be against the master personally in respect of his negligence. The Cricket, The Endeavour, 48 L. T. 535; 5 Asp. M. C. 53.

Where in a collision suit it was sought to make the part owner personally liable beyond the amount to which the shipowner's liability was limited by statute upon the ground that he was in charge of the vessel at the time of collision:—Held, that to fix him with such liability he must be sued personally as master in the first instance. The Volant, 1 W. Rob. 383.

Monition against master who was part owner of a ship that had negligently damaged another in collision, the proceeds of the wrongdoing ship and her freight being insufficient to satisfy the damages; the liability of the master, by whose fault the collision occurred, not being limited by the statute then in force. The Triune, 3 Hag. Adm. 114.

Damage Claimants Paid Pari Passu.]—After a judgment for limitation of liability, the injured party is entitled, after payment out of the fund of the costs of a collision action in which he has obtained judgment, to share the residue of the fund ratably with other claimants for damage. Leycester v. Logan, 3 K. & J. 446; 26 L. J., Ch. 306; 5 W. R. 334. S. P., Glaholm v. Barker, supra, col. 743.

Life Claimants and Damage Claimants—Priorities.]—Claimants in respect of loss of life or personal injury are entitled to the 7*l.* per ton, and other claimants to the 8*l.* per ton, subject as to the latter to the right of the former claimants to have recourse ratably to the 8*l.* per ton. Nixon v. Roberts, 1 J. & H. 739; 30 L. J., Ch. 844; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 820; 4 L. T. 679; 9 W. R. 870 (a decision on 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 504).

The plaintiffs in an action to limit their liability paid into court the sum of 7,862*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.*, being the amount of their statutory liability at the rate of 15*l.* per ton. The amount so paid into court being insufficient to satisfy in full claims against the plaintiffs in respect of loss of life and loss of goods, the registrar, by his report, found that the claimants in respect of loss of life were entitled to be paid out of the sum in court an amount equal to 7*l.* per ton, and that they and the claimants in respect of loss of goods should rank pari passu against the balance representing 8*l.* per ton. On objection to the report:—Held, that the report was right, as the court had power to marshal the assets, and that the claimants in respect of loss of goods had no right in priority to the claimants in respect of loss of life against the sum representing 8*l.* per ton. The Victoria, 57 L. J., Adm. 103; 13 P. D. 125; 59 L. T. 728; 37 W. R. 62; 6 Asp. M. C. 335.

Claims for Loss of Life Settled.]—In an action for limitation of liability, where it appeared that all the claims in respect of loss of life had been settled, the court ordered that upon payment in of 8*l.* per ton all persons having any claim either in respect of loss of life or damage to ship, goods, or merchandise, should be restrained from bringing any action in respect of the collision. The Foscolino, 52 L. T. 866; 5 Asp. M. C. 420.

Life Claims—Payment into Court.]—See The Dione, infra, col. 752.

Sale of Ship by Foreign Court—Receipt of Proceeds—Right to claim against Fund in Court.]—Where in the limitation proceedings the fund paid into court in respect of loss of ship, goods, &c., amounts to the full 8*l.* per ton of the ship's tonnage, persons who have taken proceedings in respect of those matters in a foreign court and received the proceeds of the sale of the wrongdoer's ship in those proceedings, but whose claims have not been thereby satisfied, are not debarred from claiming against the fund in court, but will be compelled to give credit for any sums they have received in the proceedings abroad. The Crathie, 66 L. J., Adm. 93; [1897] P. 178; 76 L. T. 534; 45 W. R. 631.

Yacht Race—Contract to pay "all damages."]—Where a person enters into a contract embodied in rules by which he agrees to be liable for "all damages" arising from a breach of those rules, he cannot claim the benefit of a statutory limitation of liability. In a yacht race sailed subject to rules by which the owner of any yacht infringing a rule was to be "liable for all damages arising therefrom," the appellant's yacht, by reason of a breach of the rules, ran down and sank the respondent's yacht:—Held, that the appellant's liability was not limited by s. 54 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1862, to 8*l.* per ton, but that he must make good the whole value of the yacht. The Satanita, 66 L. J., Adm. 1; [1897] A. C. 59; 75 L. T. 337; 8 Asp. M. C. 190—H. L. (E.)

Vessel not a Registered British Ship—Vessel newly Launched.]—A newly-built vessel, exceeding fifteen tons burden, on being launched, ran into and damaged a passing ship. The owners of the damaged ship thereupon instituted an action against the newly-built vessel to recover for the damage done to their ship, and the court pronounced the vessel proceeded against solely to blame for the collision. Afterwards an action of limitation of liability was instituted by the owner of the newly-built vessel, a natural-born subject, who therein claimed a declaration that he was entitled to a limitation of liability in respect of the damage occasioned by the collision. At the hearing of the action it appeared that the newly-built vessel, though registered as a British ship at the time of the institution of the action, was not so registered at the time of the collision:—Held, that the vessel was not a registered British ship when the collision occurred, and that the owner was not entitled to have his liability limited. The Andalusian, 47 L. J., Adm. 65; 3 P. D. 182; 39 L. T. 204; 27 W. R. 172; 4 Asp. M. C. 22.

British Owners of a Dutch Ship.]—See The Brinio, infra, col. 747.

When Ship Sunk.]—The "Normandy" and "Mary" came into collision, and the "Normandy" was sunk. Cross causes of damages were instituted, but had not been heard, nor the liability for the collision determined; but the owners of the "Normandy" paid into court the amount of their liability, as limited by statute:—Held, first, that the court had jurisdiction in a suit for limitation of liability, even though the "Normandy" had been sunk, and therefore could not be arrested. The Normandy, 39 L. J., Adm. 48; L. R. 3 A. & E. 152; 23 L. T. 631; 18 W. R. 903.

Railway Company carrying by Sea.]—A railway company carrying passengers and goods partly by railway and partly by its own ships is entitled to the limitation on the liability of shipowners imposed by the merchant shipping acts. *L. & S.-W. British and Foreign Vessels.]—Collision in the Mediterranean Sea, beyond British jurisdiction, between an English and a Belgian vessel, whereby the latter with her cargo was sunk:—Held, that the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 54, with respect to limited liability, applied equally to British and foreign vessels. The Amalia, 1 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 471 ; Br. & Lush. 151 ; 2 N. R. 533 ; 32 L. J., Adm. 191 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1111 ; 8 L. T. 805 ; 12 W. R. 24.

The 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, ss. 504, 514, did not apply to a collision on the high seas between foreign ships of which the owners were foreigners. Cope v. Doherty, 2 De G. & J. 614 ; 27 L. e. Measurement of Tonnage.

Crew Spaces.]—The owners of a German steam vessel instituted an action under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1862, s. 54, to limit their liability for damages occasioned by a collision. The vessel had three decks, and her crew was berthed below the spar deck. By an order in council, dated the 26th June, 1873, made under s. 60, it was directed that German steamships measured after the 1st of January, 1873, should be deemed to be of the tonnage mentioned in their registers in the same manner, and to the same extent, as the tonnage denoted in the certificate of registry of British ships was deemed to be their tonnage. In the register of this ship the crew space was deducted :—Held, that the order in council of the 26th of June, 1873, did not make the certificate of registry conclusive evidence of the tonnage or of the propriety of deducting the space solely appropriated for berthing the crew. The Franconia, 3 P. D. 164 ; 39 L. T. 57 ; 27 W. R. 128 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 1—C. A.

Held, also, that under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, s. 21, sub-s. 4, a closed-in space, solely appropriated to the berthing of the crew, is to be excepted in estimating the tonnage only when it is on the upper deck, and not when it is between the spar deck and the tonnage deck. Ib.

Held, also, that the crew space cannot in the case of a foreign, any more than of a British, ship, be deducted under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1867, s. 9, unless the provisions of that section as to inspection by a surveyor appointed by the board of trade, and the other conditions therein contained, have been complied with ; and, therefore, that, as in the present case these conditions had not been complied with, the space appropriated for berthing the crew must not be deducted. Ib.

The owners of a foreign ship with a closed-in space on the upper deck solely appropriated to the berthing of the crew are entitled, in limiting their liability, to deduct such space under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, s. 21, sub-s. 4, though the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1867, s. 9, have not been complied with. The Franconia, supra, explained. The Palermo, 54 L. J., Adm. 46 ; 10 P. D. 21 ; 52 L. T. 390 ; 33 W. R. 643 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 369.

In an action for limitation of liability, the plaintiffs sought, in computing the tonnage of their steamship for the purposes of the action, to deduct the spaces mentioned in s. 3 of the Merchant Shipping (Tonnage) Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 43) :—Held, that the deductions could not be made, as the enactment in question only applied to the computation of the register tonnage of vessels, and not to the gross tonnage, upon which the owners' liability in the case of steamships is calculated. The Umbilo, 60 L. J., Adm. 7 ; [1891] P. 118 ; 64 L. T. 328 ; 39 W. R. 336 ; 7 Asp. M. C. 26.

If at the time of a collision the deduction in respect of crew space authorised by 30 & 31 Vict. c. 124, s. 9, has not been made from the registered tonnage and does not appear on the register, the owners cannot afterwards limit their liability on the basis of a deduction made subsequently to the collision, but the register as it existed at the time of the collision is conclusive. The John Ormston or John McIntyre, 50 L. J., Adm. 76 ; 6 P. D. 200 ; 30 W. R. 276.

In order to arrive at the "gross tonnage" (without deduction for engine-room space) on which the owner of a British registered steamship, measured under the Merchant Shipping Acts, 1854 to 1889, is entitled to calculate the amount of his limited liability for collision under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1862, such owners may legally deduct from the total tonnage appearing on the register in force at the time of collision any deduction or deductions shewn on such register in respect of certified spaces solely appropriated to the crew. The Petrel, 62 L. J., Adm. 92 ; [1893] P. 320 ; 1 R. 651 ; 70 L. T. 417 ; 7 Asp. M. C. 434.

The provisions as to deducting crew spaces apply in calculating gross tonnage. Burrell v. Simpson, 4 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 177.

Double Bottom.]—In ascertaining the gross tonnage, for the purpose of limitation of liability, of a steamship constructed with a double bottom for water ballast, the space between the inner and the outer plating is not to be taken into account, but the measurements for depth are to be taken to the upper side of the inner plating only. The Zanzibar, 61 L. J., Adm. 81 ; [1892] P. 233 ; 68 L. T. 297 ; 40 W. R. 702 ; 7 Asp. M. C. 258.

Sailing Ship—Navigation Spaces.]—In calculating the tonnage of a sailing ship for the purpose of arriving at the liability of her owners for damages, the spaces mentioned in s. 3 of 52 & 53 Vict. c. 43, are to be deducted. The Pilgrim, 64 L. J., Adm. 78 ; [1895] P. 117 ; 11 R. 57.

Covered Spaces above Main Deck.]—A vessel had an upper deck above her main deck, but such upper deck was not continuous from stem to stern of the vessel, and the hatches and other fittings in it were not watertight ; —Held, that such upper deck was not a third deck or spar deck within the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), s. 21, sub-s. 5 ; and that the space between it and the main deck was not space available for cargo, or for accommodation of passengers or crew, within sub-s. 4, and consequently should not be reckoned in estimating her tonnage. Lord Advocate v. Clyde Steam Navigation Co., L. R. 2 H. L. (Sc.) 409; 32 L. T. 287; 2 Asp. M. C. 502.

Incorrect Register—Evidence.]—In an action of limitation of liability, the defendants by their defence denied that the registered tonnage of the plaintiffs' ship was the correct tonnage, and at the hearing tendered evidence in support of their defence:—Held, that the evidence was admissible. The Recepta, 58 L. J., Adm. 70; 14 P. D. 131; 61 L. T. 698; 6 Asp. M. C. 433.

Registered Tonnage at Date of Collision.]—The tonnage in respect of which shipowners are entitled to limit their liability under s. 54 of the Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act, 1862, is the tonnage appearing on the ship's register which was in force at the time of the collision. The Dione, 52 L. T. 61; 5 Asp. M. C. 347.

f. Limitation Actions—Practice.

Order for Release on Payment into Court.]—The defendants in a collision cause, in which their ship was under arrest, having instituted a suit for limitation of liability, the court, upon the motion of the plaintiff in the limitation suit, ordered the ship to be released on payment into court in that suit of the aggregate amount of 15*l.* per ton of the registered tonnage of the ship, and of a sum to cover interest and costs, and did not require that the plaintiff in the limitation suit should admit liability before ordering the release. The Sisters, 32 L. T. 837; 2 Asp. M. C. 589.

Transfer of Fund Paid in to Credit of Limitation Suit.]—A vessel which had been arrested in a cause of damage was released on payment into court of the amount to which the liability of her owners was limited by statute, together with a sum to cover interest and costs. The Sisters, 1 P. D. 281; 35 L. T. 36; 3 Asp. M. C. 224.

Subsequently the vessel was pronounced solely to blame for the collision, and her owners, who had instituted a cause of limitation of liability, moved the court to decree for a limitation of their liability, and to order that the sum in court should be transferred to the credit of the limitation of the liability suit. The court decreed a limitation of liability, but considered it unnecessary to order that the amount in court should be transferred to the credit of the limitation of the liability suit. Ib.

Staying Proceedings.]—Where owners of cargo have recovered judgment in a collision action brought by them, and the owners of the ship carrying the cargo subsequently bring an action against the same ship to recover damages in respect of the same collision, and the damages in both actions would exceed the value of the defendants' ship at 8*l.* per ton, and the damage in the cargo action alone would not exceed that amount, the court will not stay proceedings in the cargo's action until after judgment in the ship's action, on the ground that without such stay the defendants have to institute a limitation of liability action, which would be unnecessary if the defendants obtained judgment in the ship's action. The Alne Holme (No. 2), 47 L. T. 309; 4 Asp. M. C. 593.

Prohibition—Order staying Proceedings in other Courts.]—A steam vessel having, through negligence, come into collision with another ship, and having been sunk and totally lost, the owners instituted a suit in the court of admiralty to limit their liability. Cross causes of damage had previously been instituted between the owners of the vessels, and the defendants had, in the cause instituted against them by the owners of the other ship and her cargo, paid into court 5,000*l.* (being an amount less than 15*l.* per ton on each ton of the vessel's registered tonnage) as security to enable them to prosecute the cause in which they were the plaintiffs. A passenger, who had sustained personal injury from the collision, sued the owners of the steam vessel for damages in the court of exchequer, whereupon the judge of the court of admiralty made an order in the limitation suit that all actions pending in any other court in relation to the subject-matter should be stopped; and he afterwards decreed that the owners were entitled to limited liability, and were only answerable to the extent of 6,376*l.*, being the full amount of 15*l.* per ton, which he directed them to pay into court:—Held, that, under these circumstances, neither the ship nor the proceeds thereof were "under arrest of the court of admiralty" within s. 13 of the 24 Vict. c. 10, and that the court of admiralty had no jurisdiction under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, or the amending act of 1862, to entertain the suit, and that a prohibition might accordingly issue to that court from the court of exchequer. James v. L. & S.-W. Ry., 41 L. J., Ex. 186; L. R. 7 Ex. 287; 27 L. T. 382; 21 W. R. 25; 1 Asp. M. C. 226—Ex. Ch.

The court could have granted an injunction to restrain actions at common law in respect of the same collision, even though the goods were to be carried partly by sea and partly by land. The Normandy, 39 L. J., Adm. 48; L. R. 3 A. & E. 152; 23 L. T. 631; 18 W. R. 903.

The power to stop actions and suits pending in any other court applies notwithstanding the circumstance that the adverse claimant has obtained a definitive sentence or judgment of the court of admiralty condemning the ship; and the utmost to which the latter is entitled under such a judgment, in respect of the loss he has sustained, is to share ratably with the other claimants in the value of the ship and freight. Leycester v. Logan, 3 K. & J. 446; 26 L. J., Ch. 306; 5 W. R. 334.

But a court of equity has no control over the ship itself, and cannot prevent the party who has obtained such a judgment from proceeding to a sale of the ship and retaining out of the proceeds such costs as he may be entitled to retain under the order of the admiralty court. Ib.

Proceedings in other Court not Stayed on Production of Order.]—An order made by the court of admiralty under 24 Vict. c. 10, s. 13 (which confers on that court the same powers of stopping proceedings as were conferred on the court of chancery by the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, s. 514), is not a "writ of injunction, rule, or order of either of the superior courts of common law or equity at Westminster," within the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852, s. 226; and, therefore, proceedings in an action in the court of exchequer will not be stayed upon the production of such an order made by the court of admiralty. Milburn v. L. & S.-W. Ry., 40

Reference as to Distribution of Amount after Stay.]—In a collision cause, although the defendant is entitled, upon admission of liability and payment into court of the amount of his liability under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1862, s. 54, to a stay of proceedings as against himself, plaintiffs having separate interests may, at the defendant's cost, proceed to a reference to settle the respective amounts due to them, and may tax their costs. The Expert, 36 L. T. 258; 3 Asp. M. C. 381.

Discontinuance—Claim against Fund in Court—Estoppel.]—An action having been brought by the owners of the ship "K." against the owners of ship "A." for damages arising out of a collision, an agreement was drawn up between the parties that the action be "discontinued without costs on the ground of inevitable accident," and an order in those terms was drawn up in the admiralty registry. The owners of the cargo of ship "K." having afterwards brought an action against the owners of ship "A." for damages arising out of the same collision, both ships were held to blame, and the cargo owners were held entitled to half their damages. The owners of ship "A." having obtained a decree limiting their liability and having paid a sum into court, the cargo owners filed their claim in the limitation action. The owners of ship "K." having afterwards, with the consent of the owners of ship "A.," obtained a rescission of the order for discontinuance, claimed against the fund in the limitation action. The cargo owners having objected to this claim:—Held, that the agreement and order for discontinuance (upon their true construction) did not amount to a release of all claims, and that the owners of ship "K." were not precluded from claiming against the fund. The Bellcairn (10 P. D. 161) distinguished. The Kronprinz or The Ardandhu, 56 L. J., Adm. 49; 12 App. Cas. 256; 56 L. T. 345; 35 W. R. 783; 6 Asp. M. C. 124—H. L. (E.)

When Bail given, though no actual arrest.]—In suits for limiting the liability of the owners of a wrongdoing vessel the court has jurisdiction if bail has been given by the owners, even though there has been no actual arrest. The Northumbria, 39 L. J., Adm. 24; L. R. 3 A. & E. 24; 21 L. T. 683; 18 W. R. 356.

Actions by Shipowners and Cargo Owners—Compromise by Shipowners—Right of Cargo Owners to prove for Whole Amount of Damage.]—The defendants' vessel came into collision with and sank another vessel carrying cargo belonging to the plaintiffs. Actions were commenced by the plaintiffs and by the owners of the carrying vessel, but in the action between the latter and the defendants' vessel the parties filed in the registry an agreement to a decree that both vessels were to blame, and for the usual reference as to the damages. The defendants then brought an action for the limitation of their liability, and paid into court the amount of their liability under the merchant shipping acts. In their statement of claim they referred to the above-mentioned agreement, and in terms admitted that the collision was "in part caused by the improper navigation of their vessel." The plaintiffs, in their defence, did not notice this admission, or otherwise refer to the cause of the collision. The usual decree was made for limitation of liability, and the staying of the plaintiffs' action:—Held, first, that the agreement between the owners of the two vessels, having been filed in the registry, was, under Ord. LII. r. 23, equivalent to a decree of the court, and that the owners of the carrying vessel were not entitled to have such agreement rescinded for the purpose of proving against the fund in court for more than half the damage sustained by them; secondly, that there was no admission on the pleadings by the plaintiffs as defendants in the limitation action which precluded them from claiming to prove against the fund for the whole amount of the damage sustained by them, and that in support of their proof an issue might be directed between them and the owners of the carrying vessel to determine whether the defendants' vessel was alone to blame for the collision. The Karo, 57 L. J., Adm. 8; 13 P. D. 24; 58 L. T. 188; 6 Asp. M. C. 245.

Stay of Proceedings.]—In an action of limitation of liability, the plaintiffs claimed a stay of proceedings in respect of claims for damage to ship and goods, and in respect of claims for personal injuries and loss of life on paying into court a sum representing 8*l.* per ton in respect of damage to ship and goods, and on giving security for the difference between 8*l.* and 15*l.* in respect of claims for personal injuries and loss of life:—Held, that the stay of proceedings might be ordered in respect of the claims for damages to ship and goods, but not in respect to the claims for personal injuries and loss of life. The Nereid, 58 L. J., Adm. 51; 14 P. D. 78; 61 L. T. 339; 37 W. R. 688; 6 Asp. M. C. 411.

Life Claims—Payment into Court.]—In an action of limitation of liability, where the plaintiffs have paid into court, or are willing to pay in, 8*l.* per ton in respect of damage to ship, goods, and merchandise, but seek in respect of the life claims to pay into court or give bail for an amount less than their total liability under the Merchant Shipping Act, the court, before fixing such amount, will require the plaintiffs to state on affidavit the names of the persons killed and injured, their condition in life, the number of those who are legally entitled to claim, the number of claims that have been settled, and the amounts paid in settlement. The Dione, 52 L. T. 61; 5 Asp. M. C. 347.

Limitation Claimed by Defence.]—The benefit of the statutory limitation of liability may be claimed by defence on counter-claim in the collision action. Wahlberg v. Young, infra; The Clutha, infra.

Facts entitling to Limitation must be stated.]—To entitle a defendant to the limitation of liability, the facts which entitle him to limitation must, since the Judicature Act, 1873, be stated in the defence. Wahlberg v. Young, 45 L. J., C. P. 783; 24 W. R. 846; 4 Asp. M. C. 27, n.

Order for Stay on Payment into Court and Bail.]—The defendants admitted liability in respect of damage to property and loss of life, but no claim had been asserted in respect of loss of life. The court ordered all proceedings against the ship to be stayed upon the defendants paying in the value of the ship at the rate of 8*l.* per ton, and giving bail for the rest of the value at 15*l.* per ton. The Clutha, 45 L. J., Adm. 108; 35 L. T. 36; 3 Asp. M. C. 225.

Admission of Liability.]—A bill filed in chancery to obtain the benefit of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, ss. 504, 505, limiting liability, was required to contain an admission of liability. Hill v. Andus, 1 K. & J. 263; 3 Eq. R. 422; 24 L. J., Ch. 229; 3 W. R. 230.

Aliter, in Scotland, Miller v. Powell, 2 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 976.

It is not necessary that owners of a vessel and cargo preferring their claim in the court of admiralty to limited liability, should acknowledge, in the first instance, that their vessel was to blame. The Amalia, 1 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 471; Br. & Lush. 151; 32 L. J., Adm. 191; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1111; 8 L. T. 805; 12 W. R. 24; 2 N. R. 533; and see The Sisters, col. 749.

Security for Costs.]—A foreign shipowner residing out of the jurisdiction in an action for limiting his liability must give security for costs The Wild Ranger, Lush. 553; 32 L. J., Adm. 49; 6 L. T. 164.

Costs of Action.]—The plaintiff in an action for limitation of liability must pay the costs of the action, other than costs occasioned by special issues raised by the defendant, in which he fails, or by disputes between the claimants. African Steamship Co. v. Swanzy, 2 K. & J. 660; 25 L. J., Ch. 870; 4 W. R. 210. The City of Buenos Ayres, 25 L. T. 672; 1 Asp. M. C. 169. The Creadon, 54 L. T. 880; 5 Asp. M. C. 585. The Empusa, 48 L. J., Adm. 36; 5 P. D. 6; 41 L. T. 383; 28 W. R. 263; 4 Asp. M. C. 185. The Warkworth, 53 L. J., Adm. 65; 9 P. D. 145; 51 L. T. 558; 33 W. R. 112; 5 Asp. M. C. 326—C. A.

A vessel was arrested for losses exceeding 300*l.*, the amount of their statutory liability at 8*l.* per ton:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to the costs of the proceeding in the court. The Young James, 39 L. J., Adm. 1; L. R. 3 A. & E. 1; 21 L. T. 397; 18 W. R. 52.

Priorities of Claimants.]—The plaintiffs in an action to limit their liability paid into court the sum of 7,862*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.*, being the amount of their statutory liability at the rate of 15*l.* per ton. The amount so paid into court being insufficient to satisfy in full claims against the plaintiffs in respect of loss of life and loss of goods, the registrar, by his report, found that the claimants in respect of loss of life were entitled to be paid out of the sum in court an amount equal to 7*l.* per ton, and that they and the claimants in respect of loss of goods should rank pari passu against the balance representing 8*l.* per ton. On objection to the report:—Held, that the report was right, as the court had power to marshal the assets, and that the claimants in respect of loss of goods had no right in priority to the claimants in respect of loss of life against the sum representing 8*l.* per ton. The Victoria, 57 L. J., Adm. 103; 13 P. D. 125; 59 L. T. 728; 37 W. R. 62.

Claim against Fund—Right of Crown—Time.]—The crown may claim against a fund paid into court by the owners of a ship in order to limit their liability under the Merchant Shipping Acts, 1854 and 1862, by the general law, and also under the Admiralty Suits Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 78), s. 3. A claim against a fund paid into court in a suit for limitation of liability under the Merchant Shipping Acts, 1854 and 1862, is not necessarily excluded by the fact that the time fixed by the order of the court for entering claims has elapsed. The Zoe, 55 L. J., Adm. 52; 11 P. D. 72; 54 L. T. 879; 35 W. R. 61; 5 Asp. M. C. 583.

Motion to set aside Verdict—Shipowner and Cargo Owner.]—Motion to set aside a verdict in favour of the plaintiff in an action for damage to his ship by collision, upon the ground that the damages (being the total amount of the defendant's liability by statute) were apportionable between the owner of the injured ship and the owner of cargo on board her, refused. Flensburg Steam Shipping Co. v. Seligmann, 9 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (3rd ser.) 1011.

8. Tug and Tow.

Vessels in Tow.]—A vessel in tow of a tug, and the tug towing, are to be considered as one vessel, for the conduct of which the vessel towed is responsible. The Cleadon, 14 Moore, P. C. 92; Lush. 158; 4 L. T. 157.

Governing Power with Ship Towing.]—The steamship "Aracan" found, at a foreign port, the "Syria" totally disabled in her machinery; both vessels belonged to the same owner. The "Aracan" took the "Syria" in tow, and, whilst so engaged, came into collision with a sailing ship. The damage done by the "Aracan" caused the sailing vessel to sink, but before she sank the "Syria" ranged up alongside of her and came into contact with her:—Held, that the governing as well as the motive power being wholly with the "Aracan," the "Syria" was not liable to be condemned in damages occasioned by the collision. The "Syria" could not be deemed, in intendment of law, to be one vessel with the "Aracan," or liable for her negligence. The American and The Syria, Union Steamship Co. v. The Aracan, 43 L. J., Adm. 30; L. R. 6 P. C. 127; 31 L. T. 42; 22 W. R. 927; 2 Asp. M. C. 350.

Tug is the Servant of the Tow.]—A tug is deemed to be in the service of the tow, and the owners of the tow are responsible for the acts of the tug. The Sinquasi, infra. The Kingston-by-Sea, 3 W. Rob. 152. S. P., The Mary, 48 L. J., Adm. 66; 5 P. D. 14, 16; 41 L. T. 351; 28 W. R. 95; 4 Asp. M. C. 183. The American and The Syria, supra.

—— Duty of Tow to direct Tug.]—It is the duty of those on board the vessel in tow to give general directions to the master of the tug as to the towage. But the master of the tug should exercise his discretion as to the proper manœuvres to be employed, especially where he is more competent to form an opinion on this point than the master of the vessel in tow. The Isca, 56 L. J., Adm. 47; 12 P. D. 34; 55 L. T. 779; 35 W. R. 382; 6 Asp. M. C. 63.

Under an ordinary contract of towage, the vessel in tow has control over the tug, and is therefore liable for the wrongful acts of the latter, unless they are done so suddenly as to prevent the vessel in tow from controlling them. The Niobe, infra.

It is not the duty of those in charge of a tow which is being towed with a long scope of hawser by night at sea to direct the movements of the tug—the circumstances being different to towing by day in a river. The Stormcock, 53 L. T. 53; 5 Asp. M. C. 470.

Encumbered Condition of Tug with Ship in Tow.]—A steam tug in charge of a ship cannot be considered as a free steamer, so as to be bound, under all circumstances, to give way to a sailing ship close-hauled. The Independence, Lush. 270; 14 Moore, P. C. 103; 4 L. T. 563; 9 W. R. 582—P. C.

Action against Tug for Damage—Contributory Negligence of Compulsory Pilot.]—In case of a mischief occurring to the vessel in tow, occasioned directly by the conduct of the steam tug, the tug cannot, in an action brought by the owners of the tow for damage, set up as a legal defence contributory negligence upon the ground that if the pilot in charge of the tow when the mischief was about to happen had done a certain thing the mischief might possibly have been avoided. The Julia, Bland v. Ross (Lush. 231; 14 Moo. P. C. 210) commented on and approved. Spaight v. Tedcastle, 6 App. Cas. 217; 44 L. T. 589; 29 W. R. 761; 4 Asp. M. C. 406—H. L. (E.)

Slipping Tow Rope.]—It is the duty of the vessel in tow in frequented waters to have the tow rope fast in such a way that it may be slipped or cut to avoid collision. The Jane Bacon, 27 W. R. 35.

Tow must follow in Wake of Tug.]—A smack was capsized by the tow rope between a steamship and a vessel in tow being spread in consequence of the tow not following in the wake of the steamship:—Held, that the tow was liable. Ib.

Vessel towed in Charge of Pilot.]—When a steam tug is engaged to tow a vessel which is in charge of a pilot, the tug is bound to obey the orders of the pilot, and the pilot is bound to give the tug proper directions and to superintend her navigation. The Energy, 39 L. J., Adm. 25; L. R. 3 A. & E. 48; 23 L. T. 601; 18 W. R. 1009.

Where a ship in charge of a pilot, whose employment is compulsory, is being towed by a steam tug, and the steam tug, without waiting for orders from the pilot, suddenly adopts a wrong manœuvre, and so causes the ship to come into collision, the owners of the ship are responsible. The Sinquasi, 50 L. J., Adm. 5; 5 P. D. 241; 43 L. T. 768; 4 Asp. M. C. 383.

Where a vessel is under the charge of a licensed pilot, the employment of whom is compulsory, and is at the same time in tow of a steam tug, the latter is bound to obey the orders of the pilot. Spaight v. Tedcastle, supra.

When a steam tug towing a vessel under a towage contract is so negligently navigated as to come into collision with a vessel belonging to third parties, the owners of the steam tug are liable for the damage done, even if at the time of the collision the vessel in tow was in charge of a licensed pilot, by compulsion of law, whose default solely occasioned the collision. The Mary, 48 L. J., Adm. 66; 5 P. D. 14; 41 L. T. 351; 28 W. R. 95; 4 Asp. M. C. 183.

A steam tug towing a sailing ship controls the course of both vessels so long as no directions are given by the person in charge of the ship in tow. The steam-tug is the moving power, but it is under the control of the master or pilot on board the ship in tow. Smith v. St. Lawrence Towboat Co., L. R. 5 P. C. 308; 28 L. T. 885; 21 W. R. 569; 2 Asp. M. C. 41.

When a ship in tow of a steam tug, and in charge of a licensed pilot who has the control over and directs the course of both vessels, is navigating a river in a fog so dense that the banks of the river cannot be seen, and those on board the tug and ship in tow do not know in what direction they are going, it is negligence on the part of both vessels to proceed; but as it is the duty of the pilot in charge to give orders to the tug to stop so as to enable the ship in tow to come to an anchor, the neglect on the part of the pilot to give such orders is contributory negligence, which will preclude the owners of the sailing ship from recovering against the owner of the steam tug for negligently running the sailing ship ashore by proceeding during the fog. Ib.

It is a want of due caution to move, by means of a steam tug, a ship from one dock to another at nighttime; under such circumstances, a pilot on board the ship being towed has no such charge or control over her movements as to exculpate the owners. The Borussia, Swabey, 94; 4 W. R. 503.

A tug is bound to obey the orders of the pilot or person in charge of the tow. Claim for towage remuneration dismissed because the tug disobeyed the orders from the tow. The Christina, 3 W. Rob. 27. S. C., nom. Petly v. Catto, 6 Moore, P. C. 371.

A tug towing a ship in charge of a compulsory pilot was in collision with a third ship without fault on the part of those on board the tug, and by the fault of the pilot of the tow:—Held, that the tug owners were not liable. The Duke of Sussex, 1 W. Rob. 270; 1 Not. of Cas. 161.

Two Ships in Tow of same Tug—Collision between them.]—A vessel while being towed into a harbour by a steam tug, got aground, and the defendant's vessel, which was being towed in at the same time by the same tug, astern of the plaintiff's vessel, without any active default on the defendant's part, struck and damaged the plaintiff's vessel:—Held, no evidence of negligence for which the defendant was liable. Harris v. Anderson, 14 C. B. (N.S.) 499.

Contract of Hirer of Tug to insure against Damage by Collision.]—See The Lord of the Isles, ante, col. 681.

Tug and Tow—Joint Tortfeasors—Contribution.]—In a collision action in rem, where a tug and tow are both pronounced to blame for a collision with another vessel, the owner of the latter vessel may enforce the judgment for the whole of his damages against either or both the defendants, and the defendants are not entitled to have the decree so drawn up that half only of the total damages is recoverable from each defendant. The Thomas Joliffe or The Avon, [1891] P. 7; 63 L. T. 712; 39 W. R. 176; 6 Asp. M. C. 605.

Damage to Tow by Grounding—Admiralty Jurisdiction.]—The admiralty court has not jurisdiction under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 6, or 24 & 25 Vict. c. 10, s. 7, or otherwise, to entertain a claim against a steam tug for damage occasioned to the vessel towed by negligence in towing, if the damage arises not by collision but by the vessel taking the ground. The Robert Pow, Br. & Lush. 99; 32 L. J., Adm. 164; 9 L. T. 237.

Aliter, where the damage is by collision. See The Night Watch, 32 L. J., Adm. 47; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1161; 7 L. T. 396; 11 W. R. 189.

Collision caused by Tug—Payment on account of Damage by Tow—Subsequent Action against Tug.]—The schooner "J. M. S." having come into collision with a tug and her tow, a damage action in rem was instituted by the owners of the schooner against the tug to recover all the damages occasioned by the collision. Subsequently to the collision the plaintiffs received from the owners of the tow a sum of money described in an agreement entered into between these parties "as an advance on account of the damages to be recovered from the owners of the tug." By the agreement it was agreed that the owners of the tow should give the plaintiffs all information and assistance necessary to bring the action to a successful issue; that if the schooner and the tug should both be held to blame, the plaintiffs should repay any sum by which the money already paid exceeded the moiety of damages recoverable against the tug; and that, as a basis of the arrangement, it was understood that the schooner should be found blameless for the collision. The court, having found the tug alone to blame, held that the above payment was not such a payment by the tow in satisfaction of the damages occasioned by the collision as amounted to a settlement in discharge of the action, and was consequently no bar to the action; and that, notwithstanding the advance paid by the tow, the plaintiffs were entitled to recover from the defendants all the damages occasioned by the collision. The Stormcock, 53 L. T. 53; 5 Asp. M. C. 470.

Tug, Tow, and Third Ship—Tug and Third Ship damaged—Assignment of Judgment.]—A collision occurred between a tug with a ship in tow and a third ship. The third ship sued the tow, and the tug brought a cross-action against the third ship. The actions were consolidated and tried together, and all the ships were found to blame. Judgment was given for the third ship against the tug and the tow, declaring them to be jointly and severally liable to the third ship for half her damage; and judgment was given for the tug against the third ship for half the damage sustained by the tug. Upon motion by the owners of the tow that, upon payment by them to the owners of the third ship of the difference between the sums due upon the two judgments, with interest, the owners of the third ship should, under s. 5 of the Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856, be ordered to assign to the owners of the ship in tow the judgment in favour of the tug owners against the owners of the third ship:—Held, that the statute had no application, and motion refused. The Englishman and The Australia, 64 L. J., Adm. 74; [1895] P. 212; 11 R. 757; 72 L. T. 203; 43 W. R. 670; 7 Asp. M. C. 605.

Claim to Indemnity by the Owners of a Tow sued for Collision with a Third Ship against Owners of the Tug.]—In an action of damage between two vessels, the court has jurisdiction, under Ord. XVI., to determine whether or not the defendants' vessel is entitled to indemnity against a tug by which she was being towed at the time of the collision. A collision took place between the vessels "S." and "C." The "C." at the time was being towed by a tug. The owners of the "S." instituted an action of damage against the "C." and alleged in their statement of claim that the collision was caused by the negligence of the "C." and her tug, or of one of them. The owners of the "C." obtained leave to issue a notice to the tug that they claimed to be entitled to indemnity, and the court made an order that the owners of the tug be at liberty to appear and defend, being bound by any decision the court might come to as to the cause of the collision. At the hearing the owners of the tug appeared, but the defendants did not, and the court pronounced that the "C." was alone to blame for the collision, and that her owners were not entitled to indemnity over against the owners of the tug:—Held, that the last portion of the judgment should be struck out. The Curtsburn, 5 P. D. 59; 41 L. T. 710; 28 W. R. 378; 4 Asp. M. C. 202—C. A.

Third Party Order against Tug Owner.]—A ship in tow fouled another at anchor:—Held, that, in an action brought by the ship at anchor against the ship that fouled her, the latter was not entitled to bring in the owners of her tug, against whom they claimed indemnity, as third parties. The Bianca, 52 L. J., Adm. 56; 8 P. D. 91; 48 L. T. 440; 31 W. R. 954; 5 Asp. M. C. 60. And see The Jacob Christensen, infra, col. 840.

Collision—Liability of Vessel in tow.]—A tug with a vessel in tow came into collision with another vessel, which was seriously injured by the tug, but not injured by the vessel in tow. The collision might have been avoided had there been a good lookout on the vessel in tow, and had she warned the tug that the latter was in danger of collision by continuing on her course:—Held, that the owners of the vessel in tow were liable. The Niobe, 57 L. J., Adm. 33; 13 P. D. 55; 59 L. T. 257; 36 W. R. 812; 6 Asp. M. C. 300.

Action in rem against Tug—Maritime Lien.]—A steam tug under charter came into collision with the smack which she was towing, through the sole negligence of a servant of the charterers, who was in charge of the tug. The towage was on the terms that the charterers were not to be answerable for damage occasioned by the negligence of their servants:—Held, that an action in rem would not lie against the tug, for the maritime lien arising from collision is not absolute, and the owners not being personally liable for this collision, and the charterers being exempted by the terms of their contract with the plaintiff, the primâ facie liability of the vessel was rebutted. The Ticonderoga (Swabey, 215) explained. The Tasmania, 57 L. J., Adm. 49; 13 P. D. 110; 59 L. T. 263; 6 Asp. M. C. 305.

Towage—Liability of Tow for Negligence of Tug.]—The "C. D." came into collision with a hopper barge, which was in tow of a steam tug. The collision was caused by the joint negligence of those on board the "C. D." and the steam tug:—Held, that the owners of the hopper barge were not liable. The Quickstep, 59 L. J., Adm. 65; 15 P. D. 196; 63 L. T. 713; 6 Asp. M. C. 603—D.

Duty of Pilot as to employing Tug.]—The Strathspey and The Islay, supra, col. 772; of shipowner, see The Gertor, 70 L. T. 703; 7 Asp. M. C. 47.

9. Foreign Ships—Foreign Law.

Limitation of Liability — Lex fori.] — The stat. 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, ss. 2, 14, is a law relating to remedies, and therefore applicable to a foreign shipowner suing for collision in this country. The Vernon, 1 W. Rob. 316.

Collision Abroad—Admiralty Jurisdiction.]—The admiralty court had jurisdiction in an action brought by a British subject against a foreign ship for collision in the Dardanelles. The Griefswald, Swabey, 430.

The jurisdiction of the admiralty in collision cases, where the ships are both foreign, and the collision in foreign waters, considered. Collision cases are communis juris. The Johann Friederich, 1 W. Rob. 35. The Vivar, 2 P. D. 29; 35 L. T. 782; 25 W. R. 433; 3 Asp. M. C. 308.

Under 24 Vict. c. 10, s. 7, the admiralty court had jurisdiction in case of a collision between foreign ships in foreign waters. The Courier, Lush. 541.

Right of Aliens to Sue for Collision Abroad.]—Aliens may sue in this country other aliens for personal injuries done to them abroad, if such injuries are actionable by the law of England and also by the law of the foreign country—per Selwyn, L.J. The Halley, 5 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 263; 37 L. J., Adm. 33; L. R. 2 P. C. 193, 202; 18 L. T. 879; 16 W. R. 998—P. C.

Foreign Ship detained under 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 75.]—Foreign ship detained under 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 75, for injury done to a British ship. The Christiana, 2 Hag. Adm. 183.

Detention of Foreign Ship under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 527.]—A foreign ship cannot be detained under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 527, in respect of loss of life or personal injury caused by her. Harris v. Franconia (Owners), 46 L. J., C. P. 363; 2 C. P. D. 173.

Negligence — Rules of Seamanship common to all Nations.]—In collision actions, where foreign ships are concerned, the test of negligence, apart from the regulations, is the common practice of seamen of all nations. See The Dumfries, Swabey, 63, 125.

Injury to Telegraph Cable by Foreign Ship.]—The English owners of a telegraph cable recovered damages from the owners of a foreign ship, the crew of which had injured a telegraph cable at the bottom of the sea. Submarine Telegraph Co. v. Dickson, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 759; 33 L. J., C. P. 139.

Collision between British and Foreign Vessel—Law applicable.]—In an action in personam, brought by the owners of a British vessel against the owners of a Spanish vessel to recover damages caused to the British vessel by collision with the Spanish vessel on the high seas, the defendants pleaded that they were Spanish subjects, and that if there was any negligence on the part of those in charge of the Spanish vessel it was negligence for which the master and crew alone, and not the defendants, were liable according to the law of Spain:—Held, bad on demurrer. The Leon, 50 L. J., Adm. 59; 6 P. D. 149; 44 L. T. 613; 29 W. R. 916; 4 Asp. M. C. 404.

Damage by Ship sailing under Foreign Flag but owned in England.]—Semble, an English company, trustee for a foreign company, owning a ship sailing under the foreign flag, is liable in this country to cargo owners for damage done by the ship in collision. Chartered Mercantile Bank of India v. Netherlands India Steam Navigation Co., 52 L. J., Q. B. 220; 10 Q. B. D. 521, 545; 48 L. T. 546; 31 W. R. 445; 5 Asp. M. C. 65; 47 J. P. 260—C. A.

Damage by French Ship on High Sea—Plea—French Law.]—In a common law action for collision, a plea that the collision was upon the high seas out of British jurisdiction; that it was not caused by the defendant, but by the master of the ship, which was French; that the defendant was a French subject, and that, by French law, the defendant was not liable, but a French corporation who owned the ship was liable:—Held, good. General Steam Navigation Co. v. Guillon, 11 M. & W. 877; 13 L. J., Ex. 168.

Action for Wrongful Act committed Abroad.]—No action can be maintained in the courts of this country on account of a wrongful act, either to a person or to personal property, committed within the jurisdiction of a foreign country unless the act is wrongful by the law of the country where it is committed, and also by the law of this country—per Mellish, L.J. The M. Moxham, 46 L. J., Adm. 17; 1 P. D. 107, 111; 34 L. T. 559; 24 W. R. 650; 3 Asp. M. C. 191—C. A.

Damage to Pier Abroad.]—An English company possessed of a pier in Spain, instituted an action in the admiralty court against a British ship for negligently injuring the pier. Plea, that, by the law of Spain the shipowner is not liable for negligence of his crew:—Held, that, assuming that the court had jurisdiction, the plea was good. Ib.

Presumption of Fault—36 & 37 Vict. c. 85, s. 17—Foreign Ships.]—The statutory rules as to presumption of fault in case of infringement of the regulations apply to foreign ships. The Englishman, 47 L. J., Adm. 9; 3 P. D. 18; 27 L. T. 412; 3 Asp. M. C. 506. The Khedive, Stoomvaart Maatschappy Nederland v. P. and O. Steam Navigation Co., 52 L. J., Adm. 1; 7 App. Cas. 795; 47 L. T. 198; 31 W. R. 249; 5 Asp. M. C. 360, 567—H. L. (E.) The Vera Cruz, 53 L. J., Adm. 33; 9 P. D. 88; 51 L. T. 104; 32 W. R. 783; 5 Asp. M. C. 270. The Love Bird, 6 P. D. 80; 44 L. T. 650; 4 Asp. M. C. 427.

Compulsory Pilot—Foreign Ship not liable for Fault of—6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 55.]—The stat. 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 55, exempting owners from liability for the fault of a compulsory pilot, applied to foreign ships. The Christiana, 2 Hag. Adm. 183.

—— Collision Abroad—Foreign Law—Liability.]—The owners of a British ship in collision in the Scheldt with a foreign ship are not liable in the courts of this country for the fault of their compulsory pilot, although, by the law of the place of collision (Belgium), they are so liable. The Halley, 5 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 263; 37 L. J., Adm. 33; L. R. 2 P. C. 193; 18 L. T. 879; 16 W. R. 998.

Limitation of Liability—25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 54.]—The liability of a British ship in collision with a foreign ship in the Mediterranean is limited by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63. The Amalia, Br. & Lush. 151; 1 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 471;

2 N. R. 533; 32 L. J., Adm. 191; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1111; 8 L. T. 805; 12 W. R. 24.

—— 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104.]—Under this act the liability of owners of a British ship in collision with a foreign ship within three miles of the United Kingdom was limited. General Iron Screw Collier Co. v. Schurmann, 1 J. & H. 180; 29 L. J., Ch. 877; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 883; 8 W. R. 732. But see The Saxonia, Lush. 410; 15 Moore, P. C. 262; 31 L. J., Adm. 201; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 315; 10 W. R. 431.

The liability of owners of foreign ships in collision beyond the three-mile limit was, under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, unlimited. Cope v. Doherty, 2 De G. & J. 614; 27 L. J., Ch. 600; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 699; 6 W. R. 695—L.JJ. Affirming 4 K. & J. 367; The Wild Ranger, Lush. 553; 32 L. J., Adm. 49; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 134; 7 L. T. 725; 11 W. R. 255.

—— 53 Geo. 3, c. 159, s. 1.]—A municipal law limiting the liability of shipowners for collision is not applicable to foreign ships and shipowners unless expressly so enacted. A foreign shipowner held liable beyond the value of his ship and freight, notwithstanding 53 Geo. 3, c. 159, s. 1. The Carl Johann, cited 3 Hag. Adm. 186; 1 Hag. Adm. 113.

—— 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 512.]—The above enactment as to proceedings by the board of trade, in case of loss of life, did not apply to foreign ships (semble). The Vera Cruz, 53 L. J., Adm. 33; 9 P. D. 96; 51 L. T. 104; 32 W. R. 783; 5 Asp. M. C. 270. Reversed on another point, 54 L. J., Adm. 9, infra, col. 838.

Foreign Ships on the High Sea formerly not bound by British Statutory Sailing Rules.]—Before the adoption of regulations common to all maritime nations, foreign ships on the high sea were not bound by statutory rules for preventing collisions contained in British statutes. The Dumfries, Swabey, 63, 125; 4 W. R. 708. S. P., The Saxonia and The Eclipse, Lush. 410. The Cleadon, Lush. 158; 14 Moore, P. C. 92; 4 L. T. 157. The Elizabeth, 3 L. T. 159. The Chancellor, Williams v. Gutch, 14 Moore, P. C. 202; 4 L. T. 627.

—— Could not set up Infringement by British Ship.]—Before 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, ss. 57, 58, a foreigner could not set up against a British vessel, with which she had been in collision, the British vessel's violation of British statute law on the high seas, for the foreigner could not herself be bound by it, as it was beyond the power of the legislature to make rules applicable to foreign vessels beyond British waters. The Zollverein, Swabey, 96; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 429; 4 W. R. 555.

Cross-action against Foreign Ship — Non-appearance—Both to blame—Deduction of Half Damages.]—See The Seringapatam, 3 W. Rob. 38, post, col. 842.

Damage Lien—Foreign Ship—Wages have no Priority.]—Where in a collision suit judgment is given against a foreign ship, and her proceeds are insufficient to meet the damages, her crew have no prior right against the ship for wages. The Linda Flor, Swabey, 309; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 172; 6 W. R. 197.

Foreign Plaintiff—Security for Damages.]—A foreign plaintiff, in a collision action, held not liable to give security for payment of damages for wrongful arrest beyond the usual security for costs, it being suggested that he had arrested the wrong ship. The Peri, 32 L. J., Adm. 46; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1230; 11 W. R. 44.

Foreign Sovereign suing for Collision—Bail.]—Where one of the ships in collision is a public ship of a foreign sovereign, and the foreign sovereign sues for damages in the courts of this country, proceedings will be stayed until the foreign claimant gives bail to answer a counter-claim by the defendant. The Newbattle, 54 L. J., Adm. 16; 10 P. D. 33; 52 L. T. 15; 33 W. R. 318; 5 Asp. M. C. 356.

Ship of Foreign Sovereign—Liability in rem—Salvage.]—An American ship of war, with cargo on board for public purposes, was stranded on the shore of England, and received salvage service from an English vessel:—Held, that she was not liable to arrest. The Constitution, 48 L. J., Adm. 13; 4 P. D. 39; 40 L. T. 219; 27 W. R. 739; 4 Asp. M. C. 79.

—— Non-liability to Arrest.]—As to the non-liability to arrest of a public vessel belonging to a foreign sovereign, see The Parlement Belge, 5 P. D. 197; 42 L. T. 273; 28 W. R. 642; 4 Asp. M. C. 234—C. A.: The Charkieh, 42 L. J., Adm. 17; L. R. 4 A. & E. 59; 28 L. T. 513; 1 Asp. M. C. 581. And see S. C., supra, col. 724.

Foreign Judgment.]—A foreign judgment is a bar to an action in this country between the same parties for the same collision. The Delta and The Erminia Foscolo, 45 L. J., Adm. 111; 1 P. D. 393; 35 L. T. 376; 25 W. R. 46; 3 Asp. M. C. 256.

But not if it went by default. Ib.

Foreign Judgment in personam.]—A foreign judgment in personam for a collision is not enforceable by arrest of the ship in this country. The City of Mecca, 50 L. J., Adm. 53; 6 P. D. 106; 44 L. T. 750; 4 Asp. M. C. 412—C. A.

Foreign Ship Sunk—Both in Fault—Reference.]—In a collision suit where both ships have been found to blame, and the owners of the ship arrested have brought no cross-action, the damage to the plaintiff's ship only will be referred to the registrar, although she was sunk and her owners reside out of the jurisdiction. The North American, Swabey, 466.

Re-arrest—Damage greater than Bail.]—A foreign ship was arrested and bailed in a collision suit promoted by the owners of the other ship and her cargo, and the damage pronounced for. After claim for the damage to cargo had been preferred before the registrar it was found that the damage was greater than supposed, and the ship was re-arrested:—Held, that the ship could not be re-arrested in a new action for the same cause and between the same parties. The Kalamazoo, 15 Jur. 885.

—— Of Foreign Ship — Appeal.]—In cross actions for collision the judge of the county court found that one of the ships, a foreigner, was not to blame and ordered her to be released. There was an appeal to the high court. Upon motion by the appellant she was ordered to be re-arrested. The Freir, The Albert, 44 L. J., Adm. 49 ; 32 L. T. 572 ; 2 Asp. M. C. 589.

10. Compulsory Pilotage.

a. Generally.

Former Uncertainty of Law as to Liability for Compulsory Pilot's Fault.]—The law as to the liability of a shipowner for a collision caused by the fault of a compulsory pilot was formerly doubtful. Longridge v. Dorville, 5 B. & Ald. 117.

Ship held Liable in rem for Fault of Compulsory Pilot.]—A ship in charge of a compulsory pilot held liable in rem for a collision caused by the pilot's fault. The Baron Holberg, 3 Hag. Adm. 214. S. P. (under 5 Geo. 2, c. 20), The Neptune the Second, 1 Dods. 467.

Whether Pilot was in Charge—Question for Jury.]—Whether a pilot taken on board by compulsion of law was in charge of the ship at the time of collision is a question for the jury. Catts v. Herbert, 3 Stark. 12 ; 23 R. R. 752.

Contributory Negligence of Pilot in charge of Injured Vessel—Effect of.]—Count to recover damages for injuries sustained by the plaintiffs' ship through the negligence of the defendants ; plea, contributory negligence ; replication, that the contributory negligence was that of a pilot licensed by the defendants, and compulsorily employed by the plaintiffs ; rejoinder, that the pilot was not the servant of the defendants ; demurrer to the rejoinder allowed. Dudman v. Dublin Port and Docks Board, Ir. R. 7 C. L. 518. But see Spaight v. Tedcastle, 6 App. Cas. 217 ; 44 L. T. 589 ; 29 W. R. 761 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 406. The Hector, 52 L. J., Adm. 51 ; 8 P. D. 218 ; 48 L. T. 890 ; 31 W. R. 881 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 101.

A barque, in charge of a pilot who was on board her, was being towed by a tug in waters where the employment of a pilot was compulsory. The tug ported her helm and passed across the bows of a brig, there was no room for the barque to follow in her wake, and the barque came into collision with the brig. The pilot gave no orders to the tug before or after she ported ; if he had given proper orders, even after the tug had ported, the collision might have been avoided :—Held, that the tug was to blame for attempting to tow the barque across the bows of the brig ; but that the owners of the barque could not, on account of the neglect of the pilot to give proper orders, recover against the tug damages in respect of the collision. The Energy, 39 L. J., Adm. 25 ; L. R. 3 A. & E. 48 ; 23 L. T. 601 ; 18 W. R. 1009.

General Rule as to Shipowner's Liability.]—Shipowners not liable for collision caused entirely by the fault of a compulsory pilot ; aliter, if the crew are also in fault. The Atlas, 3 W. Rob. 502. The Admiral Boxer, Swabey, 193 ; The Lochlibo, Pollok v. McAlpin, 7 Moore, P. C. 427.

The shipowners are liable for a collision caused by fault of crew and also of compulsory pilot. The Diana, 1 W. Rob. 131 ; nom. Stuart v. Isemonger, 4 Moore, P. C. 11.

Master not Liable.]—The master of a passenger vessel within a district where pilotage is compulsory was summoned for not navigating his vessel in a careful and proper manner. There was a pilot in charge of the vessel :—Held, that the summons was properly dismissed, since the pilot, who was compulsorily on board, must be assumed to have been in charge of the vessel. Oakley v. Speedy, 40 L. T. 881 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 134.

For a collision caused by the pilot's fault the master is not liable in damages. The Octavia Stella, 57 L. T. 632 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 182.

Owners Liable though Pilot in Charge.]—A ship with a compulsory pilot on board lying in the Downs in bad weather was held in fault for a collision caused by her driving in consequence of her yards not having been sent down :—Held, that the owners were liable, it being the master's duty to see that the yards were sent down. The Christiana, Hammond v. Rogers, 7 Moore, P. C. 160. Cf. The Girolamo, 3 Hag. Adm. 169.

Where the evidence establishes that from want of an efficient lookout, the pilot was not warned in time to enable him to give orders so as to avoid a collision, the defence of compulsory pilotage is not established, and the owners of the vessel causing damage are liable therefor. The Schwan, The Albano, [1892] P. 419 ; 69 L. T. 34 ; 7 Asp. M. C. 347—C. A.

Although the pilot has charge of the ship the owners are responsible for the sufficiency of the ship and her equipments, the competency of the master and crew, and their obedience to the orders of the pilot. Under ordinary circumstances his commands are to be implicitly obeyed ; to him belongs the whole conduct of the navigation of the ship, to the safety of which it is important that the chief direction should be vested in one only. See per Parke, B., The Christiana, 7 Moore, P. C. 160, 171. The City of Cambridge, Wood v. Smith, 43 L. J., Adm. 11 ; L. R. 5 P. C. 451, 457 ; 30 L. T. 439 ; 22 W. R. 578 ; 3 Asp. M. C. 739.

Change of Pilots.]—A collision occurred in the Humber Dock, Hull, between a fly-boat and a foreign schooner bound to the Prince's Dock. The schooner was in charge of a duly licensed Humber pilot, who had taken over the charge of the schooner while she was moored at a pier in the Humber from the pilot who had brought her in from sea. One sum was paid for the services of the two pilots :—Held, that the schooner was in charge of a pilot whose employment was compulsory by law. The Rigborgs Minde, 52 L. J., Adm. 74 ; 8 P. D. 132 ; 49 L. T. 232 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 123—C. A.

Neglect to render Assistance.]—Under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 53, s. 33, it was declared to be, in case of collision between two ships, the duty of the person in charge of each ship to render assistance to the other, and in case he failed to do so without reasonable excuse, the collision, in absence of proof to the contrary, was to be deemed to have been caused by his wrongful act. Two steamships, the "Queen" and the "Lord John Russell," each under the charge of a compulsory pilot, came into collision in the Thames. The "Queen" was solely to blame, and after the collision she rendered no assistance to the other vessel, and shewed no excuse for having failed to do so :—Held, that the mere fact of her having a pilot on board did not exempt her owners from liability.

Semble, that if the collision had been caused solely by the neglect of the pilot on board the "Queen," the subsequent misconduct of the master in not rendering assistance would not have made her owners liable for the collision. Ib.

Pilot in Permanent Employ of Owners.]—In a cause of collision, the mischief was found to have arisen from the fault of a duly licensed pilot in charge of the vessel doing the damage. The pilot had been in the permanent employ of the owners, and engaged in navigating the ship for many years :—Held, that notwithstanding such permanent employ, the owners were exonerated. The Batavier, 2 W. Rob. 407 ; 10 Jur. 19.

Pilot selected by Master—Liability.]—The Canadian statutes, 27 & 28 Vict. c. 13, and 27 & 28 Vict. c. 58, are to be read and construed together as being in pari materiâ ; and, therefore, the owner of a Canadian ship, navigated in Canadian waters, under the directions of a pilot taken on board in compliance with the provisions of these statutes, is expressly exonerated from all liability for damage caused by obedience to such directions ; and this is not affected by the fact that the pilot is one selected by the master, if selected only out of a particular qualified class. The Hibernian, Redpath v. Allan, 9 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 340 ; 42 L. J., Adm. 8 ; L. R. 4 P. C. 511 ; 27 L. T. 725 ; 21 W. R. 276 ; 1 Asp. M. C. 491.

Damage to Property of Thames Conservators.]—The owner of a vessel navigating the Thames is not responsible for damage done by her to property belonging to the conservators through the fault of a pilot compulsorily in charge of her ; for, though the words of s. 96 of the Thames Conservancy Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. cxlvii.), are general, they are not to be read as including pilots, and do not by implication repeal the provisions as to pilotage in 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104. Thames Conservators v. Hall, 37 L. J., C. P. 163 ; L. R. 3 C. P. 415 ; 18 L. T. 361 ; 16 W. R. 971.

Proof of Compulsion.]—Owners are not exonerated from responsibility for the default of a pilot whom they have selected and placed in charge when there was no obligation imposed on them to take such pilot and put him in charge. The Lion, 6 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 163 ; 38 L. J., Adm. 51 ; L. R. 2 P. C. 525 ; 21 L. T. 41 ; 17 W. R. 993.

When there is no proof that the pilotage was compulsory, no exemption can be claimed by the owners, on the ground of the vessel having been in charge of a pilot. The Peerless, Lush. 103 ; 13 Moore, P. C. 444 ; 30 L. J., Adm. 89 ; 3 L. T. 125.

When Pilotage is Compulsory.]—Pilotage is compulsory when the pilotage charge can be recovered whether the pilot is employed or not. Carruthers v. Sidebotham, 4 M. & S. 77. The Maria, 1 W. Rob. 95, 109. The Arbutus, 11 L. T. 208. The Hibernian, supra.

Principle of Statutory Non-liability of Shipowner for Fault of Compulsory Pilot.]—The leading principle of the legislature in exempting owners from any liability for damage occasioned by their vessels having pilots on board is this :—That the owners are not responsible for the acts of the persons to whom they are thus forced to commit the management of their property, and over whom they have no control—per Dr. Lushington. The Maria, 1 W. Rob. 95, 99. And see The Bilbao, Lush. 149, 154 ; 3 L. T. 338.

Statutory Exemption is declaratory of Common Law.]—The statutory exemption of shipowners from liability for the fault of a compulsory pilot is declaratory of the common law—see per Brett, M.R. The Hector, 52 L. J., Adm. 51 ; 8 P. D. 218, 224 ; 48 L. T. 890 ; 31 W. R. 881 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 101—C. A. S. P., General Steam Navigation Co. v. British Colonial Steam Navigation Co., 38 L. J., Ex. 97 ; L. R. 4 Ex. 238 ; 20 L. T. 581 ; 17 W. R. 741.

Apart from any statute, an owner is not responsible in proceedings in rem for damage done to his ship, occasioned solely by default of a licensed pilot employed by compulsion of law. The Annapolis. The Johanna Stoll, Lush. 295 ; 30 L. J., Adm. 201 ; 4 L. T. 417.

—— Either at law or in admiralty. The Maria, 1 W. Rob. 95.

By the Liverpool Pilot Act, the master of every vessel inward bound is compellable to take a licensed pilot, unless the vessel be in ballast and in the coasting trade ; but there is not, as in 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 55, any express exemption of the liability of owners of a vessel for damage done by such vessel whilst in charge of a licensed pilot :—Held, that the 55th section of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, was merely declaratory of the common law, and did not confer any independent exemption from legal responsibility ; and that, as by the common law no person is responsible for the negligent acts of a party in the performance of any work, when by law he is compelled to employ that party to do such work, the owners of a vessel entering the port of Liverpool, and in obedience to the local act taking a licensed pilot on board, were not responsible for mischief done by their vessel, but occasioned by the sole neglect of the pilot. The Agricola, 2 W. Rob. 10 ; 7 Jur. 157.

Ship liable in Admiralty for Fault of Pilot—6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 55.]—A foreign ship, though in charge of a compulsory pilot, held liable in admiralty for a collision caused by the pilot's fault, notwithstanding 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 75, and 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 55, which enactments do not apply to proceedings in admiralty. The Girolamo, 3 Hag. Adm. 169.

Damage to Other Ships—52 Geo. 3, c. 39.]—Shipowners were exonerated by 52 Geo. 3, c. 39, s. 30, from liability for damage done to other ships as well as to their own by the fault of a compulsory pilot. Ritchie v. Bowsfield, 7 Taunt. 309 ; 18 R. R. 490.

Where by Foreign Law the Shipowner is liable.]—In a cause of collision promoted by the owners of a Norwegian barque, against a British steamer, in the court of admiralty in England, for damage done in Belgian waters, alleged to have been occasioned by the negligent and improper navigation of the steam vessel, the owners of the steamship pleaded, that the vessel was in charge of a pilot whom they were compelled by the Belgian law to employ. The owners of the barque replied that by the Belgian law it is provided that the owners of a ship which has done damage to another by collision are liable for the damage notwithstanding the vessel was in charge of a compulsory pilot, and although the damage was occasioned by his negligence or want of skill:—Held, that the claim being founded on a tort committed in the territory of a foreign state, the party claiming reparation in a British court was not entitled to the benefit of the foreign law against the admitted provisions of the statute law of England and the practice of the court of admiralty in respect of compulsory pilotage, by which no such liability as provided by the Belgian law existed, as it is contrary to principle and authority to hold that an English court will enforce a foreign municipal law, and give a remedy in the shape of damage, in respect of an act which, according to its own principles, imposes no liability on the person from whom the damages are claimed. The Halley, 5 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 263; 37 L. J., Adm. 33; L. R. 2 P. C. 193; 18 L. T. 879; 16 W. R. 998.

Power of British Legislature as to Pilotage on the High Seas.]—The legislature has no authority over foreign vessels on the high seas out of British jurisdiction, but may impose any conditions on foreign vessels entering a British port, and consequently an obligation on foreign ships inward bound to take a pilot at a convenient station beyond three miles from the British shore. The Annapolis, The Johanna Stoll, Lush. 295; 30 L. J., Adm. 201; 4 L. T. 417.

A statute imposing in general terms on all inward-bound vessels the obligation to take a pilot at a convenient station beyond three miles from the British shore is binding on foreign vessels, such construction being justified on grounds of public policy. Ib.

Collision in Suez Canal solely caused by Negligence of Pilot.]—Where a collision in the Suez Canal has been caused by the negligence of a Suez Canal Company's pilot, compulsorily taken on board the wrongdoing ship, the owner of such ship is not exempt from liability for the damage arising out of the collision. The effect of the regulations for the navigation of the Suez Canal is to constitute a pilot taken on board a ship traversing the canal the adviser of the master, and to leave the control of the navigation of the ship solely with the master. The Guy Mannering, 51 L. J., Adm. 57; 7 P. D. 132; 46 L. T. 905; 30 W. R. 835; 4 Asp. M. C. 553—C. A.

Pilotage in the Danube.]—By arts. 85, 89 and 92 of the International Rules for the Navigation of the Danube, pilotage is compulsory in the case of a vessel navigating the Danube, but the master of such a vessel is not required to give up the navigation of it to the pilot. Where, therefore, the master of such a vessel has in fact given up the navigation of it to a pilot, the owners remain answerable for damage caused by the improper navigation of the pilot. The Agnes Otto, 56 L. J., Adm. 45; 12 P. D. 56; 56 L. T. 746; 35 W. R. 550; 6 Asp. M. C. 119.

Pilotage on the Seine—Havre.]—Although the employment of a pilot by a vessel entering the port of Havre is by French law compulsory, such pilot does not as of right, as is the case in England, supersede the master and take charge of the ship, but according to French decisions the master remains in charge, the pilot being merely his adviser. Hence, though the master may allow such pilot to take charge in fact, the owners are not exempted from liability for damage done to another ship by the negligence of the pilot. The Augusta, 57 L. T. 326; 6 Asp. M. C. 161—C. A.

Pilotage Certificate applied for, but not in Possession of Master.]—The master of a ship applied for a certificate enabling him to pilot his ship under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 340. The certificate was signed and sealed by the pilotage authority, and had not been taken away by the master:—Held, that the ship was liable to compulsory pilotage. The Killarney, Lush. 202; 30 L. J., Adm. 41; 5 L. T. 21.

Damage to Pier—Person having the care of Ship.]—A local act enacts that if "any person having the care of" any craft should damage the New Brighton pier, the shipowner shall be liable:—Held, that the shipowner was not liable for damage to the pier caused by a compulsory pilot in charge of his ship. The Clan Gordon, 7 P. D. 190; 46 L. T. 490; 30 W. R. 691; 4 Asp. M. C. 513.

Pilot taken on Board by Compulsion—No Compulsion at Place of Collision.]—A ship bound for London took a pilot off Dungeness where pilotage was compulsory. A collision occurred in the Thames by the pilot's fault at a place where his employment was not compulsory, but where his right and duty as pilot were not at an end:—Held, that the shipowner was not liable. General Steam Navigation Co. v. British Colonial Steam Navigation Co., 38 L. J., Ex. 97; L. R. 4 Ex. 238; 20 L. T. 581; 17 W. R. 741.

A qualified pilot having taken charge of a ship at Bristol to pilot her to Cardiff, negligently got her into collision at a place in the Bristol Channel outside the port of Bristol, but where his duty as pilot under his engagement was not at an end:—Held, that the shipowners were not liable. General Steam Navigation Co. v. British and Colonial Steam Navigation Co. (supra) followed. The Charlton, 11 R. 825; 73 L. T. 49; 8 Asp. M. C. 29—C. A.

Held, also, that for pilotage purposes the port of Bristol is bounded on the north by a straight line joining the westernmost point of the Holms to Aust in Gloucestershire. Ib.

Division of Loss—Fault of Pilot.]—A shipowner can only recover half his loss against the other ship if his own ship was in fault through the negligence of his compulsory pilot. The Hector, 52 L. J., Adm. 51; 8 P. D. 218; 48 L. T. 890; 31 W. R. 881; 5 Asp. M. C. 101.

Ship in Bad Trim—Liability of Owner or Pilot.]—The shipowner is not liable for a collision caused partly by the ship being in bad trim if the compulsory pilot in charge of her could with ordinary care have avoided the collision. The Argo, Swabey, 462. See also The Meteor, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 567.

Damage to Oyster Beds.]—A ship in charge of a compulsory pilot was at high water brought into and anchored by the pilot in a river in which there were oyster beds, the existence of which was known to the pilot. The place where she was anchored was not the usual and customary place for vessels of her size and draught to anchor in. At low water she grounded, and thereby did damage to an oyster bed. On notice of the existence of the oyster bed being given to the master, he took all reasonable means to remove the ship as speedily as possible. In an action by the lessee of the oyster bed against the ship-owner and the pilot:—Held, that the act of the pilot in anchoring the ship where he did was negligence which made him liable, but that the ship was not liable because the master's duty on receiving notice of the existence of the oyster bed was to take all reasonable measures—not extraordinary measures—to remove his ship, and this he had done. The Octavia Stella, 57 L. T. 632; 6 Asp. M. C. 182.

Costs in Case of Defence of Compulsory Pilotage.]—See infra, col. 856.

b. Ship in Tow.

Where a tug towing a vessel under a towage contract is so negligently navigated as to come into collision with a vessel belonging to third parties, the owners of the tug are liable for the damage done, even if at the time of the collision the vessel in tow was in charge of a duly-licensed pilot by compulsion of law whose default solely occasioned the collision. The Mary, 48 L. J., Adm. 66; 5 P. D. 14; 41 L. T. 351; 28 W. R. 95.

A tug is under the control of the pilot on boad the ship in tow, and is not liable for his negligence where his employment is compulsory. Smith v. St. Lawrence Tow-boat Co., L. R. 5 P. C. 308; 28 L. T. 885; 21 W. R. 569; 2 Asp. M. C. 41.

Where a ship in charge of a pilot, whose employment is compulsory, is being towed by a tug, and the tug, without waiting for orders from the pilot, suddenly adopts a wrong manœuvre, and so causes the ship to come into collision, the owners of the ship are responsible. The Sinquasi, 50 L. J., Adm. 5; 5 P. D. 241; 43 L. T. 768; 4 Asp. M. C. 383.

Semble, where a pilot is in charge of a ship in tow in a crowded river, it is not necessarily incumbent upon him to direct every movement of the tug. Ib.

Where a vessel is under the charge of a licensed pilot, the employment of whom is compulsory, and is, at the same time, in tow of a tug, the latter is bound to obey the orders of the pilot. Spaight v. Tedcastle, 6 App. Cas. 217; 44 L. T. 589; 29 W. R. 761; 4 Asp. M. C. 406—H. L. (E.)

In a case of damage by collision occasioned by a vessel while in tow of a steam-tug, having a licensed pilot on board, in pursuance of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 103, s. 388, and no blame attached to the master or crew:—Held, that the owners of such vessel were not liable, being protected by s. 388. The Ocean Wave, Marshall v. Moran, 6 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 492; L. R. 5 P. C. 205; 23 L. T. 218.

It is negligence to move, by means of a steam-tug, a ship from one dock to another at night time; under such circumstances, a pilot on board the ship being towed has no such charge or control over her movements as to exculpate the owners. The Borussia, Swabey, 94.

As to whether negligence of a compulsory pilot in charge of a ship in tow is contributory negligence on the part of her owners, see Spaight v. Tedcastle, supra, col. 755; The Energy, supra, col. 763.

And see XIX. TOWAGE, supra, cols. 679, seq.

c. Proof of Pilot's Fault.

Onus of Proof of Negligence of Pilot.]—If a licensed pilot is on board a vessel, in order to exempt the owner from liability for damage occasioned by collision, the onus probandi lies upon the owner to establish that the collision was occasioned solely by the negligence of the pilot, and it is the duty of the owner relying upon such a defence to call the pilot as a witness. The Carrier Dove, 2 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 261; Br. & Lush. 113; 19 L. T. 768.

When a collision is caused by a vessel in charge of a licensed pilot, the owners, in order to exonerate themselves from liability must prove not merely that the crew was under the pilot's orders at the time, but that the order which caused the damage was actually given by the pilot, the onus probandi being on them. The Schwalbe, 14 Moore, P. C. 241; Lush. 239; 4 L. T. 160. And see The Ripon, 6 Not. of Cas. 245.

To entitle the owners of a ship under the compulsory charge of a licensed pilot to the benefit of the provisions of a statute which exempts them from liability, when a collision has occured by the fault of the pilot, it lies on them to prove that it was occasioned solely by the pilot. The Velasquez, 4 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 426; 36 L. J., Adm. 19; L. R. 1 P. C. 494; 16 L. T. 777; 16 W. R. 89.

If the master and crew have contributed to the accident by not keeping a sufficient look-out, so as to give the pilot the earliest possible information of an approaching vessel, although the pilot is also to blame, the owners are not exempted from liability. Ib.

Where, by the mismanagement of a vessel which is proceeding to sea, damage is done, the owners will not be exonerated, unless they shew that the damage was occasioned exclusively by the fault of the pilot. Rodrigues v. Melhuish, 10 Ex. 110; 24 L. J., Ex. 26; 2 W. R. 518.

A collision took place between two vessels, and the defendants admitted that their vessel was to blame, but alleged by way of defence that they had a pilot on board by compulsion of law, and that they were therefore exempt from liability:—Held, that as there was no evidence of contributory negligence on the part of the defendant owners they were exempt from liability. The Daioz, 47 L. J., Adm. 1; 37 L. T. 137; 3 Asp. M. C. 477—C. A.

In order to entitle the owner of a ship, having, by compulsion of law, a pilot on board, to the benefit of the exemption from liability for damage by default of the pilot, it is not enough to prove that there was fault or negligence on the pilot's part, but the owner must shew that there was no default on the part of the master and crew, which might have in any degree been conducive to the damage. The Iona, 4 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 336; L. R. 1 P. C. 426; 16 L. T. 158; not followed in Clyde Navigation Co. v. Barclay, infra.

In a cause of collision occasioned by a vessel under compulsory pilotage, where no contributory negligence on the part of the master and crew is proved, the pilot in charge is solely responsible, and the owners are exempt from the consequences of his neglect or default. The Calabar, L. R. 2 P. C. 238; 19 L. T. 768.

Defective Steering Power of Vessel in charge of Pilot—Onus.]—In a cause of damage by collision, where the defence relied upon is compulsory pilotage only, and the defendants prove that the vessel was in charge of a licensed pilot by compulsion of law, and that he gave orders for the purpose of avoiding the collision, and that these orders were obeyed, and the plaintiffs seek to shew that the collision was due to the defective steering power of the defendants' vessel, it lies upon the plaintiffs to prove such defective steering power by substantive evidence. The Livia, 25 L. T. 887; 1 Asp. M. C. 284. See also The Warkworth, ante, col. 744.

Where the plaintiffs make out a primâ facie case, and the answer is that the defendants are exempt from liability on the ground of compulsory pilotage, and they give evidence which primâ facie proves that the accident was [caused by] the fault of a pilot who was on board by compulsion of law, the burden of proof is then shifted back on the plaintiffs if they allege that the defendants are guilty of some other act of negligence—Per Lord Esher, M.R. The Indus, 56 L. J., Ad. 88; 12 P. D. 46, 49; 35 W. R. 490; 6 Asp. M. C. 105.

The burden of proof is on the vessel causing damage to shew that the fault was that of the pilot alone; but where the evidence establishes that from want of an efficient look-out, the pilot was not warned in time to enable him to give orders so as to avoid a collision, the defence of compulsory pilotage is not established, and the owners of the vessel causing damage are liable therefor. The Schwan, The Albano, [1892] P. 419; 69 L. T. 34; 7 Asp. M. C. 347—C. A.

When shipowners have proved fault on the part of the pilot sufficient to cause, and in fact causing the calamity, they must be held to have satisfied the condition on which their exemption from liability depends, and they are not to be called upon to adduce proof of a negative character to exclude the mere possibility of contributory fault. But if, in the course of the evidence, certain acts or omissions on the part of the crew come out, it will then be incumbent on the owners to shew satisfactorily that those acts or omissions in no degree contributed to the damage. Clyde Navigation Co. v. Barclay, 1 App. Cas. 790; 36 L. T. 379; 3 Asp. M. C. 390—H. L. (Sc.)

Where a compulsory pilot was on board it was, under 52 Geo. 3, c. 39, s. 30, held that primâ facie the master was not liable for a collision in which their ship was in fault. Bennet v. Moita, 7 Taunt. 258.

Where a defendant alleges that the collision was caused entirely by the fault of his compulsory pilot, the burden is on him to prove it. The Atlas, 2 W. Rob. 246.

Pleading.]—The party intending to take advantage of the statutory exemption from liability for the fault of a compulsory pilot (6 Geo. 4, c. 105) should so plead. The Canadian, 1 W. Rob. 343.

d. Duties of Pilot.

It is the duty of the pilot to decide in bad weather whether to get under way or to lie fast. The Lochlibo, Pollok v. McAlpin, on appeal, 7 Moore, P. C. 427. S. P., The Carrier Dove, Br. & Lush. 113; 2 Moore, P. C. C. 238; 19 L. T. 768; but see The Girolamo, 3 Hag. Adm. 169; The Borussia, Swabey, 94; The Ocean Wave, Marshall v. Moran, 6 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 492; L. R. 3 P. C. 205, 209; 23 L. T. 218; The Strathspey and The Islay, infra; The Oakfield, 55 L. J., Adm. 11; 11 P. D. 34; 54 L. T. 578; 34 W. R. 687; 5 Asp. M. C. 575.

To give orders as to setting canvas. The Ocean Wave, supra.

To give orders as to the use of warps and check ropes when docking. The Rigborgs Minde, 52 L. J., Adm. 74; 8 P. D. 132; 49 L. T. 23; 5 Asp. M. C. 460.

To give orders to the helm. The Schwalbe, 14 Moore, P. C. 241; 4 L. T. 160; Lush. 329; The Winston, 53 L. J., Adm. 69; 9 P. D. 85; 51 L. T. 183; 5 Asp. M. C. 274—C. A.

To decide whether or no it is necessary to depart from the regulations. The Argo, Swabey, 462.

To decide when, where, and how to bring up. The Agricola, 2 W. Rob. 10; 7 Jur. 157; The George, 9 Jur. 670; 2 W. Rob. 386; 4 Not. of Cas. 161; The Lochlibo, supra; The Christiana, 7 Moore, P. C. 160; The Rhosina, Edwards v. Falmouth Harbour Commissioners, 54 L. J., Adm. 72; 10 P. D. 24; 53 L. T. 210; 5 Asp. M. C. 114.

To give orders as to the catting, letting go, and mode of carrying the anchor. The Gipsy King, 2 W. Rob. 537; The Rigborgs Minde, supra; The Agricola, supra; The Monte Rosa, 62 L. J., Adm. 20; [1893] P. 23; 1 R. 557; 68 L. T. 299; 41 W. R. 304; 7 Asp. M. C. 326.

To tend the ship whilst at anchor, to let go a second anchor if necessary, and to manœuvre her if she parts. The City of Cambridge, infra; The Northampton, 1 Spinks, 152; The Princeton, 47 L. J., Adm. 33; 3 P. D. 90; 38 L. T. 260; 3 Asp. M. C. 562.

To shift his berth, if necessary. The Cachapool, 7 P. D. 217; 46 L. T. 171; 4 Asp. M. C. 502.

To determine the speed of the ship and what canvas to carry. The Calabar, L. R. 2 P. C. 238; 19 L. T. 768; The Maria, 1 W. R. 95; The Julia, Lush. 224; 14 Moore, P. C. 210; The Batavier, 9 Moore, P. C. 286.

To advise as to the employment of a tug. The Julia, supra.

Shortly after leaving dock the "Strathspey" came into collision in the Clyde, whilst in charge of a compulsory pilot, with the "Islay." The collision was due to the "Strathspey" not having steerage way owing to the boisterous state of the weather and her slow rate of speed through the water in order to comply with the by-laws:—Held, that the pilot was in charge before leaving the dock, and that it was for him to decide whether to sail or to lie fast, and whether the employment of a tug was necessary or not; and that the owners were not liable for the collision. The Strathspey and The Islay, Burrell v. Macbrayne, 18 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 1048.

To give orders as to the navigation of the tug, and as to casting off the tow rope. See The Energy, and cases cited, supra, col. 755.

Ship at Anchor.]—When a ship in charge of a licensed pilot is anchored in pilotage waters, the length of cable at which the ship rides is a matter entirely within the province of the pilot, and it is his duty when the ship swings to the tide to superintend that manœuvre, and to regulate the helm, and it is negligence on his part to go below before the ship is fully swung, leaving the helm amidships without orders as to its regulation; and if, through want of length of cable and of regulation of the helm, the ship sheers and so parts from her anchor in swinging during his absence, the pilot will be alone responsible, provided that the watch on deck takes the right manœuvre to counteract the sheering. The City of Cambridge, or Wood v. Smith, 43 L. J., Adm. 11; L. R. 5 P. C. 451; 30 L. T. 439; 22 W. R. 578. And see The Woburn Abbey, post, col. 774.

When a ship at anchor in pilotage waters and in charge of a licensed pilot parts her cable, the necessity for letting go another anchor is a matter within the discretion of the pilot, and the manœuvre should be directed by him; and if the pilot is below at the time, the officer of the watch will be justified before giving any orders to bring up the ship in calling the pilot on deck to take charge, provided that there is no immediate necessity for action, as for instance to prevent a collision which is imminent. Ib.

Getting under Way—Suggestions by Master.]—Where a vessel is in charge of a pilot by compulsion of law, there is no duty on the master to prevent her from being got under way in obedience to an order of the pilot, unless such a proceeding is manifestly dangerous. The defendants' vessel was compulsorily in charge of a duly licensed pilot, and was got under way when the weather was thick and hazy, but vessels could be seen at 300 yards' distance:—Held, that the defendants were not responsible for damage caused by the vessel being under way. While the defendants' vessel was approaching that of the plaintiffs, the master expressed his opinion that the helm should be starboarded. The pilot gave the order, and in consequence of it a collision occurred:—Held, that the defendants were not responsible for the damage caused by the collision. The Lochlibo (3 W. Rob. 310) approved. The Oakfield, 55 L. J., Adm. 11; 11 P. D. 34; 54 L. T. 578; 34 W. R. 687; 5 Asp. M. C. 575.

Semble. The responsibility for being under way unnecessarily in a dense fog is with the pilot. The North American and The Wild Rose, 14 L. T. 68. See also The Lochlibo, 7 Moore, P. C. 427.

The pilot is responsible for getting the ship under way in improper circumstances. The Peerless, Lush. 30; 6 L. T. 107.

Carrying Anchor at Hawse-pipe.]—Whether the anchor of a steamer in the Thames should be carried at the hawse-pipe with the stock above water is a matter within the province of the pilot, notwithstanding that the carrying of the anchor in such a position may be an infringement of r. 20 of the Thames Conservancy by-laws; and therefore owners are not liable for damage caused thereby. The Ripon (10 P. D. 65) explained. The Monte Rosa, 62 L. J., Adm. 20; [1893] P. 23; 1 R. 557; 68 L. T. 299; 41 W. R. 304; 7 Asp. M. C. 326.

The damage was done by the fluke of the schooner's anchor piercing the side of the flyboat. The court found that there was no want of care in the crew in lowering the anchor. The other allegations against the schooner were that the anchor was improperly slung; that she came too fast up the dock and without a check rope:—Held, that the damage was caused by the fault of the pilot in the course of his duty. The Rigborgs Minde, 52 L. J., Adm. 74; 8 P. D. 132; 49 L. T. 332; 5 Asp. M. C. 460.

When in Charge of a Ship in Tow.]—See supra, col. 755.

e. Duties of Shipowner, Master, and Crew.

Look-out.]—A steamship held in fault for sinking a barge with her swell, although in charge of a compulsory pilot, because the barge and a dangerous swell caused by other passing steamships were not reported by the look-out. The Batavier, 9 Moore, P. C. 286. S. P., The Iona, 4 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 336; L. R. 1 P. C. 426; 16 L. T. 158; The Velasquez, 4 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 426; 36 L. J. Adm. 19; L. R. 1 P. C. 494; 16 L. T. 777; 16 W. R. 89; The Julia, Lush. 224; 14 Moore, P. C. 210; The Atlas, 2 W. Rob. 502; The Minna, L. R. 2 A. & E. 97.

The owners held liable for a collision caused partly by negligent look-out, and partly by the fault of a compulsory pilot; 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 55, did not exempt the owners in such cases. The Diana, Stuart v. Isemonger, 1 W. Rob. 131; 4 Moore, P. C. 11; 6 Jur. 157.

Tow-line.]—The shipowner is liable if the tow-line is not cast off at the pilot's order. The Energy, 39 L. J., Adm. 25; L. R. 3 A. & E. 48; 23 L. T. 601; 18 W. R. 1009.

Vessel at Anchor.]—The "W. A.," in charge of a pilot, came to anchor in the Mersey, and gave the "B. T." a foul berth. Various remonstrances were from time to time made by those on board the "B. T.," and after a few days the vessels in swinging to the tide came into collision:—Held, that the owners of the "W. A." were responsible for the damage, first, because, while the vessel was at anchor, the employment of the pilot was not compulsory; and secondly, because, even if the pilot had not properly moored the "W. A.," her master was not relieved from responsibility, and therefore her owners were liable for the damage. The Woburn Abbey, 38 L. J., Adm. 28; 20 L. T. 621. And see The City of Cambridge, 43 L. J., Adm. 11; L. R. 5. P. C. 451; 30 L. T. 439; 22 W. R. 578; 2 Asp. M. C. 239.

Ordinary Precautions to be Taken without Express Orders from Pilot.]—The shipowner is responsible for the ordinary work of the ship being properly carried on, and usual precautions being taken, without express orders from the pilot. The Christiana, 7 Moore, P. C. 160; The Sinquasi, 50 L. J., Adm. 5; 5 P. D. 241; 43 L. T. 768; 4 Asp. M. C. 383.

Sufficiency of Tug.]—The shipowner is liable for the sufficiency of the tug. The Ocean Wave 6 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 492; L. R. 3 P. C. 285; 23 L. T. 218; and see supra, col. 679.

Wrong Light Exhibited by Pilot's Orders.]—The steamship "R.," in tow of a steamship which was turning her in the River Humber, was, under the directions of a pilot, who was on board her by compulsion of law, exhibiting, in addition to her masthead light and red and green side lights, an anchor light which was hoisted at the main peak. In these circumstances she was run into by the steamship "E.":—Held, that the exhibition of the anchor light was a breach of the Humber rules which might by possibility have contributed to the collision; that the master of the "R." was responsible for such breach of a statutory regulation as to lights, and that the owners could not therefore escape liability on the ground of compulsory pilotage. The Ripon, 54 L. J., Adm. 56; 10 P. D. 65; 52 L. T. 438; 33 W. R. 659; 5 Asp. M. C. 365.

Duty to warn Pilot of Ship's Peculiarities.]—Evidence was given of the steamer having been inadequately manned and out of trim on the occasion of the collision, and that the pilot, who had only came on board a short time before, had not been told of these latent defects. The judge, holding that it was not open to the plaintiff on his pleadings to rely on such defects and that their existence had not been in fact proved, dismissed the petition:—Held, on appeal, that the plaintiff was entitled to rely on such defects, though he had neither pleaded them originally nor by special replication; that they had been actually proved, and that their non-disclosure to the pilot invalidated the defendants' plea of compulsory pilotage. The Meteor, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 567. S. P., The Oakfield, supra.

Pilot Below.]—Where a collision occurred when the pilot was unavoidably below for a few minutes, the owners were held liable. The Mobile, Bates v. Don Pablo Sora, Swabey, 127; 10 Moore, P. C. 467—P. C.

Pilot Intoxicated.]—If the pilot is manifestly incapable or intoxicated, it is the duty of the master to take charge of the ship. The Lochlibo, Pollock v. McAlpin, 7 Moore, P. C. 427.

Not Giving more Chain—Not Taking Tug—Not Getting Sail on Ship—After Collision.]—A ship in charge of a compulsory pilot, after fouling one ship, drove on board another. Her owners held liable for not giving her more chain to bring her up, and for not taking a tug, and for not getting sail on her. The Annapolis and The Golden Light, Lush. 355; 5 L. T. 37.

Interference with Pilot.]—The master has no right to interfere with the pilot except in case of manifest incapacity or intoxication. The Argo, Swabey, 462; The Christiana, supra; The Maria, 1 W. Rob. 95; The Hibernia, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1244.

Even when the pilot is breaking the law by navigating on the wrong side of the river. The Argo, supra.

It is not improper interference with the pilot to make suggestions or to offer advice. The Lochlibo, supra; The Oakfield, supra.

It is the master's duty to point out manifest danger, if the order of the pilot is clearly wrong. The Duke of Manchester, Sherby v. Hibbert, 5 Not. of Cas. 470; 6 Moore, P. C. 90.

Not sending down Yards in Heavy Weather.]—Shipowner held liable, because the master of a ship in charge of a compulsory pilot riding in the Downs in heavy weather did not send down his yards, whereby she drove and fouled another ship. The Christiana, supra.

Waterman Employed by Pilot.]—A French vessel upon the Thames took a pilot, and, as her crew did not understand English, a waterman to take the wheel. The waterman put her helm up, instead of luffing, as the pilot ordered, whereby a barge was run into and damaged:—Held, that the owners and not the pilot were answerable for the waterman's fault. The General de Caen, Swabey, 9.

Warps and Check Lines.]—The omission to run out a check line or warps when docking is negligence of the shipowner or his crew. The Cynthia, 46 L. J., Adm. 58; 2 P. D. 52; 36 L. T. 189; 3 Asp. M. C. 378; but see The Rigborgs Minde, as to the pilot's duty in this case, 52 L. J., Adm. 74; 8 P. D. 132; 49 L. T. 23; 5 Asp. M. C. 460—C. A.

Engines.]—Owners are liable if the engines are not stopped at the pilot's order. The Ripon, 6 Not. of Cas. 245.

f. When Compulsory.

i. Generally.

Passenger Ships in the United Kingdom—17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 353.]—Pilotage is compulsory for ships carrying passengers between places in the United Kingdom. The Temora, Lush. 17; 2 L. T. 418.

Ship within Home Port — Passengers.]—A vessel navigating within the port to which she belongs must take a pilot if she is carrying passengers. Dublin Port and Docks Board v. Shannon, Ir. R. 7 C. L. 116.

Ships shifting Moorings.]—As to the exemption of ships changing moorings in port, see The Victoria, Ir. R. 1 Eq. 336; The Maria, L. R. 1 A. & E. 358; 16 L. T. 717; 15 W. R. 494; Rex v. Lamb, 5 Term Rep. 76; Rex v. Neale, 8 Term Rep. 241.

ii. Under 6 Geo. 4, c. 125.

General operation of 6 Geo. 4, c. 125.]—The provisions of 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, are not confined to the London Trinity House pilotage. Tyne Improvement Commissioners v. General Steam Navigation Co., 8 B. & S. 66; 36 L. J., Q. B. 22; L. R. 2 Q. B. 65; 15 L. T. 487; 15 W. R. 178; The Killarney, Lush. 427; 6 L. T. 908. But see The Eden, 2 W. Rob. 442; 10 Jur. 296; Att.-Gen. v. Case, 3 Price, 302; 17 R. R. 566; The Maria, 1 W. Rob. 95.

Exemption from Liability Under 6 Geo. 4, c. 125.]—The exemption from liability of shipowners under the 6 & 7 Geo. 4, c. 125, extended to cases where the pilot was acting in charge of the ship under the provisions of the act, whether by compulsion of law or by the shipowners' appointment. Lacey v. Ingram, 6 M. & W. 302; 9 L. J., Ex. 196. And see, per Romilly, M.R., The Lion, 6 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 163; 38 L. J., P. C. 51; L. R. 2 P. C. 525; 21 L. T. 41; 17 W. R. 993.

Admiralty Action in rem.]—6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 14, applied in Admiralty, and prevented one injured by a collision caused by the fault of a compulsory pilot from recovering damages. The Protector, 1 W. Rob. 45.

Owners of Foreign Ship exempt from Liability.]—The statute 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 55, exempting shipowners from liability for the fault of a compulsory pilot applied to foreign ships. The Christiana, 2 Hag. Adm. 183.

Master Commanding his own Ship.]—Pilotage is compulsory under 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, for a master commanding his own vessel on a foreign voyage from London. Williams v. Newton, 14 M. & W. 747; 15 L. J., Ex. 11.

Change of Mooring.]—A vessel had to deliver part of her cargo at the London Docks, and part at a wharf higher up the river. She went to the docks, under the charge of a pilot, who left her there, where she remained some time without discharging any of her cargo, as the part to be left at the wharf was uppermost. She then went under the charge of another pilot up the river to the wharf, and by the neglect of the pilot ran down a barge:—Held, that under 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 55, the pilot alone was answerable, and not the owners, as they were bound to have a pilot on board at the time, and that it was not a mere chance of mooring. M'Intosh v. Slade, 6 B. & C. 657; 9 D. & R. 738; 5 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 345; 30 R. R. 494.

When Compulsory.]—Under the 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 55, if the ship was within a district to which the act applied, the statutory protection existed not only in those cases in which it was compulsory to take a pilot on board, but also where a pilot had been taken on board and was forced to serve if called upon, but the master was not bound to employ him. The Fama, 2 W. Rob. 184.

iii. At Various Places.

Belfast.]—Pilotage is compulsory at Belfast under 10 & 11 Vict. c. ii. The De Brus, Ir. R. 1 Eq. 72; The Arbutus, 11 L. T. 208.

Cork.]—Where the judgment of the court was, that the collision was occasioned by the mismanagement and incompetency of the pilot in charge of the vessel proceeded against, such pilot being duly appointed under the Cork pilot act:—Held, that the owners were not protected from their liability in respect of the injury occasioned by the act of the pilot, the employment of such pilot not being compulsory upon them by that act, and 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, not extending to the local act. The Eden, 2 W. Rob. 442; 10 Jur. 296.

Dublin.]—A steam tug, carrying passengers between Kingstown Harbour and the North Wall, Dublin (both of which places are under the provisions of the Dublin Port and Docks Act, 1869, within the limits of the port of Dublin), is within the meaning of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), s. 354, and obliged to carry a pilot. Dublin Port and Docks Board v. Shannon, Ir. R. 7 C. L. 116. See also The Meteor, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 567.

Glasgow and Clyde.]—Clyde Navigation Co. v. Barclay, 1 App. Cas. 791; 36 L. T. 379; 3 Asp. M. C. 390—H. L. (Sc.)

Goole, Hull, and Humber.]—The employment of a Humber pilot is not compulsory upon a vessel which is being towed from one dock to another in the port of Hull, as a vessel is not, in such circumstances, either passing into or out of the port, within the terms of s. 22 of the Hull pilot act, or bound to or from the port, within the terms of s. 89. The Maria, L. R. 1 A. & E. 358; 16 L. T. 717; 15 W. R. 1113.

The employment of a licensed Goole pilot is generally compulsory upon vessels inward bound to Goole, including vessels belonging to that port; not, however, by the Hull pilot act, but by 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, ss. 58, 59, and 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 353. The Killarney, Lush. 427; 6 L. T. 908.

A collision occurred in the Humber Dock, Hull, between a fly-boat and a foreign schooner bound to the Prince's Dock. The schooner was in charge of a duly licensed Humber pilot, who had taken over the charge of the schooner while she was moored at a pier in the Humber from the pilot who had brought her in from sea. One sum was paid for the services of the two pilots:—Held, that the schooner was in charge of a pilot whose employment was compulsory by law. The Rigborgs Minde, 52 L. J., Adm. 74; 8 P. D. 132; 49 L. T. 232; 5 Asp. M. C. 123—C. A.

Ipswich.]—By the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), s. 353, the employment of pilots shall continue compulsory in all districts where it is compulsory at the time the act passed. By s. 379, ships employed in the coasting trade of the United Kingdom, when not carrying passengers, shall be exempted from compulsory pilotage in the Trinity House outport districts, which by s. 370, comprise any pilotage district for the appointment of pilots within which no particular provision is made by any act of parliament or charter. By the Ipswich Dock Act, 1852 (15 Vict. c. cxvi. s. 3), a former act, by which special provision was made for the appointment of pilots in the port of Ipswich, is repealed, and s. 91 enacts, as to the appointment of sub-commissioners for examining pilots, &c., in the words of s. 5 of 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, except that they are described as persons "resident within" the port of Ipswich, instead of "at":—Held, that s. 91 was not a "particular provision"; and that Ipswich was therefore a Trinity House outport district, and a coasting vessel not carrying passengers navigating that port was exempt from compulsory pilotage. Hadgraft v. Hewith, 44 L. J., M. C. 140; L. R. 10 Q. B. 350; 32 L. T. 720; 23 W. R. 911; 2 Asp. M. C. 573.

Leith.]—As to the powers of the Leith Trinity House to grant licences from Orfordness to the Nore, see Hossack v. Gray, 6 B. & S. 598; 34 L. J., M. C. 209; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 966; 12 L. T. 701; 13 W. R. 859.

Llanelly and River Burry.] — By by-laws made by the Commissioners for the Improvement of the Navigation of the River Burry under the provisions of the local acts (53 Geo. 3, c. clxxxiii. and 6 & 7 Vict. c. clxxxviii.), pilotage was made compulsory in the River Burry and the port of Llanelly. These by-laws were in force at the time of the coming into operation of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, and were acted upon by vessels trading to the port of Llanelly:—Held, that pilotage was compulsory. The Ruby, 59 L. J., Adm. 68; 15 P. D. 164; 63 L. T. 735; 39 W. R. 42; 6 Asp. M. C. 577—C. A.

Liverpool and Mersey.]—When a ship ready and about to proceed to sea leaves one of the Mersey docks at night in charge of a licensed pilot, and casts anchor in the river so as to be ready to cross the bar at the mouth of the river on the next morning's tide at an earlier hour than she could if she left the dock in the morning, the going into and casting anchor in the river is a step in the "proceeding to sea," within the meaning of the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. xcii. s. 139), and the employment of the pilot is compulsory under that section from the time of leaving dock, and if the ship breaks away from her moorings, and damages another vessel through the pilot's sole default, the owners will not be responsible. The City of Cambridge or Wood v. Smith, 43 L. J., Adm. 11; L. R. 5 P. C. 451; 30 L. T. 439; 22 W. R. 578; 2 Asp. M. C. 239.

When a vessel leaves a dock in the Mersey on her voyage to sea, and receives slight injuries to a yard-arm, necessitating repairs, and in consequence is anchored under the directions of the pilot in the river, intending to go to sea on the next day, the pilot remaining in charge, but on the next morning, before resuming her voyage and whilst still at anchor, she gets into collision, and does damage to another vessel, she is not "proceeding to sea" within the meaning of the 139th section of the Mersey Docks Act Consolidation Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. xcii.), and the pilot is not in charge by compulsion of law. The Cachapool, 7 P. D. 217; 46 L. T. 171; 4 Asp. M. C. 502.

By the Liverpool Pilot Act (5 Geo. 4 c. lxxiii. s. 37), in case the master of any ship outward bound shall proceed to sea, and shall refuse to take on board a pilot, he shall pay the pilot who shall first offer his service at a certain rate as if the pilot had piloted the vessel. On the 2nd of December a vessel left the Liverpool Docks with a pilot on board; on the 3rd the boat of the plaintiff, who was then employed by the owners in raising the vessel's anchor, was lost, through the carelessness of those on board the ship; at this time the master was not on board, and the vessel being employed by the post-office, was not to sail till the 4th of December, and her rigging was being completed:—Held, assuming an outward-bound vessel to be liable when proceeding to sea to take a pilot on board, still that this vessel was not proceeding to sea. Rodrigues v. Melhuish, 10 Ex. 110; 24 L. J., Ex. 26; 2 W. R. 518.

A foreign vessel bound for Liverpool took a pilot off Point Lynas, was brought to anchor in the Mersey, and there lay two or three days, waiting for want of water to dock. She was then conducted by the same pilot into dock. In proceeding towards the dock, a collision was occasioned by the pilot's default:—Held, that the vessel was not liable for the damage. The Annapolis and The Johanna Stoll, Lush. 295; 30 L. J., Adm. 201; 4 L. T. 417.

A duly-qualified Liverpool pilot having been employed to pilot a ship from sea into the Mersey and take her into dock, piloted her over the bar, but owing to the state of the tide being unable to dock her that day, anchored her in a clear berth in the river. The pilot remained in charge of the ship, and the next day the state of the weather being such as to render it unadvisable to take her into dock that day, she remained at anchor. In the course of that day, and whilst the pilot was in charge, the ship dragged her anchor and came into collision with a barque. In an action instituted by the owner of the barque against the ship, the court decided that the collision was caused solely by the negligence of the pilot in charge of the ship:—Held, that the owners of the ship were not answerable for the damage, for it was occasioned by the fault of a pilot acting in charge of the ship within a district where the employment of such pilot was compulsory by law. The Princeton, 47 L. J., Adm. 33; 3 P. D. 90; 38 L. T. 260; 3 Asp. M. C. 562.

Pilotage compulsory under 5 Geo. 4, c. lxxiii., s. 25, at Liverpool. The Montreal, 17 Jur. 538.

London (Trinity House) and Outport Districts—No Compulsion at Place of Collision.]—A.'s vessel, belonging to the port of London, having taken on board a pilot from Dungeness to Gravesend, came in collision, through the pilot's negligence, with B.'s vessel, at a spot in the river Thames between Yantlett Creek and Gravesend:—Held, that, for pilotage purposes, Gravesend is the eastern limit of the port of London, and that the spot where the collision took place is therefore within the district where pilotage is compulsory; that A. was not liable to answer for the damage which B. sustained; and that the relation of master and servant did not exist between A. and the pilot. General Steam Navigation Co. v. British Colonial Steam Navigation Co., 38 L. J., Ex. 97; L. R. 4 Ex. 238; 20 L. T. 581; 17 W. R. 741—Ex. Ch.

—— Foreign Ship.]—A Norwegian vessel, the "Hanna," bound from Sweden to London, and in charge of a duly licensed pilot, came wrongfully into collision with another vessel, off the Nore lightship:—Held, that there was no compulsion to take the pilot, and that therefore the owners of the "Hanna" were responsible for the damage. The Hanna, 36 L. J., Adm. 1; L. R. 1 A. & E. 283; 15 L. T. 334; 15 W. R. 263.

—— Differential Dues.]—Pilotage is compulsory on a foreign ship carrying passengers and trading between London and ports between Boulogne and the Baltic. The order in council of the 18th February, 1854, extending the exemptions from compulsory pilotage, applies only to British vessels. A charge for a compulsory pilotage on a foreign ship is not a differential due within the meaning of the Harbours and Passing Tolls Act, 1861, and is therefore not abolished by that act. The Vesta, 51 L. J., Adm. 25; 7 P. D. 240; 46 L. T. 492; 30 W. R. 705; 4 Asp. M. C. 515.

—— Thames—Pilot licensed for Vessels of Lighter Draft.]—The steamship "C.," drawing more than fourteen feet of water, was subject to compulsory pilotage in the river Thames. There being no fully qualified pilot available, the "C." took a pilot who was licensed to take charge of vessels drawing not more than fourteen feet of water, and in these circumstances came into collision with the "A." The collision was occasioned solely by the negligence of the pilot in charge of the "C.":—Held, that he was a "qualified pilot," within the meaning of s. 388 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, and that the owners of the "C." were therefore exempt from liability. The Carl XV., [1892] P. 324; 61 L. J., Adm. 111—C. A.

Semble, a pilot qualified to conduct ships drawing more than fourteen feet water would have a right to supersede the pilot in charge who was not so qualified; but the latter would be entitled to a fair proportion of the pilotage fees. Ib.

—— Trinity Outport District—Evidence as to Falmouth being.]—See The Juno, 45 L. J., Adm. 105; 1 P. D. 135; 34 L. T. 741; 24 W. R. 902.

—— "Qualified Pilot"—Exempted and Unexempted Ships.]—A pilot licensed only to pilot ships exempt from compulsory pilotage is not entitled to supersede an unqualified pilot in charge of an unexempted ship, and is not a "qualified pilot" for this purpose within the meaning of s. 353 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854. Stafford v. Dyer, 64 L. J., M. C. 194; [1895] 1 Q. B. 566; 15 R. 287; 72 L. T. 114; 7 Asp. M. C. 568.

—— Coasting Vessels.]—An Irish vessel with a general cargo, trading between Belfast and London, and not laden with corn or grain, as specified in 46 Geo. 3, c. 97, s. 2, was not exempted under 52 Geo. 3, c. 39, s. 2, from taking a pilot on board, as such vessel could not be considered as a coasting vessel, or an Irish trader, using the navigation of the River Thames as a coaster. Davidson v. Mekibben, 6 Moore, 387; 3 Br. & B. 112.

The only reason why coasting vessels are exempted from the obligation of taking a pilot, is, that, from that frequent egress and ingress to the particular port, their masters must be presumed to be perfectly acquainted with the locality. The Agricola, 2 W. Rob. 10; 7 Jur. 157.

A vessel ordinarily occupied in the foreign trade, going from Liverpool to London in order to sail from London under advertisement for foreign parts, not carrying passengers, but having on board a cargo shipped at Liverpool and deliverable at London, is not a ship employed in the coasting trade of the United Kingdom within 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 379; and is compellable by s. 376 to take a pilot in the London district of the Trinity House. The Lloyds or Sea Queen, Br. & Lush. 359; 32 L. J., Adm. 197; 9 L. T. 236.

—— London District—"Ship trading" to Place North of Boulogne.]—By the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), s. 379, ships trading to any place in Europe north of Boulogne are, when not carrying passengers, exempted from compulsory pilotage in the London district. A British ship was one of a line of vessels making regular voyages from London to Japan and ports in the East, and back to London, and thence to ports in Europe north of Boulogne and back to London. On a return voyage from the East, she went as usual to London. She there discharged part of her cargo and her crew, and then with the bulk of her cargo and a crew of runners, but without passengers, proceeded to Holland:—Held, that she was a ship "trading to" a place north of Boulogne, and therefore exempted from compulsory pilotage in the London district. Courtney v. Cole, 56 L. J., M. C. 141; 19 Q. B. D. 447; 57 L. T. 409; 36 W. R. 8; 6 Asp. M. C. 169; 52 J. P. 20.

By the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), s. 379, sub-s. 3, the following ships when not carrying passengers shall be exempted from compulsory pilotage in the London district—that is to say, ships trading to Boulogne, or to any place in Europe north of Boulogne. A vessel while on a voyage from Liverpool to Hamburg was obliged by an accident to put into the Thames for repairs:—Held, that she was exempted by s. 379 from taking a pilot in the London district. The Sutherland, 56 L. J., Adm. 94; 12 P. D. 154; 57 L. T. 631; 36 W. R. 13; 6 Asp. M. C. 181.

In 17 & 18 Vict. c. 108, s. 379, the description, "ships trading to any place in Europe north of Boulogne," extends to vessels coming from a place north of Boulogne to the port of London. The Wesley, Lush. 268.

A vessel, not carrying passengers, on a voyage from Cronstadt to London, is exempted from compulsory pilotage in the Thames. Ib.

—— "Ship trading from any Port in the London District to any Port of Europe north and east of Brest.]—A ship carrying a cargo from a foreign port to London, and thence without taking any fresh cargo on board, proceeding to Rotterdam, is a "ship trading from" a "port in Great Britain within the London district to" a "port in Europe north and east of Brest," within the meaning of s. 625 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and therefore exempt from compulsory pilotage. The Rutland, 66 L. J., Adm. 105; [1897] A. C. 333; 76 L. T. 662—H. L. (E.)

—— Ship Navigating within Limits of Port to which she belongs—Passengers—Distressed Seamen.]—Distressed seamen taken on board a ship to be brought home under the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, are not "passengers" within the meaning of s. 625 of that act, and therefore a vessel which is in other respects within the provisions of that section, is not by reason of having such persons on board excluded from the exemptions from compulsory pilotage contained therein. The Clymene, 66 L. J., Adm. 152; [1897] P. 295; 76 L. T. 811; 46 W. R. 109.

—— "Navigating within."]—The words "navigating within," in 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 379, mean being within, and therefore a vessel belonging to the port of London, and coming from a foreign port, is exempt from the employment of a licensed pilot on the Thames. The Stettin, Br. & Lush. 199; 31 L. J., Adm. 208; 6 L. T. 613—P. C.

—— "Loading"—25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 41.]—The word "loading" in 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 41, does not refer to the taking on board of cargo only. Therefore when a steamer anchored in Dartmouth Harbour, and took on board twenty tons of coal for the purposes of the voyage, and was bound for a place out of the outport district to a destination also out of it:—Held, that she was not exempt from the obligation to employ a pilot. The Winston, 53 L. J., Adm. 69; 9 P. D. 85; 51 L. T. 183; 5 Asp. M. C. 274—C. A. Affirming 31 W. R. 892.

—— Cinque Ports.]—By 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 62, the master or mate of a vessel, being owner or part owner, and residing at Dover, Deal, or the Isle of Thanet, was exempt from a penalty for piloting his own ship from any of the places aforesaid up or down the rivers Thames or Medway, or into or out of any port within the jurisdiction of the Cinque Ports:—Held, that the clause limited the exemption to vessels navigated from Dover, Deal, or the Isle of Thanet. Peake v. Skreech, 7 Q. B. 603; 14 L. J., Q. B. 317. S. P., Williams v. Newton, 14 M. & W. 747; 15 L. J., Ex. 11.

—— Passengers.]—The master of a vessel belonging to the port of London and bound up the Thames, on a voyage from Australia to London with passengers on board, is required by law to employ a licensed pilot within the limits of the port of London. The Hankow, 48 L. J., Adm. 29; 4 P. D. 197; 40 L. T. 335; 4 Asp. M. C. 97.

A steamship carrying cargo and passengers from Boulogne to London is not bound, under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), to employ a pilot whilst navigating the river Thames, the general exemption continued from 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 59, and the order in council of 18th February, 1854, by the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, s. 353, not being overriden by s. 379, relating to Trinity House pilotage, and exempting such a ship only when not carrying passengers. The Moselle, 32 L. T. 570; 2 Asp. M. C. 586.

A British vessel carrying goods and passengers between Rotterdam and London, having a licensed pilot on board, ran down a ship. The collision took place in the Thames, within the Trinity House district, and was duly occasioned by the fault of the pilot:—Held, that the exemption from compulsory pilotage given by 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 59. and 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 353, applied, and that the fact of the vessel having a licensed pilot on board, whose act alone occasioned the damage, did not exempt the owners from liability. The Earl of Auckland, Lush. 387; 15 Moore, P. C. 304; 5 L. T. 558; 10 W. R. 124.

The fifth exemption from compulsory pilotage in 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, applies to vessels confining their voyages within the limits of the port to which they belong. As, however, all the exemptions under 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, were continued by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, the more extensive words used in the former act must be held to exempt from the necessity of taking a pilot any master of a ship so long as his vessel is within the limits of her port. In such case, therefore, if a collision occurs, the presence of a pilot gives no immunity to the owners. The Stettin, Br. & Lush. 199; 31 L. J., Adm. 208; 6 L. T. 613—P. C.

By 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 353, which continues all exemptions from compulsory pilotage existing immediately before the time when that act came into operation, the exemptions contained in 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, are continued, notwithstanding ss. 376, 379, and notwithstanding that 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, is repealed by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 120. Reg. v. Stanton or Stanton v. Banks, 8 El. & Bl. 445; 27 L. J., M. C. 105; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 10, 332; 6 W. R. 39.

At the time of a collision a man was on board the vessel in fault, to whom the master had agreed to give a free passage, and who messed with him and also assisted in working the ship:—Held, that the vessel was not carrying passengers so as to render it compulsory to take a pilot. The Hanna, 36 L. J., Adm. 1; L. R. 1 A. & E. 283; 15 L. T. 334; 15 W. R. 263.

An Irish trader (as described by 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 59), carrying passengers, is compelled to employ a licensed pilot in the Thames. The Temora, Lush. 17; 2 L. T. 418.

It is not compulsory on a passenger ship to take a licensed pilot on board when she is not carrying passengers, and the owners are responsible for the negligence of the pilot, where they were not compellable to put him in charge of their vessel. The Lion, 6 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 163; 38 L. J., Adm. 51; L. R. 2 P. C. 525; 21 L. T. 41; 17 W. R. 993.

The payment of a fare is necessary to constitute a passenger within the meaning of the compulsory pilotage sections of the Merchant Shipping Act (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104). Ib.

Where, therefore, the wife and father-in-law of the captain were on board a vessel (usually carrying passengers, but not on a passage voyage at the time), by invitation from the captain, without the privity of the owners, and they had neither paid, or agreed to pay, any fare, before a collision took place, such persons were held not to be passengers within the meaning of the act, so as to exonerate the owners from damage occasioned by the pilot's default. Ib.

Distressed seamen. See The Clymene, supra, col. 782.

—— Vessel engaged in the Coasting Trade.]—Pilotage held to be compulsory in the Thames for a steamship with part of her cargo on board bound from London to Venice by way of Cardiff, where she was to take in the remainder of her cargo. The Winestead, 64 L. J., Adm. 51; [1895] P. 170; 11 R. 720; 72 L. T. 91; 7 Asp. M. C. 547.

Tyne.]—The provisions of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 55, do not extend to British vessels in the Tyne, and therefore the owner of a British vessel in that river in charge of a qualified pilot appointed by the Trinity House of Newcastle-upon Tyne, under the local act of 41 Geo. 3, c. lxxxvi., is not protected from liability for damage occasioned by the negligence of the pilot. Tyne Improvement Commissioners v. General Steam Navigation Co., 8 B. & S. 66; 36 L. J., Q. B. 22; L. R. 2 Q. B. 65; 15 L. T. 487; 15 W. R. 178—Ex. Ch. S. P., Dodds v. Embleton, 9 D. & R. 27; 5 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 65.

—— Foreign Vessels.]—Under the Tyne Pilotage Order Confirmation Act, 1865, Sched., s. 16, pilotage is not compulsory on foreign vessels entering the Tyne. The Johann Sverdrup, 56 L. J., Adm. 63; 12 P. D. 43; 56 L. T. 256; 35 W. R. 300; 6 Asp. M. C. 73—C. A.

—— As to Pilotage in the Tyne for Foreign Ships under 41 Geo. 3, c. lxxxvi.]—See The Maria, 1 W. Rob. 95.

Waterford.]—Under the Waterford Harbour Act, 9 & 10 Vict. c. ccxcii., it is not necessary to employ a pilot to shift a vessel from one berth to another. The Victoria, Ir. R. 1 Eq. 336.

Indian Rivers.]—A collision took place in the Cowcolly Roads, one of the channels in the Hooghly River, near Calcutta. By an act of the Indian legislature, it is made compulsory upon the master to take a pilot on board in every port subject to the provisions of that act:—Held, first, that the Cowcolly Roads, the place of the collision, was not a port within the meaning of the act. The Peerless, Lush. 103; 13 Moore, P. C. 484; 30 L. J., Adm. 89.

11. THE REGULATIONS.

a. Generally.

Port Helm Rule of 1840.]—See The Friends, 1 W. Rob. 484; on appeal, 4 Moore, P. C. 314; The Unity, Swabey, 101; The Duke of Sussex, infra; The Hope, 1 W. Rob. 154; The Immaganda Sara Clasina, 7 Not. of Cas. 582.

Free and Close-hauled Ship—Rule in 1828.]—See Handayside v. Wilson, 3 Car. & P. 528.

Object of the Regulations.]—To prevent collisions and also to minimise their effect—per Lord Watson. The Khedive, Stoomvaart Maatschappy Nederland v. P. & O. Steam Navigation Co., 52 L. J., Adm. 1; 5 App. Cas. 876, 903; 43 L. T. 610; 29 W. R. 173; 4 Asp. M. C. 567—H. L. (E.)

How Construed.]—The regulations, being intended for seafaring people, are to be construed literally—per Jessel, M. R. The Libra, 6 P. D. 139, 142; 45 L. T. 161; 4 Asp. M. C. 429. And see The Margaret, 9 P. D. 47; The Dunelm, 53 L. J., Adm. 81; 9 P. D. 164; 51 L. T. 214; 32 W. R. 570; 5 Asp. M. C. 304; The Beryl, 53 L. J., Adm. 75; 9 P. D. 137; 51 L. T. 554; 33 W. R. 191; 5 Asp. M. C. 321.

Departure from the Regulations.]—See 2. PRESUMPTION OF FAULT, supra, cols. 707 seq., and Art. 27, infra, cols. 816 seq.

Application of the Regulations—Risk of Collision.]—The regulations apply before risk exists, if it is manifest that risk is about to arise. The Beryl, supra.

Cases where risk was held to exist. The Jesmond and The Earl of Elgin, 8 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 179; L. R. 4 P. C. 1; 25 L. T. 514; 1 Asp. M. C. 150; The Bougainville and The James C. Stevenson, L. R. 5 P. C. 316; 28 L. T. 822; 2 Asp. M. C. 1—P. C.; The Franconia, 2 P. D. 8; 35 L. T. 721; 25 W. R. 197; 3 Asp. M. C. 295—C. A.; The Seaton, 53 L. J., Adm. 15; 9 P. D. 1; 49 L. T. 747; 32 W. R. 600; 5 Asp. M. C. 191.

Case in which it was held not to exist (semble). The Banshee, 57 L. T. 841; 6 Asp. M. C. 221.

In an action for collision, where both vessels were held to blame for breach of the provisions of article 18, the court of appeal asked the nautical assessors the questions asked in The Beryl (53 L. J., Adm. 75; 9 P. D. 137), and upon their being answered in the negative dismissed the appeal. The Oporto, 66 L. J., Adm. 49; [1897] P. 249—C. A.

—— Narrowing of Lights.]—Where two steamships are approaching one another at sea in such a position as to pass in safety, the closing in and coming more into line of the masthead and a side light is not necessarily such an indication that the ship is altering her course so as to cause risk of collision and to impose upon the other ship the duty to obey article 18 of the regulations. The Albis, 73 L. T. 664; 8 Asp. M. C. 92.

—— What constitutes Risk of Collision.]—See The Mangerton, Swabey, 120; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 420; The Cleopatra, Swabey, 135; The Ericsson, Swabey, 38; The Duke of Sussex, 1 Not. of Cas. 161; 1 W. Rob. 274; The Dumfries, Swabey, 63, 125; 4 W. R. 708; The Rose, 2 W. Rob. 1.

The regulations only apply at a time when two vessels have approached so near to one another that, if either of them does anything contrary to the regulations, risk of collision will be involved. The Banshee, 57 L. T. 841; 6 Asp. M. C. 221—C. A.

The regulations are not applicable until the other ship's course and distance can with ordinary care be approximately ascertained. The Roma and The Ava, 2 Asp. M. C. 182; The James Watt, 2 W. Rob. 270; The Bougainville and The James C. Stevenson, L. R. 5 P. C. 316; 28 L. T. 822; 21 W. R. 653; 2 Asp. M. C. 1; The Great Eastern, 3 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 31; 11 L. T. 5.

Instantaneous Compliance.]—A steamship did not stop and reverse as soon as she might have done:—Held, that she was to blame, but that a reasonable time for compliance with the regulations must be allowed. The Emmy Haase, 53 L. J., Adm. 43; 9 P. D. 81; 50 L. T. 372; 32 W. R. 880; 5 Asp. M. C. 216; The Ngapoota, 66 L. J., P. C. 88; [1897] A. C. 391; infra, col. 818.

Alteration of Helm in Fog.]—An alteration of the helm in fog upon a guess as to the distance, course, and speed of the other ship is not necessarily negligence. The Vindomora, [1891] A. C. 1; 63 L. T. 749; 6 Asp. M. C. 569—C. A.

Alteration of Helm for Greater Safety.]—An alteration of the helm for greater safety where there is no risk of collision is not negligence. The Sylph, Swabey, 233; and see The Franconia, 2 P. D. 8; 35 L. T. 721; 25 W. R. 197; 3 Asp. M. C. 295—C. A.

Regulations must be obeyed in Time.]—If you adopt a measure at an improper time, it does not take away the culpability of not having done it before—per Dr. Lushington. The Stadacona, 5 Not. of Cas. 371.

Close Shaving.]—Is negligence. The John Brotherick, 8 Jur. 276; and see Cases supra, col. 700.

Regulations to be complied with until Ships Clear.]—A ship that by porting had apparently determined risk of collision held in fault for not stopping and reversing when the other ship by perverse starboarding created fresh risk. The Arratoon Apcar, 59 L. J., P. C. 49; 15 App. Cas. 37; 62 L. T. 331; 38 W. R. 481; 6 Asp. M. C. 491—P. C.

Practice Contrary to Regulations is Illegal.]—The Sylph, 2 Spinks, 75; The Unity, Swabey, 101; The Hand of Providence, Swabey, 107; The Black Prince, 15 Moore, P. C. 122; The Velocity, 6 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 263; 39 L. J., Adm. 20; L. R. 3 P. C. 44; 21 L. T. 686; 18 W. R. 264.

Darkness of Night no Excuse.]—Darkness of the night is no excuse for disobeying the rules of navigation. The Flint, 6 Not. of Cas. 271.

Sea Regulations applied in Thames.]—See The Cologne, 9 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 352; L. R. 4 P. C. 519; 27 L. T. 769; 21 W. R. 273; 1 Asp. M. C.

—— Foreign Ship in the Solent—Application of Statutory Rules of 1854.]—A foreign ship in the Solent within three miles of the coast is not subject to the rules of navigation contained in 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, ss. 296, 297, 298. The Saxonia, Lush. 410; 15 Moore, P. C. 262; 31 L. J., Adm. 201; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 315; 6 L. T. 6; 10 W. R. 431.

Course of Other Ship in Doubt.]—A ship should not alter her helm decisively so long as the course of the other ship is in doubt. The Bougainville and The James C. Stevenson, L. R. 5 P. C. 316; 28 L. T. 822; 21 W. R. 653; 2 Asp. M. C. 1; The James Watt, 2 W. Rob. 270.

b. Cases on the Regulations.

PRELIMINARY.

Scope of the Rules; Definitions; corresponding with Article 1 of the Regulations of 1880 and 1884.

Tug lying to.]—A tug at sea waiting for employment with her engines idle and her fires banked is "under steam," and must keep out of the way of a sailing ship. The Jennie S. Barker and The Spindrift, 44 L. J., Adm. 20; L. R. 4 A. & E. 456; 33 L. T. 318; 3 Asp. M. C. 82. (N.B. The tug in this case, though stated in the report to be "lying to," had no canvas set.—ED.)

A tug lying with her fires banked under jib and foresail, with her helm lashed, was run into by a steamship:—Held, the steamship alone to blame. The Helvetia, 3 Asp. M. C. 43, n.

ARTICLE 1.

Ships' Lights; corresponding with Article 2 of 1880 and 1884.

Old Law as to Lights.]—A brig held in fault for a collision caused by her having no light (1854). The Fairy, 1 Spinks, 298. S. P. (1858), The Calla, Swabey, 465.

Before the statutory regulations were in force it was not necessarily negligence in a ship to have no light. The Victoria, 3 W. Rob. 49; The Iron Duke, 2 W. Rob. 377; 4 Not. of Cas. 94; on appeal, 4 Not. of Cas. 585; The Londonderry, 4 Not. of Cas. Suppl. xxxi. But see as to a ship at anchor The Saxonia, Lush. 410; 15 Moore, P. C. 262; 31 L. J., Adm. 201; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 315; 6 L. T. 6; 10 W. R. 431.

Duty to replace Lights Carried Away.]—See The Saxonia, supra; The Aurora and The Robert Ingram, Lush. 327.

Lights being Trimmed—Out by Accident.]—It is no excuse for not carrying lights that they were being trimmed, or that they went out by accident. The C. M. Palmer and The Larnax, 29 L. T. 120; 21 W. R. 702; 2 Asp. M. C. 94; The Victoria, 3 W. Rob. 49; The Sylph, 2 Spinks, 75.

Lights Obscured by Steamship's Smoke.]—A steamship unnecessarily obscuring her lights with her own smoke is in fault. The Rona and The Ava, 29 L. T. 781; 2 Asp. M. C. 182.

Clear Night—is no excuse for not carrying lights. The City of London (or The London), Morgan v. Sim, Swabey, 245, 300; 11 Moore, P. C. 307; 5 W. R. 678.

Vessel casting off from Moorings.]—When a vessel casting off from moorings in a navigable river places herself at night partly athwart the fairway, so that her regulation lights cannot be seen by vessels astern of her coming up the river, she is bound to make use of some conspicuous signal to warn them of her position. The John Fenwick, 41 L. J., Adm. 38; L. R. 3 A. & E. 510; 26 L. T. 322; 1 Asp. M. C. 249.

A steamship which, in getting under way in the Thames to go up the river between sunset and sunrise, is compelled to go astern and partly athwart the river in order to get clear ahead, and whose regulation lights are not visible to vessels coming up the river, is bound to take every possible precaution to warn approaching vessels of her position, and to use the best light she has on board for that purpose. Ib.

Placing a service lantern, ordinarily used to give light in discharging the cargo, over the stern, is not a sufficient precaution. Ib.

A vessel neglecting such precaution commits a breach of the regulations, and will be held to blame if a collision ensues. Ib.

Vessel coming to Anchor.]—A steamer manœuvring to come to an anchor in a place and manner such that her regulation lights cannot be seen by an approaching vessel is bound to give timely notice of her presence by shewing a light or some other sufficient means. The Philotaxe, 37 L. T. 540; 3 Asp. M. C. 513.

Vessel Aground or Stationary.]—When a vessel is aground in a place where her ordinary riding light cannot be distinguished by approaching vessels, and where vessels are not expected to lie, it is her duty to exhibit a light on a mast or some elevated position, and to have a look-out to give warning to approaching vessels of her position by the best means in her power. The Thomas Lee, 35 L. T. 406; 3 Asp. M. C. 260.

Dumb-barge in Thames.]—In a cause of damage by collision in the Thames a dumb-barge:—Held, not bound to have exhibited a light. The Owen, Wallis, 43 L. J., Adm. 36; L. R. 4 A. & E. 175; 30 L. T. 41; 22 W. R. 695; 2 Asp. M. C. 206.

When a collision occurs between a dumb-barge without lights and a steamer on a dark night in the Thames, there is no presumption of law that the steamer is to blame. The Swallow, 36 L. T. 231; 3 Asp. M. C. 371—C. A.

Flare.]—A sailing vessel having a steamship approaching on her starboard bow at night, burnt flare-up lights to attract her attention:—Held, that the burning of a flare is not forbidden by the regulations of 1884; held further, that whether a vessel is to blame or not for shewing a flare-up light must depend upon whether or not the exhibition of the flare is calculated to mislead. The Merchant Prince, 54 L. J., Adm. 79; 10 P. D. 139; 53 L. T. 914; 34 W. R. 231; 5 Asp. M. C. 520.

ARTICLE 2.

(Steamships' Lights; corresponding with Article 3 of 1880 and 1884.)

Under Way.]—A vessel driven from her anchors by a gale of wind, and setting sail to get out to sea, is, even if wholly unmanageable, under way, and is bound to exhibit coloured lights. The George Arkle, Lush. 382.

A vessel with her anchor down, but not actually holden by and under the control of it, is under way within the meaning of the Admiralty Regulation of 1858, and is bound to exhibit coloured lights. The Esk and The Gitana, 38 L. J., Adm. 33; L. R. 2 A. & E. 350; 20 L. T. 587; 17 W. R. 1064.

A sailing ship hove to is under way. The London, supra; The James, Swabey, 60; 10 Moore, P. C. 162; 4 W. R. 353—P. C.; The Rosalie, 50 L. J., Adm. 3; 5 P. D. 243; 44 L. T. 32; 4 Asp. M. C. 384.

And a tug driving at sea and waiting for employment. The Jennie S. Barker and The Spindrift, supra, col. 787; but see The Helvetia, 3 Asp. M. C. 43, n.

A sailing barge dropping up the river stern foremost, assisted by her anchor ahead, held not to be a "sailing vessel under way" within the Thames rules, and so not required to carry side lights. The Indian Chief, 58 L. J., Adm. 25; 14 P. D. 24; 60 L. T. 240; 6 Asp. M. C. 362.

Presumption of Fault.]—When a collision occurs at night, and the lights of one of the ships are not burning at the time when the vessels come in sight, and the court is not satisfied that the want of those lights is occasioned by circumstances over which the crew of the ship had no control, she must, even if the want of the lights did not contribute to the collision, be held to blame under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 85), s. 17. The Hibernia, 31 L. T. 805; 24 W. R. 60; 2 Asp. M. C. 454.

Trinity Ballast Lighters.]—A lighter of sixty tons burthen was proceeding under sail in the Thames, above Gravesend, at night, without any light being exhibited on board her, and came into collision with a steam vessel. In a suit instituted on behalf of the owners of the lighter to recover in respect of the damage done to the lighter by reason of the collision, it was proved that the lighter was ordinarily employed in the river, and was not a sea-going vessel:—Held, that the sea regulations did not impose upon the lighter any obligation to carry any light, and that the lighter was not to blame for having no light. The C. S. Butler, L. R. 4 A. & E. 238; 31 L. T. 549; 23 W. R. 113; 2 Asp. M. C. 237.

Infringement of Regulations as to Lights.]—A trawler with a bright light at her masthead, contrary to the regulations, held not in fault for collision, the other ship not having in fact seen it. The Chusan, 53 L. T. 60; 5 Asp. M. C. 476.

—— Previously to 36 & 37 Vict. c. 85, s. 17.]—The Emperor and The Lady of the Lake, Holt's Rule of the Road. 37; The Bougainville and The James C. Stevenson, infra.

A vessel not shewing a light as required by law held under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 79, s. 28, not to be in fault for a collision where the absence of the light did not contribute to the collision. The Panther, 1 Spinks, 31.

Dumb-barge.]—A screw steamship had just come out of the Regent's Canal Dock, in the river Thames, before daylight on a December morning, when she came into collision with a dumb-barge which was drifting up the river with the flood tide, and without having any light exhibited:—Held, that the steamship might, under the circumstances, have kept out of the way of the barge, and that she ought to have done so, and that she was alone to blame for the collision. The Owen Wallis, 43 L. J., Adm. 36; L. R. 4 A. & E. 175; 30 L. T. 41; 22 W. R. 695; 2 Asp. M. C. 206.

Position and Exhibition.]—A barque's sidelights were so placed in the mizzen rigging that the centre of the lights did not project beyond the gunwale. They were two feet six inches within the broadest part of the vessel, and at a distance of more than 350 feet with the masts in line they could not be seen from a window forty feet above the deck of another vessel:—Held, not to be a sufficient compliance with the regulations as to lights. The Germania, 37 L. J., Adm. 59; 19 L. T. 20. Affirmed on appeal, 21 L. T. 44—P. C.

The law does not appoint any particular place at which the lights should be fixed, but they ought to be placed so as to be properly visible. The Bougainville and The James C. Stevenson, Beal v. Marchais, L. R. 5 P. C. 316; 28 L. T. 822; 21 W. R. 653; 2 Asp. M. C. 1.

Lamps duly screened and fixed on stands secured to the paul-bitts of the windlass are not placed in a proper position, as required by the regulations of 1863. The Gustav, 9 L. T. 547.

Lights Obscured—Effect of—Duty of Vessels.]—The Bougainville and The James C. Stevenson, Beal v. Marchais, supra.

Where the light of one vessel was invisible, the vessel was not previously to 36 & 37 Vict. c. 85, s. 17, on that account held to have contributed to the collision where the other vessel pursued a course which produced the collision. Ib.

When a steamship is approaching a sailing ship, and does not know what course the other ship is pursuing, it is her duty (whether the lights of the other vessel are visible or not) to take no decisive movement until she can ascertain it. Ib.

When a steamer sights a sailing vessel in the night-time at a distance of three miles, but, owing to the fact that the sailing vessel's lights are not visible, cannot ascertain the course of the sailing vessel, it is the duty of the steamer to slacken speed and wait to ascertain that course before adopting any decided manœuvre for the purpose of avoiding the sailing vessel. If the steamer immediately on sighting the sailing vessel adopts such a manœuvre, as by porting, and a collision ensues without fault on the part of the sailing vessel, the steamer is alone to blame. Ib.

When a steamship is approaching another, whose exact course cannot be at once ascertained by reason of her lights being obscured by her own smoke, it is the duty of the former to slacken speed and to wait till that course is ascertained before taking any decided step to avoid the other vessel; if, before having ascertained the exact course of the other, she, without slackening speed, executes a manœuvre which, although appearing to be right at the time, contributes to the collision, she will be to blame. The Rona, The Ava, 29 L. T. 781 ; 2 Asp. M. C. 182—P. C.

It is negligence on the part of a steamer to go at full speed under steam and sail before the wind whilst her smoke is blown over her bows so as to obscure her lights, and to prevent her from seeing and from being seen by other ships approaching from an opposite direction. Ib.

A steamer seeing a ship's lights close ahead of her, and being unable to make out the lights or the course of the ship carrying them, should slacken speed until she is able to ascertain the meaning of the lights, and so be able to avoid the vessel carrying them. The Fanny M. Carvill, 44 L. J., Adm. 34 ; 13 App. Cas. 455, n. ; 32 L. T. 646 ; 24 W. R. 62 ; 2 Asp. M. C. 565.

See further, as to the effect of obscuration of lights, The Duke of Buccleugh, [1891] A. C. 310 ; 65 L. T. 422 ; 7 Asp. M. C. 68—H. L. (E.) ; The Hermod, 62 L. T. 670 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 509.

Lights Shifted — Tempestuous Weather — Partially Obscured.]—A brig of 239 tons, beating to windward, encountered such weather as to render it justifiable that her side-lights should be removed from the place where they were usually carried to the after-part of the ship near the taffrail. In this latter position the lights were so placed as to be obscured to the extent of a point, or a point and a half, on either bow. The brig came into collision with a barque on the opposite tack :—Held, that the circumstances of the case, while justifying the shifting of the lights, did not justify their being obscured as above mentioned, and that the brig be deemed to be in default under the 17th section of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1873. The Tirzah, 48 L. J., Adm. 15 ; 4 P. D. 33 ; 39 L. T. 547 ; 27 W. R. 584 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 55.

Effect of Non-exhibition of Lights.]—In a cause of collision between a steamship and a sailing vessel, occasioned by the fault of the steamship, it was proved that the sailing vessel had failed to comply with the regulations regarding lights, having either shewn no lights, as she was bound, or if she had any lights, that the lights could not be seen till the collision was too imminent for prevention :—Held, that the collision might have been avoided if the sailing vessel had obeyed the regulations, and that though the omission to exhibit proper lights might be immaterial where it is clearly shewn that the absence of such lights was not the cause of the collision, and did not conduce to it, yet where it is proved that a vessel has not shewn proper lights the onus lies on such vessel to shew that the non-compliance with the regulations was not the cause of the collision, which the sailing vessel failed to do. The Fenham, 6 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 501 ; L. R. 3 P. C. 212 ; 23 L. T. 329.

Light Extinguished.]—A steamship (in 1849) held in fault for a collision caused by one of her side-lights being extinguished. The Rob Roy, 3 W. Rob. 190.

Seagoing Ship — Thames Sailing Ballast Lighter.] — A Trinity House sailing ballast lighter held not to be a seagoing ship required by the regulations to carry lights. The C. S. Butler, L. R. 4 A. & E. 238 ; 31 L. T. 549 ; 23 W. R. 113 ; 2 Asp. M. C. 408.

Ship dredging with Anchor—Side-lights.]—A vessel dredging with her anchor down is not required to carry side-lights. The Smyrna, cited Lush. 385.

Sailing Vessel towing Another.]—A brigantine with a cutter towing astern came into collision with another ship, in the Bristol Channel, after dark. The brigantine had the regulation side-lights exhibited, but the cutter had only a white light exhibited at her masthead. The brigantine was sailing close-hauled on the starboard tack, whilst the other ship was going free : —Held, that the regulations as to lights had been infringed by the cutter, and that the vessel towing her was to be deemed in fault for the collision by virtue of the provisions of the 17th section of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1873. The Mary Hounsell, 48 L. J., Adm. 54 ; 4 P. D. 204 ; 40 L. T. 368.

Wrong Lights—Presumption of Negligence.] —A ship carrying her side-lights with screens shorter than required by the regulations is not to be deemed in fault if the shortness of the screens could not by any possibility have contributed to the collision. The Fanny M. Carvill, 44 L. J., Adm. 34 ; 13 App. Cas. 455, n. ; 32 L. T. 646 ; 24 W. R. 62 ; 2 Asp. M. C. 569—P. C.

Where two ships incurred damage in a collision, and it was found that one of them was to blame for improper navigation, and that the other had infringed the regulations with respect to lights :—Held, that, in the absence of proof that such infringement could not possibly have contributed to the collision, the damage must be divided according to the ordinary rule of the court of admiralty. The Fanny M. Carvill, supra, approved. The Hochung, The Lapwing, China Merchants' S. N. Co. v. Bignold, 51 L. J., Adm. 92 ; 7 App. Cas. 512 ; 47 L. T. 485 ; 31 W. R. 303 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 39—P. C.

Absence of Lights—No Evidence that it contributed to Collision.]—An action for damages by collision in the Thames was brought by the owners of a barge against the owners of a steamer. The steamer had been obliged to alter her course in order to avoid another barge, and the barge with which the collision took place was last of three in tow of a tug, and did not carry a light as directed by the rules of the Thames conservancy ; but there was no evidence that the want of a light contributed to the collision :—Held, that the steamer was not to blame, and that she might have acted differently if the barge had carried a light. The action was dismissed without costs ; but semble that in successful admiralty appeals the appellants will have the costs of the appeal. The Swansea v. The Condor, 48 L. J., Adm. 33 ; 4 P. Ships not under Command ; corresponding with Article 5 of 1880 and 1884.

Steamship making Five Knots.]—The steamship "P. Caland," owing to an accident to her machinery, was making way at a speed of between four and five knots, instead of her normal speed of eleven knots; she could be steered, but could not reverse as easily as before the accident. She was carrying the three red lights in place of the white light:—Held, that under the above circumstances the "P. Caland" could not be said to have been "not under command" within the meaning of the Regulations. The P. Caland, The P. Caland and Freight (Owners) v. Glamorgan Steamship Co., 62 L. J., Adm. 41; [1893] A. C. 207; 1 R. 138; 68 L. T. 469; 7 Asp. M. C. 317—H.L. (E.)

Ship parted from Anchor.]—A ship parted her cable in a gale, drove over a sand, and came into collision with another to leeward. She had no red light exhibited:—Held, that there was no statutory presumption of fault. The Buckhurst, 51 L. J., Adm. 10; 6 P. D. 132; 46 L. T. 108; 30 W. R. 232; 4 Asp. M. C. 484.

Steamship Riding by Chains — Anchors unshackled.]—Where a steamship has become unmanageable and is riding head to wind by her chains with anchors unshackled, it is her duty to exhibit the three red lights prescribed by Article 5 (a) of 1884, and to keep her steam up in order that she may immediately be brought under control should the necessity arise. The Faedrelandet, 64 L. Trawler's Lights.]—A trawler carrying a white light at the masthead, as well as sidelights, infringes the regulations of 1884. The Chusan, 53 L. T. 60; 5 Asp. M. C. 476.

A French trawler and a schooner were in collision before sunrise. The trawler was about about to shoot her net, and had a white light at her masthead and no sidelights:—Held, that the trawler had not complied with the regulations of 1863. The Englishman, 47 L. J., Adm. 9; 3 P. D. 181; 37 L. T. 412; 3 Asp. M. C. 506.

A trawler going over the ground at the rate of a quarter of a knot in the hour with her trawl down held not in fault (under article 9 of the regulations of 1863) for exhibiting a bright white light only. The Edith, Ir. R. 10 Eq. 345.

Trawler at Work.]—A steam trawler, whilst engaged in trawling at the rate of two and a half knots an hour through the water and four and a half knots an hour over the ground, carrying a single white light, was run down by the "D.": it being admitted that the "D." was to blame, the question arose whether the trawler was not also to blame for not carrying sidelights:—Held, that the trawler was also to blame, since she was a vessel under way, and therefore subject to article 3 of 1880, and not to article 9 of 1863:—Held, on appeal, that the decision was right; but on the ground that though the trawler was one of a class of vessels within article 9 of 1863, she, in order to be "stationary" within the meaning of that article, was bound not to go faster than was necessary to keep herself under command whilst fishing, and that as her speed was greater than was necessary for so doing, she was, at the time of the collision, within article 3 of the regulations of 1880. The Dunelm, 53 L. J., Adm. 81; 9 P. D. 164; 51 L. T. 214; 32 W. R. 970; 5 Asp. M. C. 304—C. A. And see The Edith, supra.

A sailing vessel engaged in trawling is not bound to exhibit to an approaching vessel the red pyrotechnic lights required by the order in council of the 24th of June, 1885, unless there is risk of collision. The Orion, 60 L. J., Adm. 90; [1891] P. 307; 65 L. T. 500; 7 Asp. M. C. 88.

By article 10 (d) of 1884 "if a vessel when fishing becomes stationary, in consequence of her gear getting fast to a rock or other obstruction, she shall shew the light and make the fog signal for a vessel at anchor":—Held, that the rule is applicable although the weather, when the vessel becomes stationary, is clear. The Warwick, 15 P. D. 189; 63 L. T. 561; 6 Asp. M. C. 545.

The plaintiff's steam trawler, above twenty tons register, while fishing with the trawl down in the night and going at the rate of one and a half knots an hour, came in collision with the defendants' sailing ship. The trawler was carrying a lantern in front of her foremast head, shewing a white, green, and red light, and about six or seven feet below it a white light, according to order in council of December 30th 1884. The trawler did not attempt to get out of the way of the sailing ship:—Held, that the trawler was not to blame for the collision; that article 17 of 1884 did not apply, inasmuch as there were "special circumstances," within the meaning of article 23 which authorised a departure from article 17, that by carrying the lights which she did, she apprised other vessels that she was not able to get out of the way, for such lights as she carried were the regular lights of steam vessels engaged in trawling which are not bound by the requirements of article 17. The Tweedsdale, 58 L. J., Adm. 41; 14 P. D. 164; 61 L. T. 371; 37 W. R. 783; 6 Asp. M. C. 430.

Row Boat at Anchor.]—"Open boat" in article 10 (f) (of the Regulations of 1884) held not to apply to a boat propelled entirely by oars. Carse v. North British Steam Packet Co., 22 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 475.

A fishing boat, in 1862, held, under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, not to be required to carry the statutory lights; but held to be in fault for not shewing a light. The Olivia, Lush. 497; 6 L. T. 398.

ARTICLE 10.

Overtaken Ship; Stern Light; corresponding with Article 11 of 1880 and 1884.

Stern Light — Law previous to 1880.] — Although a ship is, under some circumstances, bound to keep a look-out astern, and to shew a light or to give a signal to another ship overtaking her, and evidently unable to see her, nevertheless, where a steamer going at a high rate of speed in a fair way overtakes a sailing ship shewing no light or signal, and does not see her until too near to avoid a collision, although keeping a good look-out, the steamer will be held alone to blame, if a lower rate of speed would have given the steamer time to avoid the collision upon sighting the sailing ship. The Earl Spencer, 33 L. T. 235; 3 Asp. M. C. 4—P. C.

On a dark morning before daybreak in October, a small schooner with a crew of only four men was beating up into the outer harbour of Holyhead when she was run into from behind and sunk by a large paddle-wheel steamer which was entering the harbour at a speed of between ten and eleven knots. To recover for the damage sustained in the collision a cause of damage was brought by the owners of the schooner against the steamer:—Held, first, that the steamer was to blame for entering the harbour at too great a speed. Ib.

Held, also, that under the circumstances of the case the exhibition of a stern light was not obligatory on the schooner, and that the steamer was alone to blame for the collision. Ib.

It is primâ facie the duty of an overtaking ship to keep out of the way of a ship ahead of her; but if the latter ship sees another approaching her from a direction where her lights are not visible, and which vessel she had reason to suppose does not, in fact, whether keeping a good look-out or not, see her, and is likely to come into collision with her, it is her duty to give some warning to the overtaking ship, not necessarily by exhibiting a light, but by some signal, such as the firing of a gun, the shewing a light, or otherwise, which will indicate her whereabouts to the overtaking ship, and call the attention of that ship to the danger of a collision. The Anglo-Indian, 33 L. T. 233; 23 W. R. 882; 3 Asp. M. C. 1—P. C.

Where one vessel during the night time is overtaking another within the meaning of article 17 of 1863, although the leading vessel may be in such a position that the following vessel cannot see the regulation lights of the leading vessel, the latter is not bound, under ordinary circumstances, to give a signal or shew a light to the following vessel. The Chanonry and The Leverington, 42 L. J., Adm. 58; 28 L. T. 284; 1 Asp. M. C. 569.

A vessel, unless there is apparent danger, is not guilty of negligence in not shewing a light to a vessel following her. The City of Brooklyn, 1 P. D. 276; 34 L. T. 932; 24 W. R. 1056; 3 Asp. M. C. 230—C. A.

Apart from the regulations, it is a proper measure for a ship being overtaken at night to shew a light to the overtaking vessel. The Hannah Park and The Lena, 14 L. T. 675. And see The John Fenwick, 41 L. J., Adm. 38; L. R. 3 A. & E. 500; 26 L. T. 322; 1 Asp. M. C. 249.

Law Subsequent to 1880 — Character and Position of Stern Light.]—Article 11 of 1884—which directs that a ship being overtaken by another shall shew from her stern to such last-mentioned ship a white light, or a flare-up light—is infringed if such light is carried in any way other than is necessary to warn overtaking vessels. Where therefore such light is so placed or carried as to be visible over part of the area of a side-light it must be taken that there is a breach of article 11. The Palinurus, 57 L. J., Adm. 21; 37 W. R. 266—C. A. Affirming 13 P. D. 14; 58 L. T. 533; 36 W. R. 768; 6 Asp. M. C. 271; but see Ib., as to 36 & 37 Vict. c. 65, s. 17—C. A.

In an action for collision it appeared that one of a pair of ordinary binnacle lamps in the plaintiff's vessel was temporarily removed from its place and used as a stern light:—Held, that in the absence of affirmative evidence of its efficiency on the particular occasion it could not be deemed to be such a light as is required by article 11 of 1884. The Patroclus, 13 P. D. 54; 58 L. T. 774; 36 W. R. 928; 6 Asp. M. C. 285.

A smack with her trawl down had a globular white light exhibited from her weather crosstree partially hidden from overtaking vessels by her sails, and did not exhibit any other white light or flare-up to an overtaking steamer:—Held, that this was an infringement of article 11 of 1884. The Pacific, 53 L. J., Adm. 67; 9 P. D. 124; 51 L. T. 127; 33 W. R. 124; 5 Asp. M. C. 263.

Binnacle Light not sufficient.] — The provisions of article 11 of 1880, that a ship being overtaken by another shall shew from her stern a light, are not complied with where the only light astern is the binnacle light in the binnacle. The Breadalbane, 7 P. D. 186; 46 L. T. 204; 4 Asp. M. C. 505.

Fixed Stern Light.]—The "D.," in tow of a steam-tug, was exhibiting from her stern a fixed bright light, when she was run into by the "S.," which was overtaking her. There were a great many vessels in the vicinity, some of which had overtaken and passed the "D.," and others were overtaking her :—Held, that in these circumstances it was not an infringement of the regulations of 1884 to carry a fixed stern light. The Stakesby, 59 L. J., Adm. 72 ; 15 P. D. 166 ; 63 L. T. 115 ; 39 W. R. 80 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 532.

The stern light is (1880) not required to be fixed. See The Breadalbane, infra, col. 807.

It is a breach of article 11 (of 1884) to carry the stern light fixed. The Imbro, infra.

How long to be Exhibited.]—A smack being overtaken by a steamship shewed a stern light until risk of collision had apparently determined. The steamship then altered her helm and a collision followed :—Held, that the smack was not in fault. The Reiher, 45 L. T. 767 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 478 (overruled in The Main, infra).

The stern light must be shewn not once and for a short time only, but from time to time while the ship is "being overtaken" within the meaning of the article. The Essequibo, 57 L. J., Adm. 29 ; 13 P. D. 51 ; 58 L. T. 596 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 276.

One exhibition of a flare-up light by a vessel which is being overtaken by another is not a sufficient compliance with article 11 of 1884, but the light should be exhibited from time to time so long as there continues to be an overtaking vessel. The Essequibo, supra, approved. The Basset Hound, 6 R. 764 ; 71 L. T. 12 ; 7 Asp. M. C. 467—C. A.

Overtaking Ship, what is.]—An overtaking vessel within the meaning of article 11 is one which is approaching another from aft, and is more than two points abaft the beam of the foremost ship. The Imbro, 58 L. J., Adm. 49 ; 14 P. D. 73 ; 60 L. T. 936 ; 37 W. R. 559 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 392.

Where one of two ships is abaft the beam of the other in such a position that the hinder ship cannot see the sidelights of the leading ship, and the former is going at a greater speed than the latter, and getting nearer to her, the latter is a "ship which is being overtaken by another" within the meaning of article 11 of 1884, even though the hinder ship broadens on her quarter ; and she is in such circumstances bound to shew a stern light in sufficient time to enable the other, by the exercise of reasonable precautions, to avoid risk of collision. The Main, 55 L. J., Adm. 70 ; 11 P. D. 132 ; 55 L. T. 15 ; 34 W. R. 678 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 37 —C. A.

Fog Signals ; corresponding with Article 12 of 1880 and 1884.

Sailing Vessel in Stays—Fog-horn.]—Where a sailing vessel is tacking in a fog, she is not relieved during the manœuvre from giving the signals prescribed by article 12 of 1884, and it is her duty until she gets the wind on to the side other than that on which she had had it to treat herself as still on the same tack on which she was when she began to go about and to make the prescribed signal, and only to change that signal when she gets the wind on the other side. The Constantia, 62 L. Mechanical Fog-horn.]—A barque provided only with a mouth fog-horn came into collision during a fog with a steamship. The fog-horn was duly sounded before the collision, and was heard by those on board the steamship, and those on board the steamship neglected for some time after they heard the fog-horn to stop or reverse the engines. The steamship was held to blame. The barque was held to be deemed in fault for not using a fog-horn to be sounded by mechanical means, as required by article 12 of 1880. The circumstance that the barque left the port a few days before the regulations came into force was held not to afford any valid excuse for the neglect of those in charge of her to furnish her with a fog-horn to be sounded by mechanical means. The Love Bird, 6 P. D. 80; 44 L. T. 650; 4 Asp. M. C. 427. See also The Pennsylvania and The Steamship Westphalia, infra.

Accident to Mechanical Fog-horn.]—Where the mechanical fog-horn of a sailing ship breaks down, and a mouth-horn is made use of in its place, the departure from the regulations is necessary, and the vessel is not to blame. The Chilian, 45 L. T. 623; 4 Asp. M. C. 478.

Fog-bank—Ship concealed in.]—In the neighbourhood of a fog-bank in which other ships may be hidden, it is the duty of a vessel to sound her fog-horn, though not in the fog herself. The Milanese, 45 L. T. 151; 4 Asp. M. C. 218, 438—H. L. (E). The N. Strong, [1892] P. 105; 67 L. T. 299; 7 Asp. M. C. 194, infra, col. 801.

Vessel at Anchor—Bell.]—A vessel at anchor in the Mersey held in fault for a collision with a ferry steamship in a fog, caused by her not ringing her bell. The North American and The Wild Rose, 14 L. T. 68.

Thames Barge in Fault for not ringing Bell.]—See The Blue Bell, infra, col. 835.

Old Law.]—Apart from the regulations, it is the duty of a ship in a fog to sound her fog-horn. The Carron, 1 Spinks, 91.

ARTICLE 16.

Speed in Fogs; corresponding with Article 13 of 1880 and 1884.

Whistle heard ahead—Duty of Steamer—Speed.]—A steamship, the "D.," in a dense fog off Ushant, proceeding at slow speed, heard a whistle about three points on her starboard bow; the whistle was repeated several times and answered by the "D." In about a quarter of an hour from the first sound of the whistle the steamship "E." appeared about a length from the "D." crossing from starboard to port. The engines of the "D." were reversed full speed, but a collision occurred. The court having held both ships to blame, the owners of the "D." appealed:—Held, by the court of appeal, that the "D." was also to blame, for she should have been brought to as complete a standstill as possible, without getting out of command, at an early period after the first sound of the whistle, and should have also stopped and reversed sooner. The Dordogne, 54 L. J., Adm. 29; 10 P. D. 6; 51 L. T. 650; 33 W. R. 360; 5 Asp. M. C. 328—C. A.

Where two steamships, invisible to each other by reason of a thick fog, find themselves gradually approaching each other until they are within a few ships' length of each other, each of them ought at once to stop and reverse her engines in compliance with article 18 (of 1884), unless the whistle of the other clearly indicates that she is upon such a course that she will pass clear without involving risk of collision, or unless there are circumstances which make it impossible or dangerous to stop and reverse the engines. The Ceto, 14 App. Cas. 670; 62 L. T. 1; 6 Asp. M. C. 479—H. L. (E.)

And see further as to the duty of steamships in fog, article 23, post, cols. 816, seq.

A collision happened between the steamship "I." and the barque "Z." in a fog. It was proved that the "I." had reduced her speed so far as was possible without stopping her way altogether:—Held, that she had not infringed article 13 of 1880. The Zadok, 53 L. J., Adm. 72; 9 P. D. 114; 50 L. T. 695; 32 W. R. 1003; 5 Asp. M. C. 252.

It is the duty of those who have charge of a steamship in motion during a dense fog on first hearing the whistle of a steamship in such close proximity to them that risk of collision between the two vessels is involved, to bring their vessel immediately to a standstill on the water, and not execute any manœuvre with their helm until they have definitely ascertained the position and course of the other ship. The Kirby Hall, 52 L. J., Adm. 31; 8 P. D. 71; 48 L. T. 797; 31 W. R. 658; 5 Asp. M. C. 90.

If an officer in charge of a vessel in a fog hears a whistle ahead, he must act sooner than if it is heard from any other quarter, and on the probability that the vessel which is sounding the whistle is coming towards him—Per Lord Esher, M.R. The Ebor, 11 P. D. 25; 54 L. T. 200; 34 W. R. 448; 5 Asp. M. C. 560.

A steamship, navigating in a fog at a moderate speed, hearing a whistle sounded many times, indicating that a steamer was approaching her, and had come very near to her, so near that if the vessels had then been stopped they would have been within hailing distance, is bound, under the 16th article, not only to stop the motion of her engines, but to reverse them, so as to stop the motion of the vessel, and ought not to wait until the vessels sight each other, when such a manœuvre may be too late. The Frankland and The Kestrel, Morton v. Hutchinson, 9 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 365; L. R. 4 P. C. 529; 27 L. T. 633; 1 Asp. M. C. 489.

In a dense fog it is the duty of a steam vessel to anchor as soon as circumstances will permit. The Otter, L. R. 4 A. & E. 203; 30 L. T. 43; 22 W. R. 557. The Girolamo, 3 Hag. Adm. 169.

A steam vessel proceeding, though at a moderate speed, under steam, in a dense fog, after she had reached a proper anchorage-ground:—Held, to blame for so doing. Ib.

Where an officer in charge of a steamship in a dense fog hears a whistle apparently two or three points on the bow, but cannot be sure of the bearing within a point or two, and does not know the heading of the vessel whistling, it is his duty to diminish the speed of his vessel to the utmost to give him time to ascertain the manœuvres of the other vessel, and for that purpose he must either reduce the speed until the engines are only just moving, or he must stop them, but he need not necessarily continue to keep them stopped, but only sufficiently to diminish his way, and when he is beginning to lose steerage way, then, and only then, may put them on again, but as slowly as is possible. The fact of a steam-whistle alleged to have been blown in a fog not being heard by those on approaching ship is not necessarily proof that there was a bad look-out on the approaching ship, as the direction in which and the distance from which the sound would be heard is uncertain. The Rosetta, 59 L. T. 342; 6 Asp. M. C. 310.

A sailing vessel in tow of a tug and a steamship were approaching one another in a fog. The captain of the steamship heard a whistle five points on his starboard bow, and two minutes later, he heard a second whistle which he considered to be broader on his starboard bow and still a considerable distance off. He kept on, and after that heard another whistle more ahead, whereupon he stopped and reversed his engines, and gave three blasts. He then saw the other vessels about a hundred yards off, and a collision took place, and the sailing vessel sank. Jeune, P., decided that the sailing vessel alone was to blame:—Held, applying the rule laid down by the house of lords in The Ceto (14 App. Cas. 670), that the captain of the steamship ought to have stopped on hearing the second whistle, inasmuch as he had failed to prove (the burden of proof being on him) that there were indications of such a kind as would lead a seaman of reasonable care and skill to the conclusion that the vessels would pass well clear of one another without danger of collision, and that, under the circumstances, both vessels were to blame. The Knarwater, 63 L. J., Adm. 65; 6 R. 784—C. A.

Duty of Steamer before entering Fog.]—A collision occurred between a steamer and a sailing vessel, about five to six miles S.W. of the Longships in the English Channel. Immediately before the collision the steamer was proceeding S.W. b. S. at the rate of eight or nine knots, and approaching a bank of fog, in which the sailing ship was, but did not sound her whistle, or reduce her speed. The sailing vessel (a barque) was heading N.N.W. with a moderate south-easterly breeze of between three and four, and, under all plain sail, except her mainsail, spanker and light sails, was making about four knots an hour. In an action of damage by collision:—Held, that the steamer was to blame for excessive speed, and that, though it was not an infraction of the terms of articles 12 (a), 13, of 1884, she ought, as a matter of precaution, to have whistled on approaching the fog, and also to have reduced her speed:—Held, also, that the sailing vessel had not infringed article 13, as, considering the locality, she was not proceeding at a rate of speed beyond what was necessary to keep her well under command. The N. Strong, [1892] P. 105; 67 L. T. 299; 7 Asp. M. C. 194.

Alteration of Helm.]—Where those in charge of a steamship in a dense fog hear the whistle of another steamship on either bow, but not so broad that they may reasonably infer that she will clear their vessel, they ought not to manœuvre with the helm before seeing the other vessel. Ib.

The plaintiffs' vessel, while proceeding in a dense fog, heard the whistle of the defendants' vessel about three and a half points on her starboard bow, and thereupon starboarded her helm. A collision, however, occurred, as the defendants' vessel struck her on her starboard quarter:—Held, that, under the circumstances, the plaintiffs' vessel was not to blame for starboarding her helm. There is no general rule that a vessel when proceeding in a fog is not entitled to act with her helm, but that each case must depend upon the special circumstances. The Vindomora, 14 P. D. 172; 38 W. R. 69—C. A. And see The Kirby Hall, supra.

"Moderate Speed"—Steamship.]—The officer in charge of a steamer on hearing a whistle almost right ahead should reduce her speed to as low a rate as possible, only keeping her under command; by omitting to do so he had not gone at a "moderate" speed within the meaning of article 13 of 1880. The Dordogne, supra, col. 799, commented on—per Lord Esher, M.R. The Ebor, supra, col. 800.

"Moderate speed" in a river of narrow channel means that a vessel shall be brought nearly to a standstill, whether the whistle or foghorn of another vessel is heard or not; but in the open sea the article need not be so strictly construed, unless a whistle or foghorn is heard—per Brett, M.R. The Dordogne, supra.

A collision happened between the steamship "I." and the barge "Z." in a fog. It was proved that the "Z." was proceeding at more than four knots an hour:—Held, an infringement of article 13 of 1880, for the term "moderate speed" means that a vessel is to reduce her speed so far as she can consistently with keeping steerage way. The Zadok, 53 L. J., Adm. 72; 9 P. D. 114; 50 L. T. 695; 32 W. R. 1003; 5 Asp. M. C. 252.

A steamship going twelve and a half knots during fog in mid-ocean held in fault. The Europa, 14 Jur. 627.

If a steamer in a fog cannot reduce her speed sufficiently to comply with article 13 of 1884 without occasionally stopping her engines, it is the duty of those in charge of her to stop them. The Resolution, 60 L. T. 430; 6 Asp. M. C. 363. Cf. The Rosetta, 59 L. T. 342; 6 Asp. M. C. 310.

A steamer going at the rate of seven knots an hour ran into a barque. The collision occurred in the Atlantic Ocean, in the direct line to New York, about 200 miles to the east of Sandy Hook. There was at the time a thick fog, and the barque was not seen till within a ship's length of the steamer. The barque, though hove-to, was making headway at the rate of about a mile an hour. A bell was frequently sounded on board the barque, but no foghorn was used:—Held, that the steamer was alone to blame for the collision, because she was going at an improper rate of speed, and because wrong and contradictory orders were given after the barque was sighted. The Pennsylvania, 23 L. T. 55—P. C.

The rate of speed proper for a steamer must depend on circumstances, but in a thick fog and at a part of the ocean where frequently a great number of vessels are congregated, seven knots an hour is too great. Ib.

The barque was wrong in not using a foghorn as required by the admiralty regulations; but though a foghorn would have been heard further than a bell, yet the neglect to use a foghorn was not the cause of the vessels coming into the position which caused the collision. Ib.

When a steamship bound to the westward in the English Channel, when off the Caskets, and ten miles therefrom, was running at a speed of eight or nine knots an hour in a dense fog:—Held, that the rate of speed was unlawful. The Westphalia (Steamship), 24 L. T. 75; 1 Asp. M. C. 12.

A steamer in a dense fog is bound to go as slow as it is possible for her to go and maintain steerage way. Ib.

In the locality mentioned the omission of a sailing vessel in a dense fog to sound her foghorn until she heard the whistle of a steamer quite near, was great neglect on her part. The horn should be continually sounded from the moment fog sets in. Ib.

Four to five knots an hour is not a moderate speed for a steamer in a thick fog in the Baltic twenty-five miles east of Gothland. The Magna Charta, 25 L. T. 512; 1 Asp. M. C. 193—P. C.

Apart from the regulations, excessive speed in fog is negligence. The Juliet Erskine, 6 Not. of Cas. 633. The Lord Saumarez, 6 Not. of Cas. 600 —— Sailing Ship.]—What is a "moderate speed" for a sailing ship in a fog depends on the place where the ship happens to be and her handiness, and is not necessarily proportioned to or less than the maximum speed she can make under the circumstances. A speed of about five knots in the case of a sailing ship out in the Atlantic Ocean is a "moderate speed," and, in compliance with this rule, the sailing ship being at the time under all plain sail, and going as fast as she can with the wind on her quarter. The Elysia, 46 L. T. 840; 4 Asp. M. C. 540—C. A.

When a ship in tow of a steam-tug and in charge of a duly licensed pilot who has the control of both vessels, is navigating a river in a fog so dense that the banks of the river cannot be seen, and those on board the tug and ship in tow do not know in what direction they are going, it is negligence on the part of both vessels to proceed. Smith v. St. Lawrence Tow-boat Co., L. R. 5 P. C. 308; 28 L. T. 885; 21 W. R. 569; 2 Asp. M. C. 41.

A barque with nearly all sail set, going five knots in a frequented part of the English Channel in a fog, held in fault under article 13 of 1884. Ferry-boat running in Fog.]—A ferry steamship has no right to get under way in thick weather when she can do so only with risk to other ships. The North American and The Wild Rose, 14 L. T. 68, 547. S. P., The Perth, 3 Hag. Adm. 414. The Victoria, 3 W. Rob. 49.

—— Knowledge of Vessels in Track.]—A steam ferry-boat started in a dense fog to cross a navigable river, those in charge of her having been informed that vessels were anchored in or near her track. The ferry-boat, although navigated with all ordinary care, ran into and damaged a ship at anchor:—Held, that the ferry-boat was to blame. The Lancashire, L. R. 4 A. & E. 198; 29 L. T. 927; 2 Asp. Speed when passing through Fishing Grounds.]—A sailing ship going six and a half knots over fishing ground on a very dark night held in fault for collision with a trawler. The Pepperell, Swabey, 12.

Running through Roadstead.]—A vessel is not justified in running through a crowded roadstead in thick fog. See The Victoria, 3 W. Rob. 49; The George, 4 Not. of Cas. 161; The Lochlibo, 7 Moore, P. C. 427.

Steering and Sailing Rules; Sailing Ships; corresponding with Article 14 of 1880 and 1884.

Old Rule as to close-hauled and free Ship—Port and Starboard Tack.]—By the law maritime, a vessel sailing free, or a steamship, is bound to give way to a vessel close-hauled; the vessel close-hauled is not bound to alter her course, but at night is bound to exhibit a sufficient light in time to enable the other to avoid collision. The Saxonia, Lush. 410; 15 Moore, P. C. 262; 31 L. J., Adm. 201; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 315; 6 L. T. 6; 10 W. R. 431.

If a vessel at sea is going close-hauled to the wind, and another meeting her is going free, the rule of the sea is for the latter vessel to go to leeward; and although such vessel may either go to leeward or windward as she best can, yet she ought, as a general rule, to suppose that the vessel going to windward will keep her position. Handayside v. Wilson, 3 Car. & P. 528.

The rule of the river is, that if a light vessel is going free, and a loaded vessel is running close-hauled to the wind, it is the duty of the loaded vessel to keep her course, and of the vessel going free to bear away. Sills v. Brown, 9 Car. & P. 601.

The general rule of navigation where two vessels are close-hauled and nearing one another, is that the one on the port tack should give way, and the one on the starboard tack keep her luff; but this rule will not excuse the vessel on the starboard tack not taking other measures to prevent a collision if circumstances render them necessary. The Lady Anne, 15 Jur. 18.

A barque held solely to blame for causing a collision off the Lizard for not giving way upon a dark night to a small schooner, close-hauled to the wind on the starboard tack under close-reefed sails. The Fortune, Mackay v. Roberts, 9 Moore, P. C. 357. S. P., The Gazelle, 5 Not. of Cas. 101.

When two vessels are approaching each other, nearly on the same course, and both have the wind free, each vessel is bound to port her helm and run to starboard of the other; but when one vessel is close-hauled the ship that has the wind free is bound to make way for the close-hauled ship. The Chancellor, Williams v. Gutch, 14 Moore, P. C. 202 ; 4 L. T. 627.

A ship with the wind on the port beam held in fault for a collision with another on the starboard tack close-hauled (1836). The Chester, 3 Hag. Adm. 316.

Ship reefing Topsails.]—A vessel engaged in reefing topsails held in fault for not porting. The Blenheim, 1 Spinks, 285.

A brig on the port tack reefing topsails was struck at night by a schooner on the starboard tack :—Held, that owing to the darkness the collision happened without fault in either ship ; action dismissed without costs. The John Buddle, 5 Not. of Cas. 387.

A barque on the port tack, engaged in furling topsails, held in fault for not giving way. The City of Carlisle, Br. & Lush. 363 ; 11 L. T. 33.

Close-hauled Ship and Free Ship.]—A ship close-hauled on the port tack held in fault for pertinaciously standing on, the other ship with the wind free being also in fault. The Commerce, 3 W. Rob. 287.

Port and Starboard Tack.]—A vessel on the starboard tack that obstinately kept her course and struck the other ship before she had gathered way on the port tack held in fault. The Ida and The Wasa, 15 L. T. 103.

Duty of Ship required to keep her Course.]—See ARTICLE 21, infra, col. 814.

Duty of Ship on Port Tack.]—A vessel whose duty it is to keep out of the way should do so at once ; if a collision occurs in consequence of her close shaving, she is in fault. The John Brotherick, 8 Jur. 276.

Port-tack Ship hailed to keep her Luff.]—A vessel on the port tack hailed by the other on the starboard tack to keep her luff held not in fault for doing so. The Carolus, 3 Hag. Adm. 343, n.

"Close-hauled"—Meaning of.]—The wind being somewhere from S. to S.S.E. the sloop "Constantine" heading N.N.E. fell in with the cutter "Spring," heading W. by S. to leeward :—Held, that it was the duty of the "Constantine" to keep out of the way, and of the "Spring" to keep her course. The Spring, L. R. 1 A. & E. 99 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 788 ; 14 W. R. 975. And see The Singapore and The Hebe, 4 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 271 ; L. R. 1 P. C. 378.

A collision took place in January, 1881, between two sailing vessels, the "P." and the "S.," which were crossing. The court having come to the conclusion, upon conflicting evidence, that the "S.," though not strictly "close-hauled," was not "running," and that she was "free" at most two points, the wind being at farthest on her beam, while the wind was at most on the quarter of the "P.," almost certainly not more than three points from her course, and in all probability more nearly "aft" :—Held, that the "S." was "close-hauled," and that the "P." had the wind "aft," both within the meaning of the article, and that the "P." was therefore bound to have kept out of the way of the "S.," and was solely to blame for the collision. If the wind be at any less angle than forty-five degrees with the line of a vessel's keel, it is a wind "aft" within the article. The Privateer, 9 L. R., Ir. 105—C. A.

The custom of sailors to treat sailing ships when in the trades as close-hauled ships when they are sailing a point or two from being as close-hauled as they can lie, does not affect the legal construction of the regulations, and the court will not exonerate vessels so sailing from duties applicable to sailing ships in other latitudes. Semble, a sailing ship is close-hauled within the meaning of the regulations if she is sailing half a point free of the nearest she can lie to the wind, but not if she is two points off. The Earl Wemyss, 61 L. T. 289; 6 Asp. M. C. 407—C. A.

The sailing ship "E. W." while sailing free in the trades saw the red light of the sailing vessel "A." on her starboard bow. The "A." was sailing close-hauled (as it is called in the trades), but was in fact not as close to the wind as she could lie. As the vessels approached the "E. W." ported to keep out of the way of the "A." At about the same time the "A." not only luffed up as close as she could to the wind, but also went a little farther under a starboard helm, thus counteracting the porting of the "E. W.," and a collision occurred:—Held, that the "A." altered her course in breach of article 22 of the regulations for preventing collisions, and was to blame for the collision. Ib.

Port-tack Ship bearing up to Free Ship.]—A ship on the port tack bore up to a free ship and so caused the collision:—Held, that she was not in fault, because she could not under the circumstances with reasonable care have known that the other ship was free. The Theodore H. Rand, 56 L. J., Adm. 65; 12 App. Cas. 247; 56 L. T. 343; 35 W. R. 781; 6 Asp. M. C. 122—H. L.

Approaching Close-hauled Ship too close.]—A ship with the wind free held in fault for approaching two others so close that upon one of them going about a collision with the other was inevitable. The Mobile, 10 Moore, P. C. 467: Swabey, 127; 4 W. R. 708—P. C.

Tacking or Wearing.]—When a vessel is sailing upon a wind, and passes from one tack to another, as a general rule she should tack and not wear, unless for some good reason and with sufficient sea room for the purpose. The Falkland and The Navigator, 1 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 379; Br. & Lush. 204; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1113.

Vessels Crossing or Overtaking.]—Semble, that where two ships are on converging courses, with the difference of a point and a half, the one having the other on her quarter four or five points abaft the beam, they are crossing ships, and not within the overtaking rules. The Breadalbane, 7 P. D. 186; 46 L. T. 204; 4 Asp. M. C. 505.

Under former regulations there was no fixed rule as to when a ship is to be considered as crossing or overtaking, but the question must be decided from the circumstances of each particular case. The Peckforton Castle, 47 L. J., Adm. 69; 3 P. D. 11; 37 L. T. 816; 26 W. R. 346; 3 Asp. M. C. 533—C. A.

A collision occurred in the daytime between two port-tacked vessels. One of such vessels had the wind free and the other was close-hauled. The vessel which had the wind free was being overtaken by the close-hauled vessel, and there was a difference of four points between the direction of their heads. The collision occurred by the close-hauled vessel from leeward striking the starboard beam of the vessel which had the wind free. At the hearing of an action of damage brought for the recovery of the damage sustained in the collision:—Held, first, that the 12th article of the regulations for preventing collisions at sea was applicable to the case. Ib.

Held, secondly, that the vessel with the wind free ought to have ported her helm in time or to have taken whatever steps were necessary to avoid the collision. Ib.

Vessels Crossing or Meeting.]—Collision by two sailing vessels crossing and having the wind on opposite sides:—Held, that by the 12th article, the vessel on the port side was bound to get out of the way of the vessel on the starboard side, unless she had the wind free. The Constitution, 2 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 453; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 831; 10 L. T. 894.

When two vessels are approaching, one heading N.N.E. ½ E. and the other S.W. ½ W., they are crossing and not meeting. The Henry and The St. Cyran, 12 W. R. 1014.

A ship and a barque were both on the port tack. The barque was the windward vessel, and had the wind three points free. The ship was close-hauled, and when first sighted by the barque was approaching her on her lee beam:—Held, that the ships were crossing each other, and that it was the duty of the barque, being the windward vessel, to get out of the way of the other, The Peckforton Castle, 47 L. J., Adm. 69; 3 P. D. 11; 38 L. T. 816; 26 W. R. 346; 3 Asp. M. C. 533—C. A.

Luffing.]—A close-hauled vessel is justified in luffing so as to bring her, after she has sighted another vessel as close to the wind as she can get so as to remain under command, and such luffing is not a deviation from her course that will relieve the other vessel, having the wind free, from the duty of getting out of her way. The Marmion, 27 L. T. 255; 1 Asp. M. C. 412—P. C.

When a ship close-hauled is bound to keep her course, luffing as close to the wind as she can without losing headway is not a deviation within the regulations, such as will render her liable for a collision with another vessel, whose duty it is to keep out of her way. The Aimo and The Amelia, 29 L. T. 118; 21 W. R. 707; 2 Asp. M. C. 96—P. C. Cf. The Earl Wemyss, supra.

When it is the duty of a ship to keep out of the way of another, but she is unable to do so by reason of being disabled in a former collision, and the other ship being unaware of her disabled condition, continues her course, a collision ensuing is the result of inevitable accident. Ib.

Beating to Windward on the same Tack.]—Two vessels, which had been sailing in company, were beating to windward. They were both close-hauled on the same tack, the one ahead and a little to the windward of the other. The leading vessel stood in as near as she could to a shoal, and was then obliged to go about. The other vessel kept her reach. The two vessels came into collision:—Held, that it was the duty of the following vessel to have gone about at the time she saw the leading vessel go about; and that, as the collision was occasioned by the following vessel neglecting to go about at the proper time, she was to blame for the collision. The Priscilla, L. R. 3 A. & E. 125; 23 L. T. 566.

Ship in Stays.]—When a port-tacked vessel has thrown herself into stays and becomes helpless, she ought nevertheless to execute any practicable manœuvre in order to get out of the way of a starboard-tacked vessel. The Lake St. Clair v. The Underwriter, Wilson v. Canada Shipping Co., 2 App. Cas. 389; 36 L. T. 155; 3 Asp. M. C. 361—P. C.

A starboard-tacked vessel, when apprised of the helpless condition of a vessel which by the ordinary rule of navigation ought to get out of her way, is bound to execute any practicable manœuvre which would tend to avoid a collision. Ib.

Both vessels were held to blame for the collision. Ib.

Burden of Proof.]—A vessel proceeding in a cause of collision and alleging herself to have been in stays at the time of the collision, and therefore helpless, is bound to prove in the first instance that such was the fact. The burden of proof then shifts, and the other side must shew that the collision was occasioned by the vessel proceeding being improperly put in stays or was an inevitable accident. The Sea Nymph, Lush. 23; 15 L. T. 103.

Port-helm Rule of former Acts.]—The port-helm Trinity house rule of 1840 did not apply where the ships' heads were in different but not opposite directions. The London Packet, 2 Not. of Cas. 501.

A galliot starboarded to the green light of a steamship on her starboard bow, and, on the steamship's red light appearing, ported. The steamship struck her on the port side. The steamship either starboarded or ported too late or not at all. Steamship held in fault. The Sylph, Swabey, 233.

The "port-helm" rule of 1840 did not require a vessel to port her helm where by doing so she would put herself ashore or not avoid risk of collision. The Friends, General Steam Navigation Co. v. Tonkin, 4 Moore, P. C. 314.

A schooner held in fault under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 100, for starboarding her helm to an approaching steamship, which ported. The Leith, 7 Not. of Cas. 137.

Port-helm Rule of 1854.]—A steamship, "B. O.," saw the green and white lights of another steamship, the "B. D.," distant about a mile and a half, and a point on the starboard bow. The "B. O." ported. The "B. D." kept her course, and at the last moment starboarded:—Held, that the "B. O." ought either to have kept her course or to have slowed until the course of the other vessel had been ascertained; that the "B. O." improperly ported, and was therefore to blame. The Black Diamond, 9 L. T. 396; 12 W. R. 219.

The statutory rule of port-helm, given by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 296, applied only when vessels were meeting in opposite directions end on, or nearly so, when the observance of the rule would have made the vessels pass port side to port side. The Independence, Lush. 270; 14 Moore, P. C. 103; 4 L. T. 563; 9 W. R. 582.

Regulations of 1863—Meeting or Approaching "End on."]—Article 13 only applies when there is a continuous approaching of two ships. The Jesmond and The Earl of Elgin, 8 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 179; L. R. 4 P. C. 1; 25 L. T. 514; 1 Asp. M. C. 150.

When two vessels are meeting end on, or nearly end on, and one of them, at a proper distance, ports her helm sufficiently to put her on a course which will carry her clear of the other, she thereby determined the risk, and is not "approaching another ship so as to involve risk of collision" and is not bound to slacken speed or stop. Ib.

Both Ships must port.—Both ships must port their helms, although collision would be avoided by one porting. The Araxes and The Black Prince, 15 Moore, P. C. 122. See also The Owl and The Ariadne, Little v. Burns, 9 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 118; The Cleopatra, Swabey, 135.

End-on or nearly End-on — Meaning of Phrase.] — Ships on W.N.W. and S. E. by E. courses respectively held to be "crossing" and "not meeting." The Constitution, 2 Moore, P. C. 453; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 831; 10 L. T. 894 (decision before order in council of 30th July, 1868).

The "S." and the "P." were on parallel (S.W. by W.) courses, the "P." being abaft the beam of the "S." and overtaking her. When the ships were three or four miles apart, the "P." altered her course to S. ½ W., and a collision followed, the ships remaining on the same courses:—Held, that the overtaking rule prevailed over the crossing rule (articles 16 and 20 of 1880), and that the "P." was alone in fault. The Seaton, 53 L. Adm. 15 ; 9 P. D. 1 ; 49 L. T. 747; 32 W. R. 600 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 191.

"Crossing" Rule—Its Application in a winding River.]—Two steamships in reaches of the Thames that make an angle with each other were approaching each other :—Held (under the regulations of 1863), that the "crossing" rule did not apply. The Velocity, General Steam Navigation Co. v. Hedley, 6 Moore, P. Two Ships making for same Spot.]—Two vessels making for a pilot station to take pilots on board are to be treated as crossing vessels, if their courses, if continued, would intersect ; and the fact of their seeking pilots at the same place is not such a special circumstance as will take them out of the operation of the rule requiring that the ship which has the other on her own starboard hand shall keep out of the way of the other. The Ada, The Sappho, 28 L. T. 825 ; 2 Asp. M. C. 4—P. C.

Crossing Vessels in Rivers.]—The considerations which arise in regard to vessels in the open sea are not the same as those which apply to the reaches of a winding river. Whether or not vessels are "crossing vessels" in a river depends on their presumable courses, and the question, therefore, always turns on the reasonable inference to be drawn as to a vessel's future course from her position at a particular moment, and this greatly depends upon the nature of the locality where she is at that moment. The Leverington (supra) distinguished. The Pekin, The Normandie (Owners) v. The Pekin (Owners), 66 L. Steamship and Sailing Ship ; corresponding with Article 17 of 1880 and 1884.

Reason of the Rule.]—Is that the steamship is more perfectly under command than the sailing ship. The Independence, Lush. 270 ; 11 Moore, P. C. 103 ; 4 L. T. 553 ; 9 W. R. 587.

Sailing Ship overtaking Steamship.]—Under the regulations of 1863 there was doubt as to the duty of a sailing ship overtaking a steamship. The Philotake, 37 L. T. 540 ; 3 Asp. M. C. 512.

Duty of Steamship.]—It is the duty of a steamer, where there is risk of collision, whatever may be the conduct of the sailing vessel, to do everything in her power that can be done, consistently with her own safety, in order to avoid collision—per Westbury, C. The City of Antwerp and The Friedrich, 37 L. J., Adm. 25 ; L. R. 2 P. C. 25.

Where a steamer is charged with omitting to do something which she ought to have done, there must be clear proof, first, that the thing omitted to be done was clearly within the power of the steamer ; secondly, that, if done, it would in all probability have prevented the collision ; and, thirdly, that it was an act which would have occurred to any officer of competent skill and experience in command of the steamer. Ib.

Trawler at Work.]—A steam trawler at work held excused by article 23 of 1884 from keeping out of the way of a sailing ship. The Tweedsdale, 58 L. J., Adm. 41 ; 14 P. D. 164 ; 61 L. T. 371 ; 37 W. R. 783 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 430.

Duty of Sailing Ship—Keep her Course.]—The fact that a steamship is neglecting to keep out of the way of a sailing ship does not make it the duty of the sailing ship to take measures to avoid a collision, except possibly in very exceptional circumstances, because it is possible for a steamship to act for a sailing ship up to almost the last moment, and any action on the part of the sailing ship might be liable to increase risk of collision. The s.s. "H." was approaching the sailing ship "S." for several minutes, with her masthead and red lights open, on the starboard bow of the "S." The "S." kept her course till a collision was imminent, and then hard-a-ported, but the "H." with her port side struck the stem and port bow of the "S." The "H." admitted that she was to blame, but contended that the "S." was also to blame for breach of article 23 of 1884 in not manœuvring for the "H." after she saw the "H." persisting in doing nothing to keep out of her way :—Held, that the "S." was not to blame, as the circumstances were not such as to require the "S." to alter her course and manœuvre for the "H." The Highgate, 62 L. T. 841 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 512.

A sailing ship meeting a steamship end on must not port, but must keep her course. The Bougainville and The James C. Stevenson, L. R. 5 P. C. 316 ; 28 L. T. 822 ; 21 W. R. 653 ; 2 Asp. M. C. 1.

In the Thames—Steamship's Signal—Unable to keep clear.]—In the Thames, where it was not possible for the steamship to keep out of the way, and she gave the required signal to a sailing barge :—Held, that the barge was alone in fault for the collision which followed. The Long Newton, 59 L. T. 260 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 302.

Sailing Ship going about.]—A sailing ship in the Thames turning to windward went about when she got to the edge of the tide without giving any notice of her intention to a steamship astern : — Held, that the steamship was alone in fault. The Palatine, 27 L. T. 631 ; 1 Asp. M. C. 468.

Sailing Ship rounding to.]—A barque rounding to before coming to an anchor was struck by a steamship :—Held, that the steamship was alone in fault, although she alleged that she was baffled by the rapid change in the barque's lights. The Neptune, 13 L. T. 510.

Sailing Ship not keeping her Course.]—Collision in the Atlantic Ocean at midnight between a steamship of unusual size and tonnage and a sailing vessel; the steamer going at a rate of between twelve and thirteen knots an hour; the vessel sailing close-hauled on the port tack, and being two or three miles distant when she first sighted the steamer, instead of keeping her course, ported her helm:—Held, first, that under the 18th article of 1863, it was the duty of the sailing vessel to have kept her course without alteration, unless the danger of collision was so imminent when the steamer was sighted as to render a departure from the 18th article necessary to avoid danger, and that she was, therefore, partly to blame for the collision, having contributed to it by porting. The Great Eastern, 3 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 31; 11 L. T. 5.

Held, secondly, that the steamer was to blame, as, even if the sailing vessel had kept her course, from the rate of speed the steamer was advancing a collision was inevitable, it being, under article 15, the duty of a steamer meeting a sailing vessel to reverse her engines, slacken her speed in sufficient time, so as, having regard to the state of the weather, as far as possible to avoid a collision. Ib.

A collision took place between a sailing ship and a steamship on a dark night, the wind S.S.E.; the sailing ship steering N.E. by E., the steamship S.S.W., so that the lights of the sailing ship were seen about four points on the starboard bow. The sailing ship, instead of keeping her course, ported her helm; thereupon the helm of the steamship was put hard a-port, and her engines were reversed:—Held, that the steamship was solely to blame for the collision. The Lady Jocelyn, 12 Jur. (N.S.) 965. S. P., The Una v. The Thomas Lea, 14 L. T. 834. The Fruiter v. The Fingal, 13 L. T. 611.

A slight alteration of the course by the sailing ship when two miles off the steamship held not a breach of the regulations. The Norma, 35 L. T. 418; 3 Asp. M. C. 272.

A steamer was sighted by a sailing vessel at a sufficient distance to have avoided a collision. The steamer took no steps until the vessels were very near to each other, when she starboarded her helm, and the sailing vessel ported her helm:—Held, that the steamer was alone to blame, as it was the duty of a steamer to keep out of the way of the sailing vessel, provided she could do it, either by starboarding or porting her helm, and that, on the other hand, it was the duty of the sailing vessel to keep her course, and that she could only be excused from deviating from it by shewing that it was necessary to do so in order to avoid immediate danger. The Velasquez, 4 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 426; 36 L. J., Adm. 19; L. R. 1 P. C. 494; 16 L. T. 777; 6 W. R. 89.

Tug with Ship in Tow must keep out of way of Sailing Ship.]—A schooner, close-hauled on the starboard tack at night, saw the starboard light and the two towing lights of a steam tug, three points on her port bow about a mile off. The schooner kept her luff. The steam tug had a fully-laden ship in tow, and was steaming against a head wind in the open sea. The steam tug kept her course until it was too late to get out of the way of the schooner, and the steam tug and the schooner came into collision:—Held, that the schooner was right in holding her course, and that the steam tug was alone to blame. The Warrior, L. R. 3 A. & E. 553; 27 L. T. 101; 21 W. R. 82; 1 Asp. M. C. 400.

The steamship "Aracan" found at a foreign port the "Syria," a screw steamship, totally disabled in her machinery; both vessels belonged to the same owner. The captain of the "Aracan," to protect his employers' interest and earn salvage from the owners of the cargo of the "Syria," took her in tow, and towed her into the English Channel, and whilst so doing came into collision with a sailing ship close-hauled on the starboard tack. The damage done by the "Aracan" caused the sailing ship to sink, but before she sank the "Syria" ranged up alongside of her and came into contact with her. The "Aracan" first saw the green light of the ship at a distance of three-quarters of a mile, and then, instead of slackening speed or starboarding her helm, attempted to cross the bows of the ship. The ship saw at two miles distance the "Aracan" and "Syria," with a great length of hawser between them, and the red lights of both, and kept her course:—Held, that the "Aracan" was to blame for the collision. The American and The Syria, Union Steamship Co. v. The Aracan, 43 L. J., Adm. 30; L. R. 6 P. C. 127; 31 L. T. 42; 22 W. R. 927; 2 Asp. M. C. 350.

A vessel close-hauled on the port tack in the open sea, and in daytime, and a steamer towing a large ship, were standing so as to cross each other's bows, the steamer being on the lee-beam of the sailing vessel:—Held, that the sailing vessel was to blame for holding her reach, and that the steamer was likewise to blame for taking no measure in time to avoid collision. The Independence, Lush. 270; 14 Moore, P. C. 103; 4 L. T. 563; 9 W. R. 582—P. C.

Keep her Course and Speed: Corresponding with Article 22 of 1880 and 1884.

Alteration of Helm to give more Room.]—A ship being overtaken does not infringe the rule requiring her to keep her course by altering half a point in order to give the other more room. The Franconia, 2 P. D. 8; 35 L. T. 721; 25 W. R. 197; 3 Asp. M. C. 295—C. A.

"Course."]—The word "course" refers to the direction of the vessel's head and not to her speed. The Beryl, 53 L. J., Adm. 75; 9 P. D. 137; 51 L. T. 554; 33 W. R. 191; 5 Asp. M. C. 321—C. A. But see The Leverington, infra, col. 823.

Overtaken Vessel altering Course.]—Semble, that a vessel, which is being overtaken by another, is not to blame within article 22 of the regulations if she alters her course at such a distance ahead of the overtaking vessel that the latter can, by the exercise of reasonable care, keep out of the way of the former. The Banshee, 57 L. T. 841; 6 Asp. M. C. 221—C. A.

Sailing Ship doing nothing to avoid Collision.]—Until just before the collision a sailing ship took no steps to avoid collision with a steamship which she saw was doing nothing to keep out of the way:—Held, that the sailing ship was not in fault. The Highgate, 62 L. T. 841; 6 Asp. M. C. 512.

"If a ship bound to keep her course undertakes to justify her departure from the rule, she takes upon herself the obligation of shewing both that her departure was, at the time it took place, necessary in order to avoid immediate danger, and also that the course adopted by her was reasonably calculated to avoid that danger"—per Sir J. Colvile. The Agra and The Elizabeth Jenkins, 4 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 435; 36 L. J., Adm. 16; L. R. 1 P. C. 501; 16 L. T. 755; 16 W. R. 735.

But she must not obstinately stand on when a collision may plainly be avoided by an alteration of course. The Lake St. Clair and The Underwriter, 2 App. Cas. 389; 36 L. T. 155; 3 Asp. M. C. 361. The Rosalie, 50 L. J., Adm. 3; 5 P. D. 245; 44 L. T. 32; 4 Asp. M. C. 384.

"Keep her Course"—Meaning of, in Winding River.]—Semble, in a winding river the meaning of "keep her course" is that the vessel is to keep her course in the river, having regard to the windings of its channel, not that she shall keep the compass course upon which she is for the moment heading. The Velocity, 39 L. J., Adm. 20; 6 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 263; L. R. 3 P. C. 44; 21 L. T. 686; 18 W. R. 264. And see The Pekin, Normandie (Owners) v. The Pekin (Owners), and cases cited, supra, col. 811.

But see The Banshee, supra, col. 814.

"Stop and Reverse": Corresponding with Article 18 of 1880 and 1884.

Article 13 and Article 18 of 1884.]—Article 13 of 1884 cannot be broken without at the same time breaking article 18 of 1884—per Lord Esher, M.R. The Ebor, 11 P. D. 25; 54 L. T. 200; 34 W. R. 448; 5 Asp. M. C. 560, infra.

In Fog—Whistle of approaching Steamship.]—When two steamships, invisible to each other by reason of a thick fog, find themselves gradually drawing nearer, until they are within a few ships' length, they are within the second direction of article 18 of 1894, and each of them ought at once to stop and reverse, unless the fog signals of the other vessel have unequivocally indicated that she is steered so as to pass clear without risk of collision; or unless other circumstances exist which make it dangerous to stop and reverse. The Ceto, 14 App. Cas. 670; 62 L. T. 1; 6 Asp. M. C. 479—H. L. (E.)

A sailing ship in tow of a steam-tug in a fog, while proceeding at as slow a rate of speed as possible, came into collision with a steamer whose whistle had been heard several times approaching. The engines of the tug were not stopped or reversed before the collision:—Held, that there had been a sufficient compliance with the provisions of article 18 of 1884 on the part of the tug and tow. The Lord Bangor, 65 L. J., Adm. 6; [1896] P. 28; 11 R. 822; 73 L. T. 414; 8 Asp. M. C. 217.

A steamer heard a whistle on her port bow in a dense fog, and it was repeated, shewing that the vessel from which it was sounded was approaching and was in her vicinity:—Held, that under such circumstances it is a general rule of conduct that there is a necessity to stop and reverse, and that she had disobeyed the rule by not so doing. The John McIntyre, 53 L. J., Adm. 115; 9 P. D. 135; 51 L. T. 185; 33 W. R. 190; 5 Asp. M. C. 278—C. A.

The plaintiff steamer, in a fog off Cromer, heard a whistle almost right ahead; she was then going slowly, about three knots an hour, and she continued at this speed for about a minute, until a second whistle was heard, when the order was given to stop and reverse; but the defendants' steamer coming into sight, a collision occurred. The defendants admitted at the trial that they were to blame:—Held, that the plaintiffs were also to blame, for they had infringed article 18 by going on at the same speed after they heard the first whistle as before. The Ebor, 11 P. D. 25; 54 L. T. 200; 34 W. R. 448; 5 Asp. M. C. 560—C. A.

A steamship in a very thick fog, going three and a half knots, heard the whistle of a steamship almost right ahead several times. Her helm was ported, but her speed not changed:—Held, that she was in fault for not stopping and reversing. The Rossgull and The Spaniel, Leitrim (Countess) v. Burns, 24 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 993.

During a fog the steamships "A." and "L." were sailing upon opposite courses, bound eastward and westward respectively. The "A.'s" whistle was first heard by the master of the "L." a point or a point and a half on his starboard bow, and the sound gradually broadened until it was two and a half to three points on that bow. The next whistle did not seem to broaden, and the master of the "L." immediately stopped his engines. The next whistle satisfied him that the "A." was porting and closing on his starboard bow, and he thereupon reversed his engines. The vessels came into collision, which they would not have done if the "A." had not ported:—Held, that the "L." was to blame for the collision as well as the "A.," because the master of the "L." ought to have reversed, and not merely to have stopped his engines under the circumstances. The Ceto (supra) discussed. The Lancashire, 63 L. J., Adm. 80; [1894] App. Cas. 1; 6 R. 46; 69 L. T. 663; 7 Asp. M. C. 376—H. L. (E.)

A steamship held in fault for not having reversed as well as stopped on seeing a barge ahead, at anchor in the Thames, a ship's length off. The Harton, 53 L. J., Adm. 25; 9 P. D. 44.

Duty to reduce speed to the lowest possible point when a whistle is heard on the bows in fog. The Rosetta, 59 L. T. 342; 6 Asp. M. C. 310.

A steamship, hearing the whistle of another three times in a thick fog, did not stop and reverse until the other ship came into view a ship's length off:—Held, that she had broken article 18. The Dordogne, 54 L. J., Adm. 29; 10 P. D. 6; 51 L. T. 650; 33 W. R. 360; 5 Asp. M. C. 550.

Crossing Ships—Risk of Collision.]—The steamship "M." sighted the masthead and green lights of the steamship "S.," distant about three miles, and bearing about two and a-half points on the port bow. When the "S." got within three ship-lengths of the "M.," still shewing her masthead and green lights at a bearing of four points on the port bow, she suddenly starboarded, and although the "M." immediately stopped her engines, a collision occurred. The court, having held that the "S." was to blame, further found that the respective courses of the vessels was such that had the "S." kept her course and not starboarded, she would have passed one and a-half ship-lengths astern of the "M.," and that the best and most seamanlike manœuvre for the "M." was to continue her speed as she did, but that there was in fact risk of collision before the "S." starboarded, and that the "M." was to blame for not stopping sooner. The Memnon, 62 L. T. 84; 6 Asp. M. C. 317—H. L. (E.)

Effect of Infringement of Article 18.]—The "K." and "V.," two large steam vessels, coming in opposite directions, sighted each other at a considerable distance; they ultimately came into collision. The "K." alleged that when the two vessels were fast approaching each other the "V." improperly changed its course; that the master of the "K." could not rely on the "V." taking a particular course; that to meet possible contingencies he ordered his engineers to stand to their engines, and almost instantly afterwards gave the order to starboard the helm, which he deemed would prevent or greatly mitigate the collision, and then stopped and reversed the engines. This was not exactly the order required by the regulations, which directed that in such a case the engines should be stopped and reversed. The court of admiralty had deemed both vessels to be in fault, and had adjudged accordingly; the court of appeal had held the master of the "K." to be excused under the circumstances of the case, and had given judgment against the "V." On appeal to the house of lords:—Held, that the statutes and the regulations had not left the master of the "K." a discretion in the matter; that he was bound to stop and reverse the engines, and that as he had not done so at the first moment of danger he had disregarded the regulations, and consequently that the "K." must be held in part responsible. The Khedive, Stoomvaart Maatschappy Nederland v. P. and O. Steam Navigation Co., 52 L. J., Adm. 1; 5 App. Cas. 876; 43 L. T. 610; 29 W. R. 173; 4 Asp. M. C. 567—H. L. (E.)

Reasonable Time to be allowed before the Rule is applicable.]—Those in charge of a vessel must have a reasonable time to appreciate a situation of danger before the stop and reverse rule can be held to have been infringed. Where the red light of a steamship came into view, the green having previously been seen, on the starboard bow of another more than half a minute before the collision, and no order to stop and reverse was given:—Held, that the rule had been infringed. The Emmy Haase, Maclaren v. Compagnie Française de Navigation à Vapeur, 53 L. J., Adm. 43; 9 App. Cas. 690; 50 L. T. 372; 32 W. R. 880; 5 Asp. M. C. 216—H. L. (Sc.) And see The Beryl, infra; The Ceto, supra, col. 816.

Instantaneous compliance with article 18 of 1884, by which "every steamship when approaching another ship so as to involve risk of collision shall slacken her speed or stop and reverse if necessary," is not necessary; a man for the exercise of his judgment must be allowed a short, but a very short, time. The Emmy Haase (supra) approved. The Ngupoota, 66 L. J., P. C. 88; [1897] A. C. 391—P. C.

The "A." and "B." were crossing within the meaning of article 16, and it was the duty of the "A." to keep out of the way, but she did not do so. The "B.," when from a quarter to half a mile distant, slackened her speed, and continued with slackened speed to within 300 yards of the "A.," and then stopped and reversed, but not in time to prevent a collision:—Held, that the "B." must be held, for not stopping and reversing sooner, to blame as well as the "A." Articles 16 and 18 (of 1880) are intended to be applicable according to the circumstances as they would present themselves to the mind of a prudent sailor, and come into force before the risk of collision is fixed and determined. The Beryl, 53 L. J., Adm. 75; 9 P. D. 137; 51 L. T. 554; 33 W. R. 191; 5 Asp. M. C. 321—C. A.

Steamship justified in not Stopping.]—A steamer, the "G.," saw a green light at some distance and starboarded her helm; soon after the port side of the "B.," without a red light, came into view, so close that the only chance of avoiding a collision was for the "G." to continue at full speed ahead and starboard her helm, which she did. The "B." struck the "G." on her starboard side:—Held, that the "B." was alone to blame for the collision, and that the stop and reverse rule did not apply under the circumstances to the "G.," and that article 23 was applicable. The Benares, 53 L. J., Adm. 2; 9 P. D. 16; 49 L. T. 702; 32 W. R. 268; 5 Asp. M. C. 171—C. A.

Duty of Sailing Ship as to Taking Way Off.]—Though article 18 (of 1880) does not apply to sailing ships, nevertheless a sailing ship under the circumstances mentioned in the article must be under such sail that the way can readily be taken off her. See per Brett, L.J. The Dordogne, supra, col. 817.

Article 16 and article 22 (crossing and keeping course rules) of the regulations of 1880, are wholly independent of the stop and reverse rule. Per Brett, M.R. The Beryl, supra; The Dordogne, supra.

Whether the Stop and Reverse Rule applies at Same Time with other Rules.]—Semble, when two ships are approaching each other upon meeting or crossing courses with risk of collision, and one or both alter their helms so as to determine risk of collision, the stop and reverse rule does not apply. The Jesmond and The Earl of Elgin, 8 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 179; L. R. 4 P. C. 1; 25 L. T. 514; 1 Asp. M. C. 150. The Rhondda, 8 App. Cas. 549; 49 L. T. 210; 5 Asp. M. C. 114.

Steamship in Fault for not Stopping.]—A steamship held in fault for not having stopped and reversed when risk of collision must have been apparent. The Thames and The Lutetia, 9 App. Cas. 640; 12 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 1—H. L. (Sc.)

Lights coming into Line.]—The "S." and "C." were approaching each other at night on opposite courses, so as to pass starboard to starboard. The master of the "C." saw the green and white lights of the "S." somewhat more than a quarter of a mile distant, coming into line. This indicated a probability that the "S." was porting, which would cause a risk of collision; soon after the red light of the "S." was seen. The engines of the "C." had been previously stopped, but the master did not reverse her engines till the red light of the "S." was seen; the vessels soon after came into collision:—Held, that the "C." was to blame for infringing the stop and reverse rule, because as there was a probability of risk of collision when the master of the "C." saw the green and white lights of the "S." coming into line, he should, being aware of such probability, have then reversed the engines of the "C." The Stanmore, 54 L. J., Adm. 89; 10 P. D. 134; 53 L. T. 10; 5 Asp. M. C. 441—C. A. And see The Albis, supra, col. 786; The Abis and The Oporto, supra, col. 785.

Perverse Action of other Ship.]—A steamship, "A.," ported to another steamship, "B.," that was approaching her with all her lights shewing, until "B.'s" green was shut in. "B." by starboarding opened her green again to "A.," who again ported and again shut in the green. "B." continuing her starboard helm again opened her green, and a collision followed:—Held, that "A." was in fault under 36 & 37 Vict. c. 85, s. 17, for not having stopped and reversed. The Arratoon Apcar, 59 L. J., P. C. 49; 15 App. Cas. 37; 62 L. T. 331; 38 W. R. 481; 6 Asp. M. C. 491—P. C.

Object of the Rule as to Stopping and Reversing.]—The object of the stop and reverse rule is to minimise the results of collisions as well as to prevent them. See The Emmy Haase, supra; The Thames and The Lutetia, supra; and per Lord Watson, The Khedive, supra, col. 818.

Steam Trawler.]—Semble, article 18 (of 1884) applies to a steam trawler at work. The Tweedsdale, 58 L. J., Adm. 41; 14 P. D. 164; 61 L. T. 371; 37 W. R. 783; 6 Asp. M. C. 430.

Thames Rule as to Stopping and Reversing.]—A steamship rounding a point in the Thames held not in fault under rule 14 of the Thames rules (1877) as to stopping and reversing; although if she had not been under a port helm at the time there would have been risk of collision. The Libra, 6 P. D. 139; 45 L. T. 161; 4 Asp. M. C. 429.

The Stop and Reverse Rule does not apply to Overtaken Ship.]—The Franconia, 2 P. D. 8; 35 L. T. 721; 25 W. R. 197; 3 Asp. M. C. 295—C. A.

Meeting Steamships—Porting without Stopping and Reversing.]—Two steamships were approaching each other in daylight nearly end on. One, "T.," ported and gave the port helm signal. The other, "O.," still came on, and "T." ported again and gave a second port helm signal. "O." then starboarded, and a collision followed:—Held, that "T." was not in fault for not having stopped and reversed before the second porting. The Otto and The Thorsa, Wilson v. Currie, [1894] App. Cas. 116; 6 R. 162; 20 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 876—H. L. (Sc.)

Other Ship on Wrong Side of River.]—The "Dromedary," proceeding up the Clyde on her right side in a thick fog, heard the whistle of the tug of the "Nerano." She did not stop or reverse until she saw the tug, which with the "Nerano" was on the wrong side of the river:—Held, that the "Dromedary" was not in fault for a collision which followed. The Nerano and the Dromedary, 22 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 237.

Old Law as to Stopping and Reversing.]—Steamship held in fault for not stopping and reversing, in consequence of bad look-out. The Julia David, 46 L. J., Adm. 54.

Steamship held in fault for a collision in the Thames caused by her not stopping and reversing. The Trident, 1 Spinks, 217.

ARTICLE 24.

Overtaking Ship; corresponding with Article 20 of 1880 and 1884.

Crossing or Overtaking.]—When a vessel is at the same time overtaking and crossing the course of another vessel, she is to be deemed an overtaking, and not a crossing ship under article 16, and is bound therefore to obey the directions of article 20 of 1880, and keep out of the way of the other vessel. The Seaton, 53 L. J., Adm. 15; 9 P. D. 1; 49 L. T. 747; 32 W. R. 600; 5 Asp. M. C. 191. But see The Breadalbane, 7 P. D. 186; 46 L. T. 204; 4 Asp. M. C. 505.

As a general rule wherever two steamships are on converging courses, the one abaft the beam of the other in such a position that the hinder ship cannot see the side lights of the leading ship, the former, if going at a greater speed than the latter, is to be considered as a vessel overtaking another vessel, within the meaning of the regulations, and bound to keep out of the way; and they are not to be treated as crossing vessels. The Franconia, 2 P. D. 8; 35 L. T. 721; 25 W. R. 197; 3 Asp. M. C. 295—C. A.

A ship is not overtaking the other unless she is going faster than the latter. Ib.

An "overtaking" vessel within the area lighted by the stern light of the "overtaken" vessel does not cease to have the obligation imposed by article 20 of 1884, of keeping out of her way upon catching sight of one of her side lights:—Semble, where there is no risk of collision and the vessel comes within sight of the side lights of the other, the vessels being at a considerable distance apart, article 16, the crossing rule, applies The Molière, 62 L. J., Adm. 102; [1893] P. 217; 1 R. 639; 69 L. T. 263; 7 Asp. M. C. 364.

A ship coming up with another ahead upon a course differing from that of the ship ahead by half a point:—Held, to be overtaking her. The Chanonry, The Leverington, 42 L. J., Adm. 58; 28 L. T. 284; 1 Asp. M. C. 569.

And where the difference of courses was one and a-half points. The Breadalbane, supra.

And see further, as to the distinction between crossing and overtaking ships, ARTICLES 10, 20, ante, cols. 797, 811.

Overtaken Vessel — Manœuvres for Third Vessel.]—Where a vessel which is being overtaken by another deviates from her course, it is still the duty of the overtaking ship to do all she reasonably can to keep out of the way of the former. An overtaken vessel which finds it necessary to manœuvre for a third vessel is to blame if she deviates from her course more than is necessary to avoid immediate danger. The Saragossa, 68 L. T. 400; 7 Asp. M. C. 289—C. A. Affirmed in H. L.

Collision in Suez Canal.]—A steamship was overtaking another in a salt water lake forming part of the Suez Canal, and before she passed the other a collision occurred:—Held, under the regulations, the overtaking ship was in fault. The Hilda and The Australia, 12 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 76.

Ships working to Windward.]—A steamship in the Thames was coming up with a sailing ship turning to windward. The latter went about as the steamship attempted to pass her, and a collision occurred:—Held, that the steamship was alone in fault. The Palatine, 27 L. T. 631; 1 Asp. M. C. 468.

Two sailing ships turning to windward on the same tack. When the leading ship goes about, the other, if she cannot stand in without risk of collision, must also go about. The Priscilla, L. R. 3 A. & E. 125; 23 L. T. 566; 1 Asp. M. C. 468.

Two ships working to windward. The leading ship wears:—Semble, the other is not an "overtaking" ship whilst the wearing ship is approaching her during wearing. The Falkland and The Navigation, Br. & Lush. 204; 1 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 379; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1113.

Narrow Channel; Starboard Side Rule; corresponding with Article 21 of 1880 and 1884.

Starboard-side Rule under former Acts.]—A vessel held in fault for navigating on the port or Cheshire side of the Mersey, contrary to 9 & 10 Vict. c. 100, s. 9. The Nimrod, 15 Jur. 1201.

A steam vessel was proceeding down the river Thames, close to the Surrey shore, under the management of a licensed pilot, when she came into collision with a barge, which was sailing up the river. In an action for the damage thereby caused against the pilot:—Held, that, according to 14 & 15 Vict. c. 79, s. 27, and 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, ss. 296, 297, it was the duty of the pilot to have kept the steam vessel to the starboard side of, but within, the fairway or midchannel, and when he saw the risk of collision, to port her helm so as to pass on the port side of the barge, and therefore it was properly left to the jury to say, whether, at the time of the collision, the steam vessel was on the starboard side, and within the fairway or midchannel, and, whatever was the position of the steam vessel, whether the collision was caused by the negligence of the pilot or not. Smith v. Voss, 2 H. & N. 97; 26 L. J., Ex. 233; 5 W. R. 534.

Under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 79, a vessel was required to keep on the starboard side of the Thames, notwithstanding a usage for vessels to work the tide in navigating the river. The Sylph, 2 Spinks, 75.

A custom of the river as to vessels keeping to particular sides and waters as they are going up or down:—Held, not to override the Trinity house regulations of 1840. The Friends, 4 Moore, P. C. 314.

A practice for vessels in a river to keep in or out of the strength of the tide cannot supersede a rule of navigation made for preventing collisions. The Duke of Sussex, 1 W. Rob. 274.

A custom that vessels in a river should keep upon the one side of it when the statute law requires them to keep on the other, cannot be maintained. 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, ss. 297, 298. The Unity, Swabey, 101.

What are—Straits of Messina.]—The Strait of Messina is a narrow channel within the meaning of article 21:—Held, that the "A. L.," by infringing the said article, occasioned the collision which afterwards happened, and failed to establish that the "R.," by anything which she did, contributed to it or could in any way have avoided it. The Rhondda, Scicluna v. Stevenson, 8 App. Cas. 549; 49 L. T. 210; 5 Asp. M. C. 114—P. C.

Held, that the "R.'s" helm having been put hard-a-port in a way which, if successful, would have put her on such a course as would have determined the risk of collision, the duty of reversing her engines did not arise till it was discovered that the vessel, owing to the action of a current, was not obeying her helm. Ib.

—— Falmouth Harbour.]—Applies to a steamship entering and passing up Falmouth Harbour, and if a steamer going into that harbour keeps to the side of the channel which lies on her port hand, she violates the regulations. The Clydach, 51 L. T. 668; 5 Asp. M. C. 336.

—— Cardiff Docks.]—A collision occurred at the junction of the main channel leading to Cardiff Docks and the channel to the Roath Basin, between a steamer going up the former and another coming down the latter:—Held, that the place of collision was a "narrow channel" within article 21, and that articles 16 and 22 were also applicable, there being no special or local rules to supersede the general rules of navigation. The Leverington, 55 L. J., Adm. 78; 11 P. D. 117; 55 L. T. 386; 6 Asp. M. C. 7—C. A.

—— Mersey Sea Channel.]—The channel near the bell buoy outside the Queen's Channel of the Mersey is not a narrow channel within 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 297. The Mæander and The Florence Nightingale, 1 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 63; Br. & Lush. 29; 6 L. T. 400.

—— The Swin.]—The Swin, between the Middle Lightship and the Middle Sands, is a narrow channel within article 21 of 1884, and, therefore, two steamships passing one another through it, should each keep to that side of the fairway of the channel which lies on their starboard side. The Minnie, [1894] P. 336; 11 R. 705; 71 L. T. 715; 7 Asp. M. C. 521—C. A.

Since the lighting of the N.E. Maplin buoy, in 1894, it has been safe and practicable, by day and night, for inward-bound vessels navigating the Swin Channel, at the entrance to the river Thames, to pass to the northward and westward of the Swin Middle Lightship; and in order to comply with the regulations, they must now, in navigating that part of the channel, leave the lightship on the port hand. The Minnie, supra, and The Corennie ([1894] P. 338) discussed. The Oporto, 66 L. J., Adm. 12; 75 L. T. 599; 8 Asp. M. C. 213. See S. C. in C. A., supra, col. 785.

—— Whether question of Fact or Law.]—As to whether it is for the judge or the jury to decide what is a narrow channel. See The Birkgate and The Barrabool, 58 L. J., P. C. 101; 14 App. Cas. 318—P. C.

Dockyard Ports—Admiralty Regulation as to Navigation—Plymouth.]—The powers, if any, of the lords of the admiralty under 54 Geo. 3, c. 159, s. 2, to make regulations as to navigation and mooring of ships in dockyard ports, must be exercised in strict conformity with the act. A notice signed by the admiralty superintendent at Plymouth, as to merchant ships leaving the deep-water channel of Hamoaze free for H.M.'s ships when docking, not issued in accordance with the act, held invalid. *H.M.S. A vessel ought not to obstinately persist in adhering to the rules of navigation if by departing from them (semble, and so only) a collision may be avoided. The London, 6 Not. of Cas. 29.

Although rules of navigation may, and must sometimes be departed from, "it is at the same time of the greatest possible importance to adhere as closely as possible to established rules, and not to allow a deviation from them, unless the circumstances which are alleged to have rendered such deviation necessary are most distinctly proved and established." Duty of sailing ship to depart from the regulations where steamship does nothing. See The Highgate, ante, cols. 812, 814.

The 19th article of 1862, which directs that in

"obeying and construing all the other and previous regulations, due regard is to be had to all dangers of navigation, and to any special circumstances existing in any particular case, rendering a departure from such rules necessary, in order to avoid immediate danger," does not prescribe any specific course to be adopted or pursued. The Allan and The Flora, 14 L. T. 860.

If a ship, bound to keep her course under article 18, justifies her departure from that rule, she takes upon herself the obligation of shewing both that her departure was, at the time it took place, necessary in order to avoid immediate danger, and also that the course adopted by her was reasonably calculated to avoid that danger. The Agra and Elizabeth Jenkins, 4 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 435 ; 36 L. J., Adm. 16 ; L. R. 1 P. C. 501 ; 16 L. T. 755 ; 16 W. R. 735.

It is dangerous to the public to leave to masters of vessels a discretion as to obeying or departing from the sailing rules ; and accordingly such a discretion need not be exercised except in cases of very clear necessity. Where a collision has occurred owing to one colliding vessel having failed to observe (as its duty was) the rule of the road, by keeping out of the way :—Held, that, in the absence of proof as to the particular time at which an intention to violate that rule was clearly manifest, the other colliding vessel, being primâ facie bound to observe the 18th rule by keeping on its course, would not have been justified in departing therefrom. The Byfoged Christensen, The William Frederick, 4 App. Cas. 669 ; 41 L. Departure from the rule provided by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 296, for ships meeting each other to port their helms, allowed ; the circumstances being such as to render such departure necessary to avoid immediate danger. The Moderation, 1 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 528 ; 9 L. T. 586.

A collision took place between two sailing vessels crossing, the wind being about S.S.E., and the vessel "C." steering about N.N.E., the vessel "S." about W. by S. ; the vessel "C." did not keep out of the way, but kept her course, and the vessel "S.," instead of keeping her course, ported her helm, alleging immediate danger as a reason for so doing :—Held, that both vessels were to blame ; the vessel "C." for not having kept out of the way, in accordance with the provisions of the last clause of the 12th article, and the vessel "S." for not having kept her course, but having improperly ported her helm, there being no evidence of immediate danger to justify a departure from the 18th article. The Spring, L. R. 1 A. & E. 99 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 788 ; 14 W. R. 975. S. P., The Dapper and The Lady Normanby, 14 L. T. 895.

Two sailing ships at night were approaching each other so as to pass port-side to port-side. The one whose duty it was to keep out of the way under article 14 (a.) altered her course and began to come across the course of the other. The master of the ship whose duty it was, under article 22 of 1884, to keep her course, at a distance of a quarter of a mile saw the red light of the other ship shut in, and her green light come into view. He continued to keep his course till the other ship herself could be seen, when it was too late to avoid the collision, which immediately occurred :—Held, by the court of appeal, that the officer in charge of the ship which was primâ facie bound to keep her course should not have kept his course after he saw that the other vessel was going to cross his bows ; and that article 23 of 1884 had then come into operation, and that therefore both ships were to blame for the collision. But held, in the house of lords, that very great allowances should be made for an officer in charge of a ship suddenly placed in difficult circumstances by the wrongful act of another ship. The judgment of the court below was reversed upon the facts and evidence. The Tasmania, 15 App. Cas. 223 ; 63 L. T. 1 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 517—H. L. (E.) Reversing 37 W. R. 552—C. A.

In a cause of collision between two steam vessels meeting nearly end on in the river Thames, it was alleged by the defendants that the helm of their vessel was put a-starboard to avoid a barge :—Held, that the onus of proving that a departure from the rule was necessary in order to avoid immediate danger lay upon the defendants ; and that, in the absence of sufficient evidence to shew what became of the barge, the defendants had failed in their proof, and were, therefore, to blame for the collision, the result of not porting their helm. The Concordia, L. R. 1 A. & E. 93 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 771 ; 14 L. T. 896.

Article 23 (article 27 of 1897) is a rule of common sense, to the effect that the regulations are to be read and applied so as not to cause collision. See, per Dr. Lushington, The Allan and The Flora, 14 L. T. 860.

12. LOCAL RULES.

a. Danube.

Authority of Rules of Navigation.]—The treaty of peace, signed at Paris, in 1856, after putting the Danube, with respect to the rights of persons using it for the purposes of navigation, in the same category as other great European rivers separating different states were placed by the Congress of Vienna, provided that a commission, in which Great Britain, Austria, France, Prussia, Russia, Sardinia, and Turkey should each be represented by one delegate, should have power to establish certain fixed duties to be levied, to cover the expenses of certain works which were in progress, which commission was to be temporary. It also provided for a river commission, which was to be permanent; its duties being to prepare regulations of navigation and a river police. The commission to consist of delegates from the states traversed by the river along its whole line. The European commission issued provisional regulations for the police of the Lower Danube, and one of those regulations contained rules for navigating the Danube:—Held, that the rules were not binding on vessels navigating the Danube, the European commission having no authority to make such regulations. The Smyrna, 2 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 435; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 977; 11 L. T. 74.

Ascending and Descending Ships—Articles 32, 36.]—Article 32 of the regulations applicable to the navigation of the Lower Danube provides that "when a vessel ascending the river finds itself exposed to meeting a vessel descending at a point which does not afford sufficient breadth, she must stop below the passage till the other vessel has cleared it; and if the ascending vessel should be actually in the passage as the other approaches it, the descending vessel must stop above until the passage is clear." The first part of this rule is imperative whenever an ascending ship, approaching a point which does not afford sufficient breadth for two vessels to pass, has notice that, if she proceeds, she will be exposed to the risk of meeting a descending ship at or near the point. The second part of the rule only comes into operation in cases in which the ascending ship has already reached the point of danger, and has actually begun to navigate the contracted passage, before notice of the approach of the descending ship is conveyed to her. Where, however, it is clearly the intention of one of the vessels to violate the rule, it is the duty of the other to give way and not to press her claim to precedence. SS. Diana v. SS. Clieveden, 64 L. J., P. C. 22; [1894] A. C. 625; 6 R. 515; 71 L. T. 101; 7 Asp. M. C. 489—P. C.

Keeping to Right Bank.]—Under r. 34, c. 2, of the Danube commission rules, vessels going down the Danube should keep to the right bank. Where a vessel going down the Danube, when there was a fog and approaching night, went to the left bank:—Held, that, according to the true construction of the rule, that was neglect of duty; and that such negligence was the cause of a collision which occurred with a vessel coming up, although the absence of lights on the latter vessel might have partly contributed to the accident. The Yourri, The Spearman, 10 App. Cas. 276; 53 L. T. 29; 5 Asp. M. C. 458—P. C.

b. Humber.

Stern Light — Compulsory Pilotage.]—The "R.," in charge of a tug, was dropping astern foremost up the Humber with the tide, and was eventually brought athwart the tide to go into dock. The "R." was exhibiting, in addition to the masthead and side lights, a white light from the main peak shewing astern, which had been placed there by the order of the pilot, who was by compulsion of law in charge of the "R." The rules for the navigation of the river Humber, made by order in council in pursuance of 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 32, incorporate the regulations for preventing collisions at sea. The "E.," coming down the Humber, and the "R." came into collision. At the hearing it was admitted that the "E." was to blame:—Held, that the "R." was also to blame, for that as the Humber rules were within the purview of 36 & 37 Vict. c. 85, s. 17, there had been, by the exhibition of a stern light, a breach of statutory regulation, namely of article 2, which it was impossible to say might not have contributed to the collision, and there was no circumstance to make a departure from the regulation necessary. The Ripon, 54 L. J., Adm. 56 ; 10 P. D. 65 ; 52 L. T. 438 ; 33 W. R. 659 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 365. See The Monte Rosa, ante, col. 773.

Vessel at Anchor—Height of Riding Light.]—The "M.," a two-masted vessel, while at anchor in the river Humber was exhibiting an anchor light on the forestay at a height of about ten feet above the deck, and another on the mizzen mast at a height of about twenty-five feet above the deck :—Held, that there was a sufficient compliance with the rule for the navigation of the Humber, which provides that the after light shall be double the height of the forward light. The Magneta, 59 L. J., Adm. 55 ; 15 P. D. 101 ; 63 L. T. 114 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 531.

c. Mersey.

Lights.] — Vessels at anchor in the sea approaches to the river Mersey are bound by 37 & 38 Vict. c. 52, s. 1, to exhibit a white light at the main or mizzen mast, in addition to the white light prescribed by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, sched., table C., art. 7, and a vessel omitting to exhibit such additional light will, where the omission may have caused or contributed to collision, be held to blame under s. 17 of the 36 & 37 Vict. c. 85. The Lady Downshire, 48 L. J., Adm. 41 ; 4 P. D. 26 ; 39 L. T. 236 ; 27 W. R. 648 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 25.

Customs' Light.]—A steamship under way is not entitled to carry a white light at the mizzen truck as a signal for a customs officer, or otherwise than as a quarantine light ; and if she carries such a light for the former purpose, she is guilty of a breach of the Mersey navigation rules, and will be held to blame for a collision if the other vessel might have been misled thereby. The Talbot, [1891] P. 184 ; 64 L. T. 542 ; 7 Asp. M. C. 36.

Stern Light.]—At the trial of an action for damage by collision it appeared that the stern light of the plaintiffs' vessel was placed on deck abaft a house on the after part of the deck :—Held, that this was an infringement of rule 5 of the Mersey rules, but the court, having regard to the position of the plaintiffs' and the defendant's vessels, held, that the infringement could not have contributed to the collision. The Fire Queen, 56 L. J., Adm. 90 ; 12 P. D. 147 ; 57 L. T. 312 ; 36 W. R. 15 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 146.

Vessel at Anchor—Lights.]—The steamship "H." at night ran into the barque "E." at anchor in the river Mersey. By order in council of the 5th Jan., 1881, every vessel when at anchor in the river Mersey shall carry two white lights, the after light being carried double the height of the foremost light. The "E." exhibited two anchor lights, both of which were about twenty feet above the deck. It was admitted by the defendants that they only saw the after light :—Held, that the "H." was to blame for a bad look-out, and the "E." to blame for a breach of the regulation, it not being shewn that in the circumstances of the case the breach could not have contributed to the collision. The Hermod, 62 L. T. 670 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 509.

Launch.]—As to precautions to be taken at launches in the Mersey, see The George Roper, and Cases, supra, cols. 696, 697.

cc. Newport.

Entering Port of Newport—By-laws.]—The proper mode for a vessel to enter the port of Newport, having regard to rules 12 and 13 of the by-laws (1894) of the port, which require every vessel proceeding seaward to be kept to the right-hand or west, and every vessel proceeding inward from the sea to be kept to the right-hand or east of mid-channel—that is to say, the deep-water navigable channel, the entrance to which is marked by the Bell and Red buoys—is to keep outside the buoys until she can turn so as to pass between them, passing nearer to the Red buoy than to the Bell buoy, although when the tide is high there is sufficient water to allow a vessel to enter the channel by passing over the flats inside the buoys. A vessel, however, entering the port from the eastward would not be wrong, as regards a vessel coming out, in entering the channel by passing inside the Red buoy. The Winstanley, 65 L. J., Adm. 121 ; [1896] P. 297 ; 75 L. T. 133 ; 8 Asp. M. C. 170—C. A.

d. Thames.

Regulation of 1863—Crossing Rule.]—Ships in the Thames approaching each other upon opposite sides of a point round which the river bends, upon such headings that if at sea they would be crossing ships, are not crossing ships within the regulations of 1863. The Ranger and The Cologne, Malcolm v. General Steam Navigation Co., 9 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 352 ; L. R. 4 P. C. 519 ; 27 L. T. 769 ; 21 W. R. 273 ; 1 Asp. M. C. 484—P. C. The Velocity, General Steam Navigation Co. v. Hedley, 6 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 263 ; 39 L. J., Adm. 20 ; L. Getting under Way—Shewing a Light.]—A steamship getting under way in the Thames, and athwart the river in such a position that her side lights are not visible to vessels bound up and down, must shew a light sufficient to warn approaching vessels of her presence. If she fails to do so, she breaks the Thames rules, 1872, r. 20. The John Fenwick, L. R. 3 A. & E. 500 ; 41 L. J., Adm. 38 ; 26 L. T. 322 ; 1 Asp. M. C. 249.

Crossing Rule of 1872.]—A steamship, "A.," going up the river Thames, met another, "B.," coming down in the reach above her, which made an angle in the reach in which she was. At this time "A." had "B." on her starboard bow :—Held, that they were crossing ships within rule 29 of the Thames rules, 1872, and that it was the duty of "A." to keep out of the way. The Oceano and The Virgo, 3 P. D. 60.

Thames Rules, 1880—Steamships—Rounding Points of River.]—Rule 23 of the Thames rules, 1880, is not confined to the seaward side of "a line drawn from Blackwall Point to Bow Creek." A steamship, the "C. S.," left the South-West India Docks nearly opposite the curve of Blackwall Point, and proceeded down stream at easy speed against a flood tide. In a few minutes, as she was about to round Blackwall Point, she perceived the steamship "M." in Bugsby's Reach, and preparing to round the point; the "C. S." stopped and reversed her engines, but a collision between the "C. S." and the "M." took place:—Held, that rule 23 of the Thames rules, 1880, did not apply, under the circumstances, to the "C. S."; that ordinary care on the part of the "M." would have enabled her to avoid the collision, and that she alone was to blame. The Margaret, Cayzer v. Carron Co., 54 L. J., Adm. 18; 9 App. Cas. 873; 52 L. T. 361; 33 W. R. 281; 5 Asp. M. C. 371—H. L. (E.)

Thames Rules, 1880, rr. 22, 23.]—A steamship navigating the Thames against the tide is bound to obey rule 23 of the Thames rules, 1880, and on approaching one of the points there named, to wait until vessels then approaching it with the tide have passed her, or, quære, passed the point. Whether vessels are also to observe rule 22, and pass port-side to port-side, depends on whether the vessel navigating against the tide is close to the shore when waiting for the one coming down with the tide to pass her, or so far out as to allow the latter to pass port-side to port-side. Semble, where the point to be passed is on the north side of the river with a flood tide, or on the south side with an ebb tide, if the vessel navigating with the tide has her green light open when ahead of the vessel waiting, the 23rd rule alone applies, and the vessels will pass clear starboard to starboard; otherwise both rules apply. Steamships rounding a point are not bound to stop or reverse engines because at one moment they are approaching each other with risk of collision if they keep straight on, but without risk of collision if both vessels keep the curvilinear course they are then on. The Libra, 6 P. D. 139; 45 L. T. 161; 4 Asp. M. C. 429.

Barge Dredging—Lights.]—The sailing barge "M.," with her mast lowered and her anchor on the ground, was dredging down the river Thames, when she was run into by the steam tug "I. C.," with a string of barges in tow. The "M." was exhibiting a white light in a globular lantern, which was placed on the top of her mast-case, about four feet above the deck:—Held, that "M." was not a sailing vessel "under way," within the meaning of the Thames rules, 1880. The Indian Chief, 58 L. J., Adm. 25; 14 P. D. 24; 60 L. T. 240; 6 Asp. M. C. 362.

Thames Rules, 1880—Application of Rule 22.]—This rule is not to be interpreted in the same way as the "end on" rule of the sea regulations. Vessels may be approaching each other with risk of collision in the Thames without being end on, or nearly end on, and where the green or red light of one is seen on the starboard or port bow of the other. The Odessa, 46 L. T. 77; 4 Asp. M. C. 493—C. A. Followed in The Lady Wodehouse, 2 Times L. R. 252. The Mary Lohden, 58 L. T. 641; 6 Asp. M. C. 262.

Barges in Tow.]—No. 4 of the by-laws of the Thames conservators, July, 1877, is as follows: "Above and to the westward of Albert Bridge at Chelsea, six vessels and no more may be towed together in a single line at one time, and the distance between any two of the vessels shall not exceed fifty feet":—Held, that the towing of eight barges by a steam tug, the first four being in a single line, and the last four two abreast, but lashed closely together, was an infringement of the by-law. Gadney v. Rough, 40 L. T. 258; 4 Asp. M. C. 73.

Ballast Lighter—Lights.]—The regulations for preventing collisions at sea issued under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 63), ss. 31, 32, and order in council of the 9th of January, 1863, do not apply to a ballast lighter which, though at times navigated under sail, never goes to sea, but is wholly employed within the limits of the jurisdiction of the Thames conservancy. The C. S. Butler, L. R. 4 A. & E. 238; 31 L. T. 549; 23 W. R. 113.

When such a vessel has been injured in a collision, her owners will not, in the absence of any by-law of the conservators of the Thames prescribing lights to be carried by her, be held disentitled to recover damages in a cause of collision on the ground that she contributed to the collision by being under way before sunrise without having any lights exhibited. Ib.

Dumb-barges.]—Dumb-barges in motion driving with the tide up or down the river Thames at night are not bound to carry lights. The Owen Wallis, 43 L. J., Adm. 36; L. R. 4 A. & E. 175; 33 L. T. 41; 22 W. R. 695.

A dumb-barge coming up the river Thames in a flood tide may keep on either side of the river, and there is no obligation on her by custom or otherwise to keep in mid-channel. Ib.

There is no duty on a dumb-barge driving with the tide in the Thames to keep out of the way of a steamship; but it is the duty of the steamship to keep out of the way of the barge. Ib.

When a collision occurs between a dumb-barge without lights and a steamer on a dark night in the Thames, there is no presumption of law that the steamer is to blame. The Swallow, 36 L. T. 231; 3 Asp. M. C. 371—C. A.

Dumb-barges in the Thames do not carry anchors, and have no means of bringing up except by going ashore or fastening on to anything they may come in contact with, and hence a dumb-barge getting under way in clear weather and getting into a fog, is not guilty of negligence if she comes into contact with a vessel moored in the river, and if that vessel, in breach of the rules and by-laws for the navigation of the river Thames, has her anchor not stock-a-wash, and the barge is thereby injured, the vessel so moored is solely responsible for such damage. The Rose of England, 59 L. T. 262; 6 Asp. M. C. 304.

Stopping and Reversing.]—A steamer having stopped but not having reversed immediately before a collision, though the court found as a fact that her not having done so did not affect the collision, and having thus infringed rule 14 of the Thames rules, 1880:—Held, that she was nevertheless not to blame, for the Thames rules do not fall within the operation of s. 17 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 85). The Harton, 53 L. J., Adm. 25; 9 P. D. 44; 50 L. T. 370; 32 W. R. 597; 5 Asp. M. C. 213.

Fog—Anchorage Ground.]—Although a vessel may be justified in anchoring in the fairway of the Thames through being overtaken by a dense fog, such a place is not a proper anchorage ground under articles 10 and 12 of the Thames rules, 1872, and the duty lies on those in charge of her to move her as soon as they reasonably can, and if a collision occurs whilst she is so anchored, the question will be, whether between the time of her anchoring and the collision the weather was such that she could reasonably have been removed. A steamship bound up the Thames on a flood tide ought not to leave a wharf and get under way in a dense fog, and, semble, if a vessel is overtaken by a dense fog in such circumstances, the proper mode for her to go up is dredging up stern first with her anchor down, so that she can be brought up at any moment. The Aguadillana, 60 L. T. 897; 6 Asp. M. C. 390.

—— In Gravesend Reach.]—Where a vessel, intending either to moor at one of the buoys or anchor in the anchorage ground in Gravesend Reach, moves from buoy to buoy to select one, and, finding them all occupied, anchors a short distance above the last of the buoys, she does not navigate within the anchorage ground in contravention of the Thames rules, 1872, r. 15. The City of Delhi, 58 L. T. 531; 6 Asp. M. C. 269.

Vessel Dropping up River stern foremost—Look-out Astern—Duty to Warn approaching Vessel.]—It is the duty of a vessel dropping up the Thames in the neighbourhood of the Docks at night to have a look-out astern, and to warn an approaching vessel bound down of her presence. Semble, a steamship may under such circumstances sound the blast of five seconds' duration mentioned in the Thames rules, 1880, r. 19. The Juno, 11 R. 679; 71 L. T. 341; 7 Asp. M. C. 506.

Anchor Stock awash.]—By r. 20 of the rules and by-laws for the regulation of the navigation of the river Thames, allowed by order in council, February 5, 1872, "No vessel shall be navigated or lie in the river with its anchor or anchors hanging by the cable perpendicularly from the hawse unless the stock shall be awash . . . ." In an action of damage for a collision which occurred in the river Thames, it appeared that the anchor of the plaintiffs' vessel was one of the parts which first came in contact with the defendants' vessel. It was hanging from the hawse, shackle, or ring, awash, and the defendants by their counter-claim charged the plaintiffs with neglecting to comply with the rule:—Held, that the rule had not been infringed, as the anchor must be as low as stock awash, but may be as much lower as is thought proper. The J. R. Hinde, 61 L. J., Adm. 91; [1892] P. 231; 67 L. T. 832; 7 Asp. M. C. 257.

Where a vessel, intending either to moor at one of the buoys or anchor in the anchorage ground in Gravesend Reach, finds all the buoys occupied, and, on passing the last buoy, gets her anchor a-cockbill for the purpose of bringing herself to anchor on finding a suitable place, and, after she has got a short distance above the buoys, a collision occurs and damage is done by the anchor, such anchor is only a-cockbill during such time as is "absolutely necessary" for bringing her to anchor within the meaning of the Thames rules, 1880, r. 19. The City of Delhi, supra. And see The Rose of England, supra, col. 832.

Whether the anchor of a steamer in the Thames should be carried at the hawse-pipe with the stock above water is a matter within the province of the pilot, notwithstanding that the carrying of an anchor in such a position may be an infringement of r. 20 of the Thames conservancy by-laws; and therefore owners are not liable for damage caused thereby. The Ripon (supra, col. 829) explained. The Monte Rosa, 62 L. J., Adm. 20; [1893] P. 23; 1 R. 557; 68 L. T. 299; 41 W. R. 304; 7 Asp. M. C. 326.

A dumb-barge, by the negligent navigation of those in charge of her, was suffered to come into contact with a schooner moored to a mooring-buoy in the river Thames. The schooner had her anchor hanging over the bow with the stock above water, contrary to the Thames by-laws. The anchor made a hole in the barge and caused damage to her cargo. But for the improper position of the anchor neither the barge nor her cargo would have received any damage. In an action of damage by the owners of the barge against the schooner:—Held, that both vessels were to blame, and that therefore the owners of the barge were entitled to half the damage sustained. The Margaret, 50 L. J., Adm. 67; 6 P. D. 76; 44 L. T. 291; 29 W. R. 533—C. A.

Vessel crossing River.]—By article 24 of the rules and by-laws for the navigation of the river Thames, "Steam-vessels crossing from one side of the river towards the other side shall keep out of the way of vessels navigating up and down the river," and by article 25 such other vessels shall keep their course:—Held, that a ship which has not completely accomplished the manœuvre of crossing is still under the obligation of the rule, although her stem may have got as near to the opposite shore as she can safely get, if she is still athwart the stream. The River Derwent, 64 L. T. 509; 7 Asp. M. C. 37—H. L. (E.)

Where a vessel lying at anchor in the river Thames, head to tide, gets under way for the purpose of proceeding up or down the river with the tide, and in turning round she has to work across the river, she is a steam-vessel "crossing from one side of the river towards the other side" within the meaning of the Thames rules, 1880, r. 24, and it is her duty to keep out of the way of vessels navigating up and down the river, and of the latter to keep their course, under article 25. The Schwan, 61 L. T. 308; 6 Asp. M. C. 409.

—— Steamship—Four blast signal.]—Where a steamship navigating the river Thames is in such a position, through no fault of those in charge of her, that it is unsafe or impracticable for her to keep out of the way of a sailing vessel, it is the duty of the sailing vessel, under the Thames rules, 1880, r. 21, on hearing the steamer's whistle sounded as therein provided, to keep out of the way of the steamer. The Longnewton, 59 L. T. 260; 6 Asp. M. C. 302.

Steamship Swinging—Stern Light.]—A steamship having let go her anchor in the Thames was swinging to the tide athwart the river. Her sidelights and masthead light were not taken in for three or four minutes after the anchor held, when her riding light was put up and her masthead light shown at the stern by way of a stern light:—Held, that she was in fault for a collision with another steamship under way, which occurred very shortly after she took in her sidelights and put up her riding light. Held, also, that her masthead light, which she exhibited at her stern, was not such a light as is required by the Thames rules, 1892, r. 7 (c). Held, also, that she was in fault for not sounding four or more blasts of her steam whistle in compliance with the Thames rules, 1880, r. 18. The Vega, 64 L. J., Adm. 68; [1895] P. 156; 11 R. 726; 72 L. T. 332; 7 Asp. M. C. 597.

Steamship Turning—Four Blast Signal.]—A steamship about to turn in the river is bound to give the signal required by the Thames rules, 1880, r. 18, before executing the manœuvre of turning. The New Pelton, 60 L. J., Adm. 78; [1891] P. 258; 65 L. T. 494; 7 Asp. M. C. 81.

Fog—Fairway—Duty to ring Bell.]—The word "fairway" in r. 13 of the Thames rules (1877) means a clear passage-way by water. A barge lay at anchor above and inside the West Blyth buoy in Sea Reach, in not less than eighteen feet of water at half ebb:—Held, in fault for a collision caused by her not ringing a bell in a fog at intervals of not more than two minutes. The Blue Bell, 64 L. J.. Adm. 71; [1895] P. 242; 11 R. 790; 72 L. T. 540; 7 Asp. M. C. 601.

Watermen's Act—22 & 23 Vict. c. cxxxiii.—27 & 28 Vict. c. cxiii.—Barges in Tow.]—A tug hauling into dock thirty-one barges from the dock gates does not break r. 59 made under the above act. Rolles v. Newell, 59 L. J., Q. B. 423; 25 Q. B. D. 335; 63 L. T. 384; 39 W. R. 96; 55 J. P. 70; 6 Asp. M. C. 563.

—— Licensed Watermen in charge of Barges.]—As to the construction of r. 60 made under the above act, see Elmore v. Hunter, 47 L. J., M. C. 8; 3 C. P. D. 116; 38 L. T. 179; 3 Asp. M. C. 555.

—— Barge over 50 Tons—Two Hands.]—Under the Thames Conservancy and Watermen's Acts, and by-laws thereunder, if a barge under way exceeds 50 tons, there must be two qualified licensed watermen on board, and one is not sufficient though assisted by another unqualified man. Perkins v. Gingell, 50 J. P. 277.

And see as to the Waterman's Act, supra, cols. 139, seq.

"Maximum of Speed Six Miles per Hour."]—The 22nd clause of the by-laws of the river Tees, which provides that no steamship shall be navigated on any part of the river Tees at a higher rate of speed than six miles per hour, is to be construed as prohibiting a steamship proceeding against the tide being navigated at a greater speed than six miles per hour over the ground. The R. L. Alston, 8 P. D. 5; 48 L. T. 469; 5 Asp. M. C. 43—C. A.

Starboard side of River—Steamship.]—Articles 17 and 18 of the river Tees conservancy by-laws, providing that ships shall keep "the starboard side of the river, so that the port helm may always be applied," and that a "steamship, when approaching another ship on an opposite course or from an opposite direction, shall before approaching within 30 yards, slacken her speed, and keep as near as possible to the starboard side of the river," are to be observed even when vessels are approaching one another so as to shew each other their green lights, and nothing will excuse the non-observance of these rules but extreme necessity. The Mary Lohden, 58 L. T. 461; 6 Asp. M. C. 262—C. A.

Crossing River—Duty of Vessels going up or down.]—The duty imposed by article 22 of the rules for the navigation of the river Tyne upon vessels crossing the river not to cause obstruction, injury, or damage to other vessels, does not require them in any event to get out of the way of vessels going up or down, and they are at liberty when crossing at a proper time and in a proper manner to do so at such times as may be convenient to themselves, and vessels proceeding up and down must take the ordinary precautions to avoid collision with crossing ships. The Thetford, 57 L. T. 455; 6 Asp. M. C. 179.

Crossing near Pier-heads.]—By-law 20 of the regulations of the river Tyne, 1884, must be taken to mean that a vessel is not to cross from north to south, or from south to north, close up to the pier-heads, but is to get on a proper course when at some considerable distance outside the pier-heads. The Harvest, 11 P. D. 90; 55 L. T. 202; 6 Asp. M. C. 5—C. A.

Side of River—Crossing River.]—By the by-laws regulating the navigation of the river Tyne (clause 17), all vessels proceeding to sea must keep to the south side of mid-channel, and (clause 20) "vessels crossing the river and vessels turning take upon themselves the responsibility of doing so safely with reference to the passing traffic." Under these by-laws a vessel outward bound coming at full speed out of the Tyne dock on the south side of the river Tyne, and crossing the river to the north side, whether intentionally, in violation of clause 17, or unintentionally by reason of the force of the tide, is bound to use the utmost caution to avoid the passing traffic, and to contemplate before attempting to come out any contingencies, such as tide, stoppage of the traffic, &c., which may arise, and she should only cross if it can be done without risk to that traffic; if a collision occurs by want of such caution, the ship will be responsible. The Henry Morton, 31 L. T. 859; 2 Asp. M. C. 466—P. C.

Semble, that the 21st clause of the by-laws, providing that "when steam vessels are proceeding in the same direction, but with unequal speed, the vessel which steams slowest shall, when overtaken," take certain measures to allow the overtaking steamship to pass her, applies only to a vessel overtaking and passing another actually upon the same course with itself Ib.

A brig, in ballast, coming up the Tyne, along the south shore, came into collision with a smack being tugged down along the same shore. She pleaded, in defence, a custom of that river that vessels in ballast should come along the south shore:—Held, that no such custom could be maintained against the express conditions of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104. The Hand of Providence, Swabey, 107.

Launch.]—See The United States, ante, col. 697.

By-law 20.]—The construction put upon by-law 20 of the by-laws for the regulation of the river

Tyne, 1884, in The Harvest (55 L. J., Adm. 35; 11 P. D. 90), that an incoming vessel shall not begin to make for the river and to shape her course up it too near the piers, does not mean to lay down a hard and fast rule as to distance, but only that the incoming vessel shall leave reasonable room for an outgoing vessel to pass out. The John O'Scott, 66 L. J., Adm. 47; [1897] P. 64; 76 L. T. 222; 8 Asp. M. C. 235—C. A.

13. Jurisdiction and Practice.

a. Jurisdiction.

The jurisdiction of the Admiralty formerly extended to all water, where the tide ebbs and flows, and where great ships go. See per Lord Blackburn, Reg. v. Anderson, 38 L. J., M. C. 12; L. R. 1 C. C. 161; 19 L. T. 400; 17 W. R. 208; 11 Cox, C. C. 198; Reg. v. Carr, 10 Q. B. D. 76; 47 L. T. 450; 4 Asp. M. C. 604.

Collision within a County.]—Appearance under protest in a cause of collision on the ground that it was infra corpus, &c., overruled. The collision was in the Thames in the neighbourhood of Hole Haven. The Eliza Jane, 3 Hag. Adm. 335.

Prohibition awarded in the same case. Carfrae v. Salmon, 3 Hag. Adm. 338.

A collision in the Humber, twenty miles from the main sea, near the Yorkshire coast, and three miles from that of Lincolnshire:—Held (1832), not to be within the jurisdiction of the admiralty. The Public Opinion, 2 Hag. Adm. 398.

Prohibition to the admiralty in a suit for collision (semble in the river Thames), but upon terms that the names of the owners be given. Martin v. Green, 1 Keb. 730; and see The Volant, 1 Not. of Cas. 503.

Prohibition to the admiralty in a suit for a collision on the Thames at Redriff. Dorrington's Case, Moo. 916; and see Violet v. Blaque, Cro. Jac. 514; Velthasen v. Ormsley, 3 Term Rep. 315.

—— Collision in Dock in London — County Court.—The county court has jurisdiction under the Admiralty Court Act, 1861, s. 7, to hear such a case. Reg. v. City of London Court Judge, 51 L. J., Q. B. 305; 8 Q. B. D. 609; 30 W. R. 566. And see cases post, cols. 922, 941.

Foreign Ships in Foreign Waters.] — The court has jurisdiction over an action brought by a British subject against a foreign ship for a collision in foreign waters. The Griefswald, Swabey, 430.

Before 24 & 25 Vict. c. 10, s. 7, a master of a Danish schooner lying alongside the quay at the port of Ibraila, in the Danube, got on board an English barque lying outside him; and with a view to get the schooner out, wilfully cut the barque adrift from her moorings, whereby she swung to the stream and capsized a barge, which contained part of her cargo belonging to Turkish owners:—Held, that the Turkish owners of the cargo destroyed could not sue the Danish schooner in the Court of Admiralty. The Ida, Lush. 6; 1 L. T. 417.

The court had jurisdiction in case of a collision between an English and an Irish vessel in the Great North Holland Canal. The Diana, 32 L. J., Adm. 57; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 26; 7 L. T. 397; 11 W. R. 189; and see post, col. 922.

Damage to Ship otherwise than by Collision.] Semble. The Admiralty Court had always jurisdiction in case of damage to a ship by contact with another object not being a ship. The Zeta, Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Turner, 63 L. J., Adm. 17; [1893] A. C. 468; 1 R. 307; 69 L. T. 630; 7 Asp. M. C. 369; 57 J. P. 660—H. L. (E.)

Action in personam against Pilot.]—The High Court of Admiralty had no jurisdiction to entertain an action in personam against a pilot in respect of a collision caused by his negligence in the high seas. Reg. v. City of London Court Judge, 61 L. J., Q. B. 337; [1892] 1 Q. B. 273; 66 L. T. 135; 40 W. R. 215; 7 Asp. M. C. 140—C. A.

Consequently a county court has no such jurisdiction in such case. Ib.

Loss of Life.]—The Admiralty Court has jurisdiction under 24 Vict. c. 10, s. 7, to entertain an action under Lord Campbell's Act to recover damages for the death of a person killed in a collision. The Guldfaxe, 38 L. J., Adm. 12; L. R. 2 A. & E. 325; 19 L. T. 740; 17 W. R. 578. S. P., The Borodino, 5 L. T. 291. But see Smith v. Brown, 40 L. J., Q. B. 214; L. R. 6 Q. B. 729; 24 L. T. 808; 19 W. R. 1165; 1 Asp. M. C. 53, contra; and The Vera Cruz, infra.

The Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (24 Vict. c. 10), which by s. 7 gave the Court of Admiralty "jurisdiction over any claim for damage done by any ship," did not give jurisdiction over claims for damages for loss of life under Lord Campbell's Act (9 & 10 Vict. c. 93); and the Admiralty Division cannot entertain an action in rem for damages for loss of life under Lord Campbell's Act. The Franconia (infra) overruled. The Vera Cruz, Seward v. The Vera Cruz, 54 L. J., Adm. 9; 10 App. Cas. 59; 52 L. T. 474; 33 W. R. 477; 5 Asp. M. C. 386; 49 J. P. 324—H. L. (E.)

—— Liability of Foreign Ships.]—An action was instituted against a foreign ship to recover damages for the death of the husband of the plaintiff alleged to have been caused by a collision brought about by the improper navigation of the ship proceeded against:—Held, that the Admiralty Court had jurisdiction to entertain the action. The Franconia or Jeffrey v. Franconia (Owners), 46 L. J., Adm. 33; 2 P. D. 163; 36 L. T. 640; 25 W. R. 796—C. A.

An action in rem against a foreign ship under Lord Campbell's Act (9 & 10 Vict. c. 93, s. 2), is not within the Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (24 Vict. c. 10, s. 7), and therefore the Admiralty Division has not jurisdiction over such an action. The Chancery and Admiralty Divisions may entertain such a claim in an action for limitation of liability, under their general statutory jurisdiction as to limitation of liability. Per Brett, M.R. The Vera Cruz, 53 L. J., Adm. 33; 9 P. D., 96; 51 L. T. 104; 32 W. R. 783; 5 Asp. M. C. 270—C. A. See S. C., in H. L., supra.

Foreigners and their Representatives.]—Foreigners injured, or the representatives of foreigners killed, may sue in the Court of Admiralty in respect of injuries done by a British vessel on the high seas. The Explorer, 40 L. J., Adm. 41; L. R. 3 A. & E. 289; 23 L. T. 604; 19 W. R. 166.

17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 512—Loss of Life—Notice to Board of Trade.]—In a collision a Norwegian brig foundered with all hands. In answer to an inquiry from the Norwegian vice-consul the board of trade answered that they did not intend to hold an inquiry—meaning, as the court held, an inquiry under Part VIII. of the act. Afterwards the widow of one of the seamen drowned brought an action for damages against the owners of the other ship, and notice of her desire to proceed was sent to the board, who stated that they did not intend to institute an inquiry under Part IX. of the act :—Held, that this notice not having been given to the board before action brought the action did not lie. Haglund v. Russells, 9 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 958.

Nets Fouled by a Trawler.]—Justices held to have jurisdiction in a case of drift nets being fouled by a trawler. Hallett v. Dowdall, 18 Q. B. 882.

Torts on the High Sea.]—The Admiralty Court has original jurisdiction over torts on the high seas ; therefore where the damage was done by a keel without mast, and usually propelled by a pole. The Sarah, Lush. 549.

Ship Damaging Pile Driver.]—A collision between a ship and a pile driving machine ashore held to be within s. 29 of the Court of Admiralty (Ireland) Act, 1867, 30 & 31 Vict. c. 114. The Maid of the Mist, 21 W. R. 310.

Action against Pilot in charge of Vessel.]—The Court of Admiralty has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit against a pilot for damage occasioned to a ship by his negligence whilst in charge of another ship. The Alexandria, 41 L. J., Adm. 94 ; L. R. 3 A. & E. 574 ; 27 L. T. 565 ; 1 Asp. M. C. 464. But see The Zeta, infra, col. 941 ; Reg. v. City of London Court (Judge), infra, col. 942.

The Court of Passage and the county courts, having no larger admiralty jurisdiction than the Court of Admiralty, cannot, therefore, entertain such a suit. Ib.

—— Joinder of Pilot as Defendant.]—Where an action in rem has been brought against a ship and her owners for damage by collision, and compulsory pilotage has been pleaded, an order ought not afterwards to be made for the joinder of the pilot as a defendant (assuming there was jurisdiction to make the order) if the effect of so doing would be to embarrass the trial of the action. The Germanic, 65 L. J., Adm. 53 ; [1896] P. 84 ; 73 L. T. 730 ; 44 W. R. 394 ; 8 Asp. M. C. 116—C. A.

Plaintiff's Ship at Anchor—Burden of Proof—Who to Begin.]—The plaintiff's ship being at anchor, held that the burden of proof was on the defendants, and that they must begin. The George Arkle, 5 L. T. 290.

Damage to Barge in a Body of County.]—By the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 10, s. 7 the Admiralty Court has jurisdiction in a cause of damage done by a sea-going vessel to a barge propelled by oars within the body of a county. The Malvina, Lush. 493 ; Br. & Lush. 57 ; 1 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 357 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 527 ; 8 L. T. 403 ; 11 W. R. 576, and see The Sarah, supra. Everard v. Kendall, 39 L. J., C. P. 234 ; L. R. 5 C. P. 428 ; 22 L. T. 508 ; 18 W. R. 892.

Damage to Tow by Tug—Jurisdiction.]—The Admiralty Court has jurisdiction to entertain a suit against a steam-tug by the vessel in tow for damage done to such vessel by collision caused by the conduct of the tug. The Night Watch, 32 L. J., Adm. 47 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1161 ; 7 L. T. 396 ; 11 W. R. 189. But see The Robert Row, ante, col. 756.

Discontinuance, Effect of.]—See The Ardandhu, Kronprinz (Owners of Cargo) v. Kronprinz (Owners), infra, col. 751.

Form of Action—Trespass or Case.]—If a collision occurs through the pilot's negligence, the owner being on board, the remedy against the owner is by action on the case and not trespass. Huggett v. Montgomery, 2 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 447.

b. Parties.

Child en ventre sa mère.]—In a suit for limitation of liability, instituted on behalf of the owners of a brig against the owners of a barque, an appearance was entered on behalf of a child of one of the drowned men killed by the collision, en ventre sa mère. The court reserved leave to the child en ventre, if born within due time, to prefer its claim for damages sustained by the death of its father. The George and Richard, L. R. 3 A. & E. 466 ; 24 L. T. 717 ; 20 W. R. 246 ; 1 Asp. M. C. 50. The child was afterwards born, and its claim was assessed.

Right of Underwriters.]—The right of the underwriters of a lost ship for damages against a wrongdoer is merely to make the same claim that the insured might have made. Simpson v. Thomson, 3 App. Cas. 279 ; 38 L. T. 1 ; 3 Asp. M. C. 567—H. L.

In the case of a collision between two ships belonging to the same owner, by which one was totally lost through the exclusive fault of the other :—Held, that the underwriters could make no claim against the sum paid into court, under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 63), s. 54, the insured being himself the person who had caused the damage. Ib.

Bailees of a Barge Competent to Sue in rem.]—The bailees of a barge are competent to sue in rem in the Admiralty Court in cases of collision. The Minna, L. R. 2 A. & E. 97.

Action by one Part Owner.]—If one of the part owners of a ship sue alone for damage by collision and the defendant do not plead in abatement, the other part owner may afterwards sue alone for the damage suffered by him in respect of his share, and the defendant cannot plead in abatement. Sedgworth v. Overend, 7 Term Rep. 279 ; Addison v. Overend, 6 Term Rep. 118.

To an action on the case against some of the co-owners of a ship for negligence of the master in damaging the plaintiff's goods on board another ship by collision it cannot be pleaded in abatement that there are other co-owners. Mitchell v. Tarbutt, 5 Term Rep. 649 ; 2 R. R. 684.

Third Party Order.]—Where a ship, whilst in the hands of engineers for repairs, came into collision with another vessel whose owners sued her in rem for damages, the owner of the ship sued cannot bring in the engineers as third parties, as his right (if any) against them is not one of contribution or indemnity within the meaning of R. S. C., Ord. XVI. r. 48. The Jacob Christensen, 64 L. J., Adm. 92 ; [1895] P. 281 ; 11 R. 795 ; 72 L. T. 902 ; 8 Asp. M. C. 21. See also The Cartsburn, col. 758, The Bianca, ante, col. 668.

c. Default of Appearance.

Default of Appearance by Defendant.]—See The Spero Expecto, infra, col. 988.

d. Cross Actions—Bail—Security.

Security—Plaintiff out of Jurisdiction.]—The provision of 24 Vict. c. 10, s. 34 as to giving security to answer a cross cause, applies where the plaintiff is a British subject resident in the jurisdiction. The "Cameo" and the "Restless" were in collision, and the "Restless" sank. Her owners arrested and sued the "Cameo"; the "Cameo" owners entered a cross-action against the "Restless" owners in personam:—Held, that the latter, though British subjects resident within the jurisdiction, must give security to answer the cross action. The Cameo, Lush. 408; 5 L. T. 773.

—— Staying Proceedings—"Principal Cause" —"Cross Cause."]—A collision having taken place between the "J." and the "R.," by which the "R." was sunk, the owners of the "J." commenced an action of damage in personam. Subsequently the owners of the "R." commenced an action of damage in rem against the "J.," whose owners gave bail to avoid her arrest. The actions were consolidated, the owners of the "R." being made defendants to the first action, in which they delivered a counter-claim:—Held, that the court had no power, under s. 34 of the Admiralty Court Act, 1861, to order the counter-claim to be stayed until the defendants gave security to answer the plaintiff's claim. The Rougemont, 62 L. J., Adm. 121; [1893] P. 275; 1 R. 658; 70 L. T. 420; 7 Asp. M. C. 437.

Bail to Answer Counter-claim.]—The power of the Admiralty Division under s. 34 of the Admiralty Court Act, 1861, to order an action to be stayed until bail has been given to answer a cross-action or counter-claim, does not extend to making an absolute order to give bail; and in a damage action in which the plaintiffs had discontinued after the defendants had counterclaimed, the court refused to enforce an order, made by the registrar, to give bail to answer such counterclaim. The Alexander, 48 L. T. 797; 5 Asp. M. C. 89.

The court has jurisdiction by 24 Vict. c. 10, s. 34, to order a plaintiff in an action for damage by collision to give security for damages to a defendant who brings a counter-claim. The court can exercise this power when such plaintiff is a foreign sovereign whose ship cannot be arrested. The Newbattle, 54 L. J., Adm. 16; 10 P. D. 33; 52 L. T. 15; 33 W. R. 318; 5 Asp. M. C. 356—C. A.

Cross-actions—Bail.]—Two foreign vessels, a barque and a ship came into collision, and the barque sank. The ship was arrested in a damage cause by the owners of the barque. The owners of the ship thereupon commenced a cross-action against the owners of the barque, to which the latter made no appearance. Motion to dismiss the original action unless an appearance and bail were given by the owners of the barque rejected. The Carlyle, 6 W. R. 197.

Where there is a cross-action, and both come on to be heard together by consent of proctors, the court decides in the cross-action according to the facts pleaded and proved in the original action. The Vortigern, Swabey, 518; 1 L. T. 307.

The owners of a ship, "A.," brought an action in a cause of damage against the owners of "B." The court found both to blame; no cross-action had been entered pending those proceedings. Subsequently the owners of "B." entered an action in a cause of damage against the owners of "A.," who gave an appearance under protest:—Held, that the owners of "A." must give an absolute appearance, though a cross action, in the first instance, would have been the proper course. The Calypso, Swabey, 28; 4 W. R. 303.

Where cross actions were brought, and one vessel was found solely to blame, but her owners were freed from responsibility because the collision was caused by the act of a pilot who was employed compulsorily, in the action brought by the innocent vessel, the court dismissed the plaintiff without costs, but in the cross action condemned the guilty vessels in costs. The Annapolis and The Johanna Stoll, Lush. 295; 30 L. J., Adm. 201; 4 L. T. 417.

Collision between two foreign vessels, "A." and "B."; total loss of "A."; "B." was arrested in an action by the owner of "A."; cross action by the owners of "B.," but no appearance. The court refused to stay proceedings in the action against "B." until an appearance was given in the cross-action. Subsequently an appearance was entered, but no bail given; judgment in the original action pronouncing both ships in fault; the court refused to order that no damages be paid to the owners of "A." until decree given in the cross-action. The North American and The Tecla Carmen, Lush. 79.

When cross causes are instituted in respect of a collision, security cannot be required, under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 10, s. 34, for a greater amount than the value of a vessel of the defendant from whom security is demanded, though that may have sunk and the action against the owner is a personal one. The Calcutta, 17 W. R. 744.

Both Ships in fault—Payment out to Foreign Owner.]—Collision suit between the owners of a foreign ship residing out of the jurisdiction and cross suit by the owners of the other a British ship. In the cross suit the foreign defendants entered no appearance, whereupon it was discontinued. In the principal suit both ships were found to blame. The court withheld payment of the damages claimed by the foreign owner until he consented to a deduction of half the damage sustained by the British ship. The Seringapatam, 3 W. Rob. 28.

Reference—Plaintiff out of Jurisdiction.]—Where a decree has been made of both vessels to blame, the court will not refer the damage of both vessels to the registrar, but will leave the defendant to his cross-action, notwithstanding that the ship of the plaintiff perished in the collision, and the plaintiff resides out of the jurisdiction. The North American, Swabey, 466.

e. Preliminary Act.

Amendment.]—The preliminary act on behalf of the defendants was ordered to be amended, as it did not contain a proper statement of the distance and bearing of the other vessel in accordance with Ord. XIX. r. 28 (i.). The Godiva, 55 L. J., Adm. 13; 11 P. D. 20; 54 L. T. 55; 34 W. R. 551; 5 Asp. M. C. 524.

When required.] In an action for damage to cargo sustained in a collision between two ships where the action is brought against the ship carrying the cargo, the parties are not bound to file the preliminary acts under Ord XIX. r. 30. The John Boyne, 36 L. T. 29; 25 W. R. 756; 3 Asp. M. C. 341.

Action by Tow against Tug.]—The plaintiffs, owners of the barge "H." and of her cargo, employed the defendants' tug "W." to tow the "H." in the Thames. The "H." whilst in tow was in collision with a third ship, and was lost with her cargo. In an action by the plaintiffs against the defendants for negligence:—Held, that no order for the filing of a preliminary act would be made. Armstrong v. Gaselee, 58 L. J., Q. B. 149; 22 Q. B. D. 250; 59 L. T. 891; 37 W. R. 462; 6 Asp. M. C. 353.

Action Under Lord Campbell's Act.]—In an action under Lord Campbell's Act for loss of life in a collision, preliminary acts under Ord. XIX. r. 28 (1884) were ordered to be filed. Webster v. Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Ry., 5 Asp. M. C. 256, n.

May not be departed from.]—The Miranda, 51 L. J., Adm. 56; 7 P. D. 185; 47 L. T. 447; 30 W. R. 615; 4 Asp. M. C. 595. The Frankland, 41 L. J., Adm. 3; L. R. 3 A. & E. 511; 25 L. T. 889; 20 W. R. 592; 1 Asp. M. C. 207, 489. The Vortigern, Swabey, 578.

When to be Exchanged.]—Where the case is to be heard on vivâ voce evidence only, the preliminary acts are to be exchanged before the evidence is taken. The Ruby Queen, Lush. 266.

f. Pleadings.

Rules of Pleadings—Proof secundum allegata.]—The plaintiff in a collision suit must plead and prove the facts from which negligence is to be inferred; the defendant is not concluded by alleging that the collision was caused by a fact which he fails to prove. The East Lothian, Lush. 241; 14 Moore, P. C. 1; 4 L. T. 489.

The court will proceed secundum allegata et probata, even though entertaining some doubt whether, in so doing, it will arrive at the whole truth and justice of the case. The North American and The Tecla Carmen, 12 Moore, P. C. 331; Swabey, 358.

In a cause of collision, therefore, a party suing cannot recover in full if he fails to prove the case set up in his pleading and evidence, although no fault is proved against his vessel, and fault is established against the other vessel. Ib.

A plaintiff is only entitled to recover secundum allegata et probata. The Ann, Lush. 55; 13 Moore, P. C. 198; 3 L. T. 128; 8 W. R. 567.

Where a plaintiff charges two separate collisions, whereby his vessel, being at anchor, was driven on the rocks, and sustained great damage, and the first collision was such, that the plaintiff's vessel might, and probably would have driven on the rocks if no second collision had happened, he will be entitled to recover, on proving the first collision only, as the rule that the plaintiff must recover secundum allegata et probata is thereby satisfied. The Despatch, Lush. 98; 14 Moore, P. C. 83; 2 L. T. 219.

Where the plaintiffs pleaded that the collision was caused by the defendant's vessel having suddenly put her helm a-starboard, and the evidence given in support of the petition was that the collision was caused by the defendant's vessel having ported instead of continuing her course under a starboard helm:—Held, that the evidence could not be applied to the statement in the petition, and that the plaintiffs, therefore, were not entitled to recover. The Haswell, Br. & Lush. 247—P. C. And see The Hoshung and The Lapwing, 7 App. Cas. 512; 51 L. J., P. C. 92; 47 L. T. 485; 31 W. R. 303; 5 Asp. M. C. 39—P. C.

The rule, that a party seeking redress for an injury can only recover secundum allegata et probata, applies only to cases where the averments alleged are material to the issue raised. The Alice and The Rosita, 5 Moore P. C. (N.S.) 300; 38 L. J., Adm. 20; L. R. 2 P. C. 214; 19 L. T. 753.

Where, therefore, in a case of collision caused by a vessel drifting and driving down upon another at anchor in the same anchorage, though the relative bearing of the two vessels previously to the collision was incorrectly pleaded and alleged by the vessel proved to be entitled to redress:—Held, that the vessels not being in motion, their previous relative bearing when at anchor was not a material fact to the issue, namely, which vessel caused the collision, so as to render the actual proof of the damage of no avail, and so entitle the offending party to the benefit of the rule. Ib.

To a petition alleging that the "M." had been for some time close-hauled on the starboard tack, and that the "W. N." on the port tack came into collision with her, the answer admitted that the "W. N." was close-hauled on the port tack, and alleged that the "M." was seen on the port tack distant about a mile:—Held, that the defendants were bound also to allege what was subsequently done on board the "W. N." and before the collision, and the mode of the collision. The Why Not, 38 L. J., Adm. 26; L. R. 2 A. & E. 265; 18 L. T. 861.

If a plaintiff in a collision suit intends to rely upon a particular act of negligence by the defendant, he is bound specifically to allege that act in his pleadings, and it is not sufficient that the act may be included generally in an allegation in the pleadings, which do not clearly state such particular act, as it is likely to mislead the defendant, and prevent his being prepared to meet that particular case. The Marpesia, 8 Moore P. C. (N.S.) 468; L. R. 4 P. C. 212; 26 L. T. 333; 1 Asp. M. C. 261.

Semble, that the established rule, which requires a plaintiff in a cause of damage to state with reasonable certainty the instances of neglect on which he intends to rely, and if he relies on a breach of a statutory rule of navigation, that he should specifically plead that the act done or not done was in violation of that particular rule, does not apply to a case where one vessel is under way and the other incapable of moving. The Secret, 26 L. T. 670; 1 Asp. M. C. 318 (Irish).

When the petition states such facts on the part of the plaintiff, as if proved or admitted, would lead to the conclusion that the vessel charged with the collision was to blame, it is then rather for the defendant to shew what has been done than for the plaintiff to shew what might have been avoided. Ib.

The pleadings should be confined to the merits of the collision. The George Arkle, Lush. 222. See S. C., 5 L. T. 290.

Special damages, as rewards paid to salvors for services rendered necessary by the collision, are not to be pleaded. Ib.

An allegation in a petition that the vessel proceeded against in a collision cause was "considerably farther out to the north side of the river than" the other vessel, and improperly ported and so brought about a collision, is sufficiently proved, to entitle the owners of the vessel making the allegation to recover, by shewing that the vessel proceeded against was farther over to the south side of the river than the other, and improperly ported. Malcolmson v. General Steam Navigation Co., The Ranger and The Cologne, 9 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 352 ; L. R. 4 P. C. 519 ; 27 L. T. 769 ; 21 W. R. 273 ; 1 Asp. M. C. 484.

Ship in hands of Agent for sale—Defence not pleaded.]—In a cause of damage, alleged to have been done by and imputable to the acts of the owners, and their servants, of the vessel proceeded against, a general denial was pleaded in answer, and a special defence that the damage complained of was the same as had been already adjudicated upon in a court of law, and judgment obtained and satisfied ; at the hearing it was proved by a witness, who was the principal defendant in the action, that the damage proceeded for was occasioned by acts done by him on his own responsibility, and in the assertion of a right claimed by him as consignee for sale of the vessel, and not as the agent on behalf of the owners ; whereupon the judge held, that the suit could not be maintained : but, inasmuch as the defence thus disclosed had not been specifically pleaded, declined to give the defendants their costs, or to go into the special defence, though his judgment thereon was asked for by the defendants' counsel : —Held, that the appeal was not for costs alone within the meaning of the rule of the appellate court against the allowance of appeals involving costs only ; that the general traverse and denial of the averments in the petition was sufficient to justify the evidence produced ; and that the defendants were further entitled to have the judgment of the court, as asked on the special defence pleaded, that if prejudiced by such judgment they might appeal. The Orient, Yeo v. Tatem, 8 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 74 ; 40 L. J., Adm. 29 ; L. R. 3 P. C. 696 ; 24 L. T. 918 ; 20 W. R. 6 ; 1 Asp. M. C. 108.

—— Admissions.]—An allegation averred that by an act of the legislative council of India, and the rules and regulations passed pursuant to such act, the defendants were exempted from responsibility for the damages sued for by reason of the ship being in charge of a pilot, whom they were obliged by the provisions of that act to take on board. The responsive allegation did not traverse such averment as to the fact of the act and rule and regulations, and the requirement to take a pilot on board, but simply alleged that the defendants were not exempted by the act, and the rules and regulations :—Held, that the act and the rules and regulations being pleaded, and not denied, there was no necessity to prove them, the responsive allegation admitting, as far as was necessary between the parties to the cause, the act, rules and regulations as a fact, though not the effect of their operation in law. The Peerless, 13 Moore, P. C. 484 ; Lush. 103 ; 30 L. J., Adm. 89 ; 3 L. T. 125.

—— In Limitation Suit.]—See The Karo, ante, col. 752.

Replying.]—A plaintiff may plead new matter in reply, if it is really matter of reply, and not properly a part of the case set up in his behalf. The Bothnia, Lush. 52 ; 29 L. J., Adm. 65.

Adding Pleas.]—The court will not, at the hearing of a cause of collision, allow a plea to be added alleging that the vessel proceeded against was in charge of a licensed pilot, and that the accident was caused by his default. The Alhambra, Br. & Lush. 286.

Defence of Compulsory Pilot.]—The defence of compulsory pilotage must be specially pleaded. The Canadian, 1 W. Rob. 343. The Northampton, 1 Spinks, 155, n. The Alhambra, supra. The Philomela, 1 Spinks, 155, n.

Inevitable Accident.]—By the old practice of the admiralty, if the defence of inevitable accident is relied on, it must be pleaded in terms. The E. Z., 33 L. J., Adm. 200 ; 10 L. T. 290.

Infringement of the Regulations.]—Where violation of a statutory rule is intended to be charged, it must be so pleaded. The Ebenezer, 2 W. Rob. 210 ; The Ironmaster, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 782 ; Swabey, 441 ; The Exeter, 2 W. Rob. 261 ; The Bothnia, Lush. 52. See also The Lady Anne, 7 Not. of Cas. 370.

Salvage rendered necessary by Collision.]—Should not be pleaded. The George Arkle, Lush. 222.

g. Interrogatories.

As to interrogatories in a collision action. See The Biola, 34 L. T. 185 ; 24 W. R. 524 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 125. The Radnorshire, 49 L. J., Adm. 48 ; 5 P. D. 172 ; 43 L. T. 319 ; 29 W. R. 476 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 338.

Whole Crew Drowned.]—In an action for damage, where all the plaintiff's crew who could give evidence as to the collision were drowned, the court ordered the defendants to answer certain interrogatories which were directed to those matters upon which information would be afforded by the preliminary act. The Isle of Cyprus, 59 L. J., Adm. 90 ; 15 P. D. 134 ; 63 L. T. 352 ; 38 W. R. 719 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 534.

h. Inspection.

Reports of Surveys—Inspection of.]—The defendant in an action of damage to cargo is not entitled to obtain from the plaintiff an inspection of reports of surveys in possession of the plaintiff, written and prepared solely for the purpose of the action. The Theodor Korner, 47 L. J., Adm. 85 ; 3 P. D. 162 ; 38 L. T. 818 ; 27 W. R. 307 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 17.

Reports by Officer of her Majesty's Ships—Inspection of.]—After a collision between one of her majesty's ships and another ship, it is the duty of the commanding officer of her majesty's ship to forward a report of the collision to the lords commissioners of the admiralty. But in a cause of damage against one of her majesty's ships a motion to inspect such a report was refused on affidavit by the secretary to the admiralty that it would be prejudicial to the public interests to allow such reports to be inspected. H.M.S. Bellerophon, 44 L. J., Adm. 5; 31 L. T., 756; 23 W. R. 248; 2 Asp. M. C. 449.

Order to inspect Ship—24 Vict. c. 10, s. 18.]—Made, The Magnet, 44 L. J., Adm. 1; L. R. 4 A. & E. 417, 428; 32 L. T. 129; 2 Asp. M. C. 478; The Germania, 37 L. J., Adm. 59; 19 L. T. 20. S. C. on app. 21 L. T. 44. Refused, The Victor Covacevitch, 54 L. J., Adm. 48; 10 P. D. 40; 52 L. T. 632; 5 Asp. M. C. 417.

i. Evidence.

Naval Officer—Result of Inquiry.]—The result of an inquiry into the conduct of a naval officer for getting his ship into collision, cannot be given in evidence in the Admiralty Court. H.M.S. Swallow, Swabey, 30.

Decision of Pilotage Authority.]—Decision of a pilotage authority at an investigation into the conduct of the pilot of a ship that had been in collision is not admissible as evidence in an action for collision. The Lord Seaton, 2 W. R. 391.

Proceedings at Wreck Inquiry.]—Evidence of proceedings at shipping casualty inquiries is not admissible in a collision action. The Mangerton, Swabey, 120; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 620. S. P., The London or The City of London, 11 Moore, P. C. 307; Swabey, 245; 5 W. R. 678.

Depositions of Witnesses—Cross-examination upon—Originals must be Produced.]—Certified copies of statements made to the receiver of wreck as to the cause of collision cannot be used to discredit the witness upon cross-examination. The originals must be produced. The Emperor and The Zephyr, 12 W. R. 890. S. P., The Risca, The Benayo, cited Marsden on Collisions (4th ed.) 355. But see The Oscar, 10 L. T. 789; 12 W. R. 872.

—— Not Admissible as Evidence.]—Depositions taken before a receiver of wreck are not admissible in evidence to prove the facts to which they relate. The Little Lizzie, L. R. 3 A. & E. 56; 23 L. T. 84; 18 W. R. 960; The Emperor and The Zephyr, supra.

The examination of the captain of the plaintiff's ship, taken by the receiver of wrecks under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 448, is not admissible for the defendant for the purpose of proving the fact that the damage to the ship from the collision was on her starboard bow; such fact being offered for the purpose of shewing that the plaintiff's ship was in fault, the question which ship caused the damage to the other not being a matter which the receiver had power to examine into. Nothard v. Pepper, 17 C. B. (N.S.) 39; 10 Jur (N.S.) 1077; 10 L. T. 782.

—— After Death.]—Depositions made by persons on board a ship relative to a collision cannot, even after the decease of the deponents, be used as evidence on behalf of that ship at the trial. The Henry Coxon, 47 L. J., Adm. 83; 3 P. D. 156; 38 L. T. 819; 27 W. R. 263; 4 Asp. M. C. 18.

Statements of Master or Crew.]—The statements of the master with regard to a collision are, but the statements of the mate or seamen are not, admissible evidence against the owners. The Actæon, 1 Spinks, 176.

Admissions by the crew as to the circumstances of a collision, are not evidence in an action brought by the shipowners and crews. The Foyle, Lush. 10.

A statement made by the pilot that the collision was caused by his fault is not admissible as evidence of the fact; nor evidence of a seaman confirming the pilot's statement; nor the decision of a pilotage authority as to the pilots being in fault or otherwise. The Lord Seaton, 2 W. Rob. 39; 4 Not. of Cas. 164. But see The Schwalbe, infra.

A statement of the master as to the cause of a collision is admissible in evidence against the shipowner. The Manchester, 1 W. Rob. 62.

Statements by the master as to the cause of collision are admissible in evidence; those by the crew are not. The Midlothian, 15 Jur. 806; The Emperor and The Zephyr, supra; The Europa, 13 Jur. 856; The Solway, 54 L. J., Adm. 83; 10 P. D. 137; 53 L. T. 680; 34 W. Rob. 232; 5 Asp. M. C. 482.

Statements made by the mate and seamen as to their ship making water or not immediately after the collision held admissible as part of the res gestæ. The Mellona, 10 Jur. 992.

Evidence contradicting a denial by the pilot of the other ship that he made use of an expression indicating that his helm had been wrongly put to starboard:—Held, to be admissible. The Schwalbe, Swabey, 521.

Allegations and Proof.]—On appeal, in a cause of collision between two vessels originally at anchor, the statement in the defendants' answer in the Admiralty Court as to the bearing of their vessel in respect to the other when at anchor, varied from the proof:—Held, that the statement as to the bearing of one vessel in respect of the other when at anchor was immaterial, and was therefore not necessary under the Admiralty Rules, 1859, No. 67, and that the variance was therefore immaterial. The Rosita, 38 L. J., Adm. 20; L. R. 2 P. C. 214; 19 L. T. 753; 17 W. R. 209.

Lights.]—Evidence of an order, as to the lights, given twelve hours before the collision, is admissible, but not of conversations with respect to them. The Aleppo, 35 L. J., Adm. 9; 14 L. T. 228.

Proof of Loss.]—On a reference to the registrar in a cause of damage, the plaintiffs, who were underwriters of the cargo, and had paid as for a total loss, produced in support of their title as owners of the cargo lost, the policies of insurance of the cargo, the bills of lading, and the invoice and copy manifest:—Held, that they must give further evidence of the value of the goods, and of a discharge from the owners of the cargo. The John Bellamy, 39 L. J., Adm. 28; L. R. 3 A. & E. 129; 22 L. T. 244.

Protest—Original.]—The original protest, and not a notarial copy must be produced. The Ljubica, 23 L. T. 474; following The Emma, 2 W. Rob. 315; 3 Not. of Cas. 114.

Whole Crew Drowned.]—A schooner and a steamship were in collision, and all the crew of the schooner were drowned. The steamship held in fault upon admissions in her answer. The Aleppo, 35 L. J., Adm. 9 ; 14 L. T. 228.

Evidence of Agency.]—In an action for damage done to the plaintiff's lug-boat, by the negligence of the defendant's servant, it was proved that the barge was the defendant's, but the witness could not identify the bargeman :—Held, that this was primâ facie evidence that the barge was steered by the defendant's servant ; and that, if the barge was in the use of any other person, it lay on the defendant to prove it. Joyce v. Capell, 8 Car. & P. 370.

No Cross-examination.]—Where witnesses are, by mistake, examined de bene esse on behalf of one party to a collision action, without cross-examination, the cause will not be heard until the witnesses are submitted for cross-examination. The Chance, Swabey, 294 ; 6 W. R. 221.

Reference—Evidence.]—On a reference in a collision action the registrar and merchants are not bound by uncontradicted evidence as to the amount of damage done, but are entitled to use their own judgment and experience, and find in accordance therewith. The Bernina, 55 L. T. 781 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 65.

Opinion of Experts.]—In an action for negligently steering a ship, whereby the plaintiff lost his passage in her, no evidence can be given of a specific act of negligence, which is not the foundation of the action ; but evidence may be given that the captain had often expressed his conviction that the officer in charge of the ship was incompetent ; and experienced nautical men may be called as witnesses, and asked whether, in their judgment, particular facts which have been proved amount to gross negligence. Malton v. Nesbit, 1 Car. & P. 70.

But a nautical witness cannot be asked whether he thinks, having heard the evidence, that the conduct of the captain was correct or not. Sills v. Brown, 9 Car. & P. 601.

In an action for running down the plaintiff's ship, a nautical witness may be asked, whether, having heard the evidence, and admitting the facts proved by the plaintiff to be true, he is of opinion that the collision could have been avoided by proper care on the part of the defendant's servants. Fenwick v. Bell, 1 Car. & K. 312.

Where Court assisted by Trinity Masters.]—In a cause of damage, where the court is assisted by trinity masters, evidence will not be received on a mixed question of law and nautical skill. The Earl Spencer, L. R. 4 A. & E. 431 ; 32 L. T. 370 ; 23 W. R. 661 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 523. Affirmed 33 L. T. 235 ; 3 Asp. M. C. 4—C. A.

As to evidence of usual course of navigating a channel see The Corennie, [1894] P. 338, n. See also cases, post, col. 999.

When Actions consolidated.]—The court cannot except by consent order that evidence in one suit that has been heard shall be admitted as evidence in a subsequent suit. The Demetrius, 41 L. J., Adm. 69 ; L. R. 3 A. & E. 523 ; 26 L. T. 324 ; 20 W. R. 761 ; 1 Asp. M. C. 251.

In consequence of a collision between vessels "A." and "B.," both the vessels and also the cargo laden on board the "A." sustained damage. A suit in rem was instituted by the owners of the "A." against the "B." to recover the damage done to their vessel. A cross suit was instituted by the owners of the "B." against the "A." These suits were heard and determined. Afterwards a suit in rem was instituted on behalf of the owners of the cargo on board the "A." against the "B." to recover the damage done to the cargo :—Held, that the court had no power to order the evidence taken in the suit by the owners of the "A." against the "B." to be admitted in the suit instituted on behalf of the owners of cargo. Ib. See also The William Hutt, Lush. 25.

Entries in Log.]—Entries made in the ship's log by the mate of a vessel relative to a collision and signed by him and the captain nearly two days after the collision, cannot be used as evidence on behalf of the ship in which they were made, after the decease of the persons making and signing them. The Henry Coxon, 47 L. J., Adm. 83 ; 3 P. D. 156 ; 38 L. T. 819 ; 27 W. R. 263 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 18.

The log-book of one of the ships produced contained an erasure as to the wind at the time of the collision, but the alteration was rather adverse to the case on behalf of the ship :—Held, that the erasure was immaterial, it being adverse to the case on behalf of the ship. The Constitution, 2 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 453 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 831 ; 10 L. T. 894—P. C.

The official log is not evidence for the ship. The Europa, 13 Jur. 856. The Malta, 3 Hag. Adm. 158, n. The Earl of Dumfries (engineer's log), 54 L. J., Adm. 7 ; 10 P. D. 31 ; 51 L. T. 906 ; 33 W. R. 568 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 342.

Lightship Log.]—The court will admit a lightship log, on production by the officer of the trinity house in whose custody such logs are kept, without requiring the evidence of the person who made the entries. The Maria Das Dorias, Br. & Lush. 27 ; 32 L. J., Adm. 163 ; 7 L. T. 838 ; 11 W. R. 500.

Coastguard Log.]—The books containing the entries made by the coastguard, and sent to the coastguard office, are admissible to prove the state of wind and weather at the time of the collision, without calling the person who made the entries. The Catherina Maria, L. R. 1 A. & E. 53 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 380.

Protest.]—A protest is not evidence for the ship. Christian v. Coombe, 2 Esp. 489 ; The Ljubica, 23 L. T. 474 ; The Emma, 2 W. Rob. 315 ; 3 Not. of Cas. 114 ; The Hedwig, 1 Spinks, 19.

Verdict in Action for same Collision.]—A verdict in a common-law action for the same collision cannot be received in evidence in the admiralty. The Friends, General Steam Navigation Co. v. Tonkin, 4 Moore, P. C. 314 ; in court below, 1 W. Rob. 484.

j. Res or Bail Insufficient.

Res insufficient.]—An action in rem having been brought, and the proceeds of the res being insufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's claim, a citation in personam issued. The Pet, 20 L. T. 961 ; 17 W. R. 899.

Bail insufficient.]—Where bail is given in a collision action, in a sum which is insufficient to cover the damage and costs, the party giving bail will not be ordered to pay any further sum beyond that for which bail is given, except under special circumstances; as where he puts the plaintiff to unnecessary costs. The Temiscouata, 2 Spinks, 208. See The Kalamazoo, 15 Jur. 155.

Re-arrest—Bail insufficient—Admiralty Court Act, 1861, ss. 15, 22.]—Where the bail given proves insufficient to cover damages recovered and costs, the ship may be re-arrested to satisfy the costs. The Freedom, L. R. 3 A. & E. 495; 25 L. T. 392; 1 Asp. M. C. 136.

—— Action entered for too little.] — Where, in a collision suit, the action was by mistake entered for 1,000*l.*, the real claim being for 2,600*l.*, the vessel decreed to be re-arrested for the balance. The Hero, Br. & Lush. 447; 13 W. R. 927.

Common-Law Action to recover Damages not recovered in Admiralty.]—It is no bar to an action for a collision at sea that a judgment in rem has been recovered in the Admiralty Court, and execution levied by the sale of the defendant's vessel, where the damage done was more than the amount realised by such sale. Nelson v. Couch, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 99; 33 L. J., C. P. 46; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 366; 8 L. T. 577; 11 W. R. 964.

Personal Remedy—Res insufficient.]—If the value of the defendant's vessel and freight is not equal to the damage done, the plaintiff may, after judgment, obtain a monition against the defendant personally to satisfy the deficiency. The Zephyr, 11 L. T. 351.

Action in rem after Action in Personam.]—A party, having two remedies, an action in personam and an action in rem, resorted, in the first instance, to his personal action, and obtained judgment, but could not recover the amount sued for:—Held, that he was entitled afterwards to proceed in rem. The Bengal, The John and Mary, Swabey, 471; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1085.

Undertaking to put in Bail — In Salvage Action—Award in Excess of Bail — Personal Liability of Owner of res for the Difference.]—A salvage action was instituted in a sum of 5,000*l.* The solicitors for the defendants gave an undertaking to put in bail for 5,000*l.* The sum of 7,500*l.* was awarded for salvage:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to sue out a writ of fieri facias against the defendants for the difference between 5,000*l.* and the amount of the award. The Dictator, 61 L. J., Adm. 73; [1892] P. 304; 67 L. T. 563; 7 Asp. M. C. 251.

k. Generally.

Res—Increase of Value by Repairs.] — A vessel damaged by collision was arrested and subsequently repaired, whereby her value was considerably increased:—Held, that she was only liable to arrest for her value at the time when she was arrested. The St. Olaf, 38 L. J., Adm. 41; L. R. 2 A. & E. 360; 20 L. T. 758; 17 W. R. 743.

Amount of Freight payable into Court.] — The freight payable by the owner of cargo on board the ship sued for collision is the amount payable by him to the shipowner; allowing for deductions allowed by charterparty, costs of paying into court, and deductions agreed to for delivering short of the destination by reason of the collision. The Leo, Lush. 444; 31 L. J., Adm. 78; 6 L. T. 58.

Arrest of wrong Ship.]—A plaintiff in a collision suit, who failed to prove the identity of the ship arrested with the ship that had done the damage:—Held, not liable in damages for arresting her, he having acted in good faith and without gross negligence. The Evangelismos, 11 Moore, P. C. 352; Swabey, 378. And see The Active, 5 L. T. 773, infra, col. 856.

Compromise—Doubt as to Law—Consideration.]—The defendants in a collision suit, in consideration of the plaintiffs releasing the ship from arrest in admiralty, agreed to pay 180*l.* for the damage done; the defendants' ship was in charge of a compulsory pilot at the time, and the law as to the liability of the shipowners in such case was unsettled:—Held, that there was a good consideration for the promise to pay 180*l.* Longridge v. Dorville, 5 B. & Ald. 117.

Discontinuance.]—See The Ardandhu or The Kronprinz, ante, col. 651.

Limitation of Liability—Stay of Actions after.]—See The Sisters, and cases ante, col. 749.

Right of Beginning.]—Where a defendant admits in the pleadings that his ship, when under way, ran into a vessel at anchor, but denies that the vessel at anchor was the vessel of the plaintiff, the plaintiff must begin and prove his case. The Earl of Leicester, Br. & Lush. 188.

The defendants, by their pleadings, made no charge against the plaintiffs, but only denied generally the averments in the petition, and pleaded inevitable accident:—Held, that defendants ought to begin. The Thomas Lea, 38 L. J., Adm. 37; 20 L. T. 1017.

Right of Reply.]—In a cause of collision, in which the evidence has been taken before an examiner of the court, the plaintiff's counsel is entitled to reply. The Rjukan, 14 W. R. 973.

Sale of Ship arrested and in perishable Condition.]—A ship arrested in a damage suit, being in a perishable condition, first decree made for her sale. The Sylvan, 2 Hag. Adm. 155.

Function of Nautical Assessors in Admiralty.]—See cols. 849, 999.

—— Action at Common Law — Nautical Assessors.]—New trial ordered (1826) in a collision action at common law, at which "the judge may have the assistance of two of the brethren of the trinity house to explain the duties of the masters of both ships." Jameson v. Drinkald, 5 L. J., C. P. 30.

—— Assessors Disagreeing.] — Semble, that where the two assessors disagree, the court can call in a third, and, after submitting the evidence already given to him, have the case re-argued before the three assessors. The Philotaxe, 37 L. T. 540; 3 Asp. M. C. 512.

The judgment is that of the judge, and he may decide in accordance with advice of one or more of the assessors or not as he thinks fit. Ib.

Reference—Total Loss Caused by Plaintiff's Negligence—Special Report.]—If upon reference the plaintiffs present a case of immediate partial damage resulting in the total loss of their ship, and no evidence is given on either side of the pecuniary extent of such partial damage, and the registrar is of opinion that the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover the total loss, upon the ground that by ordinary skill and diligence after the collision they might have avoided it, but are entitled to recover the partial damages, he should not assess the amount of the partial damages conjecturally and report such amount to be due, but should make a special report to the court; and the court will then order a further reference to ascertain the amount of the partial damages by evidence. H.M.S. Flying Fish, Br. & Lush. 436; 2 Moore, P. C. (N.S) 77; 34 L. J., Adm. 113; 12 L. T. 619.

Reference—Practice as to.]—Practice of the Admiralty Court, as to referring questions of damages to the registrar and merchants, explained. The Sir George Seymour, 1 Spinks, 67.

Foreign Suit pending.]—In a cause of damage in respect of collision between two foreign vessels in the Bosphorus; semble, that if a suit as to the same subject-matter is pending elsewhere whereby the plaintiff can obtain full indemnity, the Court of Admiralty will suspend the proceedings in its court or put the plaintiff to his election; and the court will so act whether the proceedings elsewhere are in rem or in personam. The Mali Ivo, 38 L. J., Adm. 34; L. R. 2 A. & E. 356; 20 L. T. 681.

—— Judgment obtained.] — Where cross actions between an English and a foreign ship were heard and judgment given in a foreign court in favour of the English ship in both actions, and suits in the Court of Admiralty were afterwards heard and the English vessel found alone to blame:—Held, that she must be condemned in damages and costs, notwithstanding the foreign judgments. The Delta, The Erminia Foscolo, 45 L. J., Adm. 111; 1 P. D. 393; 35 L. T. 376; 25 W. R. 46; 3 Asp. M. C. 256.

Plea of Judgment in Admiralty.]—A plea in a common-law action of a decree in the Admiralty Court, in the defendant's favour, in respect of the same collision, is bad, if it does not state that the admiralty had jurisdiction. Harris v. Willis, 15 C. B. 710; 24 L. J., C. P. 93; 3 C. L. R. 609; 3 W. R. 238.

Verdict and Judgment at Law.]—A verdict and judgment at law are no bar to subsequent proceedings in admiralty. The Clarence, 1 Spinks, 206. But see, per Knight Bruce, L.J., 1 Spinks, 209, n.; The Sylph, 37 L. J., Adm. 14; L. R. 2 A. & E. 24; 17 L. T. 519; The Antelope, 42 L. J., Adm. 42; L. R. 4 A. & E. 33; 28 L. T. 74; 21 W. R. 464; 1 Asp. M. C. 511.

Res Judicata—Consular Court.]—Plea of res judicata in case where judgment was given in a collision action by a court summoned by the Prussian legation, at Constantinople, overruled. The Griefswald, Swabey, 430.

Consolidation of Actions.]—Where several actions are brought against a ship in respect of one collision by different plaintiffs, and several bail bonds given, and the actions are consolidated by order of the court, and the damage pronounced for in the usual course, the court has the power to open the order of consolidation and dissever the actions, but will not do so unless due cause is shewn. The William Hutt, Lush. 25; 1 Swabey, 696; 2 L. T. 448.

Judgment by Consent — Setting aside by Consent.]—In an action by the owners of the "Britannia" against the owners of the "Bellcairn" for collision, a judgment dismissing claim and counter-claim was taken by consent. Subsequently, the owners of cargo on board the "Britannia" brought an action against the owners of the "Bellcairn," and obtained a judgment that both ships were to blame. The owners of the "Bellcairn" then limited their liability and paid the money into court, and the owners of the "Britannia" having, with the consent of the owners of the "Bellcairn," obtained an order in the registry setting aside the judgment in the first action, brought in a claim against the fund in court:—Held, that the order setting aside the judgment of the court was void, and that the owners of the "Britannia" could not claim against the fund in court. The Bellcairn, 55 L. J., Adm. 3; 10 P. D. 161; 53 L. T. 686; 34 W. R. 55; 5 Asp. M. C. 503—C. A.

Sale of Ship and Cargo—Freight.]—Where in an action in rem for collision against ship and freight, in which the defendants' ship was held solely to blame, the ship being still under arrest with the cargo on board, was ordered to be sold; the court on motion directed the marshal to discharge the cargo, to retain the same in his custody as security for the payment of the landing and other charges and freight, if any, due from the owners or consignees of the cargo in respect of the same, and that in default of any application for the delivery of the cargo within fourteen days, the marshal should be authorised to sell such part of the cargo as might be necessary to pay the said charges and freight, if any, due. The Gettysburg, 52 L. T. 60; 5 Asp. M. C. 347.

Payment out of rem found due for Damages.]—A shipwright who had effected repairs on a ship after a collision, for which the other ship was held in fault, applied to have the amount found due by the registrar paid out to him upon the ground that the owners were bankrupt and had paid him nothing:—Application refused. The Endeavour, 62 L. T. 840; 6 Asp. M. C. 511.

Doubt as to Plaintiff being Owner.]—If a question is raised, after judgment in a collision suit, whether the plaintiff was the owner of the injured ship, the amount found due upon the reference will be ordered to be paid into the registry. The Ilos, Swabey, 100. And see The Minna, supra, col. 725.

Priorities of Claimants.]—Of two plaintiffs in two damage causes he who first obtains a decree is entitled to priority. Where the proceeds of the defendant's ship are in the registry, and the second plaintiff thinks that they are insufficient to satisfy both claims, he must apply to the court before decree pronounced. The Clara, Swabey, 1.

—— Second Suit Begun — Payment out of Damages.]—Where the owners of the damaged ship and the owners of part of her cargo had obtained a decree in their favour:—Held, that they were entitled to have the proceeds of the wrongdoing ship paid out of court to them, although the owners of the rest of the cargo have, after decree in the first suit, instituted a second suit against the wrongdoing ship. The Saracen, 4 Not. of Cas. 498; 2 W. Rob. 451; 6 Moore, P. C. 56.

Appeal upon Facts alone—Reluctance of Privy Council to differ from Judge below.]—The judicial committee refused to reverse a decision of the court below upon facts alone, the judge having had the advantage of seeing the witnesses and judging of their credibility. The Alice and The Princess Alice, 38 L. J., Adm. 5; L. R. 2 P. C. 245; 19 L. T. 678; 17 W. R. 209.

Remission of Action from Court of Appeal.]—If the cause is remitted from the Court of Appeal, with injunction "to proceed according to the tenor of former acts had and done," the court has no authority to relax an order made previously to the appeal. The William Hutt, Lush. 25; 1 Swabey, 696; 2 L. T. 448.

Contributory Negligence—Appeal—Point not taken below.]—The privy council will not entertain on appeal in a case of collision a question of contributory negligence which was not raised in the court below. The Pleiades v. The Jane, 60 L. J., P. C. 59; [1891] A. C. 259; 65 L. T. 169; 7 Asp. M. C. 41—P. C.

I. Costs.

i. Generally.

Against the Crown.] — Costs may be given against the Crown where the lords of the admiralty appear to contest a collision suit. The Swallow, Swabey, 30.

In a cause of damage instituted on behalf of her majesty in her office of admiralty, and of the commander and crew of one of her majesty's ships against a private shipowner, the court on a finding for the defendant, decline to condemn the Crown in costs, but condemned the commander and crew to pay the whole of the costs. The Leda, Br. & Lush. 19; 32 L. J., Adm. 58; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 208; 7 L. T. 864; 11 W. R. 302.

Co-plaintiffs are severally liable to the whole of the costs. Ib.

Misconduct after Collision punished by.]—Owner of ship that rendered no assistance to another with which she had been in collision, though not in fault for the collision, condemned in costs. The Celt, 3 Hag. Adm. 343.

A Dutch and a Spanish ship were in collision in the Channel. The Spanish seamen came on board the Dutch ship with knives and were violent. The Dutch ship was held in fault for the collision, but no costs were given to the Spanish ship. The Catalina, 2 Spinks, 23.

Compromise — Collusion.] — In an admiralty wages action, the plaintiffs and defendants compromised the action by payment by the defendants to the plaintiffs of a sum in discharge of claim and costs. The plaintiffs left the country without paying their solicitors' costs. There was no evidence that the settlement was made with a view of depriving the plaintiffs' solicitors of their lien for costs:—Held, that no order could be made that the defendants pay the plaintiffs their taxed costs. The Hope, 52 L. J., Adm. 63; 8 P. D. 144; 49 L. T. 148; 32 W. R. 269; 5 Asp. M. C. 126—C. A.

Co-defendants—Costs of successful Defendant.]—The dumb barge "E.," while in tow of the steamtug "S.," was damaged by a collision with the steamship "R. L." The owners of the "E." commenced an action joining the owners of both vessels as defendants. At the trial "R. L." was found alone to blame:—Held, that the owners of the "R. L.," having endeavoured to throw the blame on the "S.," must pay her costs as well as those of theplaintiffs. The River Lagan, 57 L. J., Adm. 28; 58 L. T. 773; 6 Asp. M. C. 281.

Wrong Ship sued.]—If the plaintiff negligently arrests the wrong ship he will have to pay costs. The Evangelismos, Swabey, 378; 12 Moore, P. C. 352. S. P., The Active, 5 L. T. 773; The Strathnaver, 1 App. Cas. 58; 34 L. T. 148; 3 Asp. M. C. 113. And see The Peri, 32 L. J., Adm. 46; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1230; 11 W. R. 44.

Collision caused by Fault of third Ship—Costs.]—The owners of a pier in the Thames sued the owners of the "Valencia" and the owners of the "Alfred" for damage done to their pier by the "Valencia." The "Valencia" owners admitted collision with the pier, but said that their ship was driven against the pier by the negligent navigation of the "Alfred"; and the jury so found:—Held, that the "Alfred" owners must pay the costs of the "Valencia" owners as well as those of the plaintiffs. Green v. Goodyer, 6 Asp. M. C. 281, n.

Costs in Limitation Action.]—See The Warkworth and cases, supra, col. 753.

Expense of detaining Witnesses.]—The expense of detaining witnesses until the trial is allowed as costs. The Karla, Br. & Lush. 367; 13 W. R. 295.

Cost of Bail.]—Money paid to sureties on a bail bond in consideration of their suretyship is not allowed as costs. The Numida, The Collingrove, 54 L. J., Adm. 78; 10 P. D. 158; 53 L. T. 681; 34 W. R. 156; 5 Asp. M. C. 483.

Costs of paying Freight into Court.] — The owner of cargo arrested for freight may deduct the costs of paying it into court. The Leo, Lush. 414; 31 L. J., Adm. 78; 6 L. T. 58.

Monition to pay in Freight—Doubt as to Law.]—Where freight was not brought in by the person against whom a monition had issued, upon a reasonable doubt as to whether the act 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 57, s. 47, allowed it, costs not given, the appearer having abandoned his petition. The Lord Aukland, 2 W. Rob. 301.

Monition to pay—Res insufficient.]—The proceeds of a vessel sold in a collision suit being insufficient, a monition issued against the owner to pay costs. The John Dunn, 1 W. Rob. 159.

Costs of Commission for taking Evidence abroad.] — Circumstances under which costs allowed against unsuccessful party. The Hilda and The Australia, 12 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 574.

ii. Compulsory Pilot.

Practice as to Costs.]—Defendants in a cause of damage, who rely at the hearing upon the defence of compulsory pilotage only, and succeed in this point, but whose pleadings raise other issues which are not proved, are not entitled to their costs. The Livia, 25 L.T. 887; 1 Asp. M.C. 204.

Defendants in a collision suit, by their answer, denied that their vessel was to blame, and also set up the defence of compulsory pilotage. The court decided that their vessel was to blame, but dismissed the suit upon the ground that the defence of compulsory pilotage was established:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to any portion of the costs of the suit. The Schwan, The Robert Morrison, 43 L. In an action of damage, if the only defence is that the collision was caused by the negligence of a pilot taken by compulsion of law, the defendants, if successful in establishing this defence, are entitled to costs. The Juno, 45 L. The rule of the Court of Admiralty, that, where the defendants succeed on a plea of compulsory pilotage, no costs are to be given, also holds good in the Court of Appeal. The Daioz, 47 L. J., Adm. 1; 37 L. T. 137; 3 Asp. M. C. 477—C. A.

The admiralty division will adhere to the practice of the High Court of Admiralty as to costs in cases of compulsory pilotage. The Princeton, 47 L. J., Adm. 33; 3 P. D. 90; 38 L. T. 260; 3 Asp. M. C. 562.

Where the defendants in a collision suit raise a defence on the merits, and also set up a plea of compulsory pilotage, and the court dismisses the suit on the ground that the plea of compulsory pilotage is established, each party to the suit will, in accordance with the practice prevailing in the Court of Admiralty before the Judicature Acts, be left to bear his own costs. The Matthew Cay, 49 L. The only defence was, that the collision was caused by the fault of a pilot whom the defendants were compelled to take. They having proved their case:—Held, that plaintiffs must be condemned in costs. The Royal Charter, 38 L. J., Adm. 36; L. R. 2 A. & E. 362; 20 L. T. 1019; 18 W. R. 49. Collision caused either by fault of compulsory pilot or by accident:—Suit dismissed with costs. The Castor, 6 L. T. 106.

Collision caused by fault of compulsory pilot of plaintiff's ship:—Plaintiff's action dismissed with costs; defendant's cross action dismissed without costs. The Annapolis and The Johanna Stoll, Lush. 295.

Where a suit is dismissed because the collision was caused by the fault of a compulsory pilot, costs were formerly never given. The Admiral Boxer, Swabey, 193. The Marathon, 48 L. J., Adm. 17.

Admiralty Rule not applied in other Divisions.]—In an action in the exchequer division, tried by a jury, for damages caused by collision of the defendants' ship with the plaintiffs' ship, the defendants raised several grounds of defence, but succeeded only on the ground that the collision was caused by the negligence of the pilot, whom they were compelled by law to employ. The plaintiffs afterwards, under Ord. LV., applied to the exchequer division for an order depriving the defendants of costs, on the ground that in the admiralty division a defendant under similar circumstances is entitled to no costs:—Held, that, whether the exchequer division had or had not power to make such an order, it ought not to be made, for the rule which prevails in the admiralty division does not extend to the other divisions. The Daioz, General Steam Navigation Co. v. London and Edinburgh Shipping Co., 47 L. J., Ex. 77; 2 Ex. D. 467; 36 L. T. 743; 25 W. R. 694; 3 Asp. M. C. 454; 47 L. J., Adm. 1; 37 L. T. 137; 3 Asp. M. C. 377—C. A.

Counter-claim—Defendant alone to blame.]—In an action of damage arising out of a collision the plaintiff's claim was dismissed without costs, the court having found that the defendants' vessel was alone to blame for the collision, but that they were exempt from liability on the ground of compulsory pilotage. The defendants had counter-claimed:—Held, that, under the circumstances, the plaintiffs were entitled to have the counter-claim dismissed with costs. The Ruby, 15 P. D. 139; 63 L. T. 735; 6 Asp. M. C. 577. See S. C. in C. A., ante, col. 778.

Discontinuance—Compulsory Pilotage.]—In an action of damage by collision, the defendants pleaded, inter alia, that their vessel at the time of the collision was compulsorily in charge of a licensed pilot, and that the negligence, if any, which caused the collision, was solely that of the pilot:—Held, that on the plaintiffs discontinuing their action, they must pay the defendants' costs. The J. H. Henkes, 56 L. J., Adm. 69; 12 P. D. 106; 56 L. T. 581; 35 W. R. 412; 6 Asp. M. C. 121.

Uncertainty of Law.]—Uncertainty of the law as to compulsory pilotage assigned as a reason for not giving successful party his costs. The Hankow, 48 L. J., Adm. 29; 4 P. D. 197; 40 L. T. 335; 4 Asp. M. C. 97.

iii. Inevitable Accident.

Costs—Inevitable Accident—Admission in Pleadings.]—The plaintiffs in an action for damage by collision admitted on the pleadings that the collision was the result of an inevitable accident:—Held, that the defendants were entitled to judgment with costs. Unless there are special circumstances to induce the court to depart from this rule, costs will be given against the plaintiffs in an action of damage, whenever the defendants prove that the collision is the result of an inevitable accident. The Naples, 55 L. J., Adm. 64; 11 P. D. 124; 55 L. T. 584; 35 W. R. 59; 6 Asp. M. C. 30.

A sailing ship in a gale drove from her anchors across a sand, and her rudder was so damaged as to render the ship unmanageable; in this condition she came into collision after sunset with a brig at anchor. At the time of the collision the ship had her anchor-light exhibited and no other light. In an action of damage by the owners of the brig against the ship it was held that the collision was occasioned by inevitable accident, and that the ship, in the circumstances of the case, was not to be deemed in fault for not carrying side-lights, or the three red lights prescribed by the regulations, and that the suit ought to be dismissed without costs. The Buckhurst, 51 L. J., Adm. 10; 6 P. D. 152; 46 L. T. 108; 30 W. R. 232; 4 Asp. M. C. 84.

When the defence of inevitable accident is sustained, the plaintiff will not be ordered to pay the costs, unless he might have known that there was, apart from the merits, a good legal defence. The Virgo, 35 L. T. 519; 25 W. R. 397; 3 Asp. M. C. 285.

It is a rule in the Admiralty Court, where a collision is found to be the result of an inevitable accident, to make no order as to costs, unless it can be shewn that the suit was brought unreasonably and without sufficient grounds. The Marpesia, 8 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 468; L. R. 4 P. C. 212; 26 L. T. 333; 1 Asp. M. C. 261.

It is the practice of the Admiralty Court in case of inevitable accident that each party should pay its own costs. But if, from the circumstances of the collision, it must have been obvious that the collision was an inevitable accident, the court will use its discretion as to dismissing the suit with costs. The Innisfail, The Secret, 35 L. T. 819; 3 Asp. M. C. 337.

Where the court finds inevitable accident, the general rule is, that each party pays his own costs; but the court still holds, and will on occasion exercise, a discretionary power to condemn the plaintiff in costs. The London, Br. & Lush. 82; 9 Jur. iv. Both Vessels in Fault.

Both Vessels to blame—Action by Owners of Cargo.]—The owners of a cargo laden on board a vessel which had been sunk in a collision with another vessel brought an action of damage against the owners of such other vessel. The judge of the admiralty division pronounced that both vessels were to blame for the collision, gave the plaintiffs half their damages from the defendants, and condemned the defendants in the costs of the action. The decision that both vessels were to blame was upheld by the Court of Appeal:—Held, that as the plaintiffs had failed on the issue that the vessel carrying the cargo was not to blame, no costs ought to have been given. The City of Manchester, 49 L. The case of The Milan (Lush. 388) does not lay down any general rule that whenever owners of cargo succeed in an action brought by them to recover damages for the loss of or injury to the cargo, they are entitled to the whole costs of the litigation. v. Appeal.

When the Court of Appeal varies the decision of the judge of the admiralty division, by which he found one vessel wholly to blame for a collision, by finding that the collision was an inevitable accident, the practice of the privy council that each party should, except under very exceptional circumstances, pay their own costs, will be followed. The City of Cambridge, 35 L. vi. High Court or County Court.

Less than £300 recovered.]—The court will not give a successful plaintiff his costs in actions which might have been commenced in the county court, unless there are special circumstances to justify the plaintiff in bringing the action in the High Court. The Asia, 60 L. J., Adm. 38; [1891] P. 121; 64 L. T. 327; 7 Asp. M. C. 25.

In an action of damage by collision, the hearing lasted five hours, and the decision mainly turned on the inability of the defendants to exonerate their steamship from the charge of not keeping out of the way of the plaintiffs' steamer, a large vessel in tow of tugs, and which the defendants' steamer was overtaking in the river Thames. In the result the defendants' vessel was held alone to blame, and the damages were referred in the usual way to the registrar and merchants.—The plaintiffs filed their particulars of claim amounting to 339*l.* 15*s.* 7*d.*, but the reference was not proceeded with, as the parties agreed the damages at 226*l.* 5*s.*—On motion on behalf of the plaintiffs, to condemn the defendants and their bail in that amount, with interest, and in the costs of the action, the defendants contended that the plaintiffs were not entitled to their costs, as the amount recovered was under the statutory county court limit of 300*l.*, and therefore, the action ought to have been brought in a county court:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to their costs, for the discretion of the court in allowing, or refusing, costs now depends upon whether, considering the facts and the circumstances of the particular case, the plaintiffs have acted properly and reasonably in bringing their action in the High Court, and—considering the size of the vessels, the nature of the collision, the length of time the hearing lasted, and the judgment pronounced—this case was a proper one to be tried in the High Court. The Saltburn, [1892] P. 333; 1 R. 543; 69 L. T. 88; 7 Asp. M. C. 325.

Where successful plaintiffs in a collision action in the High Court recovered less than 300*l.* they were allowed no costs, although they claimed more than the county court limit. The Herald, 63 L. T. 324; 6 Asp. M. C. 542.

By s. 9 of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868: "If any person shall take in the High Court of Admiralty, or in any superior court, proceedings which he might, without agreement, have taken in a county court, . . . and shall not recover a sum exceeding the amount to which the jurisdiction of the county court in the admiralty cause is limited by this act, . . . he shall not be entitled to costs, and shall be liable to be condemned in costs," unless the judge before whom the cause is tried shall certify that it was a proper admiralty cause, to be tried in the Admiralty Court or in a superior court:—Held, that this enactment was inconsistent with the discretionary power as to costs given to the court by Ord. LXV. r. 1, and must, therefore, be taken to be repealed. Tenant v. Ellis (6 Q. B. D. 46) approved. Rockett v. Clippingdale or Chippingdale, 60 L. J., Q. B. 782; [1891] 2 Q. B. 293; 64 L. vii. Reference.

An action of damage was brought by the owners of the ship "V." against the ship "S.," and the owners of the "S." claimed damages by way of counter-claim against the "V." At the hearing of the action the court found both ships to blame for the collision, condemned the owners of each ship in a moiety of the damage sustained by the other, referred the question of damages to the registrar and merchants and made no order as to costs. Afterwards the owners of the "S." brought their counter-claim into the registry. No tender was made by the owners of the "V.," and the registrar struck off less than one-ninth of the amount claimed, but made no recommendation as to the costs of the reference. The court, on the application of the owners of the "S.," condemned the owners of the "V." in the costs of and incident to the reference. The Consett (infra) followed. The Savernake, 49 L. J., Adm. 71; 5 P. D. 166; 29 W. R. 123; 5 Asp. M. C. 34, n.

In an action of damage brought by the owners of the ship "J." and the owners of the cargo on board her against another vessel, the court pronounced that the two vessels were both to blame for the collision, and condemned the defendants in a moiety of the damage proceeded for:—Held, that the owners of the cargo on board the "J." were entitled to the costs of the affidavits brought in by them in support of their claim at the reference. The Consett, 5 P. D. 77; 42 L. T. 33; 28 W. R. 622; 4 Asp. M. C. 230—C. A.

Where, in an action of damage, the defendant sets up a counter-claim relating to the collision in respect of which the action is brought, and both ships are held to blame, and a reference is ordered to ascertain the amount of damage sustained by each ship, each party is, as a general rule, entitled to the costs of establishing his claim before the registrar, provided that not more than one-fourth of his claim has been disallowed. The Mary, 7 P. D. 201 ; 48 L. T. 28 ; 31 W. R. 248 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 33.

Where a plaintiff claimed unliquidated damages in respect of loss of the remainder of a season's fishing occasioned by a collision, and on a reference to the registrar and merchants, the defendant objected to the claim altogether, but the plaintiff recovered, being awarded less than two-thirds of the amount claimed by him as damages, the court gave him costs in respect of the reference on the ground of the peculiarity of the plaintiff's claim, and without prejudice to the general rule as to costs of references. The Gleaner, 38 L. T. 650 ; 3 Asp. M. C. 582.

Where the amount of damage is referred to the registrar and merchants, and a tender is made by the defendant but not accepted by the plaintiff, if the amount pronounced to be due is less than two-thirds of the claim, but exceeds the tender of the defendant, the plaintiff is liable for the general costs of the reference, but the defendant for the costs occasioned by his making an insufficient tender. The Seine, Swabey, 513 ; 2 L. T. 340.

The ordinary rule, that a plaintiff shall pay the costs of the reference to the registrar and merchants, if their report disallows more than one-third of his claim, is not to be relaxed, even if he fails in substantiating his entire claim upon a question of law only. The Empress Eugénie, Lush. 138.

In a damage action, at the reference, more than one-third of the plaintiff's claim was disallowed ; the greater part of the items disallowed being sums claimed in respect of salvage service rendered after the collision :—Held, that the usual rule should not prevail, and that under the special circumstances the plaintiffs were entitled to their costs. The Berbice, 6 L. T. 106.

Notwithstanding a general rule that where more than one-fourth of the plaintiff's claim was struck off no costs of reference were given, it was always within the registrar's discretion to allow the plaintiff his costs. The Amelia, 23 L. T. 544 ; 19 W. R. 216. And see The Williamina, 3 P. D. 97. See The Elina, 5 P. D. 237, n. ; The Parana, 2 P. D. 118 ; 36 L. T. 388 ; 25 W. R. 596 ; 3 Asp. M. C. 399—C. A.

Claimant ordered to pay costs of reference ; less than two-thirds of original claim proved. The Eilean Dubh, 49 L. T. 444 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 154.

There is no hard-and-fast rule as to allowing or disallowing costs of the reference. The Friedeberg, 54 L. J., Adm. 75 ; 10 P. D. 112 ; 52 L. T. 837 ; 33 W. R. 687 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 426.

Costs of appeal from the registrar's report usually follow the result of the appeal. The Black Prince, Lush. 568 ; The Parana, supra.

Where more than one-third of the plaintiff's claim was disallowed by the registrar, the plaintiffs were condemned in the costs of the reference. The Naomi, 32 L. T. 836 ; 23 W. R. 887 ; 2 Asp. M. C. 588. S. P., The Englishman, 38 L. T. 756 (where the rule as to one-third was considered to be binding on the court) ; The Gleaner, supra.

Upon a reference in a collision cause more than one-fourth and less than one-third of the claim was disallowed :—Held, each party must pay his own costs of the reference. The Peerless, Lush. 30 ; 6 L. T. 107.

viii. Security for Costs.

Where a plaintiff has recently executed a deed of assignment of all his property to an assignee, he will be required to give security for the costs of suit, unless he satisfies the court that he is solvent. The fact that he is carrying on business is not sufficient proof of his solvency. The Lake Megantic, 36 L. T. 183 ; 3 Asp. M. C. 382.

A defendant in a collision cause making a counter-claim for the damage sustained by his own vessel, must, if he is resident out of the jurisdiction, give security for the costs, not merely of his counter-claim, but of the whole action. The Julia Fisher, 2 P. D. 115 ; 36 L. T. 257 ; 25 W. R. 756 ; 3 Asp. M. C. 380—C. A.

If he makes default in giving security for costs pursuant to order, he will have his counter-claim dismissed. Ib.

Number of Passengers — Tonnage.]—Under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 119, ss. 3 and 71, a sailing ship is not a passenger ship because she carries more than thirty passengers, or more than one statute adult passenger to every fifty tons, if that number or proportion is not made up without reckoning cabin passengers ; and where persons are cabin passengers in all respects except that of having received contract tickets in the form in schedule K. which in its terms applies to passenger ships only, such persons, for the purpose of estimating the number or proportion, are to be reckoned as cabin passengers ; and unless, without including them, the number or proportion is not made up, the ship is not a passenger ship. Ellis v. Pearce, El. Bl. & El. 431 ; 27 L. J., M. C. 257 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1275 ; 6 W. R. 683.

Certificate from Board of Trade—Defence to Action on Policy.]—In an action on a marine policy, a plea that the ship was sent by the owners with passengers on board on the voyage on which she was lost, without the owners having done what was necessary to enable them to receive, and without having received, a passengers' certificate from the Board of Trade, all which the owner well knew, is good. Dudgeon v. Pembroke, 43 L. J., Q. B. 220 ; L. R. 9 Q. B. 581 ; 31 L. T. 31 ; 22 W. R. 914. And see S. C. in H. L., col. 1088.

—— "Vessel used in Navigation"—"Passenger Steamer."]—An electric launch, in which passengers are taken for hire on pleasure trips on an artificial lake three feet deep, half a mile long, and 160 yards wide, is not a "vessel used in navigation" within s. 2 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, nor a "passenger steamer" within s. 318, so as to require a duplicate of a certificate of the board of trade to be put up in a conspicuous part of the vessel. Reg. v. Southport Corporation, or Southport Corporation v. Morriss, 62 L. J., M. C. 47; [1893] 1 Q. B. 359; 5 R. 201; 68 L. T. 221; 41 W. R. 382; 7 Asp. M. C. 279; 57 J. P. 231.

—— Steamship not having Certificate carrying Persons other than Crew.]—The respondents were charged that they being the owners of the British steamship "Era," did ply on the river O. with certain passengers on board without having one of the duplicates of a certificate issued by the board of trade put up in some conspicuous part of the ship so as to be visible to all persons on board the same. More than twelve persons were taken on board the steamer for an excursion from I. down the river O. to F. and back. No charge was made by the respondents for the use of the steamer, but a gratuity was given to the master and crew. The justices dismissed the case:—Held, that the justices were right, as the steamship was not a passenger steamship within the meaning of ss. 303 and 313 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854. Hedges v. Hooker, 60 L. T. 822; 37 W. R. 491; 6 Asp. M. C. 386; 53 J. P. 613.

Persons carried gratuitously.]—The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, s. 303, defines "passenger" as including any person carried in a steamship other than the master and crew, and the owner, his family and servants; and "passenger steamer" as including every British steamship carrying passengers between places in the United Kingdom; and in s. 318 provides that no passenger steamer shall proceed to sea, or upon any voyage and excursion with passengers on board, without a certificate as therein prescribed, and a penalty is imposed for offending against the section. The Merchant Shipping Act of 1876, exempts from these provisions steamships carrying passengers not exceeding twelve in number. The owner of a tug steamer called the "Flying Hawk," was summoned to answer a complaint that a certain passenger steamship, called the "Flying Hawk," of which he was owner, went to sea on the 21st July, 1882, from Dublin, with more than twelve passengers on board, without any Board of Trade certificate, and without having a duplicate of such certificate put up in some conspicuous part of the ship, contrary to the provisions of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 318, and the 39 & 40 Vict. c. 80, s. 16. The persons on board the steamer on the occasion in question, other than the master and crew, considerably exceeded twelve in number, and had been invited for a pleasure trip in respect of which none of them paid anything. The magistrate having dismissed the summons; on a case stated:—Held, that the magistrate, if he believed the evidence, should have convicted the defendant. Kiddle v. Kidston, 14 L. R., Ir. 1; 15 Cox, C. C. 379.

—— Refusal to give Certificate—Remedy.]—A board of trade surveyor refused to give a certificate for a passenger steamship under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, ss. 307, 312, 318; the Merchant Shipping Amendment Act, 1872, s. 13:—Held, that the Merchant Shipping Amendment Act, 1876, ss. 14, 15, provided the shipowner with a remedy by appeal to the court of survey, and that the jurisdiction of the court of session was excluded. Denny Brothers v. Board of Trade, 7 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 1019.

2. Contract of Conveyance.

Time of Sailing.]—Where a vessel, bound for the East Indies, is advertised to sail by a certain day, and does not, the shipowner will be entitled to recover half the passage-money of a person who refused to go, after having engaged a passage, unless either the time was of the essence of the contract, or the delay in sailing was unreasonable. Yates v. Duff, 5 Car. & P. 369.

C., who resided in Ireland, having applied to certain emigration agents in London, respecting a passage for himself and family on board their ships to Australia, received in answer a letter in which they agreed to convey him and his family for a sum of money. This letter was written on the fly-sheet of a printed circular, headed "Emigration to Australia," and which stated that ships "will be despatched on the appointed days (wind and weather permitting), for which written guarantees will be given." Then followed a list of ships, amongst which the "Asiatic" was named as to sail from London on the 15th of August, and from Plymouth on the 25th. In another part of the circular it was stated, "Passengers from Ireland can readily join at Plymouth. A deposit of one-half the passage-money to be paid at the time the berths are engaged, the balance to be paid prior to granting the embarkation order." C. engaged a berth on board the "Asiatic," and paid the agents a deposit, but no written guarantee was given. The "Asiatic" did not arrive at Plymouth until the 3rd of September, although not prevented by wind or weather. The berth was kept vacant from London to Plymouth:—Held, that the statement in the circular was not a mere representation, but a warranty that the "Asiatic" would sail on the days appointed, and that as she did not, C. was justified in taking a passage on board another vessel, and was entitled to recover from the emigration agents the amount of the deposit, and the expenses he had been put to by the delay at Plymouth. Cranston v. Marshall, 5 Ex. 395; 19 L. J., Ex. 340.

Custom as to Right to Carry—Charterparty.]—A charterparty, not amounting to a demise of the ship, provided for the carriage of a full and complete cargo of lawful produce and merchandise for payment of a lump freight, but was silent as to the use to which the passengers' cabins might be put:—Held, that the charterers were not entitled to carry passengers in the cabins. Shaw v. Aitken, 1 Cab. & E. 195.

No custom exists entitling the charterer under the above circumstances to carry passengers, or entitling the shipowner to have passengers carried for his benefit. Ib.

Loss of Life—Claim by Person not responsible for Negligence—Admiralty Rule as to Damages.]—A passenger on board the "Bushire" and one of the crew lost their lives by drowning in consequence of a collision with the "Bernina." Both vessels were to blame, but neither of the deceased had anything to do with the negligent navigation of the "Bushire":—Held, that their representatives could maintain actions under Lord Campbell's Act against the owners of the "Bernina," and could recover the whole of the damages; s. 25, sub-s. 9, of the Judicature Act, 1873, not being applicable to such actions. Thorogood v. Bryan (8 C. B. 115) and Armstrong v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Ry. (44 L. J., Ex. 89) overruled. The Bernina, Mills v. Armstrong, 57 L. J., Adm.

65 : 13 App. Cas. 1 ; 58 L. T. 423 ; 36 W. R. 870 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 257 ; 52 J. P. 212—H. L. (E.)

—— Liability—Meaning of Words "Loss or Damage"—Passenger's Ticket.]—The personal representatives of a deceased man cannot maintain an action under Lord Campbell's Act (9 & 10 Vict. c. 93), where the deceased, if he had survived, would not have been entitled to recover. The defendants, a steamship company, issued a passenger's ticket, which contained amongst others, the following condition :—"The company will not be responsible for any loss, damage, or detention of luggage under any circumstances. . . . The company will not be responsible for the maintenance of passengers, or for their loss of time or any consequence arising therefrom . . . nor for any delay arising out of accidents ; nor from any loss or damage arising from the perils of the sea, or from machinery, boilers, or steam, or from any act, neglect or default whatsoever of the pilot, master or mariner" :—Held, that the words "loss or damage arising from the perils of the sea," as contained in the above conditions, exempted the defendants from liability for injury or loss of life to a passenger occasioned on the voyage by the negligence of the defendants' servants. Haigh v. Royal Mail Steam Packet Co., 52 L. J., Q. B. 640 ; 49 L. T. 802 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 189 ; 48 J. P. 230—C. A.

—— Injury to Passenger — Contributory Negligence.]—The owner of a Clyde steamboat held liable to a passenger who rushed on to the gangway after the bow rope of the steamboat had been cast off, and was thereby thrown into the water and injured. Monaghan v. Buchanan, 13 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 860. And see Dalyell v. Tyrer, El. Bl. & El. 899, supra, col. 714.

County Court—Admiralty Jurisdiction—Carriage of Passengers' Luggage.]—Passengers' luggage carried on board a ship is not "goods" within the meaning of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Amendment Act, 1869, and consequently the act does not confer jurisdiction to try a claim arising out of the loss of such luggage, as a court having admiralty jurisdiction. Reg. v. City of London Court Judge, 53 L. J., Q. B. 28 ; 12 Q. B. D. 115 ; 51 L. T. 197 ; 32 W. R. 291 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 283.

Rights of Passengers as to Berths.]—In an action, in which one of the questions between the parties was, whether the defendant was justified in expelling the plaintiff from a berth in a steamer, it was proved that the plaintiff placed his coat upon the berth while it was vacant, afterwards applied at the office of the company to which the steamer belonged for the purpose of engaging the berth, and caused the company's clerk or agent, then in attendance at the office, to enter the plaintiff's name on the way-bill opposite the number of the berth, but that the defendant, having also applied for the same berth, another agent or clerk of the company altered the way-bill by inserting the defendant's name opposite the berth, and allotting another one to the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff, upon returning to the berth in dispute, after the steamer had started, found the defendant's servant at the door, who refused to allow him to enter. The plaintiff afterwards entered the berth and was removed by the defendant. Evidence was also given that, according to the usage on board the steamer, the rights of the passengers inter se to berths during the voyage were to be determined by the way-bill as finally settled and sent on board, and that disputes during the voyage with respect to passengers' accommodation should be decided by the captain or steward :—Held, first, that the plaintiff was not entitled to a direction that he was in possession of the berth in dispute. Dysart v. Montgomery, Ir. R. 8 C. L. 245.

Held, secondly, that the way-bill, as finally settled and delivered to the officers on board, determined the right to the berth as between the plaintiff and the defendant. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the jury having found that the way-bill, as finally settled for the purpose of the voyage, allotted the berth to the defendant, and that he was in possession at the time of the alleged assault, he was justified in removing the plaintiff, without using unnecessary violence, upon his refusal to leave the berth. Ib.

Putting into Port during Voyage.]—The captain of a ship covenanted to promote the comfort of passengers engaged by the plaintiff ; the plaintiff covenanted not to interfere with the navigation of the ship, and to defray the expense of putting into port if it should be necessary for the convenience and at the request of the plaintiff :—Held, that the captain was bound to put into port for the convenience and at the request and expense of the plaintiff, unless he could shew that putting in would be dangerous. Corbin v. Leader, 10 Bing. 275 ; 3 M. & Scott, 751 ; 6 Car. & P. 32.

Accommodation and Provisions.]—There was in an agreement under seal for the use of cabins and accommodations for passengers in a ship, a covenant on the part of the captain, to permit and suffer the hirer to stow away the baggage of the passengers in a part of the hold :—Held, that this, in connection with a covenant to promote the comfort and convenience of the hirer and his passengers, fairly imported that there should be some demand or request made by the hirer for the clearing the space agreed on. Ib.

A covenant to keep up a supply of the necessary and usual quantity of water, for the use of the passengers, is not broken by a deficiency for a short time, occasioned by the unusual length of the voyage. Ib.

In an action against a captain for not furnishing good and fresh provisions to a passenger on a voyage, the jury must be satisfied that there was a real grievance sustained by the plaintiff, and there is no right of action unless he has really been a sufferer ; for it is not because a man does not get such a good dinner as he might have had that he is therefore to have a right of action against the captain who does not provide all that he ought. Young v. Fewson, 8 Car. & P. 55.

Authority of Captain over.]—A declaration on an agreement to carry the plaintiff in a ship to a particular place alleged as a breach, that the defendants by their agent, caused him to be disembarked at an intermediate point, and by their agent caused the disembarkation to be conducted in a scandalous, disgraceful, and improper manner, whereby, and also by contemptuous usage and insulting language addressed to the plaintiff by the agent in effecting the disembarkation, the plaintiff sustained damage :—

Held, a good declaration: Coppin v. Braithwaite, 8 Jur. 875. And see Cases ante, col. 81.

Held, secondly, that the judge rightly received evidence of the language of the captain in putting the plaintiff on shore, in which he described him as being a pickpocket, and belonging to the swell mob. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the judge rightly directed the jury, that the defendants were responsible for any injury naturally resulting from the acts of the captain, when acting as their servant; and that the plaintiff was entitled to fair compensation for the injury done to him in being put on shore at the intermediate place, so far as injury arose from the act of the captain in putting him on shore. Ib.

Conduct unbecoming a gentleman, in the strict sense of the word, will, it seems, justify a captain of a ship in excluding a passenger from the cuddy table, whom he has engaged by contract to provide for there; but it is difficult to say in what degree want of polish would in point of law warrant such exclusion; but it is clear, that, if a passenger use threats of personal violence towards the captain, the captain may exclude him from the table, and require him to take his meals in his own private apartment. Prendergast v. Compton, 8 Car. & P. 454.

The captain has absolute control over the passengers in all that is necessary to the safe and proper conduct of the vessel, but the exercise of such power in each instance is defined and limited by the necessity of the case. King v. Franklin, 1 F. & F. 360. See also Noden v. Johnson, 16 Q. B. 218; 20 L. J., Q. B. 95; 15 Jur. 424.

The captain has authority to exercise so much force as is necessary for the safety of the ship. Aldworth v. Stewart, 4 F. & F. 957; 14 L. T. 862.

To imprison a passenger in his cabin for seven days for alleged insolence to the captain personally is an excess of such power, and an action for the false imprisonment will lie. Ib.

Passage-money—Commencement of Voyage.]—Where an agreement was made to carry a passenger on board a ship from London to the West Indies, the passage-money to be paid in London before the commencement of the voyage; and the passenger put his baggage on board in the Thames, meaning himself to embark at Portsmouth; and the ship was lost going round to that place; the passage-money could not be recovered back. Gillan v. Simpkin, 4 Camp. 241; 16 R. R. 784.

Aliter, if the agreement had been to carry the passenger from Portsmouth to the West Indies. Ib.

—— Ship's Officers—When entitled to.]—If a captain of an East Indiaman dies at the outward port, after having contracted to bring home certain passengers and laid in a certain quantity of stores for the homeward voyage; and the chief mate, succeeding to the command, brings home these and other passengers, and provides further stores for their subsistence during the voyage; the captain's representatives are entitled to the passage-money of the passengers with whom he had contracted, and the mate to that of the others; the representatives being liable to him for the portion of the stores laid in by him consumed by the former class of passengers, and he being liable to the representatives for the portion of the captain's stores consumed by the latter class of passengers. Siordet v. Brodie, 3 Camp. 263.

—— Lien for.]—The master has a lien on the luggage of a passenger for his passage-money. Wolf v. Summers, 2 Camp. 631; 12 R. R. 764.

But he has certainly no lien on the passenger himself, or the clothes which he is actually wearing, when he is about to leave the vessel. Ib.

—— Capture—Condemnation as Prize.]—The plaintiff contracted to carry the defendant, his family, and luggage, from Demerara to Flushing; and in the course of the voyage, within four days' sail of Flushing, the ship was captured by an English ship of war, and brought into England, and the ship and cargo libelled for prize in the court of admiralty, and the cargo condemned, and proceedings still pending against the ship; but the defendant and his family were liberated, and their luggage in fact restored to their possession:—Held, that however the question might be as to the plaintiff's right to recover passage-money upon an implied assumpsit pro ratâ itineris, if the ship was restored, yet pending the proceedings against the ship, as prize in the admiralty court, no such action could be maintained for non constat, but that the ship might be condemned and the freight decreed to the captors. Muloy v. Backer, 5 East, 316; 1 Smith, 447; 7 R. R. 704.

—— Mortgage of Ship.]—In an action to recover passage-money brought by mortgagee of a ship against mortgagor, which passage-money had been received, by the mortgagor, as part of the earnings of the ship before the mortgagee took possession of the ship:—Held, that the mortgagee could not recover. Willis v. Palmer, 7 C. B. (N.S.) 340; 29 L. J., C. P. 194; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 732; 2 L. T. 626; 8 W. R. 295.

—— Insurance of.]—A policy of insurance was effected upon the passage-money of emigrants upon a voyage from Liverpool to Boston against the perils of the sea. At the end of the policy was a memorandum, "On passage-money of emigrants, subject to pay a loss pro rata, and subject to the clauses and conditions under ss. 47—51 of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 44, and against these risks only":—Held, that the policy extended to any expense occasioned by the perils insured against, which were thrown upon the shipowners by any of the enumerated sections; but not to the expense of maintaining the passengers during the detention of the ship at a foreign port for the purpose of repairs, the ship afterwards completing the voyage with the passengers on board, such expense being cast upon the owners by s. 32. Willis v. Cooke, 5 El. & Bl. 641; 25 L. J., Q. B. 16; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1164; 4 W. R. 54.

Expenses of forwarding Passengers to Destination.]—By 15 & 16 Vict. c. 44, s. 49, if any passengers of any passenger ship shall, without any neglect or default of their own, find themselves within any foreign or colonial port other than that at which they have contracted to land, and the master of the ship shall decline, or omit within six weeks thereafter, to forward or carry them on to their original destination, it shall be lawful for the governor of the colony to forward such passengers to their intended destination. By s. 50 the expenses incurred under this section shall become a debt due to the crown from the owner, charterer and master:—Held, that a policy of assurance by the owners against all liabilities, to which they might become by perils of the sea liable under these sections, covered a liability for expenses incurred by the captain in forwarding, without the intervention of the governor, and before the lapse of six weeks, passengers who were in a colony to which they were not ultimately destined, in consequence of the loss of the ship in which they sailed. Gibson v. Bradford, 4 El. & Bl. 586; 24 L. J., Q. B. 159; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 520; 3 W. R. 183.

Loss of Luggage—Liability of Owners.]—A passenger by steamer from America paid for and received a passenger ticket from the agents of the owners, containing a condition exempting the owners from liability in case of loss or detention of the ship by accidents of navigation or perils of the sea, and from responsibility for luggage, goods, or other description of property, unless bills of lading had been signed therefor:—Held, that the latter condition not having been observed by the passenger, he could not recover for the loss of his luggage, though the loss was caused by the ship having been wrecked owing to the negligence of the captain. Wilton v. Royal Atlantic Mail Steam Navigation Co., 10 C. B. (N.S.) 453; 30 L. J., C. P. 369; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 232; 4 L. T. 706; 9 W. R. 748.

—— Special Contract—Notice.]—A passenger on paying his fare received a ticket from the clerk of the steamship company, on the back of which was a notice exonerating the company from liability for loss, injury, or delay to the passenger or his luggage, however caused. There was no evidence that the passenger had been made aware of this condition before or at the time when he took the ticket. During the voyage the steamer was lost by the negligence of the servants of the company, and the passenger lost his luggage and suffered other damage and inconvenience:—Held, that, in the absence of proof that the passenger had assented to be bound by the condition indorsed on the ticket, it was no defence to an action by him to recover the loss he had sustained. Henderson v. Stevenson, L. R. 2 H. L. (Sc.) 470; 32 L. T. 709. See also Burke v. S. E. Ry., 49 L. J., C. P. 107.

—— Exemption from Liability.] — A contract entered into between a shipowner and a passenger, contained a provision that the shipowner would not be answerable for loss of baggage "under any circumstances whatsoever":—Held, that such a stipulation covered the case of wilful default and misfeasance by the shipowner's servants. Taubman v. Pacific Steam Navigation Co., 26 L. T. 704; 1 Asp. M. C. 336.

—— Robbery—Conditions on Ticket Limiting Liability.]—Sect. 502 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, provides that the owner of a British seagoing ship shall not be liable for the loss by robbery without his actual fault of any gold, silver, jewellery, &c., taken on board his ship, the true nature and value of which have not been declared. This section applies whether the robbery be committed by a passenger for whose act the shipowner would not be otherwise responsible, or by one of the servants. A passenger from Durban to London by the defendants ship received a ticket, which purported to be a receipt for the passage-money. On the margin of the ticket were the words "Issued subject to the further conditions printed on the back hereof," and on the face of the ticket there was written and printed matter which the passenger saw, but did not read. There was also this clause, "The owners do not hold themselves responsible for any loss, damage, or detention of luggage under any circumstances," and on the back there was an indorsement, "Conditions and Regulations," one of which was that "it is hereby agreed by the person holding this ticket that the owners will not be liable in any way for the luggage of passengers unless the passenger choose to pay 1*s.* per cubic foot for luggage put under the owners' charge." A box, part of the passengers' luggage, containing money, jewellery, and papers, was during the voyage stolen, it was supposed by one of the crew:—Held, that the terms and conditions on the ticket constituted the terms of the contract between the passenger and the shipowners; that the passenger ought to have known that there were conditions, and that he had, under the circumstances, reasonable notice of the conditions, and was bound by them, although he had not read the same, and that he could not recover from the shipowners:—Held also, that, apart from the special contract, the passenger was disentitled from recovering that part of the goods which consisted of gold and silver by reason of section 502, the value of the same not having been declared, and there being no actual fault on the part of the shipowners. Acton v. Castle Mail Packets Co., 73 L. T. 158; 8 Asp. M. C. 73.

Limitation of Liability.]—A railway company carrying passengers and goods partly by railway and partly by its own ships is entitled to the limitation on the liability of shipowners imposed by the merchant shipping acts. L. & S. W. Ry. v. James, 42 L. J., Ch. 337; L. R. 8 Ch. 241; 28 L. T. 48; 21 W. R. 151. And see ante, cols. 738 seq. as to LIMITATION OF LIABILITY.

Means of Access to Ship.]—A. agreed to carry B. from Milford Haven to Liverpool: the mode of transit provided was that B. should come on to a hulk lying in the harbour at Milford Haven, and wait till a steamer came and took him to Liverpool. On the hulk, close to a ladder down which B. had to pass to reach the steamer, was a large hatchway, which was negligently left unguarded and improperly lighted, and B. fell through it and was injured. The hulk belonged to a third party, and A. had only acquired a right to use it for the purpose of embarking passengers on his steamer. In an action by B. against A. for the injury he sustained:—Held, that he was answerable for all injury occurring through the means of transit being improper, whether it arose from negligence of his own servants or of other parties who helped to provide the means of transit. John v. Bacon, 39 L. J., C. P. 365; L. R. 5 C. P. 437; 22 L. T. 477; 18 W. R. 894.

Held, also, that A. having invited B. on to the hulk, was bound to protect him from concealed dangers, and was liable for injury he sustained through the condition of the hatchway, even though it was under the care of others and not his own servants. Ib.

3. Emigrant Ships.

Contracts to Equip.]—The defendant being under contract with the owner to supply and fit an emigrant ship with everything comprised in the commissioners of emigrants' schedule, to the entire satisfaction of the surveyor to such commissioners, the plaintiff contracted with the defendant to do part of such work, viz. he undertook "to fit up the between-decks of the ship for government emigrants, to provide all materials and labour viz. all plumbers' and joiners' work, for 15*s.* per statute adult; the whole to be done to the satisfaction of the emigration commissioners." The plaintiff erected many more berths in the vessel than she was measured to carry according to 18 & 19 Vict. c. 119, and several of the berths had to be taken down, and some of them to be rebuilt and altered, by the plaintiff, by the order of the emigration commissioners. By the like order other work, in the nature of ship's fittings, was done by the plaintiff, such as making a ventilator, deck lights, and a schoolmaster's cabin:—Held, that the defendant was only liable to pay the plaintiff at the rate of 15*s.* per statute adult for the number of berths by which the ship was allowed by the commissioners to go to sea, and that he was not responsible for any further sum in respect of the other work done by the plaintiff under the order of the commissioners. Dobson v. Hudson, 1 C. B. (N.S.) 652; 26 L. J., C. P. 153; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 216; 5 W. R. 308.

Duties of Emigration Officer.]—An emigration officer, appointed under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 44, was justified in refusing to certify that the requirements of the statute had been complied with, if he, acting bonâ fide, deemed that the quantity of cargo on board a passenger ship was such as to endanger the safety of the ship, although none of the articles expressly prohibited by s. 26 were on board, and although his objection was not to any specific articles on board, but solely because the ship was too deep in the water; and if an action was brought against him for refusing his certificate under such circumstances, he was, by s. 81, entitled to have the verdict entered for him. Steel v. Schomberg, 3 C. L. R. 302; 4 El. & Bl. 620; 24 L. J., Q. B. 87; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 679.

The 16th section did not apply to such a case. Ib.

4. Passage Broker.

Passenger's Contract—"Passage Broker"—Person who "receives Money for or in Respect of a Passage in any Ship."]—A "passage broker" within the meaning of s. 341, sub-s. 1, of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, is one who sells or lets a passage in a named ship to commence at a definite time for a specified voyage. A person who by way of business, agrees to place farm pupils in the colonies in consideration of a lump sum which includes ship's passage fare, but without specifying any particular ship, and who out of that sum subsequently pays for and obtains from a duly qualified passage broker a contract ticket for a second-class passage in a particular ship, is not a "passage-broker" within the meaning of s. 341, sub-s. 1, of the act of 1894; nor is he a person who "receives money for and in respect of a passage in any ship" within the meaning of s. 320, sub-s. 1, of the same act. Morris v. Howden, 66 L. J., Q. B. 264; [1897] 1 Q. B. 378; 76 L. T. 156; 45 W. R. 221; 61 J. P. 246.

XXII. BOARD OF TRADE PROCEEDINGS.

1. Wreck Inquiries, 874.
2. Marine Board Inquiries, 876.
3. Unseaworthy Ships, Detention, 877.

1. Wreck Inquiries.

Decision of Judge given in open Court—Reasons.]—The decision given by the judge after an investigation into a casualty dealing with the certificate of an officer must be given in open court, but need not be accompanied by reasons, and if he gives reasons the officer is not entitled to a copy of the shorthand-writer's notes of those reasons, for the purpose of an appeal. The Kestrel, 6 P. D. 182; 45 L. T. 111; 30 W. R. 182; 4 Asp. M. C. 433.

Jurisdiction to suspend Master's Certificate.]—The jurisdiction to suspend the certificate of the master of a ship has not been extended by the Merchant Shipping Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 80), ss. 29, 32, to cases not within ss. 242 and 432 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104); and therefore where an inquiry into the stranding of a ship where no damage has been done is held by a wreck commissioner under s. 32 of the later act, he has no jurisdiction upon such inquiry to suspend the certificate of the master of the stranded ship. Story, Ex parte, 47 L. J., Q. B. 266; 3 Q. B. D. 166; 38 L. T. 29; 26 W. R. 329; 3 Asp. M. C. 549.

A shipping casualty must be actually caused or contributed to by the master to enable the court of inquiry to suspend his certificate. The Arizona, 49 L. J., Adm. 54; 5 P. D. 123; 42 L. T. 505; 28 W. R. 704; 4 Asp. M. C. 269—C. A.

An error of judgment on the part of the master of a vessel at a moment of great difficulty and danger does not amount to a wrongful act or default, within the meaning of the 242nd section of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, so as to justify the suspension or cancellation of the master's certificate. The Fumenoth, 7 P. D. 207; 48 L. T. 28; 5 Asp. M. C. 35, infra.

—— Appeal.]—Where a court of inquiry into a shipping casualty, held under the 8th part of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, orders the suspension of a master's certificate, in pursuance of the powers given by the 242nd section of the same act, and the 23rd section of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1862, the court of appeal, having jurisdiction under the Shipping Casualties Investigations Act, 1879, will on appeal consider the evidence on which the judgment of the court of inquiry proceeded, and will reverse the judgment if the evidence is insufficient to justify the suspension of the certificate. Where a court of inquiry ordered a master's certificate to be suspended, and the only ground on which the decision could be supported was that serious damage to a ship had been caused by the wrongful act or default of the master, within the meaning of s. 242 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, sub-s. 2, and on appeal it appeared to the court of appeal that there was no evidence that the damage had been caused by the wrongful act or default of the master, the court of appeal reversed the decision, and restored to the master his certificate. The Arizona, supra.

—— Who may Appeal.]—A shipowner, who has appeared as a party at the hearing of an investigation under the merchant shipping acts into the circumstances attending the loss of a ship owned by him, has no right of appeal, notwithstanding that the tribunal investigating the case has given a decision suspending the certificate of the master of the ship and condemning the shipowner in costs. The Golden Sea, 51 L. J., Adm. 64 ; 7 P. D. 194 ; 47 L. T. 579 ; 30 W. R. 842 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 23.

The wreck commissioner having been requested to hold an investigation into the loss and abandonment of a British ship, found that the loss of the ship was due to certain improper ballast taken on board her at an English port having been converted into mud by mixture with the water made by her during the voyage, and so choking the pumps that they could not be used, whereby the ship foundered, and for these wrongful acts and defaults suspended the certificate of the master of the ship for three months. The master appealed. The probate, divorce, and admiralty division being of opinion that the evidence before the wreck commissioner established that the master had authority from his owner to provide ballast for the vessel without restriction as to price, and had been aware of the character of the ballast which she had taken on board, and that the carrying of such ballast contributed to her loss, dismissed the appeal with costs. Ib.

—— Fresh Evidence on Appeal.]—On a shipping casualty appeal where it is desired to adduce fresh evidence at the hearing of the appeal, application for leave to do so should be made to the court of appeal by motion prior to the hearing of the appeal. The Famenoth, 7 P. D. 207 ; 48 L. T. 28 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 35, supra.

—— Procedure on Appeal.]—The court when hearing an appeal will look to the report and the annex thereto. Observations on the admission of fresh evidence on appeal and on the admissibility of evidence of experts where the court is assisted by assessors. The Kestrel, supra, col. 874.

—— Costs.]—Where, on an appeal under the Shipping Casualties Investigations Act, 1879, the decision of the wreck commissioner, suspending the certificate of a master, was affirmed, but the Court of Appeal recommended that the Board of Trade should shorten the time for which the certificate had been suspended, the parties to the appeal were left to bear their own costs of the appeal. The Kestrel, supra.

The court below having suspended the certificate on the invitation of the board of trade, the court of appeal ordered the board of trade to pay the costs of the appeal. The Arizona, supra, col. 874.

On a successful appeal the board of trade, having appeared in support of the decision appealed from, were directed to pay the costs of the appeal. The Famenoth, supra.

Wrongful Act or Default—Costs.]—Failure of the master to take reasonable steps for the safety of passengers during an unreasonable panic :—Held, to be a wrongful act in default for which his certificate might be suspended. Brown v. Board of Trade, 18 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 291.

Costs of evidence of a part of case abandoned by board of trade disallowed. Ibid.

Appeal—Proper Evidence not before the Court Below.]—Appeal from decision of board of trade inquiry as to the stranding of a ship, and suspension of the master's certificate allowed, on the ground that proper and necessary evidence had not been placed before the court below. Turner v. Board of Trade, 22 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 18.

Master leaving Bridge—Instructions to Mate—Procedure—Questioning Master.]—See Watson v. Board of Trade, 19 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 1078.

—— Suspension of Certificate.] — A master left the bridge whilst his ship was proceeding through a narrow channel to call the second mate. The first mate was left on the bridge :—Held, that the master's certificate was properly suspended. Ewer v. Board of Trade, 7 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 835.

Naval Inquiry into Conduct of Captain.]—When an inquiry is instituted under the Merchant Shipping Acts into the conduct of a captain, the court may proceed with the inquiry, although the board of trade has no charge to make against the captain. Minto, Ex parte, 35 L. T. 808 ; 25 W. R. 251 ; 3 Asp. M. C. 323.

Refusal to order Re-hearing — Appeal.]—A refusal by the board of trade to grant a re-hearing of an investigation into the conduct of a certificated officer is not a decision within 42 & 43 Vict. c. 72, s. 2, sub-s. 2, and therefore no appeal lies from it to the admiralty division of the high court. The Ida, 55 L. J., Adm. 15 ; 11 P. D. 37 ; 54 L. T. 497 ; 34 W. R. 628 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 57.

Refusal to Institute Inquiry—Foreign Ship.]—A refusal by the board of trade to institute an inquiry under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 512, is not a condition precedent to an action in rem against a foreign ship—Per Butt, J. The Vera Cruz, 9 P. D. 88 ; 51 L. T. 24 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 254. See S. C. in H. L., ante, col. 838.

2. Marine Board Inquiries.

Marine Boards—Jurisdiction.]—A local marine board appointed to inquire into a charge of alleged misconduct against the master or mate of a vessel has a discretionary power as to granting summonses for witnesses for the defence. Reg. v. Collingridge, 34 L. J., Q. B. 9 ; 12 W. R. 1109.

—— Witnesses.]—It is a proper course for such court before granting the summonses to inquire who the witnesses are and what they are expected to prove, and to refuse the summons in respect of any witness who can only speak to matters clearly irrelevant. The witnesses summoned for the defence are witnesses of the court, and their expense is to be borne not by the defendant but by the public. Ib.

Perjury before.] — Wilful and corrupt false swearing before a local marine board lawfully constituted, upon a matter material to an inquiry then being lawfully investigated by them in pursuance of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, is perjury, and indictable as such. Reg. v. Tomlinson, 36 L. J., M. C. 41 ; L. R. 1 C. C. 49 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 945 ; 15 L. T. 188 ; 15 W. R. 46 ; 10 Cox, C. C. 323.

Cancellation of Certificate—Power of Board of Trade—Local Marine Board.]—The board of trade remitted a case under s. 471 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, for inquiry to a local marine board, who reported that the charge was proved, and advised that the certificate should be suspended, but stated that they had no power to do so:—Held, that the local marine board was a "court" within s. 470 (b) and had the power; also that the board of trade had not the power. Board of Trade v. Leith Local Marine Board, 24 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 177.

3. Unseaworthy Ships, Detention.

Detention and Survey by Board of Trade.]—In order to justify the board of trade in taking proceedings under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 85), s. 12, it was unnecessary that either the complaint as to a vessel or the report from surveyors should state in express terms that she was unable to proceed to sea "without serious danger to human life"; it was sufficient if it appeared from the facts therein respectively mentioned that she was in that condition. Lewis v. Gray, 45 L. J., C. P. 720; 1 C. P. D. 452; 34 L. T. 421; 3 Asp. M. C. 136.

The plaintiff was the owner of a British ship named the "L.," which was at the British port of S., and was intended to be employed in the foreign cattle trade. Certain surveyors of the board of trade reported in doubtful terms that owing to her unusual proportions the "L." was an unsafe ship. The board of trade thereupon ordered the "L." to be provisionally detained. A court of survey was held as to the condition of the "L.," and the members thereof reported that the "L.," was not unsafe, and that she ought not to have been detained. The "L." was accordingly released. The plaintiff then brought an action against the secretary of the board of trade to recover compensation for the loss to him by reason of the provisional detention. At the trial it was admitted that the "L." was a safe ship. The judge in substance directed the jury to consider whether it was reasonable in the board of trade to detain the "L." for survey without a direct affirmation by their surveyors that in their opinion she was unsafe:—Held, a misdirection; for the proper question to be left to the jury was whether the facts with regard to the "L.," as she lay at S., which would have been apparent to a person of ordinary skill on examining her and inquiring about her, would have given him reasonable and probable cause to suspect her safety and to detain her for survey and inquiry. Thompson v. Farrer, 51 L. J., Q. B. 534; 9 Q. B. D. 372; 47 L. T. 117; 4 Asp. M. C. 562—C. A.

Indictment for sending Unseaworthy Ships to Sea.]—A man was tried and convicted under 34 & 35 Vict. c. 110, s. 11, for sending a ship to sea in an unseaworthy state, upon an indictment which did not aver either that he knew of her being unseaworthy, or that he had not used reasonable means to make her seaworthy:—Held, first, that the indictment need not aver that the accused knew the ship to be in an unseaworthy state. Reg. v. Freeman, Ir. R. 9 C. L. 527.

Held, secondly, that the indictment need not contain averments negativing the use of reasonable means to make and keep the ship seaworthy. Ib.

Foreign Ship—Overloading.]—An order in council under s. 37 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1876, is not needed to enforce the provisions of ss. 13 and 34 of the act relative to the detention of a foreign ship which has been overloaded in a port of the United Kingdom, and is unsafe to put out to sea. Chalmers v. Scopenich, 61 L. J., M. C. 117; [1892] 1 Q. B. 735; 66 L. T. 348; 40 W. R. 477; 7 Asp. M. C. 171; 56 J. P. 521.

Damages—Want of Reasonable and Probable Cause—Injury to Reputation as Shipowner.]—The Merchant Shipping Act, 1876, by s. 6, sub-s. 1, enacts that the board of trade may, if they have reason to believe, on complaint or otherwise, that a British ship lying in any port in the United Kingdom is unsafe—that is to say, is, by reason of (amongst other things) overloading, unfit to proceed to sea without serious danger to human life—provisionally order the detention of the ship for the purpose of being surveyed; and by s. 10 provides that if it appears that there was not reasonable and probable cause for such detention, the board of trade shall be liable to pay to the owner of the ship "his costs of and incidental to the detention and survey of the ship, and also compensation for any loss or damage sustained by him by reason of the detention or survey":—Held, that a shipowner, whose ship has been detained under s. 6, sub-s. 1, cannot under s. 10 recover damages for injury to his reputation as a shipowner by reason of the action of the board of trade in detaining the ship. Dixon v. Calcraft, 61 L. J., Q. B. 529; [1892] 1 Q. B. 458; 66 L. T. 554; 40 W. R. 598; 7 Asp. M. C. 161; 56 J. P. 388—C. A.

Right to Trial at Bar—Change of Venue.]—By the Crown Suits Act, 1865, s. 46, where in any cause in which the attorney-general is entitled on behalf of the crown to demand as of right a trial at bar he states to the court that he waives that right, "the court on the application of the attorney-general shall change the venue to any court he may select":—Held, that an action under 39 & 40 Vict. c. 80, s. 10, against the secretary of the board of trade, to recover damages for the detention of a ship for survey without reasonable and probable cause, is within the above section, that the attorney-general is entitled to demand as of right a trial at bar in such an action, and that the court is bound on his waiving that right to change the venue to any county wherein he elects to have the action tried. Dixon v. Farrer, 56 L. J., Q. B. 53; 18 Q. B. D. 43; 55 L. T. 578; 35 W. R. 95; 6 Asp. M. C. 52—C. A.

Detention by Board of Trade—Ship sold to Foreigner—36 & 37 Vict. c. 85, s. 12.]—Until the British register is closed, a British ship, though sold to a foreigner, is liable to detention for unseaworthiness. Granfelt v. Lord Advocate, 1 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 782.

XXIII. WHARFINGER.

1. Landing and Shipping Goods, 878.
2. Obstruction to or by Wharf, 879.

1. Landing and Shipping Goods.

Bonded Goods—Duty to Receive.]—The London Dock Company, having a certificate from the treasury under 43 Geo. 3, c. 132, allowing importers to deposit wines upon their premises without paying duty, are bound to receive such goods for a reasonable charge. Allnutt v. Inglis, 12 East, 527; 11 R. R. 482.

Sufferance Wharfs.]—The acts relating to landing goods at a sufferance wharf are for the protection of the shipowner. Barber v. Meyerstein, 39 L. J., C. P. 187; L. R. 4 H. L. 317; 22 L. T. 808; 18 W. R. 1041.

Delivery by Wharfinger to Mate of Ship.]—Where goods are to be carried coastwise, and the usage of the wharf is to deliver them on the wharf to the mate of the ship; if they are delivered to the mate the wharfinger's responsibility is at an end, and he is not liable though the goods are lost from the wharf before they are shipped. Cobban v. Downe, 5 Esp. 41; 8 R. R. 825.

Trover—Acknowledgment by Wharfinger as to Property in the Goods.]—The defendant, a wharfinger, having acknowledged certain timber on his wharf to be the property of the plaintiff: —Held, that he could not dispute the plaintiff's title in an action of trover. Gosling v. Birnie, 7 Bing. 339; 5 M. P. 160; 9 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 105.

Detinue—Fraudulent Indorsement of Bill of Lading.]—The plaintiff, a foreign merchant, upon the order of L., shipped wine to him in London, and sent him bills of lading. L. handed the bills of lading to the defendant, a wharfinger, directing him to warehouse the goods for him, L. The defendant did so, receiving the wine subject to a stop-order for freight, pursuant to 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 28. L. refused to accept the wine, as not being equal to sample, and the plaintiff agreed to take it back. L. sent no delivery order to the plaintiff, but collusively indorsed the bills of lading to M., who caused the wine to be transferred in the wharfinger's books from L.'s name to his own. The plaintiff demanded the wine from the wharfinger, offering to pay all expenses, and to indemnify him against other claims. In an action of detinue:—Held, that the wharfinger had no better title than L., his bailor, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Batuit v. Hartley, L. R. 9 Q. B. 594; 29 L. T. 968; 20 W. R. 899; 1 Asp. M. C. 337.

2. Obstruction to or by Wharf.

See also XXIV. Ports, Piers, Harbours, Lighthouses, and Docks. c. Obstruction to Harbours, infra, cols. 890, seq.

Obstruction in River Bed—Negligence of Wharfinger—Vessel grounding.]—By charter-party it was agreed that the plaintiffs' ship should load a cargo of iron ore, sail for Newport, Mon., and deliver the cargo as directed by the consignees or their agent. By the bill of lading, which incorporated the conditions of the charter-party, the cargo was to be delivered to named consignees or their assigns. The bill of lading was indorsed to the defendants, who were proprietors of a wharf at Newport, and lessees of part of the river bed alongside the wharf. The vessel on her arrival at Newport was ordered by the defendants to discharge her cargo at the wharf. There were two berths or "docks" alongside the wharf, one outside the other; and between them a ridge of mud had accumulated. The vessel in approaching the wharf grounded on the ridge and was damaged:—Held, that the defendants were liable. The Calliope, 60 L. J., Adm. 28; [1891] A. C. 11; 63 L. T. 781; 39 W. R. 641; 6 Asp. M. C. 585; 55 J. P. 357—H. L. (E.)

Vessel Grounding and Receiving Damage Alongside Jetty—Liability.]—The defendants, wharfingers in the Thames, in consideration of charges for landing and storing cargo, allowed the plaintiff to discharge his vessel at their jetty, alongside which the vessel grounded at low water. The bed of the river was vested in the Thames conservators, and the defendants were not aware whether it was even and fit for ships to ground on. The vessel grounded and received damage owing to the river bed being uneven:—Held, that the defendants were liable, as they must be taken to have represented that they had taken reasonable care to ascertain that the river bed alongside their jetty was fit for a ship to ground on. The Moorcock, 58 L. J., Adm. 73; 14 P. D. 64; 60 L. T. 654; 37 W. R. 439; 6 Asp. M. C. 373—C. A.

Damage to Craft by Piles.]—The defendants were possessed of a wharf in the Thames, alongside of which in the river bed was a campshed of piles to keep the soil up. It had been improperly erected by the defendants' predecessors, and was out of repair, and dangerous to vessels. The plaintiffs' barge came to the wharf to receive goods from a schooner unloading at the wharf, to be discharged into the barge by the wharf crane, grounded on the campshed and was injured:—Held, that the defendants were liable. White v. Phillips, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 245; 33 L. J., C. P. 33. And see Brownlow v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 16 C. B. (N.S.) 546; 33 L. J., C. P. 233; 12 W. R. 871—Ex. Ch.

The plaintiff was possessed of a wharf on the Thames, in front of which was a pile driven into the river bed by a former occupier of the wharf, and essential for the use of the wharf. The pile had been there without objection by the crown or river conservators for over twenty years:—Held, that the ownership not being disputed, the plaintiff could maintain an action against the defendant for negligently damaging the pile. Lancaster v. Eve, 5 C. B. (N.S.) 717; 28 L. J., C. P. 235; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 683.

Navigable River—Access to Wharf.]—A navigable river is a public highway, navigable in a reasonable way by everyone. Accordingly, a riparian owner has a right to moor a ship of ordinary size alongside his wharf, to unload or load, although she may overlap his neighbours' premises; provided she does not prevent reasonable access to the same. Original Hartlepool Collieries Co. v. Gibb, 46 L. J., Ch. 311; 5 Ch. D. 713; 36 L. T. 433; 3 Asp. M. C. 411. See also Bell v. Quebec Corporation, 49 L. J., P. C. 1; 5 App. Cas. 84—P. C.

The owner of land abutting upon a navigable river has a right, distinct from that of the public to navigate, of access to his land from the river. Lyon v. Fishmongers' Co., 46 L. J., Ch. 68; 1 App. Cas. 662; 35 L. T. 569; 25 W. R. 165—H. L. (E.)

Nuisance—Wharf projecting into River.]—The defendant's ship, navigating the Thames, struck and injured the plaintiff's wharf, which he alleged projected into the river so as to be a nuisance:—Held, that the defendant was not justified in injuring the wharf, even if it were a nuisance, if he could have conveniently navigated the river without injury to the wharf. Davies v. Petley, 15 Q. B. 276.

Wharves and Quays — Exercise of Private Rights over—Obstruction of Public Traffic.]—By a special act of 1840 trustees were appointed for the management of a certain harbour. Sect. 53 of the act authorised the lord of the manor, or the owner of land situate within or adjoining to the harbour, amongst other things, to lay down railways over the quays, roads and works, but so as all such railways should be constructed of such height and in such form as should not in any manner impede or interrupt the general public traffic of the port, or the free passage to and from the same; and railways so to be erected or made were (subject to the aforesaid restriction) to be wholly excluded from the jurisdiction of the trustees, and be the private property and for the sole and exclusive use of the person or persons upon whose land the same should stand or be placed, and his or their assigns. The lord of the manor was the owner of lands adjoining the south side quay of the harbour. Tenants of the lord of the manor having proceeded to lay down two lines of railway from their works along the south side quay, an action was brought by the trustees of the harbour to restrain them from constructing such railway, on the ground that they would impede the general public traffic of the port:—Held, that the main object of the act was to benefit the persons frequenting the harbour, and that any railway laid on the south side of the quay must be constructed in such a way as not by its construction or its natural and necessary user, in any manner to impede the fair public traffic of the port:—Held, also, that, as the defendants' railway did so impede the traffic, the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction, and to an order for removal of such railway. Lowther v. Curwen, 58 L. T. 168.

Navigable River — Obstruction—Injunction.]—The owner of a wharf on a navigable river drove piles into the bed of the river diminishing by three feet the navigable breadth of the river:—Held, that an injunction should issue. Att.-Gen. v. Terry, L. R. 9 Ch. 423; 29 L. T. 716; 2 Asp. M. C. 219—C. A.

Right to Navigate—Private Fishery.]—A shipowner is entitled to use a navigable river for the purposes of navigation, although in so doing he may interfere with a private right of fishery, providing he does not act wantonly or maliciously. Anon., 1 Camp. 517, n.

Damage to or by Craft alongside Wharf.]—See Dalton v. Denton, ante, col. 696.

Rights of Wharfinger over the adjacent Bed of the River.]—See Macey v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 3 N. R. 669; 33 L. J., Ch. 377; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 333; 10 L. T. 66; 12 W. R. 619.

1. PORTS.

a. Generally.

Creation.]—A port may be created in modern times, with a right to receive a port duty from all who come within its limits. Jenkins v. Harvey, 1 Gale, 23; 5 Tyr. 326; 1 C. M. & R. 877; 5 L. J., Ex. 17.

The crown is entitled, except where vested rights would be interfered with, to create a port for the landing of goods, and to assign its limits, though the soil is in a subject; and such creation is a good consideration for the receipt of petty customs and port dues throughout the port so assigned. And such petty customs and port dues might in ancient times be granted away by the crown. Exeter Corporation v. Warren, 5 Q. B. 773; D. & M. 524; 8 Jur. 441.

The owners in fee of the manor of Whitstable, in an action for anchorage dues, claimed in respect of a vessel casting anchor on a certain anchorage-ground situate within the sea below low-water mark, adduced evidence that the tolls had been taken from time immemorial; that they kept buoys, beacons and lights to mark the bounds between the oyster beds and the anchorage ground; that Whitstable, before and since the time of legal memory, had been mentioned in official documents as a port; and that in ancient times there was a place within the manor for the unlading of merchandise:—Held, that the anchorage dues had a legal origin, the existence of a port being established. However commodious a place may be for vessels, it will not therefore become a port, the establishment of which must be by authority of the crown; but evidence of traffic in respect of tolls of merchandise being taken, of a place being mentioned as a port in early documents, and of natural configuration favourable to the formation of a port, justify an inference of fact that a port did exist. Foreman v. Whitstable (Free Fishers), L. R. 4 H. L. 266; 21 L. T. 804; 18 W. R. 1046.

Limits of Ports.]—The powers of the board of trade under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 107 (Customs Consolidation Act, 1853), and 25 & 26 Vict. c. 69, s. 17 (The Harbours Transfer Act, 1862), to appoint ports and declare the limits, are not limited to revenue purposes only; nor are such powers confined to ports in their merely geographical sense. Nicholson v. Williams, 40 L. J., M. C. 159; L. R. 6 Q. B. 632; 24 L. T. 875; 19 W. R. 973; 1 Asp. M. C. 67.

Where, therefore, by an order of the board of trade, the limits of the port of Hull were extended and defined, and the sea between Flamborough Head and Spurn Point was placed within them, and persons were prohibited from taking ballast or shingle from certain parts of the shore so extended as the port of Hull:—Held, that a person so taking ballast or shingle from such parts was guilty of an offence within 54 Geo. 3, c. 159, s. 14. Ib.

By-laws—Speed of Ships—Thames.]—Under 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. lxxv. s. 57, the lord mayor and aldermen had power to regulate the speed of steamships in the Thames. Tisdell v. Combe, 3 N. & P. 29 ; 7 A. & E. 788 ; 1 W. W. & H. 5 ; 7 L. J., M. C. 48 ; 2 Jur. 32.

By-law—Dealing in Marine Stores.]—A by-law under a local harbour act, which incorporated the 10 Vict. c. 27, declared that no person should deal in marine stores in or about the docks without first obtaining permission of the dock company. An engineer of a steamer in dock sold to C. some old iron bars and worn-out fittings within the dock without such permission :—Held, that the by-law was ultra vires and unreasonable, being in restraint of trade. Chamberlain v. Conway, 53 J. P. 214.

Nature of.]—A port duty ex vi termini implies a consideration for it. Jenkins v. Harvey, 1 Gale, 23 ; 5 Tyr. 326 ; 1 C. M. & R. 877 ; 5 L. J., Ex. 17.

Tyne—"Coals exported from the Port"—What are.]—By the Tyne Coal Dues Act, 1872 (35 Vict. c. xiii.), the old coal dues are abolished, and the commissioners are empowered to levy dues, one penny per ton on "coals exported from the port" :—Held, that, in the absence of anything in the act to the contrary, "exported from the port" must be taken to be used in its ordinary meaning of "carried out of the port" ; and therefore included coals taken out of the port in a steamer to be consumed on board during a distant voyage. Muller v. Baldwin, 43 L. J., Q. B. 164 ; L. R. 9 Q. B. 457 ; 30 L. T. 864 ; 22 W. R. 909 ; 2 Asp. M. C. 204. See Stockton and Darlington Ry. v. Barrett, 11 Cl. & F. 590—H. L. (E.) S. C., 8 Scott. Liverpool—Vessels Trading Inwards, or in Ballast and Trading Outwards.]—An act provided that a vessel trading inwards to the port of Liverpool should pay dock rates, according to a fixed scale, proportioned to the distance of the port from which she was trading, and that a vessel arriving in ballast, but trading outwards, should pay in proportion to the distance of the port to which she was trading. A vessel that had discharged her cargo at a port in England and taken on board ballast, being about to sail to Liverpool for the purpose of loading a cargo for the West Indies, took on board a bale of cotton and a few other articles admittedly in order that she might pay dock rates as a vessel trading inwards from the port where she took on board such articles, and not as a vessel arriving in ballast :—Held, that she was a vessel arriving in ballast within the meaning of the act. De Garteig v. Mersey Docks and Harbour Board, 37 L. T. 411.

Hull—Return or Double Voyage.]—Under a clause in an act exempting ships "from the payment of the same port or toll duties more than once for the same voyage out and home, notwithstanding such ship or vessel might go out and return with a loading of goods or merchandise" :—Held, that a vessel having cleared out of port at Hull, with a cargo of goods for Mogadore, on the coast of Africa, which she discharged, and then took in another cargo for London, discharged the same at London, and took in a cargo for Hull, with which she arrived there, constituted two distinct voyages, and did not fall within the exemption. Kingston-upon-Hull Dock Co. v. Huntington, 2 Chit. 597.

London—Grain for Sale—Import Duties.]—Grain brought into the port of London for the purpose of being dealt with, and which is actually dealt with, in such a manner as to change its character and name in a commercial sense, and which after being so changed is then sold, is not "grain brought into the port of London for sale" within the meaning of s. 4 of the Metage on Grain (Port of London) Act, 1872, and is not liable to the duty thereby imposed. Cotton v. Vogan, 65 L. Docks—Charge for watching Goods.]—A local dock act enacted that the master of a vessel or owner of cargo may cause the cargo to be deposited in a transit shed and that the goods should be removable from such shed by the same process in all respects as if the cargo was still on board :—Held, that the porter watching the shed could sue the owners of goods for watching the goods while there. Bowmphrey v. Houghton, 55 J. P. 729.

Ramsgate Harbour Dues—22 Geo. 2, c. 40.]—Ships passing Ramsgate at such a distance as not to be likely to receive aid from Ramsgate do not pay dues under 22 Geo. 2, c. 40. Pole v. Jonson, W. Bl. 764. See also Matson (or Batson) v. Scobel, 4 Burr. 2258.

Sunderland—Primage.]—A charter of James 2 granted and confirmed to the corporation of the master, pilots and seamen of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, that all persons, as well subjects as strangers born, being owners of any goods, brought in any ship from beyond the seas into the river Tyne, or any member or creek belonging to the port of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, shall from time to time, as often as such goods shall be brought in, pay an ancient duty lawfully, usually and accustomably paid to the corporation, called primage ; that is to say, 2*d.* for every tun of wine and all other goods, rated by the tun (fish killed and brought in by Englishmen only excepted), and 3*d.* for every last of flax, and all other goods rated by the last, in manner following ; that is to say, aliens and strangers-born, and all other such person or persons who with ships or vessels shall arrive within the port, or in any of the creeks or members, and not belonging to the same, before they depart with their ships or vessels from the port, or from the creeks, shall pay the duties for and in the name of primage ; and every free merchant, and every other inhabitant of Newcastle, arriving with their ships or vessels within the river of Tyne, shall pay the duties, within ten days after the landing of the goods, upon lawful demand. The defendants were natives and merchants of Sunderland, which was a creek or member of the port of Newcastle-upon-Tyne. They brought their own goods from sea in their own ships, into Sunderland, and refused to pay the primage on such goods claimed by the corporation, who thereupon brought an action to recover it. On the trial the corporation put in the charter, and gave evidence of ancient and modern usage, that all persons, including those resident in Sunderland, and who being owners of goods brought them into Sunderland in ships from beyond sea, had paid primage:—Held, that the corporation was not precluded by the charter from claiming primage in respect of goods imported into Sunderland by Sunderland merchants; that the charter was not incompatible with such claim, and that evidence of usage was admissible in support of it. Bradley v. Newcastle-upon-Tyne (Master, Pilots and Seamen), 2 El. & Bl. 427; 23 L. J., Q. B. 35; 18 Jur. 240; 1 W. R. 394—Ex. Ch.

Newcastle—Primage—"Owner."]—Under the same charter:—Held, also, that a person who gratuitously landed, entered and warehoused goods for the owners, who resided in London, was an owner within the meaning of the charter, and liable to the dues. Newcastle-upon-Tyne (Master, Pilots and Seamen) v. Hammond, 4 Ex. 285; 18 L. J., Ex. 417.

Hull—Meaning of "Port"—Goole.]—The 14 Geo. 3, c. 56, s. 42, which gives the Hull Dock Company a tonnage on ships coming into or going out of the harbour of Kingston-upon-Hull and the company's basin or docks within the port of Kingston-upon-Hull, or unloading or lading any of their cargo within the port, must be construed as using the term port in the popular sense, and not as extending the burden of dock duties to places which, in point of local description, are without the port of Hull, as Goole, on the river Ouse. Kingston-upon-Hull Dock Co. v. Browne, 2 B. & Ad. 43.

Evidence of Title.]—Where a party suing for port duties, as owner of a port, gave no other evidence of title than the continual enjoyment of a duty which the jury found to be unreasonable in amount:—Held, that he could not have a verdict for a less amount found by the jury to be reasonable. Brune v. Thompson, 4 Q. B. 543: 2 G. & D. 110; 12 L. J., Q. B. 251.

Keeping up a capstan and rope in a cove to assist boats in landing, and without which they could not safely land in bad weather, is a good consideration for a reasonable toll on all boats frequenting the cove, whether they used the capstan or not; and the custom to exact the toll is good, although the party claiming it is neither owner of the cove nor lord of the manor, nor were his predecessors shewn to have been such; but he and they had always been owners of the spot on which the capstan stood, and of an estate in the neighbourhood. Falmouth (Earl) v. George, 5 Bing. 286; 2 M. & P. 457; 7 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 40; 30 R. R. 597.

Whitstable—Anchorage Dues.]—A right to anchorage dues cannot exist merely in respect of the use of the soil; it must be founded on proof that the soil of the claimant was originally within the precincts of a port or harbour, or that some service or aid to navigation was rendered by the owner of the soil who claimed the anchorage due. Gann v. Whitstable (Free Fishers) 11 H. L. Cas. 192; 20 C. B. (N.S.) 1; 35 L. J., C. P. 29; 12 L. T. 150; 13 W. R. 589. See also Foreman v. Whitstable Free Fishers supra.

Evidence of mere immemorial usage will not sustain such a claim. Ib.

A liability to make compensation for actual injury done to the oyster beds by anchoring, is not to be confounded with a liability to toll for casting anchor in the soil itself. Ib.

Goods Distrainable for Port Dues.]—Anchor and sails of a ship carrying coals from Newcastle and all the master's goods are distrainable for port dues; not only the coals in respect of which the dues arise. Vinkestone v. Ebden, 1 Salk. 248.

2. Piers, Harbours and Lighthouses.

a. Piers.

Calling in.]—Steam vessels plying between the river Itchen, at Southampton, and the Isle of Wight, are bound, under the Southampton Local Pier Act, to call at the royal pier at Southampton when requested by five passengers to do so. Farrand v. Cooper, 12 C. B. (N.S.) 283.

Right to use.]—The plaintiff was the owner of the soil forming the bed of a navigable lake and also of a pier which had been thereon erected wrongfully by a third person. The defendants, in common with the public, had the right of navigating the lake, and were the lessees, from the person who erected the pier, of the land adjoining that part of the lake where the pier was erected, and therefore had a right to embark and disembark, at the land leased by them, passengers using the defendants' boats on the lake. The pier was maintained by the plaintiff, and from its position prevented the defendants from getting with their boats to the land leased by them when landing and taking on board passengers:—Held, that the defendants were justified in causing passengers to pass and repass over the pier between their boats and the land leased by them. Marshall v. Ulleswater Steam Navigation Co., 41 L. J., Q. B. 41; L. R. 7 Q. B. 166; 25 L. T. 793; 20 W. R. 144.

The city of London by licence granted a company permission to form a floating pier on the Thames, such pier to remain during pleasure, and to take tolls on all passengers landed at the pier. Under the powers conferred upon them by the Thames Embankment Act, 1862, the board of works took the floating pier from the company, and agreed to pay them a certain sum, and to construct a new landing-stage in lieu of the old pier, and to appropriate it in perpetuity to the benefit of the company. The Thames Embankment Act, 1868, purported to give validity to this agreement. On a bill by the conservators of the Thames (in whom all the estate of the city of London in the bed, soil and shores of the river had become vested by the Thames Conservancy Act, 1857) to restrain the company from continuing in possession of the landing-stage constructed in lieu of the old pier:—Held, that the company was entitled to the use of the pier only on sufferance, and at the pleasure of the conservators of the Thames; that the board of works had no power to convert the licence at pleasure into an irrevocable licence; and that the act which purported to give a validity to the agreement between the company and the board of works did not affect the rights of the conservators of the Thames. Thames Conservancy v. S. E. Ry., 24 L. T. 246; 1 Asp. M. C. 3.

Remedy in respect of.]—Held, also, that their proper remedy was by bill in equity, and not by ejectment. Ib.

Right to erect.]—By an act passed in 31 Hen. 8, the corporation of the city of Exeter was empowered to pluck down, dig, break and cast up all and all manner of weirs, rocks, sands, gravel, and other lets and nuisances in the river Exe between the city of Exeter and the high sea, and further to do and make all other things requisite and necessary whereby ships, &c., might have their sure course and recourse in the said river to and from the city of Exeter, compensating the owners of the soil where such works should be made for injury done to the soil:—Held, that this act did not give the corporation any right to institute a suit to restrain the erection of a pier in the river, but only a right to abate nuisances on giving compensation. Exeter Corporation v. Devon (Earl), L. R. 10 Eq. 232; 23 L. T. 382; 18 W. R. 879.

Held, also, that the pier did not interfere with or affect any property or privilege belonging to the corporation within the General Pier and Harbour Act, 1861, s. 14, and consequently that the consent of the corporation was not required for the erection of the pier. Ib.

The right or privilege referred to in the General Pier and Harbour Act, 1861, s. 14, means a profitable right or privilege, one that confers a tangible benefit on the person or corporation possessing it, and not a mere right to abate a nuisance on giving compensation, like that which the corporation of Exeter possessed under 31 Hen. 8. Ib.

Operation of Provisional Orders.]—In persuance of a provisional order made by the board of trade under the General Piers and Harbours Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 45), duly confirmed by an act passed in 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. clxxxv.), the plaintiffs constructed a pier, commencing at the end of a narrow street, and by so doing prevented the public from getting to the sea shore from the end of the street without passing over a portion of the pier, for which they were obliged to pay a toll. Neither the provisional order nor the special act contained a reference to any right of way. The defendants contended that the public had a prescriptive right of way from the street to the shore, which must be taken away by express words, and that, at any rate, it was saved under ss. 11 and 14 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 45. They therefore threatened to pull down certain gates put up at the end of the pier by the plaintiffs, who then brought this action for an injunction to restrain them from doing so:—Held, that, as the pier was built in accordance with statutory provisions, and as its existence was physically inconsistent with the alleged right of way, the right of way was abolished by necessary implication, and that the reservations contained in the 11th and 14th sections of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 45 did not apply, as they were inconsistent with the powers contained in the subsequent special act. Yarmouth Corporation v. Simmons, 47 L. J., Ch. 792; 10 Ch. D. 518; 38 L. T. 881; 26 W. R. 802.

User by Railway Company—Special Contract—Statutory Tolls.]—The proprietor of a pier erected under the powers of an act of parliament, which were to be exercised during a certain limited period, was authorised by the act to demand certain specified tolls, for the use of the pier when completed. By an agreement between him and a railway company, he agreed to complete his pier at a considerably earlier time than he was bound to do by the act, and the company agreed to complete a branch railway to the pier by the same time; but the agreement contained no stipulations as to opening the pier or railway, or as to the terms on which the pier was to be used. The owner of the pier completed it accordingly, but refused to permit the railway company to use it, except upon terms to which the company declined to accede. The court refused to grant on motion an injunction restraining the owner of the pier from obstructing the use of it by the company at the statutory tolls. Furness Ry. v. Smith, 1 De G. & Sm. 299.

Londonderry — Validity of Regulations for Boats.] — Harbour commissioners were empowered by statute to make by-laws for regulating and fixing the conduct and hire or fare of all boats or ferry-boats plying in the harbour, and for regulating the conduct of boatmen, ferrymen, and others plying in the harbour:—Held, that a by-law, requiring the owners of boats carrying passengers within the port to take out an annual licence from the commissioners under a penalty was ultra vires. Londonderry Harbour Commissioners v. Londonderry Bridge Commissioners, [1894] 2 Ir. R. 384.

Pier built on Waste of Manor—Railway to Pier—User.]—An ancient pier and quay built by the lord of a manor is made the subject of a deed of trust, to which the lord for the time being is a party, and subsequently is from time to time regulated by statutes, local, but so far public, by which certain dues are imposed. In the deed, and in the statutes, there are recitals that the pier and quay are built on waste ground of the manor. An act is obtained to make a railway on the pier coming from a distant range of hills containing iron ore, which is intended to be shipped from the pier, and the tenant for life and devisees in trust of the last lord assent to such act. The railway company, having failed to obtain a lease of the pier, purchase land of the devisees down to the foot of the pier, and then, without notice to them or any other proceedings taken as to compensation or otherwise, enter on the pier, and are proceeding to make a railway thereon. A bill is filed, and an injunction moved for to restrain such works:—Held, first, that the pier was built upon waste ground of the manor; secondly, that nothing had been done to divest the rights of the lord, and that his devisees were owners of the soil; thirdly, that it was not a highway, and that, as between the lord and the company, they would be liable to an action for trespass if they interfered with the use of the pier, which their works, if prosecuted, it clearly appeared would do. Injunction granted to restrain the company from entering without taking the necessary legal steps by notices, and making compensation, but refused to restrain the laying down rails in a particular manner, there being nothing to shew that they intended to proceed irregularly. Thompson v. West Somerset Mineral Ry., 5 W. R. 296.

Liability for Negligence causing Injury to Boat.]—The defendant, under a local act, constructed a pier and a landing-stage. The pier was a solid structure, which did not extend to low-water mark, but the landing-stage floated on the river, and was moored below low-water mark by anchors fixed in the bed of the river, a bridge being made to connect the landing-stage with the pier. Part of this landing-stage was beyond the limits marked on the deposited plans, but it, with its mooring anchors, received the approval of the admiralty. One of the mooring anchors to which the floating stage was attached was insufficiently buoyed to indicate its position under the water, and thereby injured a boat, which, whilst lawfully navigating the river, and without any negligence of the owner of the boat, struck against such anchor:—Held, in an action for the injury to the boat, that the landing-stage and works were authorised by the act; but that there was a cause of action against the defendant for negligence in insufficiently buoying the anchor, which caused the injury to the boat. Jolliffe v. Wallasey Local Board, 43 L. J., C. P. 41; L. R. 9 C. P. 62; 29 L. T. 582; 2 Asp. M. C. 146.

b. Injury to Piers.

By Stress of Weather.]—By the Harbours, Docks and Piers Act, 1847 (10 Vict. c. 27), the owner of every vessel or float of timber shall be answerable to the undertakers for any damage done by such vessel or float of timber, or by any person employed about the same, to the harbour, dock or pier, or the quays or works connected therewith; and the master or person having the charge of such vessel or float of timber, through whose wilful act or negligence any such damage is done, shall also be liable to make good the same. There is a proviso that nothing therein contained shall extend to impose any liability upon the owner, where the vessel is, at the time when the damage is caused, in charge of a compulsory pilot:—Held, that, in a case where the damage to the pier had been occasioned by a vessel, through the violence of the winds and waves, at a time when the master and crew had been compelled to escape from the vessel, and had, consequently, no control whatever over it, the owners were not liable. Wear River Commissioners v. Adamson, 47 L. J., Q. B. 193; 2 App. Cas. 743; 37 L. T. 543; 26 W. R. 217; 3 Asp. M. C. 521—H. L.

A liability imposed by statute is subject, no less than a liability at common law, to the exception that, in the absence of express words, no duty is imposed upon a person to make good a loss or damage occasioned, without his default, by causes which human agency is powerless to control. Ib.

Under the Harbours, Docks and Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (10 Vict. c. 27), s. 74, the owner of a vessel doing damage to the piers or works of a harbour is liable to make good the damage, although the accident is the result of inevitable accident from stress of weather, without any default of those in charge. Dennis v. Tovell, 42 L. J., M. C. 33; L. R. 8 Q. B. 10; 27 L. T. 482; 21 W. R. 170; 2 Asp. M. C. 402.

The owners of a pier, who are undertakers within the meaning of the Harbours, Docks and Piers Clauses Act, 1847, acquire, under s. 74, a maritime lien in respect of any damage done to their pier by a ship, and may proceed in rem to recover that damage in the court of admiralty, and the shipowners are debarred, by s. 74, from setting up the defence of inevitable accident. The Merle, 31 L. T. 447; 2 Asp. M. C. 402.

See Romney Marsh (Lords, Bailiffs and Jurats) v. Trinity House Corporation, 41 L. J., Ex. 106; L. R. 7 Ex. 247—Ex. Ch.

Who may Recover for Damage caused to Pier.]—When a limited company, duly constituted by a provisional order made under the General Piers and Harbours Act, 1861 and 1862, as the undertakers of a pier within the meaning of the Harbours, Docks and Piers Clauses Act, 1847, is voluntarily wound up, and its property sold by the liquidator, a purchaser of the pier has transferred to him both the property and the rights of the original undertaker, becomes the undertaker, within the meaning of the last-mentioned act, and can recover against a ship for damage done to his pier by that ship. The Merle, supra. But see Cases supra.

Damage to Pier in Foreign Country.]—The question of the liability of a shipowner, proceeded against in the English admiralty court, for an injury done by his ship to a pier, projecting into the sea, but attached to the soil of a foreign country, is governed by the lex loci, and not by English law. The M. Moxham, 46 L. J., Adm. 17; 1 P. D. 107; 34 L. T. 559; 24 W. R. 650; 3 Asp. M. C. 191—C. A.

When an English ship, by the negligence of her master and crew, ran into and damaged a pier on the coast of Spain, and the owners of the pier proceeded against the ship for the damage in the admiralty court, and the shipowner pleaded that by the law of Spain a shipowner was not responsible for the damage occasioned by the negligence of his master and crew:—Held, that the plea was a good defence to the action. Ib.

c. Obstruction to Harbours.

See also XXIII. WHARFINGERS, supra, col. 879.

Who liable — Underwriters — Owner.]—The harbour-master of a harbour constructed under a private act incorporating the Harbours Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 27), having incurred expense in removing an obstruction caused by part of a wreck, sought to recover it from the owner of the ship under s. 56. The underwriters, who had paid as for a total loss, were joined with the original shipowner as defendants:—Held, that the underwriters did not by such payment become the owners of the wreck for the purpose of liability to the harbour-master under this section, and that the original shipowner must bear the expense, the liability having attached to him as owner at the time of the happening of the casualty. Eglinton (Earl) v. Norman, 46 L. J., Ex. 557; 36 L. T. 888; 25 W. R. 656; 3 Asp. M. C. 471—C. A.

Liability of Owner of Wreck.]—The "D.," in consequence of the sole default of her master and crew, had sunk in the Thames and had become a wreck, obstructing the navigation of the river.

Her mate sent a message to the harbour-master at G. to inform him of the accident, who said that he would cause the wreck to be lighted. A few hours afterwards, the wreck not having been lighted, a vessel, without any default on the part of those on board her, came into collision with the wreck and sustained damage. An action of damage having been instituted on behalf of the owner of the damaged vessel against the owners of the "D.," the judge at the trial refused to admit the evidence shewing that the mate of the "D." had sent a message to the harbour-master, and that the latter had promised to light the wreck:—Held, that the evidence was wrongly rejected, that the collision had not been caused by the negligence of the owners of the wreck, and that they were not liable for the damage done. The Douglas, 51 L. J., Adm. 89; 7 P. D. 151; 47 L. T. 502; 5 Asp. M. C. 15—C. A.

Sect. 96 of the Dublin Port and Docks Act (32 & 33 Vict. c. c.) enacts, that "the harbour-master or dockmaster may remove any wreck or other obstruction to the harbour, quays, docks, or other approaches to the same; and also any floating timber which impedes the navigation thereof; and the expense of removing any such wreck, obstruction or floating timber, shall be repaid by the owner of the same, and the harbour-master or dockmaster may detain such wreck, obstruction or floating timber for securing the expenses, and, on nonpayment of such expenses on demand, may sell such wreck, obstruction or floating timber, and out of the proceeds of such sale pay such expenses, rendering the surplus, if any, to the owner on demand":—Held, that a personal liability is not thereby imposed on the owner in respect of the removal of a vessel which has been sunk in the harbour or in the approaches to the harbour, either by the act of God, or through the negligence of a person not the owner, or for whose act the owner is not responsible. The Edith, 11 L. R., Ir. 270—C. A.

Duties of Commissioners.]—Under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 117, the dues, and other moneys which the commissioners of Kingstown harbour were by statute empowered to receive from vessels frequenting the harbour, were directed to be applied, in the first place, in payment of the expenses of maintaining and regulating the harbour; and it was provided that if there should be any overplus, beyond what should be requisite for the purposes of that act, and earlier acts relating to the harbour, and recited in the preamble, such overplus should be applied in repayment of certain advances which the lord-lieutenant was authorised to make. One of these earlier acts directed that means should be used for the cleansing and deepening, and also for the improving of the harbour, and another directed the commissioners to proceed in the making, improving and completing the harbour; but none of the acts relating to the harbour imposed in terms upon the commissioners the duty of removing accumulations or obstructions which had existed previously to their appointment. In an action against the commissioners for negligence, in allowing an accumulation of rubbish in the harbour, whereby a vessel was injured, they pleaded that the obstructions which caused the injury complained of were in the harbour before their appointment, and that the moneys statutably receivable by them were applicable to certain specific works, and that they never had any moneys applicable under those acts to the removal of the obstructions complained of:—Held, a good answer to the action. Campbell v. Hornsby Ir. R. 6 C. L. 37. See S. C., Ir. R. 7 C. L. 540 Ex. Ch.

Liability of Harbour Commissioners for not moving Obstructions.]—Harbour commissioners cannot be sued for not cleansing, deepening or removing obstructions from the harbour, if they have not funds to enable them to do so. Grant v. Sligo Harbour Commissioners, Ir. R. 11 C. L. 190.

By act of parliament, 26 & 27 Vict. c. lxxxix., the harbour of B. was vested in the defendants, the limits were defined, and the defendants had jurisdiction over the harbour of P. and the channel of P. beyond those limits, for the purpose of, inter alia, buoying "the said harbour and channel," but they were not to levy dues or rates beyond the harbour of B. By 42 & 43 Vict. c. cxlvi., a moiety of the residue of light duties to which ships entering or leaving the harbour of P. contributed were to be paid to the defendants and to be applied by them in, inter alia, buoying and lighting the harbour and channel of P. A vessel was wrecked in the channel of P., which, under the Wrecks Removal Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 16), s. 4, the defendants had power to, and did partially remove. The wreck not removed was not buoyed, and the plaintiff's vessel was in consequence wrecked:—Held, that the statutes imposed upon the defendants an obligation to remove the wreck from the channel, or to mark its position by buoys, and that, not having done so, they were liable in damages to the plaintiff. Dormont v. Furness Ry., 52 L. J., Q. B. 331; 11 Q. B. D. 496; 49 L. T. 134; 5 Asp. M. C. 127; 47 J. P. 711. See also Reg. v. Williams, 53 L. J., P. C. 64; 9 App. Ca. 918, infra.

Obstruction on Land to Passage to.]—A local act enacted, that "if any person shall place on any quay, within ten feet of the quay head, or on any ground immediately adjoining to the haven, and within the space of ten feet from high-water mark, any goods, so as to obstruct the free and commodious passage through or over the same, every person so offending shall forfeit any sum not exceeding 5*l.*" A boat builder placed three boats in a yard in his occupation, on the part immediately adjoining the river, and within the space of ten feet from high-water mark, so as to obstruct the passage, and was convicted in the penalty. There was no public right of passage through and over the yard:—Held, by Cockburn, C.J., Crompton and Blackburn, JJ. (dissentiente Wightman, J.), that the section applied only to cases where the public had a right of passage, and that the conviction could not be sustained. By Wightman, J., that the obstruction was prohibited in express terms, and that he was properly convicted. Harrod v. Worship, 1 B. & S. 381; 30 L. J., M. C. 165; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 153; 9 W. R. 865.

Harbour Authority—Liability for Damage to Ship taking the ground.]—A vessel that had taken the ground in a tidal harbour was damaged in her bottom. A stone was found in the berth where she lay, that might have caused the damage:—Held, that in the absence of proof that the harbour authority had been negligent they were not liable. Thompson v. Greenock, Harbour Trustees, 3 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 1226.

—— Damage by Snag.]—The government of a colony had the control of a tidal harbour and authority to remove obstructions; and the wharves belonged to them, the public having a right to navigate the harbour and to use the wharves on payment:—Held, that the government was liable for damage to a vessel by a snag, which they had not taken reasonable care to remove. Reg. v. Williams, 53 L. J., P. C. 64; 9 App. Cas. 418.

—— Damage by submerged Pile — Liability of Trustees of Navigation.] — Unpaid trustees appointed for public purposes in aid of the common-law right of navigating an ancient highway, with a discretionary but not compulsory power of removing obstructions:—Held, not liable in an action for damage to the plaintiff's barge by striking upon a submerged pile. Forbes v. Lee Conservancy Board, 48 L. J., Ex. 402; 4 Ex. D. 116; 28 W. R. 688.

—— Damage by sunken Wreck.] — A canal company taking tolls for the use of it and having power to raise sunken boats at the owner's expense, held liable for damage to a fly boat that struck on a sunken boat; and that their liability was by the common law and not under their statute. Parnaby v. Lancaster Canal Co., 11 A. & E. 223; 3 P. & D. 162; 9 L. J., Ex. 338—Ex. Ch. See also The Moorcock, and cases ante, col. 880; The Utopia, ante, col. 721; Metcalf v. Hetherington, and cases post, col. 910.

Damage by Stump of Beacon — Liability of Trinity House.]—A beacon erected by and vested in the trinity house, having been nearly destroyed, a stranger applied to the trinity house, and obtained leave to remove the remains of it. He removed part of the remains, but left an iron stump standing up above a rock under the water. A vessel struck against the iron stump and was lost:—Held, that the trinity house was liable. Gilbert v. Trinity House Corporation, 56 L. J., Q. B. 85; 17 Q. B. D. 795; 35 W. R. 30.

Statutory Duty to buoy River—Damage by Neglect to do so.]—Semble, the harbour authority is liable. Buchanan v. Clyde Lighthouses Trustees, 10 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 531.

Wreck—Expenses of Removal.]—The owner of a wreck within the meaning of s. 56 of the Harbours, Docks and Piers Clauses Act, 1847, is the owner at the time that the wreck is removed and disposed of, not the person who was owner at the time the obstruction occurred. Eglinton (Earl) v. Norman, supra, col. 890, overruled on this point. The Crystal, Arrow Steamship Co. v. Tyne Commissioners, 63 L. J., Adm. 146; [1894] A. C. 508; 6 R. 258; 71 L. T. 346; 7 Asp. M. C. 513—H. L. (E.)

Per Lord Herschell, L.C., and Lord Watson (Lords Ashbourne and Morris dissenting): Semble, that s. 56 of that act creates a personal debt in respect of which an action may be maintained against the owner of a wreck which is removed by the harbour-master as causing an obstruction to any harbour or dock. Ib.

Per Lord Macnaghten: Semble, that the owner only incurs liability under that section when the wreck is substantially in the same condition at the conclusion of the operation of removal as it was at the commencement, and the owner derives some benefit from the removal: the statute did not contemplate the disposal of the wreck by explosives. Whether at common law a man can by abandonment wholly deprive himself of property in goods. Quære. Ib.

Per Lord Herschell, L.C.: River commissioners who sell a wreck which is obstructing the entrance to their river are not bound to apply the moneys derived from the sale pro rata to the expenses incurred under the acts of 1847 and 1877. Ib.

Wear River Commissioners v. Adamson, supra, col. 70, discussed, and The Edith, supra, col. 891, disapproved. Ib.

—— Thames Conservancy.]—In ascertaining the charges and expenses of weighing or raising a vessel under the Thames Conservancy Act, 1857, s. 86, the cost of a special apparatus provided by the conservators for removing wrecks, and used on the particular occasion, may be taken into account; such cost comprising interest upon capital invested in the apparatus, repairs, a depreciation fund and the insurance of the apparatus against risk. The charge for insurance of the apparatus cannot be estimated by reference to the tonnage of the wreck raised by it. Where it appears that the work in question could have been done more cheaply by a less expensive apparatus, the charges must be based on the lower rate. The Harrington, 57 L. J., Adm. 45; 13 P. D. 48; 59 L. T. 72; 6 Asp. M. C. 282.

—— Mersey Docks and Harbour Board—Wreck-raising Plant.]—A lightship and a dredger, the property of the Mersey docks and harbour board, were sunk by the negligence of the defendant's ships. The board, having power by 37 & 38 Vict. c. xxx. to raise and sell wrecks and retain the expenses, raised the wrecks and sued the defendants for the expenses:—Held, that the board were entitled to recover in respect of the plant used for raising the wrecks at the rate of 12*l.* per tide during the period the plant was at work; that rate being calculated with reference to the capital invested in the plant, repairs, depreciation fund and insurance. The Harrington (supra), approved. The Emerald, The Greta Holme, 65 L. J., Adm. 69; [1896] P. 192; 74 L. T. 645; 8 Asp. M. C. 134—C. A. As to damages recoverable for the loss of use of the dredger, see The Greta Holme (S. C. on appeal to H. L.), supra, col. 735.

——Aire and Calder Navigation—Abandonment by Owners—Tidal Water.]—Sect. 47 of the Aire and Calder Navigation Act, 1889, provides that if any vessel shall be sunk in the river Ouse within the limits of the jurisdiction of the undertakers, and the owners shall not forthwith remove the same, it shall be lawful for the undertakers to remove such vessel and to detain the same until payment be made of all the expenses relating thereto, or to sell such vessel and thereout to pay such expenses and the expenses of the sale, returning to the owner of such vessel the overplus:—Held, that, upon the true construction of the section, the time when the expenses were incurred, and not the time when the vessel sank, is the period at which the ownership is to be ascertained, and that the owners of a vessel which sank in tidal water in the river Ouse within the statutory limits, who abandoned her sine animo recuperandi, were not liable to pay to the undertakers of the navigation the expenses, incurred by the undertakers after the abandonment, of unsuccessfully attempting to raise the vessel and of destroying her by explosives. Barraclough v. Brown, 66 L. J., Q. B. 672 ; 76 L. T. 797 ; 8 Asp. M. C. 290—H.L. (E.)

—— Humber—Failure to Raise—Blowing up.]—A Humber conservancy act enabled commissioners, when any vessel was sunk in the Humber (on neglect of the owners), to appoint a person to raise or blow up the same, with powers to recover summarily the expenses from such owners. A vessel was sunk in the Humber, and, on the neglect of the two owners to raise her, the commissioners appointed a person to raise or blow her up. Whilst the works were in progress, one of the part owners died, leaving two executors. The attempts to raise having failed, the vessel was blown up, and proceedings were taken against the surviving part owner and the two executors of the deceased part owner, to recover the expenses incurred in endeavouring to raise the vessel, and in blowing her up :—Held, first, that it was for the justices to decide whether or not these expenses were properly incurred ; and, secondly, that the justices had no power to include the executors in such order. Wilson v. Carter, 7 L. T. 676 ; 11 W. R. 337.

—— Victoria—Marine Act, 1890, s. 13.]—The above act imposes upon the registered owner of a ship sunk in a harbour the duty of clearing the wreck away, or of reimbursing the statutory officer the expenses incurred by him in doing so. He cannot escape this liability by abandoning the wreck to underwriters, or otherwise. The Crystal (supra, col. 893), distinguished. Howard Smith and Sons v. Wilson, 65 L. J., P. C. 66 ; [1896] A. C. 579 ; 75 L. T. 81 ; 8 Asp. M. C. 197—P. C.

—— Mersey—Removing Wrecks.]—The Mersey Dock Acts Consolidation Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. xcii.), empowers the defendants to raise, destroy, &c., any "wrecks of vessels and any vessels that shall be sunk in any dock within the port of Liverpool," which may be an obstruction to the navigation, and, in case the master or owner of such vessel or other obstruction shall neglect to pay the charge of removing the same for the space of three days after demand, to sell the same, and out of the proceeds retain the expense incurred in raising, destroying, &c., "such wrecks or other obstructions," rendering the overplus to the person entitled to the same. A ship came into collision with another vessel and was sunk in the Mersey, within the port of Liverpool, having on board copper ore and other goods belonging to the plaintiffs. The defendants took possession of the wreck, which obstructed the navigation, and claimed the exclusive right of dealing with ship and cargo. A portion of the cargo (worth about 1,200*l.*) was raised by them from the wreck, at a cost of 294*l.* 14*s.*, and they ultimately blew up and destroyed the hull of the vessel and the rest of the cargo. The expense incurred by them in removing the obstruction caused by ship and cargo was about 4,500*l.* :—Held, that the defendants were not entitled to detain the plaintiffs' goods to indemnify themselves for the costs incurred in the destruction of the ship, of which the plaintiffs were not the owners. Vivian v. Mersey Docks and Harbour Board, 39 L. J., C. P. 3 ; L. R. 5 C. P. 19 ; 21 L. T. 362.

Damage to Ship—Stranding—Duty of Harbour Authority to provide efficient Tugs—Liability.]—Under the Ribble Navigation Act, 1883, the defendants were constituted the harbour authority for the port of Preston, and all vessels entering or within the port or harbour were under the control of the defendants' harbour master, whose orders they were bound to obey. The plaintiffs' vessel on arrival at the mouth of the river was lightened under the orders of the defendants, and the harbour-master subsequently informed the plaintiffs' master that there would be sufficient water on a certain morning to enable the plaintiffs' vessel to dock at Preston, and a tug was supplied by the defendants for the purpose of towing her to the dock. The plaintiffs' vessel was preceded up river by two smaller vessels which were towed by two tugs also supplied by the defendants. Owing to bad stoking, or some other cause which was not explained by the defendants, the leading tug occupied an hour in doing what she should have accomplished in thirty-five minutes. It was impossible for the plaintiffs' vessel, owing to the narrowness of the channel, either to pass the leading vessel and her tug or to turn back. The two leading vessels entered the Preston dock, but the plaintiffs vessel was stranded about a quarter of a mile from the dock owing to the river having fallen about fourteen inches, and was damaged :—Held, that the defendants, as between themselves and the plaintiffs, had the duty imposed upon them to supply an efficient tug for the leading vessel, and that as a primâ facie case had been made out by the plaintiffs that the tug was not efficient, and that primâ facie case had not been explained away by the defendants, they were liable for the damage caused to the plaintiffs' vessel. The Ratata, 66 L. J., Adm. 39 ; [1897] P. 118 ; 76 L. T. 224 ; 8 Asp. M. C. 236—C. A. Affirmed in H. L. See also Reney v. Kirkcudbright Magistrates, post, col. 914.

Ballast—Casting into Rivers.]—19 Geo. 2, c. 22, s. 1, which imposed a penalty for casting ballast into rivers is impliedly repealed by 54 Geo. 3, c. 159, s. 11. Michell v. Brown, 1 El. & El. 267 ; 28 L. J., M. C. 53 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 707.

Expense of Cutting Weeds.]—Persons incorporated by act of parliament to improve the navigation of a river, having power to take tolls :—Held not liable for sewerage in the river, or for not cutting weeds which were no injury to the navigation. Parrett Navigation Co. v. Robins, 10 M. & W. 593 ; 12 L. J., Ex. 81.

Expense of Pumping Ship in Dock.]—See Blackett v. Smith, 12 East, 518, ante, col. 69.

d. Tolls, Dues and Metages.

Lighthouse Duties.]—British ships, in passing by the Eddystone and other lighthouses in the Channel, not touching at any place in Great Britain or Ireland, are not liable to pay the lighthouse duties to the trinity house. Trinity House Corporation v. Sorsbie, 3 Term Rep. 768.

Exemptions — Mail Packet.]— A post-office packet, hired by the postmaster-general, under a contract to carry mails and government dispatches to and from Dover to Calais, entering the harbour of Dover on her return voyage, bringing no mail, but having on board dispatches for the secretary at war, and also private passengers and their luggage, a carriage, and bullion for passage and freight, the vessel, being the private property of the commander, was a vessel employed in his majesty's service, and therefore exempt from the payment of the Dover harbour dues payable under 47 Geo. 3, c. 69, s. 6, which contained an exemption in favour of vessels belonging to his majesty, or that might be employed in his service. Hamilton v. Stow, 1 D. & R. 274; 5 B. & Ald. 649.

—— Transport Chartered to Crown.]—Where a person chartered his ship to the commissioners of the transport service on behalf of the crown, to be employed as a transport, and the ship in the course of such employment made several voyages from Deptford to foreign parts and back:—Held, that by the terms of the charterparty, coupled with the nature of the service, a temporary ownership passed to the crown, so that the charterer, during the time of such service, was not to be considered as owner within the charters granted to the Trinity house, which impose lighthouse duties, and for buoyage and beaconage on the masters and owners of ships. Trinity House Corporation v. Clark, 4 M. & S. 288. See Smithett v. Blythe, 1 B. & Ad. 509; 9 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 39.

—— Material for Government Works.]—By a local act in 1826, wharfage duties were authorised to be taken in respect of certain goods, including stone, which should be imported into a harbour, and the same were to be vested in the corporation of the borough for the purpose of repairing, improving and maintaining the harbour, wharfs, &c., within the borough and town. There were no words in the act binding the crown to pay such duties, but there were provisions exempting the crown from liability in respect of coals imported into the port for the use of his majesty's steam-packets, and actually used on board the same, and also from the tolls to be taken for passing over a bridge connected with the harbour. Stones were brought by a barge into the harbour, for the purpose of being used upon government works which were being carried on there, and which, if they had been brought by any private individual, would have been liable to the duties given by the act:—Held, that the crown was not liable to be called upon to pay such duties. Weymouth Corporation v. Nugent, 6 B. & S. 22; 34 L. J., M. C. 81; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 465; 11 L. T. 672; 13 W. R. 338.

Who Liable to Pay Shipper—Owner.] — A local act, incorporating a company, by s. 71 imposed certain river dues in respect of goods carried on the river Ribble, for every time of passing certain lines, without saying by whom they were to be paid. The 10 & 11 Vict. c. 27, which was incorporated with the special act, provides, by s. 42, that rates in respect of goods shipped or unshipped within the limits of the harbour, dock or pier, shall be paid, in case the goods are to be shipped, before shipment, or in case they were to be unshipped, before removal from the premises of the undertakers:—Held, in the case of coals which A. had sold to B., and contracted to deliver on board a ship to be provided by B., that even if s. 42 of the general act be applicable to dues under s. 71 of the special act, A. was not liable to the company for such dues, and that A. was not the shipper of coals so as to be owner within the interpretation clause of the 10 & 11 Vict. c. 27. Ribble Navigation Co. v. Hargreaves, 17 C. B. 385; 25 L. J., C. P. 97.

What Goods Liable—Gravel from Thames and Lea.]—The Trinity house has a right to the duty of ballastage of screened garden gravel, though not taken from the Thames; but it is doubtful whether gravel taken from the river Lea is within the jurisdiction of the Trinity house. Trinity House Corporation v. Staples, 2 Chit. 689.

"Metals."]—An act for keeping in repair a harbour imposed duties, enumerated in a schedule annexed, on goods exported and imported. In the schedule, under the head "metals," certain duties were imposed on copper, brass, pewter and tin; and on all other metals not enumerated, for every 10*l.* value, 10*d.*:—Held, that the latter words did not include gold and silver, and, therefore, that the commissioners were not entitled to demand for specie or bullion, 10*d.* for every 10*l.* value. Casher v. Holmes, 2 B. & Ad. 592; 9 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 280.

By Package or Weight.]—An act authorised harbour commissioners to charge a sum not "exceeding 1*d.* for every ton or less quantity than a ton, and for every package and parcel of goods, wares, merchandise, &c., exported or imported over the bars of certain rivers." Tin plates were exported, packed in wooden boxes for shipment, and such boxes formed and composed one entire quantity or shipment in one vessel (under one bill of lading), and to the same consignee, and at a uniform rate of freight on all the tin plates so shipped, such freight being paid on the quantity of tons weight:—Held, that the commissioners were entitled to charge 1*d.* per package, and were not bound to charge 1*d.* per ton weight. Jones v. Phillips, 7 Ex. 85; 21 L. J., Ex. 6.

"Exportation."] — The words "shipped for exportation" are not necessarily restricted to an exportation to foreign countries, but may mean exportation in its widest sense, that is, carrying out of port. Stockton and Darlington Ry. v. Barrett, 11 Cl. & F. 590—H. L. (E.); 8 Scott (N.R.) 641; 7 Man. & G. 870—Ex. Ch.

"Importation."]—A local act imposed a duty on goods imported into or exported from the harbour of Berwick-upon-Tweed. The harbour extends from the bridge over the Tweed down the river to the sea. A person brought goods by sea into the harbour in a sea-going vessel, chartered for the voyage, and having first used the rings or posts erected by the harbour commissioners in order to moor the vessel while her masts were being lowered, passed under the bridge, and unloaded the goods 200 yards above the bridge:—Held, that the goods were not imported into the harbour so as to be liable to dues. Wilson v. Robertson, 4 El. & Bl. 923; 24 L. J., Q. B. 185; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 755.

Goods Landed.]—A corporation was empowered by a local act to levy tolls on all goods landed within their harbour. In pursuance of a practice which had continued for many years, stones brought along the coast into the harbour were shot from boats on to the shore, below high-water mark, and remained on the spot where they were deposited till they were shipped for exportation from the harbour:—Held, that the stones were not landed within the meaning of the act, and therefore that the corporation was not entitled to claim the toll on them. Harvey v. Lyme Regis Corporation, 38 L. J., Ex. 141; L. R. 4 Ex. 260; 17 W. R. 892.

Mersey Dock — Tonnage Rates — "Trading Inwards" and "Trading Outwards."]—Vessels took in part of their cargo at Glasgow, sailed to Liverpool, entered the appellants' docks, and there completed their loading, but discharged no cargo; they then proceeded to a port in India, there discharged and loaded a complete cargo, thence sailed to Liverpool, entered the appellants' docks, and there discharged the whole or part of their cargo, and then returned with the remainder of their cargo or in ballast to Glasgow:—Held, that under s. 230 of the Mersey Docks Acts Consolidation Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. xcii.), such vessels using the appellants' docks as aforesaid on their way to India were liable to dock tonnage rates, not as vessels "trading inwards" from Glasgow, but as vessels "trading outwards" to India, and that such vessels using the docks as aforesaid on their return voyage from India were liable to rates as vessels "trading inwards" from India. Mersey Docks v. Henderson, 58 L. J., Q. B. 152; 13 App. Cas. 595; 59 L. T. 697; 37 W. R. 449; 6 Asp. M. C. 338—H. L. (E.)

Timber "Shipped or Unshipped."]—Where a statute gave trustees appointed for the improvement of a navigable river and harbour power to charge dues on all timber "shipped or unshipped within the harbour or river":—Held, that to attach a tow-rope to a log of timber, or a number of logs loosely connected at one of the ends, for the purpose of towing them, is not to "ship" those logs, and that to cast off the tow-rope is not to "unship" them. Clyde Navigation Trustees v. Laird, 8 App. Cas. 658—H. L. (Sc.)

Quære, whether a raft of logs so constructed as to be capable of being navigated, can be said to be "unshipped" when, on reaching its destination, it is taken to pieces and landed. Ib.

By an act dated 1770, the Clyde trustees had power to charge rates on "all timber or wood either carried in boats or other vessels, or floated in and upon the said river Clyde, within those points aforesaid" (that is above Dumbuck). By a statute in 1840, the Clyde trustees' jurisdiction was extended down the river to Newark Castle, and the duties were imposed by that act on "all goods carried or conveyed on the river." By the statute in force at present, dated 1858, all the prior acts are totally repealed. By s. 75 the limits of the river are to include the whole channel or waterway forming the harbour, and the whole works within certain given limits, and the whole lands acquired for the purposes of such works, or occupied by the trustees in connection with the navigation of the said river. By s. 98 it is enacted that the trustees are to have power to levy on goods "shipped or unshipped" in the river or harbour the rates specified in the first and second columns of part 1 of schedule H. Schedule H. is headed "Rates on goods conveyed upon or shipped or unshipped in the river or harbour." In 1876 the trustees, under their act of 1858, sought to levy rates on timber in logs, which were taken out of the vessels importing them from abroad, outside the jurisdiction of the trustees, and then floated or towed, chained together, over the old shallow channel of the river to storing ponds situate within the trustees' jurisdiction. In a note for suspension and interdict at the instance of the owners:—Held, that the word "river" as it occurs in s. 98, comprehended the whole waters of the Clyde within the limits defined in s. 75, and cannot be restricted to those portions of the channel which have been artificially deepened; but that the statute of 1858 confers no authority on the trustees to levy rates on timber towed in the manner mentioned. Ib.

Tolls for Beaching Boats—Providing Accommodation for.]—When the fishermen of a sea village had been immemorially accustomed to beach their boats in winter on ground adjoining the harbour, and where the proprietor had subsequently obtained a local act authorising his levy of five shillings yearly for each boat beached, the fishermen's rights were enforced against him; and it was held that he could not exclude the fishermen from the ground used for beaching without assigning to them other ground equally well adapted for the purpose. Aiton v. Stephen, 1 App. Cas. 456—H. L. (Sc.)

When an act authorises the exaction of a toll, the accommodation for which the toll is authorised must be provided. Ib.

Company Liable to Pay Deficiencies in Income of Harbour and Pier Board.]—A dock company was liable under an act of parliament to pay a harbour and pier board deficiencies of their income made up to a certain day in each year:—Held, that the board was bound to claim such deficiencies every year. Southampton Dock Co. v. Southampton Harbour and Pier Board, 41 L. J., Ch. 832; L. R. 14 Eq. 595; 26 L. T. 828; 20 W. R. 940.

The board had power to reduce or alter their tolls:—Held, that, as against the company, they had no power to remit tolls on particular classes of goods. Ib.

The board had power to compound for tolls:—Held, that, as against the company, they could not let the whole annual tolls. Ib.

Action to recover Rates Paid under Invalid Regulations.]—By several acts of parliament, all vessels entering into or leaving the Mersey docks were liable, according to the tonnage burden, and were compelled to pay certain fixed dues. By the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, s. 26, whenever the tonnage of any ship has been ascertained and registered in accordance with the provisions of that act, the same shall thenceforth be deemed to be the tonnage of such ship, and be repeated in every subsequent registry, unless any alteration is made in the form or capacity of such ship, or unless it is discovered that the tonnage of such ship has been erroneously computed; and in either of such cases such ship shall be re-measured, and the tonnage determined and registered according to the rules in that act contained. By s. 27, re-measurement may be made upon desire of the shipowner. By s. 29, the commissioners of customs are empowered to make certain modifications and alterations in the tonnage rules prescribed by the act. Under that section the commissioners of customs in 1860 made regulations, which had the effect of increasing the registered tonnage of the plaintiff's ships. In 1865, these regulations were, by a decision of a court of law, declared to be contrary to the act of parliament, and invalid. An action was brought to recover the excess of rates paid in accordance with these invalid regulations, over the amount which would have been due under the Merchant Shipping Act:—Held, that the action was not maintainable. Moss v. Mersey Docks and Harbour Board, 26 L. T. 425; 20 W. R. 700; 1 Asp. M. C. 605.

Metage.]—A corporation was, under an act passed in 1839, entitled to the right to take dues in respect of vessels lading or unlading upon or from the wharves of the harbour; a subsequent act passed in 1868, giving the corporation additional powers, and conferring upon them the exclusive appointment and regulation of meters and weighers within the harbour, and incorporating the 81st and 82nd sections of the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (10 Vict. c. 27). The corporation thereupon made by-laws for the appointment, government, and payment of meters. In 1807, the corporation granted a lease to B. for 999 years of premises, in which there was a proviso that "all such goods, wares, and merchandise as shall be proved to be bonâ fide the sole property of B., his executors, administrators, or assigns, who shall be legally and beneficially entitled to the premises when such goods, &c., shall be landed, shipped, or unshipped, brought to, carried, or laden to, upon, or from certain premises in the harbour mentioned, shall be freed and discharged from all wharfage, cranage, petit customs, and other duties usually paid at any time or times heretofore, or which at any times hereafter during the respective terms shall become due or payable to the corporation." A party claiming under B. unloaded a cargo of coals at the premises in the harbour for his own use, and did not employ a corporation meter:—Held, that he was under no legal obligation to employ such meter. Whiting v. Carpenter, 24 L. T. 576.

By a charterparty it was agreed that a ship should load a cargo of oats, and proceed to a safe port on the east coast of Great Britain, London inclusive, or a safe port in the English Channel, or to Havre, and there "deliver the same always afloat on being paid freight," at certain rates per quarter of oats discharged. "The cargo to be brought to and taken from alongside at charterer's expense and risk." The ship sailed to Rochester, and discharged her cargo within that port. The corporation of Rochester, as owner of the port, is entitled to an ancient fee, toll, due or reward of 1*d.* per quarter upon corn brought by water to, and unloaded within the port, payable by the person bringing such corn, for the weighing of the corn, or being ready and willing to weigh it. This due having been paid by the captain, the shipowners' agent brought an action in the county court to recover the amount from the consignees of the cargo as and for money paid for them at their request. Judgment was given for the plaintiff. On appeal, the court, being of opinion that the question of liability arising between the shipowners and consignees depended upon whether the due was in ancient times a payment for actual metage service done by the corporation before a cargo was put over the side of a ship, or afterwards, remitted the case to the judge in order that he might ascertain the fact:—Held, that (having regard to the terms of the charterparty), if the due in its origin was for metage to be performed on board, the shipowners must bear it; but, if the metage was to be done ashore, then the charge should fall on the consignees, who would in that case be liable to repay to the shipowners the amount disbursed for the same. Woodham v. Peterson, 25 L. T. 26; 1 Asp. M. C. 93.

Payment of Harbour Dues more than once a Year.]—The 32 Geo. 3, c. lxxiv. s. 14, which exempted coasting vessels from payment of duty to Ramsgate harbour oftener than once in a year, including coasting vessels carrying only coal. Shepherd v. Moore, 1 H. & N. 125; 25 L. Limerick Harbour Dues—Limerick Harbour Act, 1867, 30 & 31 Vict. c. clv.—Shannon Navigation Act, 2 & 3 Vict. c. 61.]—Dues payable on vessels reported at the custom-house of Limerick were by statute payable to the Limerick Bridge commissioners, who by 10 & 11 Vict. c. cxcviii. were constituted Limerick Harbour commissioners, to be applied in the construction and maintenance of docks and other works of the port which the commissioners were empowered to execute. Under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 61, and acts amending the same, certain outports in the Shannon, including the harbour of Foynes and the conservancy thereof, are vested in commissioners of public works, who are empowered to levy rates on vessels using the outports. By the Limerick Harbour Act, 1867, the piers and harbours in the estuary of the Shannon then vested in the commissioners of public works are not comprised in the harbour and port of Limerick; and harbour rates are defined as including all rates and dues leviable in the port and harbour of Limerick under the act, and are made payable to the harbour commissioners in lieu of those payable under the former acts; and such rates and dues include dues leviable on "every vessel from any port in Great Britain or Ireland reporting at the custom-house of Limerick or discharging or loading within the port or at the quays." By custom-house regulations all vessels arriving at the outports, whether from foreign or from ports of the United Kingdom, are required to report themselves at the Limerick custom-house:—Held, that under the Act of 1867 the Limerick Harbour commissioners are not entitled to dues on a vessel arriving from a port of the United Kingdom and discharging at Foynes, though reported at the Limerick custom-house. Limerick Harbour Commissioners v. Kane, 2 L. R., Ir. 473.

Skerries Lighthouse Tolls.]—Vessels bound from Cork to Dublin through St. George's Channel are not subject to the toll given by 3 Geo. 2, c. 36, to the Skerries light proprietor. Boyce v. Jones, 4 L. R., Ir. 231.

Light Dues—Exemption—Landing Persons at Bunkering Port.]—On her voyage from Mediterranean ports to Aarhuus, in Denmark, the s.s. "Chelona," laden with barley, put into Malta for bunker coals. The master there took three persons on board who desired to go to England. He charged them no passage-money, but made a substantial charge per head for their food, for which he did not account to the owners. The "Chelona" touched at Portland for bunker coals, and the three persons were there landed. The collector for the general lighthouse authority at Portland demanded light dues, which he alleged had been incurred by the owners of the ship in consequence of such landing:—Held, that the ship was exempt from light dues. The case was analogous to that of the master taking a friend on board and landing him, and did not fall within the proviso to the exemption in the order in council of the 16th of May, 1893. Hay v. Trinity House Corporation, 65 L. 3. Docks.

a. Reparation and Regulation.

Right to Moor.]—The 63rd section of the Harbour, Docks and Piers Clauses Act (10 & 11 Vict. c. 27), which imposes a penalty upon the master of any vessel who shall, without permission of the harbour-master, moor the same in the entrance (or within the prescribed limits) of any dock or harbour, and who shall not remove the same upon notice, overrides and extinguishes all local and private rights of property therein. Gardner v. Whitford, 4 C. B. (N.S.) 665.

The assertion of such local or private rights does not exclude the jurisdiction of the justices under the act. Ib.

Maintenance and Repair.]—A dock company was required to make and maintain a new channel, with equal depth and breadth at the bottom, and with equal inclination of the sides to the former channel:—Held, that a duty was cast upon the company to repair generally the banks of the new course. Reg. v. Bristol Dock Co., 1 G. & D. 286; 2 Q. B. 64; 2 Railw. Cas. 599.

High Tide—Injury to adjoining Land.]—A dock company was authorised by its special act to make and maintain a dock and works connected therewith according to the levels defined in plans and sections deposited with the clerk of the peace. The dock communicated with the Thames by an artificial channel, through which the water was admitted. The sections shewed the retaining bank of the dock and channel at a uniform height of four feet above Trinity high-water mark. The level of the surrounding country was some feet below Trinity high-water mark, the river being kept from overflowing by means of a river wall four feet two inches above Trinity high-water mark. The company allowed its retaining bank to be at one point several inches below the level of four feet. In November, 1875, an extraordinary high-tide took place, and the river rose to four feet five inches above Trinity high-water mark, in consequence of which the water in the dock overflowed the bank and damaged the property of a neighbouring landowner. The tide had never been known to rise so high before, but in March, 1874, it had risen to four feet above Trinity high-water mark. On that occasion there was a small overflow from the dock, but no damage was done to the neighbouring landowner. Previously to that the tide had never risen above three feet four inches, and the water had never overflowed from the dock:—Held, first, that the company was bound to keep its bank up to the level of four feet above Trinity high-water mark, and was liable to the plaintiff for breach of its statutory duty in not doing so. Nitro-Phosphate and Odam's Chemical Manure Co. v. London and St. Katharine Dock Co., 9 Ch. D. 503; 39 L. T. 433; 27 W. R. 267—C. A.

Held, secondly, that, independently of the act, the dock company was bound as a riparian owner to keep the bank up to the level of four feet two inches, the height of the rest of the river wall, and that the company was liable to the plaintiff for negligence in not so doing. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the extraordinary high tide of November, 1875, although an act of God, did not excuse the dock company from its liability; but that it ought to have an opportunity of shewing that the damage done by the act of God and the damage done through its negligence ought to be apportioned. Ib.

—— Contract for.]—A corporation constituted for the purpose of carrying on a particular trade, entered into a contract for cleansing and removing the filth and dirt accumulating in their docks and basins:—Held, that such a contract ought to have been under the corporation seal, as it was not a contract of a mercantile nature, nor was it with a customer of the company, nor was it of a character which created an impossibility that it should be under seal. London Dock Co. v. Sinnott, 8 El. & Bl. 347; 27 L. J., Q. B. 129; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 70; 6 W. R. 165.

Raising or Destroying Wrecks.]—See Virian v. Mersey Docks and Harbour Board, and Cases supra, cols. 893—896.

Piers—Liability to Repair—Trustees—Proprietor.]—By the Clyde Navigation Consolidation Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 149), s. 76, the undertaking of the Clyde trustees shall in terms of the recited acts (which include 3 & 4 Vict. c. 118), consist of (inter alia), "The construction and completion of the several wet docks or tidal basins, quays, wharfs, ferry slips, approaches, embankments of river dykes, and all other works and improvements shewn and described on the several plans and sections referred to in the recited acts, and thereby authorised to be made and maintained." By s. 11 of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 118, the trustees amongst other works were authorised to reconstruct the piers of the ancient ferry of Erskine. Sect. 50 enacted that "the said quays should, at the expense of the said trustees, but with the consent of the proprietors, be repaired, lengthened, altered, or reconstructed," where such repair, lengthening, altering, or reconstruction should be rendered necessary by the work carried out by the trustees for deepening the river. The trustees having enlarged and reconstructed the piers of Erskine ferry, one of the piers was damaged by a ship, and the proprietor brought an action for a declaration that the trustees were bound to repair the pier as part of their undertaking. The trustees denied liability unless for damage done by their works:—Held, that the ferry was not part of the undertaking of the trustees, and they were not bound to repair the damage. Clyde Navigation Trustees v. Blantyre (Lord), [1893] A. C. 703—H. L. (Sc.)

By-laws, Validity of—Discharge of Cargo—Employment of Lumpers.]—By 10 & 11 Vict. c. 27, s. 83, the undertakers authorised by any special act to construct a dock may from time to time make such by-laws as they shall think fit for (amongst other purposes) regulating the shipping, unshipping, and removing of all goods within the limits of the dock, and for regulating the duties and conduct of all persons, as well the servants of the undertakers as others, employed in the dock. A dock company, who were the undertakers under a special act, made by-laws that no lumpers should be allowed to work on board any vessel in the dock, but such as were authorised by the company, unless permission in writing had been previously obtained from the superintendent of the dock, and the servants of the company only should be allowed to work within the dock premises, whether on ship, lighter, or shore:—Held, that the by-laws were in excess of the powers conferred upon the dock company by s. 83, and were therefore invalid. Dick v. Badart, 10 Q. B. D. 387; 48 L. T. 391; 5 Asp. M. C. 49; 47 J. P. 422.

—— St. Katharine's Docks—Dumb Barge with no one on Board—"Vessel."]—A "dumb barge," a river craft which is simply propelled by means of oars, and having no rigging or other equipment, is not a "vessel" within the meaning of ss. 100 and 101 of the London and St. Katharine Docks Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. clxxviii.), notwithstanding the definition of the word "vessel" in the interpretation clause (s. 3) of the Harbours, Docks and Piers Clauses Act, 1847, 10 Vict. c. 27, and consequently the owner is not liable to a penalty for allowing her to remain in the docks regulated by the former act without any person on board. Hedges v. London and St. Katharine Docks Co., 55 L. J., M. C. 46; 16 Q. B. D. 597; 54 L. T. 427; 34 W. R. 503; 5 Asp. M. C. 539; 50 J. P. 580.

—— Statutory Powers.] — The statutory powers conferred by the legislature upon dock companies and other bodies created for public purposes, and authorised to acquire land for such purposes, are inserted in order to define—i.e. limit—the rights conferred, and as implying a prohibition against the exercise of more extensive rights which such companies might have by virtue of their ownership of property. London Association of Shipowners v. London and India Docks, [1892] 3 Ch. 242; 67 L. T. 238; 7 Asp. M. C. 195—C. A.

By-laws and Regulations—Validity—Confirmation.]—The power of making by-laws differs from the power which every owner of property has of making agreements with those persons who desire to use it. A by-law is not an agreement, but a law binding on all persons to whom it applies, whether they agree to be bound by it or not. All regulations made by a corporate body, and intended to bind not only themselves and their officers and servants, but members of the public who come within the sphere of their operation, may be properly called "by-laws" whether they be valid or invalid in point of law, for the term "by-law" is not restricted to that which is valid in point of law. Under the two statutes—the London and St. Katharine Docks Act, 1864, and the Harbours, Docks and Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (10 Vict. c. 27)—the public have certain rights to use the docks belonging to the London and St. Katharine Dock Company, including the wharfs, quays, and warehouses, and the company are empowered to make by-laws and regulations and charges for their use; but such regulations and by-laws are not valid and binding until made, confirmed and published as by-laws in the manner prescribed by the act of 1847. Ib.

Duty to Repair.]—Mandamus to dock company to repair their canals. Reg. v. Bristol Dock Co., supra, col. 903.

b. Tolls and Dues.

Liability and Amount.]—The 39 Geo. 3, c. 49, s. 137, gives to the West India Dock Company certain rates and duties of all goods imported from the West Indies which shall be landed from on board any ship entering into and using the docks; which rates are directed to be "accepted for the use of the docks, and the quays, wharfs and cranes, and other machines belonging thereto, and the land-waiter's fees on account of such goods after being unshipped, and all charges and expenses of wharfage, landing, housing and weighing such goods, and of such cooperage as the same may want after being unshipped, and all rent for warehouse room for twelve weeks, and all charges of delivering the same from the said warehouses." The latter words include a delivery of the goods into lighters in the dock, as well as an immediate delivery from the warehouses into land carriages placed under the cranes of the warehouses, although for the purpose of such delivery into lighters it is necessary to put the goods upon trucks in order to carry them across the quay, and afterwards crane them into the lighters. Harden v. Smith, 8 East, 16.

West India Ships—Stores—Necessaries.]—The statute giving to West India ships, which have discharged their homeward-bound cargoes, in the docks of the West India Company, the use of the light dock for a time not exceeding six months from the time of unloading, on payment of the tonnage duty of 6*s.* 8*d.* payable on the entrance of such ships into the import dock, does not entitle the owners to ship stores intended for the use of such ships as part of their outfit, over the wharfs of the light dock, without payment of wharfage and porterage, as in case of other goods shipped by way of merchandise on the outward-bound voyage; aliter, as to necessaries intended for the present use of such ships while lying in the dock during the time allowed by the act. Blackett v. Smith, 11 East, 553.

Hull Dock—Port of Goole.]—Vessels taking in the whole or a part of their cargo in the port of Goole, and proceeding therewith to Hull, are liable to pay to the Hull Dock Company the tonnage duties of 2*d.* per ton under 42 Geo. 3, c. xci. s. 44. Hull Dock Co. v. Priestley, 1 N. & M. 85; 4 B. & Ad. 178.

Vessels proceeding to Hull from a place above

Goole (as Leeds), and not touching at Goole, but merely passing the entrance into the port of Goole, are not liable to tonnage duty. Ib.

Goods of "Similar Nature, Value," &c.]—A company was empowered by an act to charge for the landing of goods in their dock, the several sums mentioned in the schedule annexed, and, for articles not therein particularised, such sums as should be equal to the sums affixed on goods "of a similar nature, package, value and quality," in the schedule. All the charges mentioned in the schedule were of small fixed sums, none being ad valorem except the charge for sculptured marble and marble slabs. At the end was a note, "Goods not included in the foregoing schedules to be charged in proportion to the rates therein specified, according to size and weight":—Held, that the company was not entitled to make an ad valorem charge for the landing of goods not enumerated, or at all approaching, in "nature, value and quality," to any of those enumerated in the schedule. Southampton Dock Co. v. Hill, 16 C. B. (N.S.) 567; 10 L. T. 462; 12 W. R. 800—Ex. Ch.

"Near the River Tyne."]—By a local act, a toll or tax of ¼*d.* per chaldron was imposed upon the owners or lessees of "any collieries or coal mines near the river Tyne," for every chaldron of coals sold or delivered by them to be exported from or out of the river, and which shall be so exported; such toll to be collected or received at the offices or places respectively when the contracts for the sale or delivery of such coals are usually made, in aid of the Tyne Keelmen's Charitable Fund. Since the formation of railways and docks, the services of the keelmen in the shipment of coals on the Tyne have become unnecessary, the coals being brought down to the wharfs or quays by railways, and shipped direct:—Held, that coals shipped on the Tyne from collieries "near" to the river were still liable to the payment; and that a colliery situate ten miles from the Tyne is "near the river Tyne," within the meaning of the act. Tyne Keelmen v. Davison, 16 C. B. (N.S.) 612.

Held also, that coals brought for shipment to the Tyne by a public railway, from collieries which before the formation of the railway had always shipped their coals on the river Wear, to which they had been conveyed by private tramways from the collieries, were equally liable to the keelmen's dues. Tyne Keelmen v. Elliott, 16 C. B. (N.S.) 612.

Lien on Goods in Name of Broker for Charges.]—The Commercial Dock Company was created by a statute, and empowered to distrain and sell ships for nonpayment of rates and charges due for dockage of ships, receiving, warehousing and storing goods, and if any owner, consignor or consignee of any goods or merchandise neglects or refuses to pay rates or charges, the company may detain the goods until paid, and, if removed before payment, may distrain any goods of the owner, consignor or consignee, and detain and sell the same, or may prosecute actions for those duties. The 10 & 11 Vict. c. 27 (Harbours, Docks and Piers Clauses Act, 1847), s. 45, contains similar provisions, which were by a subsequent private act extended to the dock company. D. having purchased from the owners some timber stored at the Commercial Docks, and which was entered in the books of the company in the name of a broker, the company refused to transfer the timber into D.'s name, on the ground that the broker was indebted to them for rent and charges in respect of other goods standing in his name in the books of the company, although D. tendered to them the specific rent and charges due in respect of the goods purchased by him:—Held, first, that the statutes conferred on the company no right to do so. Dresser v. Bosanquet, 4 B. & S. 460; 32 L. J., Q. B. 374; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 458; 11 W. R. 840—Ex. Ch.

Held, secondly, that the company could not rely on any general lien to that extent by the common law, supposing that such existed, as the statutes must be taken to displace such right. Ib.

Extent of Powers of Distress for Nonpayment of Rates.]—A dock company, by their act of incorporation, was empowered to receive for all goods deposited on their premises rates not exceeding those usually paid in the port of London for wharfage of such goods, and in case default was made in payment of the rates, the collectors or the company were to retain and sell the goods or any part of such goods, and out of the moneys thence arising to retain and pay the rates payable in respect of such goods, returning the overplus to the party entitled; and in case such goods shall be removed before the rates shall be paid, it shall be lawful for the company to take and distrain or sell any goods of the owner thereof in manner before mentioned. Certain rates payable in respect of goods belonging to A. which had previously been removed from the premises of the company being unpaid, the company claimed to distrain other goods of A. then on the premises until payment of the rates due in respect of both these sets of goods. A. had applied to have the goods then on the premises delivered up to him, and was informed by the company that no more goods would be delivered to his order until his debt was paid or reduced:—Held, that the statute enabled the company to distrain and sell any goods in their possession for the recovery of rates payable in respect of other goods of the same owner. Green v. St. Katharine Dock Co., 19 L. J., Q. B. 53; 13 Jur. 1116.

Held also, that the above facts amounted to a distraining and detaining. Ib.

Primage—Liability of Agent.]—Liability of gratuitous agent landing goods for London owners for primage at Newcastle. Newcastle-on-Tyne (Master Pilots and Seamen of) v. Hammond, supra, col. 885.

c. Liability of Dock Companies.

For Acts of Servants.]—The London Dock Company is liable for the negligence of their servants in unloading goods, although the company derives no profit from their labour. Gibson v. Inglis, 4 Camp. 72; 15 R. R. 727.

For Injuries to Vessels.]—Trustees incorporated for the purpose of constructing a dock, and who receive rates and have funds which they are bound to apply in maintaining and cleansing the dock, so that it may be in a fit state for vessels to enter, are liable for injury to a vessel caused by an accumulation of mud in the dock, of which by their servants they had the means of knowing, and were negligently ignorant. The owner of a cargo, which was damaged by reason of the ship's stranding on a mud bank negligently left at the entrance of a harbour vested in the Mersey board by statute, sued the board for damage. The defence was, that the board acted under a statute; that they derived no personal benefit from the management of the docks; that they took no part personally in the management, but merely appointed servants and officers in discharge of their public duty; and that the negligence was not theirs, but was solely that of one of their servants:—Held, that the case of public statutory trustees, if not servants of the crown, did not differ from that of absolute owners levying tolls for their own benefit, and that the board was liable. Mersey Docks v. Gibbs, 11 H. L. Cas. 686; 35 L. J., Ex. 225; L. R. 1 H. L. 93; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 571; 14 L. T. 677; 14 W. R. 872—H. L. (E.)

—— Opening Dock before Channel Clear.]—In an action by owners of a ship against the proprietors of a dock and tidal basin, made under the powers of an act, and for the use of which they were entitled to receive tolls, it appeared that the dock and basin were opened for public use on the 3rd of March, 1859. The basin opened into a river between two piers, distant 120 feet apart. In constructing the basin, a bank was put across it for keeping out the water during the excavation. When the excavation was completed, the operation of cutting through the bank was commenced; and at the time of the accident to the ship, a channel seventy feet wide had been cleared through the bank opposite the middle of the space between the piers at the entrance of the basin. At the time when the dock was opened, the seventy-feet channel had been excavated at about three feet six inches above the bottom of the rest of the basin, and the dredging of the channel was continued from that time until the plaintiff's ship went out. The ship, which was of 674 tons burden, entered the dock on the 9th of March, and having received a cargo, went out on the 19th of March, under the charge of a river pilot, and, whilst proceeding through the basin, grounded on the bank. The channel was not marked by buoys or otherwise. The pilot, who had taken a larger ship out on the 8th March, knew the state of the basin:—Held, first, that it was the duty of the proprietors of the dock to take reasonable care to make their dock and basin safe for navigation before they opened them to the public: and, therefore, they were liable for negligence in opening them before the channel had been well cleared. Thompson v. N. E. Ry., 2 B. & S. 106; 31 L. J., Q. B. 194; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 991; 6 L. T. 127; 10 W. R. 404—Ex. Ch.

—— Knowledge of Pilot.]—Held, secondly, that assuming the knowledge of the state of the basin by the pilot to be the knowledge of the owners of the ship, it was no excuse for the dock proprietors, inasmuch as they contended that the state of the basin was not such as to make it imprudent to take the vessel out; and the jury had negatived mismanagement on the part of those who had charge of the vessel. Ib.

—— Liability for Damage to Ship by Grounding.]—By a local act for better preserving a harbour, trustees were appointed to carry the act into execution. They might elect a harbour-master, who might direct any person, having the command of any vessel entering into or being within the harbour, to anchor and place the same in such situation within the harbour as he should direct. After the passing of the act some coals were shot into a berth in the harbour, which rendered it dangerous. The trustees, at a board meeting, having had notice of the state of the berth, gave directions to their clerk to have the coals removed, and the coals were accordingly partly, but not sufficiently, removed at their expense. After this the harbour-master, without the knowledge of the trustees, directed the plaintiff to place his vessel in the berth. He did so, and the vessel, while lying there, sustained damage in consequence of the berth being unsafe. The harbour-master knew that the berth had been unsafe and what had been done to it, but neither he nor the trustees knew that the berth continued unsafe when he directed the plaintiff to place his vessel in it:—Held, that there was no evidence to warrant a verdict against the trustees. Metcalfe v. Hetherington, 5 H. & N. 719; 11 Ex. 257; 8 W. R. 475—Ex. Ch.

The trustees of a dock, being about to open a new one under the authority of parliament, issued a notice addressed to shipowners, merchants and others, describing the accommodation which their new dock would afford to shipping, and containing a statement that "the depth of water on the dock sill was twenty-six and twenty-three feet at the highest spring tides, and fifteen feet at the lowest neaps":—Held, that this amounted to a warranty that there was an available depth of water in the entrance channel approximating that mentioned in the notice; and that the trustees were responsible to the owners of a ship, who trusting to the representation contained in the notice, entered the dock to load, and were delayed and put to expense in consequence of the insufficiency of water in the channel to enable her to complete her loading in the dock. Williams v. Swansea Harbour Trustees, 14 C. B. (N.S.) 845.

The "R.," which was anchored in F. outer harbour, having to be beached in the inner harbour, S., the harbour-master, directed the master of the "R." where to beach her. Before the "R." left the outer harbour, S. came on board, although a Trinity house pilot was in the vessel, and, when she had arrived near the place where she was to be beached, gave directions as to the lowering of her anchor. The "R." overran her anchor and grounded on it, sustaining damage. In an action against the harbour commissioners and S., the court found, as a fact, that there was negligence on the part of S., and that the place where the "R." grounded was outside the jurisdiction of the harbour commissioners:—Held, that the duties of the harbour-master comprised directions as to the mooring and beaching of vessels; that, by giving directions when he went on board, S. had resumed his functions as harbour-master, and that he and the commissioners were therefore liable for the damage done to the "R." The Rhosina, or Edwards v. Falmouth Harbour Commissioners, 54 L. J., Adm. 72; 10 P. D. 131; 53 L. T. 30; 33 W. R. 794; 5 Asp. M. C. 460—C. A.

The plaintiffs' vessel, having fouled her propeller whilst entering the port and harbour of Port Talbot, was, with the authority of the foreman docksman, in the absence of the harbour-master through illness, placed in a lock leading into the dock for the purpose of being put upon the ground for repairs. On the vessel taking the ground she sustained damage to her bottom by sitting upon the sill of the old lock gates, which had not been removed when the lock was lengthened. It appeared that the foreman docksman did not know the condition of the bottom of the lock, and informed the master of the ship of it. In an action by the shipowners against the dock authority:—Held, that the docksman had authority to allow such user, so as to render the defendants liable for the damage ensuing, and that he ought to have known of the sill and warned the plaintiffs' vessel of the danger. The Apollo, Apollo (Owners) v. Port Talbot Co., 61 L. J., Adm. 25; [1891] A. C. 499; 65 L. T. 590; 7 Asp. M. C. 115; 55 J. P. 820—H. L. (E.)

By a private act of parliament, the defendants were appointed as guardians of the port and harbour of Wisbech, with prescriptive rights to receive tolls, to be applied to improving the harbour and port, and provision was made for the appointment of one or more harbour-masters for regulating the placing and mooring of vessels, and for preventing and removing obstructions. A later act gave the defendants the same rights over a channel called the New Cut, which had been constructed partly for better drainage and partly in place of the old channel forming part of the port and harbour, and was vested in commissioners. A vessel was berthed in the New Cut, under the direction of the defendants' harbour-master, and sustained damage to her bottom, owing to the unfit state of the berth. In an action brought by the shipowners against the harbour authority:—Held, that the defendants were liable for the damage arising from the neglected state of the channel. The Burlington, 72 L. T. 890; 8 Asp. M. C. 38—C. A.

—— Admittance to Dock — Remoteness of Damage.]—In an action for a breach of contract, in not admitting the plaintiff's ship into the defendant's dock, whereby she grounded when the tide ebbed, and was damaged, it appeared that the ship left in ballast a dry dock, where she had been repaired, and, in charge of a pilot, was towed by a steam-tug to the dock, where she arrived about high water. In consequence of the chain of the dock gate being broken, she could not be admitted. The captain was unacquainted with the navigation, and, considering that the ship was not sufficiently ballasted to go to sea, directed her to be anchored where she was. At the ebb of the tide she grounded and was damaged. There was conflicting evidence as to the state of the weather. The jury was asked, first, whether there was a place of safety to which the ship could have been taken before the tide ebbed? and, secondly, whose fault was it that she was not taken there? Upon the first question they returned no answer, being unable to agree, but replied to the second, that neither the captain nor the pilot was to blame:—Held, per Martin, B., that the damages were not too remote to be recovered by the plaintiff. Per Pollock, C.B., Channell, B., and Pigott, B., that the finding of the jury was not sufficient to enable them to come to a conclusion, and that there must be a new trial. Wilson v. Newport Dock Co., 4 H. & C. 232; 35 L. J., Ex. 97; L. R. 1 Ex. 177; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 233; 14 L. T. 230; 14 W. R. 558.

Liability for Damage by Sunken Wrecks—Grounding.]—See XX. COLLISION, ante, col. 721; XXIII. WHARFINGER, ante, col. 879.

Injury to Goods — Stowing Wines and Spirits in Docks.]—The rate table of a dock company contained the following provisions: "Wines and spirits (rum and British spirits excepted) landed in the docks will be chargeable with the following rates: . . . The company will not be responsible for deficiencies on wines or spirits imported in casks not made of oak, nor on spirits exceeding 20 per cent. overproof; but is answerable for deficiencies in quantity on those contained in other casks housed with the company, beyond one gallon per cask for each year or part of a year the goods shall remain in their custody, provided such deficiencies be claimed of the company within six months after delivery, and shall be satisfactorily established by the customs' gauge on landing and delivery. . . . Rates and charges on rum. . . . When rum is imported in casks made of proper oak, the company engages to be responsible for deficiencies in measure, which shall exceed one gallon per cask for each year," &c.:—Held, in an action for loss of brandy housed with the company, that, under the above provisions, they would not be liable for a diminution in alcoholic strength, though exceeding one gallon per cask, the deficiency contemplated being a deficiency in actual bulk; but that if such diminution was caused by their negligence, they were liable, apart from contract. Lamare v. London and St. Katharine Docks Co., 39 L. T. 330.

Delay of Persons Using Swing Bridge.]—A dock company having a swing bridge on a public highway, is bound, in the passing of vessels, to use all reasonable means (both as to the number of men employed and number of ships passed at a time) to prevent unnecessary delay; and if they do not do all which can be expected of reasonable men, and if anyone is obstructed in consequence, such obstruction will render them liable for the injury sustained. Wiggins v. Boddington, 3 Car. & P. 544.

Injury to Visitors.]—A dock company provided gangways from the shore to the ships lying in their dock, the gangways being made of materials belonging to the company and managed by their servants. The plaintiff went on board a ship in the dock at the invitation of one of the ship's officers, and, while he was on board, the servants of the company, for the purpose of the business of the dock, moved the gangway, so that it was, and to their knowledge, insecure. The plaintiff, in ignorance of its insecurity, returned along it to the shore, the gangway gave way, and he was injured:—Held, that there was a duty on the company towards the plaintiff to keep the gangway reasonably safe, and that he was entitled to recover damages from them for the injuries he received. Smith v. London and St. Katharine Docks Co., 37 L. J., C. P. 217; L. R. 3 C. P. 326; 18 L. T. 403; 16 W. R. 728.

Licence to use Graving Dock—Interest in Land—Statute of Frauds—Contract with Corporation—Not under Seal.]—A municipal corporation received a fee from a shipowner to enter his vessel for her turn at a graving dock belonging to the corporation. The corporation allowed another vessel to take the turn of the plaintiff's ship. In an action against the corporation for damages:—Held, that the contract, not being a contract concerning an interest in land, need not be in writing under the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds; or under seal, being a matter of constant occurrence and daily necessity. Wells v. Kingston-upon-Hull Corporation, 44 L. J., C. P. 257; L. R. 10 C. P. 402; 32 L. T. 615; 23 W. R. 562; 2 Asp. M. C. 580.

Poor Rate—Lighthouse Authority.]—A lighthouse tower containing, besides the rooms for the light and apparatus, a room for working a post-office telegraph used for the exclusive benefit of the owners of the tower, who were proprietors of docks having no power to make profits, held not ratable to the poor; but adjoining buildings occupied by the lighthouse keepers held ratable at their value as connected with the lighthouse and telegraph station. Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Llanelian (Overseers), 54 L. J., Q. B. 49; 14 Q. B. D. 770; 52 L. T. 118; 33 W. R. 97; 3 Asp. M. C. 358; 49 J. P. 164.

17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 430, applies only to lighthouses under the general lighthouse authorities. S. C., in court below, 51 L. T. 62; 5 Asp. 248; 48 J. P. 301.

Poor Rate—Docks.]—Occupiers of a dock held not liable to pay poor rates in respect of harbour and tonnage dues, but only in respect of dues payable by ships using the dock. Berwick Harbour Commissioners v. Tweedmouth (Churchwardens), 54 L. T. 159; 5 Asp. M. C. 532.

d. Duties of Dockmasters and Others.

Dockmasters—Discretion of—How Exercised.]—A dockmaster is invested with a discretion to be exercised for the benefit of all the ships in the harbour, and the master of a vessel is therefore bound to obey the dockmaster, and to assist in the removal of his ship, even though if the interests of the ship alone might be considered the removal was injudicious. The Excelsior, 37 L. J., Adm. 54; L. R. 2 A. & E. 268; 19 L. T. 87.

—— Action against.]—In an action against a harbour-master for loss of the cargo of a foreign merchant vessel through her heeling over upon taking the ground in the harbour, it being admitted that the master brought her in, in order to take the ground; and that being sharply built, she could not safely do so, unless there was mud of sufficient depth and strength to support her; and the case for the owner of the vessel being that at a certain point there was such mud, but that she took the ground before she could get there, owing to there not being sufficient depth of water for a vessel of her draught:—Held, that the question of negligence on the part of the harbour-master would depend upon the knowledge or information he had of the build and draught of the vessel; and that in the absence of knowledge on his part, it was the duty of the captain to inform him; and that, as it was materially misrepresented to him by the captain, he was not responsible for the result. Lloyd v. Iron, 4 F. & F. 1011.

Duty of Master of Ship—Damage—Liability.]—When a ship is moored in dock, it is generally the duty of her master to keep on board a sufficient crew to protect the vessel against ordinary risks. A ship after having been moored in a dock, was subsequently, by order of the dock-master, removed to another part, from which, by the negligence of her master and his disobedience of the dockmaster's orders, she broke loose and damaged the docks:—Held, that the ship was liable for the damage. The Excelsior, supra.

Harbour-master—Injury to Ship in attempting to enter Dock.]—The authority of a harbour-master over a vessel entering a dock is not limited by his knowledge that there are persons on board the vessel more familiar with the local circumstances of the place than he is. The latter are not at liberty to disregard the orders of the harbour-master because they think that he is making a mistake. It is only in the last resort, and when the danger is fully obvious, that the orders of the harbour-master should be disobeyed. Reney v. Kirkcudbright Magistrates, 61 L. J., P. C. 23; [1892] A. C. 264; 67 L. T. 474; 7 Asp. M. C. 221—H. L. (Sc.)

Semble, that the master of a vessel is not affected by the knowledge of a local pilot whom he has taken on board to assist him, so as to make the owners of the vessel responsible for the omission of such pilot to inform the master of a local danger. Ib.

XXV. SHIPBROKERS AND AGENTS.

1. Commission and Employment, 914.
2. Liabilities, 919.

1. Commission and Employment.

Commission, whether Contingent.]—A shipbroker is entitled to 5*l.* per cent. on the gross freight of a ship, though payment of a part is contingent on the arrival of the vessel home. Roberts v. Jackson, 2 Stark. 225; 19 R. R. 706.

The actual earning of freight under a charterparty is not a condition precedent to the right of the shipbroker to his commission for procuring the execution of the charter. Hill v. Kitching, 3 C. B. 299; 15 L. J., C. P. 251.

A., a shipbroker, procured a charterparty to be made between B., a shipowner, and C., under which the owner contracted to bring home a cargo of guano, and the merchant agreed to pay freight at the rate of 4*l.* 15*s.* per ton, to be reduced to 4*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* if the ship did not arrive off Cork or Falmouth on or before a given day. There was no express engagement on the part of C. to ship a cargo:—Held, that A. was entitled to recover from B. upon a quantum meruit for his procuring the charter to be executed, without shewing the arrival of the vessel on or before the day mentioned, and notwithstanding only a very small quantity of guano had been shipped and a small amount of freight actually earned; that the amount of compensation due to him was a question for the jury; and that, in estimating such compensation, they were properly guided by evidence of what was customary in similar cases. Ib.

If a broker charters ships at a commission of 2½ per cent. on their outward freight, and the like on their homeward freight, and the charterparty makes it contingent what the amount of freight shall be, the broker cannot sue for any sum till the contingency is determined. Winter v. Mair, 3 Taunt. 531.

Semble, the broker's commission on obtaining a charterparty is 5 per cent. on the freight, unless there is a special agreement or the ship is chartered upon a tender. Brown v. Nairne, 9 Car. & P. 204. And see Read v. Rann, 10 B. & C. 438; 8 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 144, infra; Cohen v. Paget, 4 Camp. 96.

The broker who first introduces the purchaser of a ship to the vendor is entitled to his commission, although the principals complete the negotiation, and other brokers unknown to each other also introduce the purchaser and vendor, who had communicated with each other, without and before the introduction of any broker. Cunard v. Van Oppen, 1 F. & F. 716.

If the negotiation goes off by the fault of the broker he is entitled to no commission or expenses, other than such as have been occasioned at shipowners' special request. Dalton v. Irvin, 4 Car. & P. 289.

The charter contained a provision that the ship should be consigned to C. & Co. at Liverpool, or their agents at her port of discharge in this country; and in the margin was a memorandum that "this charter is subject to 3*l*. per cent. payable by the ship":—Held, that the jury might infer from A.'s execution of the charter a contract by him to pay C.'s commission. Smith v. Boutcher, 1 Car. & K. 573.

Three shipbrokers agreed in writing with a shipowner to freight his ship at a certain commission, dividing profits of commission. One of the brokers alone paid and received money on account of the ship, and delivered to the owner an account, charging a sum for commission. The owner agreed to the account, but objected to the commission. There was no adjustment of account between the brokers:—Held, that an action for money had and received would not lie by the two brokers against the third for their share of the commission. Bovill v. Hammond, 9 D. & R. 186; 6 B. & C. 149; 5 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 145.

—— Actions for.]—It is no answer to an action by a broker for commission for procuring freight that the charterparty procured was such that if the charterer failed to obtain certain licences the voyage would be illegal. Haines v. Busk, 5 Taunt. 521; 1 Marsh. 191.

When two brokers are referred to in advertisements by a shipowner, and one of them procures the cargo and receives the freight, and the other pays the charges for clearing out the ship, the latter must share the commission with the former, and cannot by usage of trade maintain an action against the shipowner. Hall v. Benson, 7 Car. & P. 711.

—— When Earned.]—To enable a broker to recover a commission on the sale of a ship, the mere fact of his having introduced the purchaser to the seller will not be sufficient; but if it appears that such introduction was the foundation on which the negotiations proceeded, the parties cannot afterwards, by agreement between themselves, withdraw the matter from the broker's hands and deprive him of his commission. The broker will be entitled to his commission if he was, up to a certain time, the agent or middleman between the parties, although the contract was afterwards completed without his instrumentality or interference. Wilkinson v. Martin, 8 Car. & P. 1.

The usage is that when a broker has brought the captain of a ship and a merchant together, and they by his means enter into some negotiation as to the intended voyage, the broker is entitled to commission if a charterparty is effected between them for that voyage, even though they may employ another broker to prepare the charterparty, or may write the charterparty themselves. Burnett v. Bouch, 9 Car. & P. 620.

If a broker is authorised by both parties, and, acting as the agent of each, communicates to the merchant what the shipowner charges, and also communicates to the shipowner what the merchant will give, and he names the ship and the parties so as to identify the transaction, and a charterparty is ultimately effected for that voyage, this broker is entitled to his commission; but if he does not mention the names so as to identify the transaction, he does not get his commission to the exclusion of another broker, who afterwards introduces the parties personally to each other. Ib.

A shipbroker employed to sell a ship which when put up for sale was bought in, is not entitled to a commission on the sale. Mestaer v. Atkins, 1 Marsh. 76; 5 Taunt. 381.

A shipbroker who has procured a bargain for the hire of a vessel is, by usage in the city of London, entitled to a certain commission on the amount of freight if the contract is perfected, but not otherwise. Read v. Rann, 10 B. & C. 438; 8 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 144.

Even where the contract is not completed through the act of the owner. Broad v. Thomas, 7 Bing. 99; 4 M. & P. 732; 4 Car. & P. 338; 9 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 32.

Shipbrokers were employed by shipowners to procure charterers for certain ships. The brokers introduced the owners to another firm of brokers, and negotiations were commenced at the office of the last-named firm with L. for the chartering of these ships. The negotiations with L. came to nothing; but L., from the knowledge thus acquired, informed M. that the owners had a ship in want of a charterer, and M. became the charterer of this ship of theirs. In an action by the brokers to recover their commission from the shipowners on the charter of this ship:—Held, that their services in the transaction were too remote. Gibson v. Crick, 1 H. & C. 142; 31 L. J., Ex. 304; 6 L. T. 392; 10 W. R. 525. S.C., at nisi prius, 2 F. & F. 766.

Where by the terms of a charterparty a vessel is let for an indefinite period, and the voyage is general, the shipbroker who lets the vessel is entitled to claim commission as for a voyage of that description, and not for a specific voyage on bonds. Holl v. Pincent, 6 Moore, 228.

Provision in Charterparty as to Brokers.]—Ship to be "consigned to charterers' agents inwards and outwards, paying the usual commission." See Cross v. Pagliano, ante, col. 247.

Custom—Evidence as to.]—A declaration on a charterparty stated that it was agreed between the owner of the ship "Maggie," and charterers, that "the ship should load a cargo in London and proceed to Hong Kong and deliver the same, the ship to be consigned to the charterers' agents in China, free of commission on that charter"; that according to the custom of merchants in London, when a ship chartered in London for China is agreed to be consigned to the charterers' agents, whether consigned free of commission on that charter or not, it is the right and duty of such agents to procure a charter or a cargo for the ship, and they are entitled to be paid the usual brokers' commission on the amount of freight payable under such charter, unless excluded by special contract; but in case the owners procure a charter or cargo for the ship, without any default of the consignees, the consignees are entitled to the brokers' commission on any freight payable under such charterparty, unless such right is excluded by special contract; that the ship arrived in China, and the owners' agents as consignees performed their duty free of commission on the outward voyage, and were ready to procure a charter or a cargo for Hong Kong; that the charterer did not permit them to procure such charter or cargo, but, without the default of the owners' agents, himself procured a cargo. Breach, nonpayment by the charterers of any commission on the cargo:—Held, that the parol evidence of the mercantile usage was not admissible to vary the terms of the charterparty. Phillipps v. Briard, 1 H. & N. 21; 25 L. J., Ex. 233; 4 W. R. 486.

The defendants, who were shipbrokers, being employed by the French government to charter two ships, L., who was also a shipbroker, informed them of two ships, the "New York" and the "Glasgow," open to charter. After correspondence between L., the defendants and the shipowners, the "New York" was chartered for six months, and the defendants wrote to L. that in consideration of his having assisted them in getting the "New York" charter they agreed to pay him a commission of 2½ per cent. The "Glasgow" was afterwards chartered and the "New York" charter was renewed for a further six months. L. claimed commission on the "Glasgow" charter and on the renewed "New York" charter:—Held, that evidence was admissible of a custom amongst shipbrokers that an introducing broker should receive further commission on renewed charters notwithstanding the written agreement. Allen v. Sundius, 1 H. & C. 123.

In order to prove a custom, it was proposed to ask a broker, "What is the custom with regard to payment of brokers' commission when the broker introduces another broker to a shipowner, which shipowner substantially negotiates with one of the brokers introduced?"—Held, that this question was rightly disallowed. Gibson v. Crick, supra.

Where A. employs B., a broker, to procure a charter, and B. employs C., another broker:—Semble, evidence of custom as to which broker is entitled to the commission is admissible. Smith v. Boutcher, 1 Car. & K. 573.

—— Notice of Names of Vessels.]—The defendants, London merchants, employed a broker at Liverpool to purchase some wool. The broker negotiated a sale by the plaintiff to the defendants of certain bales deliverable at Odessa, "the name of the vessels to be declared as soon as the wools were shipped." In this transaction, the broker acted for both the plaintiff and the defendants. By the custom of Liverpool, where a contract contains a stipulation that notice of an event should be given by the vendor to the vendee, it is usual for the vendor to give the notice to the broker, who communicates it to the vendee:—Held, that the defendants were bound by such usage, and therefore that a notice by the plaintiff to the broker of the names of the vessels on which the wools were shipped was a performance of that stipulation, although the broker omitted to communicate them to the defendants. Graves v. Legg, 2 H. & N. 210; 26 L. J., Ex. 316; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 519; 5 W. R. 597—Ex. Ch.

Payment on Behalf of Ship.]—A broker, who had received money for the shippage of goods on account of the owners of the ship, offered to pay it to the captain, who was also managing owner, by a cheque. This the captain declined, preferring that the broker should open a credit for him at a bank in New Brunswick in favour of H., which the broker did. The bank accordingly paid H. 250*l.*, for which H. gave a bill, drawn by him in favour of the bank upon the broker, who accepted and paid it when due. The broker having sued the co-owners for the balance of his account:—Held, that this was a good payment of 250*l.* by the broker, and binding on the co-owners. Anderson v. Hillies, 12 C. B. 499; 21 L. J., C. P. 150; 16 Jur. 819.

—— Lien.]—Shipbrokers have no lien on the certificate of registry for advances made by them to the owner for the use of the ship. Gibson v. Ingo, 6 Hare, 112.

—— Lien on Cargoes—Agent for Sale.]—A., in New Brunswick, employed an agent in London to charter vessels for carriage of deals from New Brunswick to be consigned to the agent for sale. A., in breach of this contract, consigned the deals to another person:—Held, that the agent had a lien on all the cargoes for expenses and loss incurred in respect of each vessel chartered by him, but not for commission and profits which he might have earned if the vessel had been consigned to him. Young v. Neill, 32 Beav. 529; 2 N. R. 212; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 976; 9 L. T. 9; 11 W. R. 1052.

Commission on Freight—Charterers acting as Brokers—Ship lost.]—See Sibsons v. Ship Barcraig Co., ante, col. 383.

Introducing Buyer—Commission.]—Where the sale is not in consequence of the shipbroker's introduction commission is not payable. White v. Munro, 3 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 1011.

Statutes as to Brokers.]—Shipbrokers are not within the statutes relating to brokers in London. Gibbons v. Rule, 4 Bing. 307; 5 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 176; 29 R. R. 570.

Loss on Re-charter—Liability of Principal.]—The defendants chartered a ship to sail to T. and there load a cargo at 60*s.* per ton freight. They wrote to the plaintiffs asking them to instruct their firm at T. to re-charter the ship for the defendants at the best rate they could; and stating that if there should be a loss the plaintiffs' draft for the difference should be honoured. The rate of freight at T. being only 40*s.* per ton, the plaintiffs put their own cargo on board, drawing upon the defendants for the difference between 40*s.* and 60*s.* freight. The ship was lost, and the defendants refused to accept the draft:—Held, that the cargo when on board being liable to the shipowner for freight at 60*s.* instead of 40*s.*, there was such a loss as contemplated in the letter, and that the defendants were liable for not accepting the draft. Yeames v. Linekay, 3 L. T. 855; 9 W. R. 313.

Sale of Ship—Commission.]—See Wilkinson v. Alston, and Cases ante, col. 168.

Passage Broker.]—See Morriss v. Howden, supra, col. 873.

2. LIABILITIES.

In Forwarding.]—On a bailment to a shipping agent to forward goods, an action for not safely carrying and delivering is not maintainable. Platzoff v. Le Bean, 4 F. & F. 545.

Duty to Examine Goods.]—The defendant, who carried on business at B., and had acted there as agent for the plaintiffs, who were merchants at L., in the shipment of iron to Germany, wrote to the plaintiffs proposing to them to purchase a quantity of scrap iron, describing it as of a specified quality. The plaintiffs desired to have an offer of cost and freight to Rotterdam. The defendant stated the price, but his inability to make an offer as to freight, as he had then no ship available, but expressed his conviction that he should shortly be able to find a ship. Before the plaintiffs closed with the offer, the defendant proposed a ship for the conveyance of the iron. The plaintiffs accepted the purchase, but objected to the ship as too small to take the whole cargo, desiring the defendant to look out for another. Thereupon he, as agent for both parties, entered into and accepted the contract of sale, and transmitted it to the plaintiffs. He afterwards engaged a vessel to convey the iron, received the same, and caused it to be shipped, assuring the plaintiffs that the cargo was considered a first-rate description of scrap iron. The profit of the defendant was derived from commission from the seller and from the shipowner:—Held, that the defendant was not liable for damages on account of the iron shipped being inferior to the description in the contract, inasmuch as no obligation to see to the quality of the iron arose on the employment of the defendant as shipping agent, there being no evidence of usage, nor of an engagement by him, that he should do so. Zwilchenbart v. Alexander, 1 B. & S. 234; 30 L. J., Q. B. 254; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1157; 4 L. T. 412; 9 W. R. 670—Ex. Ch.

Brokers acting as Owners.]—Shipbrokers, not being owners of a particular ship, though they were of others, having issued advertisements and tickets announcing the times of sailing, and describing the ships as their "line"; evidence was given that if they were owners the announcements would be in the same form:—Held, that it was for the jury to say whether the parties had held themselves out as owners, or had acted only as agents. Simpson v. Young, 2 F. & F. 426.

Warranty of Authority.]—In an action against a broker who had professed, on behalf of the owner of a ship, to charter her to the plaintiffs, not having authority so to do, and who had requested them to charter themselves some other ship, and they having chartered a much larger ship at a higher freight:—Held, that they could not recover from the broker more than the difference of freight on the tonnage of the former ship, if they could have procured one of similar size, or had neglected to give the broker notice of the substituted ship, so that he might use the surplus freight. Mitchell v. Kahl, 2 F. & F. 709.

Pilotage Dues.]—The fees to which pilots who are carried to sea against their will or beyond their distance are entitled, under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 397, are not "pilotage dues" for which shipbrokers are liable under s. 363. Morteo v. Julian, 48 L. J., M. C. 126; 4 C. P. D. 216; 41 L. T. 71.

Cesser Clause—Effect of.]—See Bryden v. Niebuhr, col. 252; Lockhart v. Falk, and Cases, col. 446; Hansen v. Harrold, col. 402.

1. HIGH COURT OF ADMIRALTY AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION.

a. Jurisdiction.

See also sub-heads, cols. 926, seq., 948—971, below.

i. Subject-matter.

Subject-matter — Bottomry.]—Whether the court has or has not jurisdiction, depends upon the subject-matter. Meretone v. Gibbons, 3 Term Rep. 267.

It has cognizance of an hypothecation-bond given in the course of a voyage, though executed on land and under seal. Ib.

—— Freight—Prize.]—So it has jurisdiction over the question of freight, claimed by a neutral master against the captor, who has taken the goods as a prize. Smart v. Wolff, 3 Term Rep. 323.

—— Possession.]—So it has, in a cause of possession, jurisdiction to take a ship from a wrong-doer and deliver her over to a person claiming as the right owner. Blanshard, In re, 2 B. & C. 244; 3 D. & R. 177; 26 R. R. 329.

—— Torts at Sea.]—The court has original jurisdiction over torts committed on the high seas, and therefore over a collision on the high seas where the vessel doing the damage was a keel, or a vessel without masts, usually propelled by a pole. The Sarah, Lush. 549. And see Caule v. Cooke, 2 Keb. 498, infra, col. 927.

But a suit to recover damages for a tort committed in a foreign country will not lie, if no such remedy is given by the English law. The Halley, 5 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 262; 37 L. J., Adm. 33; L. R. 2 P. C. 193; 18 L. T. 879; 16 W. R. 998.

—— Salvage—What is Subject-matter of.]—See Gas Float Whitton, No. 2, infra, col. 595.

—— Pilotage.]—See The Bee, Pierce v. Hopper, ante, col. 143.

—— Damage done by Negligence—Collision.]—If through the negligence or misconduct of those on board a vessel another vessel receives or does damage, the owners of the wrongdoing vessel would be liable in the court of admiralty for the damage, even though there was no collision between the two vessels. The Industrie, 40 L. J., Adm. 26; L. R. 3 A. & E. 303; 24 L. T. 446; 19 W. R. 728; 1 Asp. M. C. 17.

The "Blue Bell," coming up the channel to Hartlepool on a dark morning, was compelled suddenly to port her helm by reason of the "Industry" being discovered across the fairway of the channel without any light exhibited; in consequence of this manœuvre the "Blue Bell" took the ground, and though her anchor was let go, dragged it and drove against the town wall of Hartlepool, suffering damage:—Held, that the court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit, and that a good ground of action was disclosed. Ib.

—— Average.]—The court of admiralty had no jurisdiction to enforce a claim for general average contribution, except, perhaps, where the proceeds of ship, cargo and freight were in court. The Constancia, 4 Not. of Cas. 677; 10 Jur. 845. And see XVII. AVERAGE, ante, col. 592.

—— Damage by Tug to Tow.]—A ship in tow of a tug was by the fault of the tug damaged by collision with a third ship. Held, that the admiralty court had jurisdiction in a suit by the owners of the ship in tow against the tug. The Night Watch, 32 L. J., Adm. 47; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1161; 7 L. T. 396; 11 W. R. 189. See also The Robert Row, ante, col. 756.

ii. Locality.

Within Counties—Contract.]—The admiralty had no jurisdiction in cases of contracts and matters done within the bodies of counties, either by land or by water. Ross v. Walker, 2 Wils. 264.

—— Collision.]—Nor for running foul of and breaking a vessel in the river Thames, and in the body of the county of Kent. Velthasen v. Ormsley, 3 Term Rep. 315. See also The Eliza Jane, 3 Hag. Adm. 335, ante, col. 837; The Public Opinion, 2 Hag. Adm. 398, ante, col. 837.

Restriction—Onus.]—Where the ancient jurisdiction of the court is restricted by act of parliament, the burden is on those who wish to avail themselves of the restriction to give full proof of the circumstances (e.g. the distance of three miles from the shore) which give effect to the restriction, and in case of doubt the court will not consider its jurisdiction ousted. The Argo, Swabey, 112.

Cinque Ports.]—The court has a concurrent jurisdiction within the boundaries of the jurisdiction of the cinque ports; and this remains unaltered by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 460. Maria Luisa, Swabey, 67; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 264; 4 W. R. 376.

Damage to Pier in Foreign Country.]—See The M. Moxham, infra, cols. 760, 890.

British Dominions Abroad—Arrest.]—Upon the arrest of a ship within the jurisdiction, the power of the court extends to acts done on the high seas, and to places within the British dominions abroad. The Peerless, 13 Moore, P. C. 484; Lush. 103; 30 L. J., Adm. 89; 3 L. T. 125.

Criminal Jurisdiction.]—The common law courts have concurrent jurisdiction with the admiralty in murders committed in creeks and havens, as Milford Haven. Rex v. Bruce, 2 Leach, C. C. 1093.

—— Murder on Foreshore.]—The admiral has not jurisdiction in case of one wounded at sea and dying on shore. Peacock v. Lacy, 2 Co. Rep. 93.

Indictment for wounding on board a ship lying in Penarth roads, three quarters of a mile from the shore:—Held, that the venue was rightly laid in Glamorganshire. Reg. v. Cunningham, Bell, C. C. 72.

—— On High Seas and Foreign Rivers.]—The admiralty jurisdiction of England extends over British ships, not only when they are sailing on the high seas, but also when they are in the rivers of a foreign territory, at a place below bridges, where the tide ebbs and flows, and where great ships go. Reg. v. Anderson, 38 L. J., M. C. 12; L. R. 1 C. C. 161; 19 L. T. 400; 17 W. R. 208; 11 Cox, C. C. 198. See also Reg. v. Lopez, 27 L. J., M. C. 48; 7 Cox, C. C. 431.

Coroner.]—In an estuary of the sea where both banks are visible, the admiralty and common-law coroner have a common jurisdiction. Inquisition on one hanged on board ship at Blackwall. Rex v. Brown, 1 Keb. 420.

Information against the captain of a man-of-war at Portsmouth for refusing to allow coroner to come on board to view a body. Rex v. Saleguard, Andrews, 231.

Accessories on Shore to Barratry on the Sea are not triable in Admiralty.]—Accessories before the fact on shore to the wilful destruction of a ship on the high seas are not triable by the admiralty jurisdiction under 11 Geo. 1, c. 29, s. 7; they not having done any act within admiralty jurisdiction. Rex v. Easterby, 2 Leach, C. C. 947 (but see now 43 Geo. 3, c. 113); East, P. C., Add. to Pref. xxvi.

Municipal Corporation Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76—Transfer of Jurisdiction.]—See Raft of Timber, 2 W. Rob. 251, 255, n., infra, col. 949.

iii. Maritime Lien.

Judgment of Foreign Court.]—The plaintiffs brought an action and obtained judgment in the tribunal of commerce at Lisbon against the captain and owners of a British ship for damages for injury caused by a collision with the plaintiffs' ship. The Portuguese courts recognise no distinction between actions in personam and actions in rem. The defendants' ship having come into a British court the plaintiffs commenced an action in rem against the ship, claiming to enforce the judgment of the Portuguese court against it, and arrested the ship:—Held, that the action in the Portuguese court was a personal action, and that the writ in the present action and all proceedings under it must be set aside, the court having no jurisdiction to enforce a judgment in a personal action by proceedings in rem. The City of Mecca, 50 L. J., Adm. 53; 6 P. D. 106; 44 L. T. 750; 4 Asp. M. C. 412—C. A.

Collision—Damage Lien.]—All nations recognise and will enforce a damage lien when it has been declared by a foreign court; but it is essential that it should appear from the proceedings of the foreign court that the object of the suit was the sale of the ship, and not a personal remedy against the captain or owners. The Bold Buccleugh (7 Moore, P. C. 267) considered. Ib.

—— Wrongdoing Ship—Wilful Act of Crew—Scotch Law.]—The courts of Scotland have from the earliest times, in the exercise of admiralty jurisdiction, administered, not the municipal rules of Scotch law, but the law and custom of the sea generally prevailing among maritime states, including the law as to maritime lien, and now the admiralty law of Scotland is identical with that of England, The Bold Buccleugh (7 Moore, P. C. 267) approved. The Dunlossit, Currie v. McKnight, 66 L. J., P. C. 19; [1897] App. Cas. 97; 75 L. T. 457; 8 Asp. M. C. 193—H. L. (Sc.)

In order, however, to give rise to a maritime lien, the ship against which the lien is claimed must be the instrument of mischief, and some act of navigation of the ship itself must either mediately or immediately be the cause of the damage. Ib. And see further as to damage lien, ante, cols. 717, seq.

—— Winding Up.]—The proper mode of enforcing a maritime lien on a vessel belonging to a company which has been ordered to be wound up is by a proceeding in the winding-up, and not by a proceeding in rem in the admiralty court. Australia Direct Steam Navigation Co., In re, 44 L. J., Ch. 676; L. R. 20 Eq. 325.

The arrest of a vessel by the admiralty court is a sequestration within the meaning of the Companies Act, 1862, s. 163. Ib.

Suit in Ireland restrained by Injunction from Chancery in England—Payment out of Money in Court.]—A suit was instituted in admiralty in Ireland for the price of necessaries supplied in 1869 to "The Lion," then the property of the North-West of Ireland Deep Fishery Co. The defendants, liquidators of the company, lodged in court 208*l.* 7*s.* in lieu of bail and as security for the claim and costs, and to abide the judgment of the court. They then applied to the court of chancery in England and obtained an injunction against the plaintiffs from prosecuting the necessaries suit "until further order," and afterwards applied to the admiralty court in Ireland for payment out to them of the 208*l.* 7*s.* Application refused. The Lion, 19 W. R. 168; 1 Asp. M. C. 321.

Master's Disbursements and Wages—Lien.]—See V. MASTER, ante, cols. 97, seq.

Seamen's Wages—Lien.]—See VI. SEAMEN, ante, cols. 119, seq.

Necessaries—Lien.]—See 19. NECESSARIES, post, cols. 964, seq.

iv. Between Foreigners.

Court unwilling to adjudicate.]—The admiralty court was unwilling to exercise its jurisdiction in disputes between foreigners. The Martin of Norfolk, 4 C. Rob. 293.

Possession of Foreign Vessel.]—A plaintiff in an action in rem claimed to be the sole owner or mortgagee of a foreign vessel against which the suit was brought, and to be entitled to have possession of the same decreed to him. The defendants appeared under protest, and delivered a petition on protest alleging, as the fact was, that the plaintiff and defendants were foreigners resident abroad, and praying the court to pronounce against its jurisdiction. The consul of the foreign state where the ship was registered was desirous that the court should entertain the suit, and primâ facie evidence was given at the hearing that by a decree of a competent court of such foreign state possession of the vessel had been transferred to the plaintiff:—Held, that the court would not decline to exercise jurisdiction in the suit. The Evangelistria, 46 L. J., Adm. 1; 35 L. T. 410; 25 W. R. 255.

A plaintiff, a foreigner, purchased of the defendant one fourth share of a ship. At the time of the purchase she was a British ship, but the defendant, a foreigner, subsequently procured a register for her as a foreign ship. In a suit by the plaintiff for possession, the court, upon the foreign consul refusing to interfere, declined to entertain the suit, which was dismissed, with costs, but not damages. The Agincourt, 47 L. J., Adm. 37; 2 P. D. 239.

Attachment.] — Attachment for contempt issued by the court of admiralty against a person resident in Scotland and executed with the consent of the court of admiralty jurisdiction in Scotland, the person attached being brought to England. Afterwards the court in Scotland revoked its consent:—Held, that a supersedeas of the attachment should issue. The Mathesis, 2 W. Rob. 286.

Wages.]—See The Vrow Mina, infra, col. 953.

Possession Suit.]—See The See Reuter, 1 Dods. 22, infra, col. 957.

v. Mortgages.

The admiralty court had formerly no jurisdiction in respect of ship mortgages. The Portsea, 3 Hag. Adm. 84. The Exmouth, 2 Hag. Adm. 83, n.

Under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 3, the court has power to decide, not any question arising under a deed of mortgage, as for example the right of the mortgagee to freight, but only questions as to the mortgage of the ship herself. The Fortitude, 2 W. Rob. 217.

vi. Assault and Ill-usage.

Damages 100*l.* recovered in admiralty by a cook against the captain of an East India Company's ship for ill-usage. The Agincourt, 1 Hag. Adm. 271. S. P., The Lowther Castle, 1 Hag. Adm. 384.

Assault by master on seaman: 120*l.* damages awarded by admiralty court. The Enchantress, 1 Hag. Adm. 395.

Assault by master on mate. The Centurion, 1 Hag. Adm. 161.

The admiralty court has jurisdiction in case of assault by the master upon a passenger at sea. The Ruchers, 4 C. Rob. 73.

vii. Personal Injury—Loss of Life.

"Damage done by any Ship."]—A stranger whilst passing over the deck of a ship in dock in the Thames was injured by falling down a hatchway left unprotected by the negligence of those on board:—Held, that he could not sue the ship in rem; and that his injury was not damage done by a ship within the meaning of the Admiralty Court Act, 1861. The Theta, 63 L. J., Adm. 160; [1894] P. 280; 6 R. 712; 71 L. T. 25; 43 W. R. 160; 7 Asp. M. C. 480.

The admiralty court has jurisdiction to entertain an action in respect of injury to person done by a ship. The Beta, 38 L. J., Adm. 50; 20 L. T. 988; 17 W. R. 933—P. C. S. P., The Sylph, 37 L. J., Adm. 14; L. R. 2 A. & E. 24; 17 L. T. 519; The Uhla, 37 L. J., Adm. 16, n.; L. R. 2 A. & E. 29, n; 19 L. T. 89; The Guldfaxe, 38 L. J., Adm. 12; L. R. 2 A. & E. 325; 19 L. T. 748; 17 W. R. 578. See also cols. 725, 838, 990.

b. Actions for Wrongfully Suing in Admiralty.

Depredation at Sea.]—Contraband goods were condemned and sold in Scotland to the plaintiff. The defendant subsequently sued the plaintiff in admiralty for depredation at sea. Juror withdrawn, and plaintiff ordered to discontinue. Radley v. Ecclesfield, 1 Ventr. 173.

Taking Kelp in the Severn.]—Action for damages for suing in admiralty for taking kelp in the Severn. Flemming v. Yates, 3 Bulstr. 205.

Writ of error to reverse a judgment for damages for wrongfully suing in admiralty; all the errors assigned were overruled. N.B.—The suit in admiralty was for taking kelp in the Severn. Ib.

Charterparty Made Abroad.]—Action for suing in the admiralty upon a charterparty made abroad. Cremer and Tookley's Case, Godb. 385.

Contract for Sale of Ship and Cargo.]—Action against A. for wrongfully suing, together with B., in admiralty, upon a contract made at Melcombe in the county of Dorset for the sale of a ship and her cargo of fruit. Poyntell was attached to make answer as well to the king and queen as to the plaintiff. Billota. Cause agreed. Poyntell v. Billota, Benloe, pl. 111; Dyer, fo. 159, b.

Action for Wrongfully Suing in Admiralty.]—Row v. Alport, 1 Brownl. & G. 4.

Action for Arresting Ship as an Interloper—East India Company.]—A warrant to stay Sands' ship as an interloper was obtained from the king in council by Child on behalf of the East India Company, and she was afterwards arrested by admiralty process, upon which Sands appeared pro interesse suo. Sands thereupon sued Child for wrongfully suing him in admiralty and obtained judgment for 1,500*l.* damages and double costs under 2 Hen. 4, c. 11. Child v. Sands, Carth. 294; Lev. pt. 3, 351; Comb. 215; 4 Mod. 176; 1 Salk. 31.

He who procures the first process out of the admiralty doth prosecute and pursue therein within the meaning of the above statute. Ib.

c. Prohibitions.

Generally.]—The court of admiralty, although it possesses by statute in certain cases some of the powers of a superior court, is an inferior court, to which prohibition will lie. James v. L. & S. W. Ry., 41 L. J., Ex. 186; L. R. 7 Ex. 287; 27 L. T. 382; 21 W. R. 25; 1 Asp. M. C. 226—Ex. Ch.

Courts of admiralty and courts of prize are all liable to the controlling authority which the courts of Westminster Hall have from time to time exercised for the purpose of preventing them from exceeding the jurisdiction given to them; the general ground of prohibition being an excess of jurisdiction when they assume to act in matters not within their cognizance. Grant v. Gould, 2 H. Bl. 69, 100; 3 R. R. 342.

If a court of admiralty proceeds in a question where it has no jurisdiction, the court will grant a prohibition without imposing any terms. Velthasen v. Ormsley, 3 Term Rep. 315.

Prohibitions — Contract.] — Prohibition to admiralty court refused in suit upon a bond made in France, because the witness may be beyond sea, and cannot be examined in a common-law court. Delaroche and Barney's Case, Leon. pt. 3, 232. S. P., The Admiral Court, Br. & Gold., pt. 2, 16.

Suit in admiralty for possession of goods; contract by deed pleaded. Prohibition awarded. Cambridge (Earl) v. Penrose, cited, Dyer, fo. 159, b.

Suit in admiralty for wages earned at sea; contract made in Suffolk. Prohibition awarded. Bene v. Wilcocks, cited, Dyer, fo. 159, b.

Suit in admiralty upon obligation made at Beaumaris for appearance in admiralty. Prohibition awarded. Shirt and Floyd's Case, cited, Dyer, fo. 159, b.

Suit in admiralty upon obligation made at Lincoln, and suggested to have been made at sea. Prohibition awarded. Brian v. Browne, cited, Dyer, fo. 159, b.

Suit in admiralty for breach of contract made at sea or in foreign parts. Prohibition awarded. Fane v. Pennoir, 1 Keb. 479.

Prohibition to the admiralty where the issue is whether the contract is made on sea or land. Susans v. Turner, Noy, 67.

Semble, a contract made at sea is within admiralty jurisdiction. Ib.

Prohibition in suit upon charterparty. Smithson v. Pain, 1 Keb. 158.

Prohibition to the admiralty refused in a suit upon a charterparty made in Barbary and under seal, for non-delivery of sugars spoiled at sea. Palmer v. Pope, Hob. 79, 212. And see Maldonado v. Slaney, Benloe, 140.

Sale of ship alleged to be at sea. Prohibition awarded on suggestion that it was at land. Green v. Colduck, 1 Keb. 786.

Suit in admiralty on bill of lading for not delivering goods in as good condition, &c. Prohibition granted. Caule v. Cooke and Sparke, 2 Keb. 498.

Semble, if the libel had been in tort for damage to the goods, the admiralty would have had jurisdiction. Ib.

Semble, in a suit by cargo-owner against shipowner for non-delivery of goods through breach of duty as carrier, the admiralty has jurisdiction. Ib.

Suit in admiralty upon charterparty made on land, the contract being alleged to be at sea. Prohibition awarded. Bushel v. Jay, 1 Keb. 153. S. P., Johnson v. Drake, 1 Keb. 176.

The admiralty court had no jurisdiction upon a contract made on land abroad. Ball v. Trelawny, Cro. Car. 603.

If the libel alleges, contrary to the fact, that the contract was at sea, prohibition will go to the admiralty. Godfrey's Case, Latch, 11.

A contract made on shipboard at sea for victuals is triable in admiralty—per Doderidge, J. Ib.

Suit in admiralty upon a charterparty and ship arrested. Semble, the master cannot make the ship liable in admiralty for breach. Watson v. Warner, Sid., pt. 2, 161.

The admiralty had no jurisdiction in matters done beyond sea. Thomlinson's Case, 12 Co. Rep. 104.

The admiralty cannot hold plea for matters done on land, as of a suit for money lent to the master in Spain. Bridgeman's Case, Hob. 11.

—— Collision.]—Prohibition granted in case of damage by a foreign ship in collision in the Thames. Velthasen v. Ormsley, 3 Term Rep. 315.

Prohibition refused where the collision was in the Thames, on the ground that there was no remedy at common law. Wharton v. Pits, 1 Salk. 548 (not followed in Velthasen v. Ormsley, supra).

Prohibition granted in a collision suit, but only upon the undertaking of the applicants to give the names of the owners of the ship sued, so that they could be sued at common law. Martin v. Green, 1 Keb. 730.

—— After Sentence.]—Prohibition may issue to the admiralty after sentence. Rex v. Broom, or Brome, Comb. 444; 12 Mod. 135.

Prohibition to the admiralty refused after sentence on appeal, there being concurrent jurisdiction. Chambers' Case, 1 Keb. 10, 66.

Suit in admiralty for breach of charterparty, and sentence given. Prohibition refused. Smithson v. Pain, 1 Keb. 158.

Prohibition refused, after sentence and execution. Walker v. Adams, Siderf. 331; 2 Keb. 200, 722.

Prohibition after sentence refused, where the contract was alleged infra jurisdictionem admirallitatis. Barber v. Wharton, 2 Ld. Raym. 1452; 2 Barnard. 2.

Prohibition not granted upon a surmise after sentence passed. Susans v. Turner, Noy, 67.

An admiralty sentence, unless upon its face it appears to have been passed without jurisdiction, is presumed to have been made with jurisdiction. Ladbroke v. Crickett, 2 Term Rep. 649; 1 R. R. 571.

The court will not prohibit the admiralty after sentence upon mere surmise that the matter was infra corpus comitatus. Case of the Admiralty, 12 Co. Rep. 79.

Prohibition granted to the admiralty after sentence. Keech v. Potts, 1 Keb. 3.

—— Enforcing and Giving Bail.]—Prohibition refused in a suit to enforce bail given in admiralty. Parre or Par v. Evans, Sir Th. Raym. 78; 1 Keb. 489. Cf. Barough v. Catlin, 1 Keb. 88.

A stipulation taken in a vice-admiralty court in the colonies to abide the decision of the court of appeal in prize cases is not a recognizance, being taken in a court not of record; but it is enforceable by the court of appeal. Prohibition refused. Brymer v. Atkins, 1 H. Bl. 165.

As to the nature of stipulations or bail in admiralty; whether prohibition lies in a suit upon the bond. Greenway and Baker's Case, Godb. 193, 260.

Security for safe return enforceable in admiralty. See Grave or Degrave v. Hedges, infra, col. 929.

Prohibition to admiralty applied for in suit upon bond given by part owners taking ship to sea against wish of co-owners; suit stayed by consent. Justice v. Brown, Hardr. 473.

Whether a stipulation taken in the admiralty by a part owner for the return of the ship can be sued on in admiralty doubted. Ib.

—— Necessaries.]—Prohibition granted in suit in admiralty for supply of an anchor to a foreign ship at Radcliffe. Justin v. Ballam, 2 Ld. Raym. 805; 1 Salk. 34; 1 Keb. 511; 3 Mod. 244; 6 Mod. 79; 1 Sid. 453; 1 Lev. 267; 1 Vent. 32; Cro. Car. 296.

Action in admiralty in mayor's court of Hull by shipwright for repairs. Prohibition granted. Ashton's Case, Lit. Rep. 166.

Semble, a contract for the supply of victuals made on shipboard is triable in admiralty. Godfrey's Case, Latch, 11.

Prohibition granted. Libel against ship and master, and late and present owner (who had purchased her after necessaries supplied) for sails and other necessaries supplied in an English port. Hoare v. Clement, 2 Shower (3rd ed.) 559.

Prohibition to the admiralty in a suit for necessaries supplied within the body of a county. Cradock's Case, Brownl. & G. pt. 2, 37.

Libel against the ship in admiralty for provisions and mariners' wages. Semble, prohibition will be awarded. Smith v. Tilly, 1 Keb. 708.

Prohibition to the admiralty in a suit for supplies furnished on the Thames. Leigh v. Burley, Owen, 122.

—— Bottomry.]—Prohibition refused in a bottomry suit, except so far as necessary to make the master a party, in order to condemn the ship. Johnson v. Shepney, or Shippen, or Shepway, Holt, 48; 1 Salk. 35; Ld. Raym. 982; Mod. 79.

Prohibition to admiralty refused in a bottomry suit, the money having been lent at sea. Scareborrow v. Lyrius, Noy, 95.

Prohibition to admiralty refused in suit against master who had hypothecated the ship abroad. Corset v. Huseley, Holt, 48; Comb. 138.

See also Benzen v. Jeffries, 1 Ld. Raym. 152, and X. BOTTOMRY, supra, col. 225.

—— Possession and Restraint.]—Prohibition granted in a suit for possession of a ship adjudged prize and bought by the plaintiff in Scotland. Thornton v. Smith, 2 Keb. 158.

Prohibition does not lie to restrain the admiralty from proceeding in a cause of possession for the restoration of a vessel to a person claiming as true owner against a wrongdoer. Blanshard, In re, 3 D. & R. 177; 2 B. & C. 244; 26 R. R. 329. See The Peggy, 4 C. Rob. 304.

Prohibition refused in a suit in admiralty by a minority in value of part owners to get security for return of ship. Ousten v. Hebden, Wils. pt. 1, 101.

But granted as to an order by the admiralty for sale of the ship. Ib.

Suit in admiralty upon a bond given by majority of part owners to dissenting part owners for safe return of the ship, the ship having been lost. Applicant ordered to declare in prohibition. Grave or Degrave v. Hedges, Holt, 470.

Prohibitions formerly issued to the admiralty in suits of restraint, but subsequently the admiralty was allowed to proceed in such cases. Anon., 1 Barnard. 410. S. P., Knight v. Berry, Holt, 647; Carth. 26; Comb. 109.

Prohibition refused; suit in admiralty by dissenting part owner, to compel his co-owner to give security for return of ship. Dimmock v. Chandler, Strange, 890; Fitzg. 197. S. P., Anon., 2 Chitty, 359.

—— Spoil and Piracy.]—Prohibition to the admiralty in a suit by Frenchmen, whose goods had been taken at sea by the servants of the defendant, an Englishman, to whom letters of marque had been granted to take the ships of Spaniards. Waltham v. Mulgar, Moore, 776.

The question whether goods have been captured by pirates or in war is not triable in admiralty. Aliter, where the claim is by the owner of goods taken at sea by pirates. Ednian v. Smith, 3 Keb. 744.

Semble, prohibition would issue in case of a claim by the French owner of a ship captured by a Dunkirker and driven into Weymouth before being taken infra præsidia of the king of Spain, the goods having been sold at Weymouth by the captor. Anon., March, 110.

Trespass for taking, as alleged, at sea money and cloths; prohibition nisi awarded. Tridahan v. Top, 1 Keb. 202; cf. Rex v. Wainwright, 1 Keb. 607, 624.

A fisherman was indicted for piracy; ignoramus found; he was nevertheless detained in prison upon suspicion of piracy; habeas corpus applied for and refused, the suspicion being well founded. Rex v. Marsh, Bulstr., pp. 3, 27.

A pirate imprisoned by the Admiralty Court was assisted to escape by S., who being also imprisoned, applied for a habeas corpus:—Held, that the offence was of the same character as the principal offence, piracy, over which the admiralty had jurisdiction. Prisoner remanded. Scadding's Case, Noy, 131.

Suit in admiralty, before spoil commissioners, by Spanish owner of goods taken at sea by Sir John Gilbert:—Prohibition awarded. Gilbert's, Sir John, Case, cited Dyer, fo. 159 (b).

Capture by pirates does not change the property. Greenway and Baker's (or Barker's) Case, Godb. 193, 260.

Prohibition refused where the alleged taking of the goods by pirates was at a foreign port, of which the court could not take notice, whether it were at sea or on land.

Prohibition refused in a case of piracy, because no security at common law. Pellagii's Case, cited in Rex v. Marsh, Bulstr. pt. 3, 27, 29.

The admiral, by his patent, takes bona piratarum, that is, the pirate's own goods, not the goods of others in the pirate's possession; and the pirate must be attainted of piracy before the admiral can take them. The admiral cannot sue for them in his own court:—Prohibition granted. Prinston v. The Court of Admiralty, Bulstr., pt. 3, 147.

Prohibition to the admiralty refused in a case that was incidental to piracy. Spark v. Stafford, Hardr. 183.

Prohibition refused in a piracy case, after sentence. Villiers, In re, cited Hob. 79.

Salt was taken at sea by pirates, brought to land, and sold. The owner sued the purchaser in admiralty:—Prohibition granted, and afterwards consultation awarded. The original cause having arisen at sea, the sale on land was incidental thereto. Anon., Cro. Eliz. 685.

Prohibition to the admiralty in a suit for buying on land goods taken by pirates at sea:—Refused, as to the taking of the goods by the pirates. Don Diego Serviento de Acuna v. Joliffe and Tucker, Hob. 78, 113, 212.

Semble, the admiralty had jurisdiction in a suit for possession of ship that had been taken by pirates, carried to Tunis, and there sold; the sale on land being incidental to the taking by pirates. Anon., 1 Ventr. 308.

But the taking must be alleged in the libel to be super altum mare, or prohibition will issue. Ib.

Brome, sent out by the African Company, who had letters of marque to take prizes, took a French ship, and had her condemned as prize. Brome was sued in admiralty to make satisfaction to the king for her value, and sentence was given against him. He applied for prohibition; prohibition refused; the taking at sea gives the admiralty jurisdiction, and the subsequent conversion is to be coupled with it. Rex v. Brome or Broom, Comb. 444; Carth. 398.

Subjects of the Chilian government who had risen in rebellion, held to be pirates within 13 & 14 Vict. c. 26. Piracy discussed. The Magellan Pirates, 1 Spinks, 81.

—— Prize.]—The question of prize or no prize is triable in admiralty, and not at common law; prohibition refused. Brown v. Franklyn, Carth. 474; Thermoulin v. Sands, Carth. 423; 1 Ld. Raym. 271; cf. Mitchell v. Rodney, 2 Bro. P. C. 423.

Prohibition to the admiralty refused in case of prize. Thompson v. Smith, Sid. pt. 1, 320. S. P., Turner v. Smith, Sid. pt. 1, 367; and see Ednian v. Smith, supra, col. 930.

Prohibition to the admiralty for not admitting a plea as to an agreement for sharing a prize taken by two ships in consortship. Somers and Buckley's Case, 2 Leon. pt. 2, 182.

Prohibition will usually be granted in a suit relating to a ship captured and not brought infra præsidia; sale within body of a county. Anon., March, 110; (not granted here because of misconduct of vendee).

Goods claimed in Admiralty Court by Spanish ambassador as having been bought by Englishmen of a pirate; defence that the alleged pirate was ambassador of the king of Morocco sent to the Netherlands; that there was war between Spain and Morocco, and that the goods were taken jure belli; sentence in the admiralty for the Spanish ambassador; prohibition applied for by the English purchaser of the goods refused. Pellagli's Case, cited Rex v. Marsh, Bulstr., pt. 3, 27.

A suit for an account of prizes taken by a private man-of-war between owner and master lies in the admiralty. Berkeley and Morrice's Case, Hardr. 502; 2 Keb. 441.

Suit in admiralty for money due for prize goods. Denial of Act of Oblivion pleaded in admiralty. Question whether buyers who had paid for the goods or defaulting receiver liable. Consultation awarded. Rex v. Wainwright, 1 Keb. 607.

Illegal seizure of British ship by British commissioned ship. See Faith v. Pearson, ante, col. 83; Dockwray v. Dickenson, ante, col. 27.

—— Wages of Seamen—Special Contract.]—Mariners may sue for their wages in admiralty, except where the contract is special and unusual, or by deed. Opy v. Child, 1 Salk. 31.

Where the seaman agreed with the master on a voyage from London to the Danube for 30*l.*:—Held, that the contract was special, and the Admiralty Court had no jurisdiction, The Debrecsia, 3 W. Rob. 33.

A prohibition would go to the court, in a suit there for seamen's wages, if the agreement was special or under seal. Howe v. Napier, 4 Burr. 1944. S. P., Bens v. Parre, 2 Ld. Raym. 1206.

Prohibition granted in wages suit in the admiralty, because a plea that the contract was special was not admitted. Blackwell v. Clerk, 1 Keb. 684.

Mariners formerly could not sue in admiralty where the contract was special. The Sydney Cove, 2 Dods. 11. S. P., The Mona, 1 W. Rob. 137.

Prohibition granted to the admiralty in a wages suit, where the contract was by deed with unusual covenants. Day v. Searl, Cunn. 53; Strange, 968; Ca. t. Hardw. 53.

Prohibition to admiralty in wages suit refused after sentence, though contract by deed, that objection not being taken in admiralty. Bennet v. Buggin, 4 Burr. 2033.

Seaman cannot sue for wages at common law and admiralty at the same time; in such case prohibition would formerly have gone to the admiralty. Edmonton v. Franklyn, Fortesc. 231.

—— Ordinary Contract—Prohibition Refused.]—Mariners may sue for wages in the admiralty, unless there is a special contract, even where the contract is in writing:—Prohibition refused. The Mariners' Case, 8 Mod. 379. S. P., Rex v. Pike, 2 Keb. 779. And see Bens v. Parre, 2 Ld. Raym. 1206.

Prohibition refused after judgment in admiralty in a case of mariners' wages by favour of the court and as a privilege to mariners. Jones' Case, Winch, 8; Ewer v. Vaughan, Winch, 8.

Where the seaman's wages were agreed to be paid as to part by a share of a whaling adventure, the Admiralty Court had no jurisdiction; but as to the part of the wages payable under the ordinary seamen's contract there was jurisdiction. The Riby Grove, 2 W. Rob. 52.

Wages earned in Thames.]—Seamen may sue in admiralty for wages earned on the Thames. It is a privilege to seamen to prevent their being put to the expense of separate actions. Mills v. Gregory, Sayer, 127.

Reason for Jurisdiction—Lien on Ship.]—A mate or a mariner may sue in admiralty for his wages, although he sues alone, and the contract was made on land, because the ship is liable in admiralty. Hook v. Moreton, 1 Ld. Raym. 397.

Seaman Discharged before Voyage Begun.]—A seaman discharged after signing articles and before commencement of voyage may sue in admiralty. The City of London, 1 W. Rob. 88.

Prohibitions Refused.]—Coke v. Cretchet, Lev. pt. 3, 360; Middleton v. Scolly, cited, ibid.; Anon. 1 Ventris, 343. And see per Eyres, J., Comb. 255.

—— Though voyage not begun. Wells v. Osman or Osmond, 2 Ld. Raym. 1044; 6 Mod. 238.

—— Where port of arrival not port of delivery. Brown v. Benn, 2 Ld. Raym. 1247.

Prohibition refused; mariners had by deed contracted to forfeit wages in certain events; sentence in admiralty that the deed was obtained by fraud. Buck v. Atwood, Strange, 761.

Prohibition refused; libel by mariner for wages earned in a ship seized for smuggling, and afterwards released on payment of fine. Minnett v. Robinson, Bunb. 121.

Semble. If a ship is condemned for smuggling, the mariners' lien for wages is gone, and prohibition will issue. Ib.

Prohibition refused; suit by one mariner hired by the freighters and not by the owners. Semble, the ship liable, though not the shipowner. Smith v. Crosby, Fort. 230.

Arrest of Freight—Wages.]—Suit against freighters to arrest freight in their hands for master's and mariners' wages. Prohibitions granted, both as to the master, and, on the freighters' application, as to the seaman. Meclanham v. Foliam or Neclanham v. Foldamb, Gibb. 9; 6 Vin. Abr. 539.

—— Wages of Master and Others—Surgeon.]—A surgeon may sue in admiralty for wages. Mills v. Long, Sayer, 136; The Wharton, 1 Hag. Adm., 141 n.; but not for medicines supplied to crew. The Lord Hobart, 2 Dods. 100.

—— Carpenter.]—A carpenter may sue for wages in admiralty. Prohibition refused. Wheeler v. Thompson, 2 Str. 707; The Lord Hobart, 2 Dods. 104. And see Creed v. Mallet, Fort. 231.

Goods Awarded by Admiral.] — Suit in admiralty for possession of goods in hands of I. at Dartmouth, which had been allotted to him by award of the admiral on the high sea, acting as arbitrator. Summes v. Martham, cited, Dyer, fo. 159, b.

Wreck—Royal Fish.]—Suit in admiralty for wreck of the sea (royal fish) cast up on shore. Prohibition awarded. Browne's Case, cited Dyer, fo. 159 b.

Beaconage.]—Suit in admiralty for beaconage in respect of a beacon at Falmouth, the title being in question; prohibition awarded; aliter where the suit is only for the profits. Crosse v. Bigs (or Digges), 1 Keb. 575; 1 Sid. 158.

Sentence of Foreign Court—Average.]—Suit in admiralty to execute sentence of a foreign court for average on a ship run aground; prohibition refused on the ground that averages should be by the foreign usage. Gold v. Goodwin, 2 Keb. 678.

Breach of Navigation Act—Forfeiture.]—Semble, prohibition will not be granted to the admiralty in a suit for forfeiture of the ship for trading contrary to the Navigation Acts. Pidgeon v. Trent, 3 Keb. 640, 647, 651.

Nuisance in the Exe River.]—Presentment of nuisance in the river Exe at an inquest held by the vice-admiral of Devon, by lime boats grounding at low tide.

Semble, prohibition will not be awarded, the jurisdiction being in admiralty as well as at common law. Sheers v. Martyn, 1 Keb. 789.

Collusive Suit.]—After an action for freight had been commenced by a shipowner against a charterer, a monition issued from the Court of Admiralty, requiring him to bring the freight into that court, in a suit there by the holder of a bottomry bond on the ship. The charterer pleaded to that suit, paid in the money, and the cause stood for hearing. The court refused a prohibition; though it was suggested that the suit in the Admiralty Court was brought by collision between the holder of the bottomry bond and the charterer, to deprive the plaintiff in the action of his freight. Place, In re, 8 Ex. 704; 22 L. J., Ex. 241; 17 Jur. 328.

Suit for Ballastage.]—Prohibition to the admiralty in a suit by the Trinity House against a Dutch ship for ballast. Trinity House (Corporation) v. Boreman, Brownl. & G. 2, pt. 2, 13; as to the validity of the grant to the Trinity House of the ballasting monopoly, see 1 Keb. 137, 250, 270, 300, 331.

Refusal to Admit Plea.]—Refused by the admiralty to admit a plea of the act of oblivion; prohibition refused; contra if the admiralty undertakes to expound an Act of Parliament. Anon., 1 Keb. 393.

Refusal of Admiralty Court to entertain a plea as to the ownership of sails detained by one to whom they had been pawned. Prohibition granted. Edmundson v. Walker, Carth. 166.

Incidental Matter.]—Where the principal suit is within the admiralty jurisdiction prohibition refused in incidental suit. Turner v. Neale, Lev. pt. 1, 243; Rex v. Brome or Broom, Carth. 398; Cumb. 244, supra, col. 931.

Proceedings for Contempt.]—Prohibition refused in proceedings by the admiralty against one for contempt in resisting the process of the court. Sparks v. Martyn, 1 Ventr. 1.

Prohibition granted in the same case upon a suggestion that the court was proceeding in the principal suit without jurisdiction. Ib.

Ship of Foreign Sovereign—Collision—Immunity from Arrest—Admiralty Jurisdiction.]—See The Charkieh, supra, col. 724.

Habeas Corpus.]—Collusive proceeding to defeat process of admiralty; habeas corpus refused. Keach's Case, Holt, 335.

Habeas Corpus—Suit in Admiralty for Embezzlement.]—One libelled in admiralty in a "causa damni sive spolii civili maritimæ" (sic) for embezzlement was afterwards sued in the King's Bench for debt. Habeas corpus awarded, and defendant taken from custody of the admiralty to the Marshalsea. Rotherford, or Rutherford v. Scot, or Scott, Kel. pt. 2, 214; 2 Str. 936.

Pirate Goods.]—The admiral in his patent has granted to him bona piratarum. Resolved by all the judges that the goods of pirates pass by this grant; and not piratical goods. The king shall have piratical goods, if the owner be not known. In this case the admiral ought to sue at common law and not in admiralty. Anon., Jenk. 325.

Prohibition before Libel.]—Prohibition granted before libel exhibited, the admiralty having issued a warrant to seize a ship. Powell v. Robinson, Bunbury, 9; prohibition refused in a similar case. Roberts v. Cadd, Bunb. 247.

Pilotage.]—See Pierce v. Hopper, ante, col. 144.

d. Chancery Jurisdiction in Admiralty Matters.

Control of Court of Chancery over Admiralty Courts. Blad's Case, Blad v. Bamfield, 3 Swanst. 603, 604; Haly v. Goodson, 2 Mer. 77.

Letters of marque and reprisal may be vacated in Chancery. Rex v. Carew, 3 Swanst. 669.

No relief in equity against a security given for performing the sentence of Court of Admiralty, although reversed on appeal, the court to which appeal had been made not having jurisdiction. Denew v. Stock, 3 Swanst. 662. See Love v. Baker, 1 Ch. Ca. 67; Nels. 103.

Where jurisdiction was given in respect of a particular kind of proceeding, by an act passed before the passing of the Judicature Acts, to the Court of Chancery alone, but, by a later act, still before the passing of the Judicature Acts, the jurisdiction was extended to the Court of Admiralty, the Chancery Division now has jurisdiction under the Judicature Acts. Santon, In re, 26 W. R. 810.

The Court of Chancery had power to issue a special injunction to the Court of Admiralty. Blad v. Bamfield, supra; Macnamara v. Macqueen, Dick. 223.

Part Owners refusing to Navigate—Jurisdiction in Chancery.]—See Goodhart v. Lowe and Cases supra, col. 53.

2. County Courts.

Jurisdiction—Amount of Claim.]—A county court, to which admiralty jurisdiction is given by 31 & 32 Vict. c. 71, has admiralty jurisdiction over a claim, not exceeding 300*l.*, for damages for negligence, causing a collision between a barge and a ship in a river, within the body of a county forming part of its district. Purkis v. Flower, 43 L. J., Q. B. 33; L. R. 9 Q. B. 114; 30 L. T. 40; 22 W. R. 239; 2 Asp. M. C. 226.

Therefore, when an action was brought in respect of such a claim for a collision in the Thames, in which, after judgment in default of a plea, the damages were assessed, on a writ of inquiry, at 15*l.*, and no certificate was given that the cause was a proper one to be brought in the superior court, the plaintiff was held not entitled to the costs of the action under 31 & 32 Vict. c. 71, s. 9. Ib. See also Flower v. Bradley, post, col. 942.

In pursuance of s. 9 of 31 & 32 Vict. c. 71, application may be made to the Court of Admiralty for an order to institute in that court proceedings that might have been taken without agreement in a county court, and the Court of Admiralty will, if it sees fit, make such order. The Bengal, L. R. 3 A. & E. 14; 21 L. T. 727.

An action of damage was instituted in the Admiralty Court in a sum exceeding 300*l.* It was admitted that the defendant's ship was to blame, and that the damage sustained by the plaintiff's ship exceeded 300*l.* The defendant proved by affidavit that he was entitled to have his liability limited to a sum less than 300*l.*, and a tender of less than 300*l.* was accepted by the plaintiff:—Held, that the suit was not a proceeding which the plaintiff might, without agreement, have taken in a county court; and that the above section did not disentitle the plaintiff to costs. The Young James, 39 L. J., Adm. 1; L. R. 3 A. & E. 1; 21 L. T. 397; 18 W. R. 52.

When a suit has been commenced in the Court of Admiralty for an amount within the county court jurisdiction, the plaintiff cannot obtain an order for leave to proceed so as to relieve him from liability for costs. The Loretta, 40 L. J., Adm. 24 L. T. 447; 1 Asp. M. C. 19.

—— Collision.]—The County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71), does not deprive county courts not having admiralty jurisdiction of their original jurisdiction to try actions to recover damages for injuries caused by collision between vessels where the amount claimed does not exceed 50*l.* Scorell v. Beran, 56 L. J., Q. B. 604; 19 Q. B. D. 428; 36 W. R. 301.

—— Freight.]—The statutes 31 & 32 Vict. c. 71, and 32 & 33 Vict. c. 51, do not deprive county courts not having admiralty jurisdiction, of their jurisdiction to try actions to recover freight under charterparties, where the amount claimed is less than 50*l.* Reg. v. Southend County Court (Judge), 53 L. J., Q. B. 423; 13 Q. B. D. 142; 32 W. R. 754.

Breach of Charterparty.]—The second section of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Amendment Act, 1869, gives the county courts jurisdiction in cases of claims arising out of charterparties or other agreements for the use or hire of ships, although the Admiralty Division may have no original jurisdiction in such cases. Argos, Cargo ex, infra, followed. Simpson v. Blues and Gunnestad v. Price, infra, disapproved. The Alina, 49 L. J., Adm. 40; 5 Ex. D. 227; 42 L. T. 517; 29 W. R. 94; 4 Asp. M. C. 256—C. A.

The County Court Acts (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71, and 32 & 33 Vict. c. 51) do not give a county court, appointed to have admiralty jurisdiction under those statutes, a jurisdiction which the Court of Admiralty never possessed; therefore, such county court has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit for damages for breach of a charterparty, nor a suit for payment of freight and demurrage. The Madge Wildfire, Simpson v. Blues, 41 L. J., C. P. 121; L. R. 7 C. P. 290; 26 L. T. 697; 20 W. R. 680.

——Demurrage.]—By 32 & 33 Vict. c. 51, s. 2, it is enacted, "that any county court appointed, or to be appointed, to have admiralty jurisdiction, shall have jurisdiction, and all powers and authorities relating thereto, to try and determine the following causes:—1. As to any claim arising out of any agreement made in relation to the use or hire of any ship, or in relation to the carriage of any goods in any ship . . . provided the amount claimed does not exceed 300*l.*:"—Held, that this section gives the county court jurisdiction in cases of claims arising out of charterparties or other agreements for the use or hire of ships, although the Court of Admiralty may have no original jurisdiction in such cases. Argos, Cargo ex, Gaudet v. Brown, 42 L. J., Adm. 1; L. R. 5 P. C. 134; 28 L. T. 77; 21 W. R. 420.

A claim for demurrage is not within the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Amendment Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 51), s. 2 which only gives jurisdiction to county courts to try and determine causes which are within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty Court. Gunnestad or Gunstead v. Price, 44 L. J., Ex. 44; L. R. 10 Ex. 65; 32 L. T. 492; 23 W. R. 470; 2 Asp. M. C. 543. Approving Simpson v. Blues, supra, and dissenting from Argos, Cargo ex, supra.

A loading agreement between a colliery company and the charterers of a ship, by which the colliery company undertake to load the ship in a certain time, and pay demurrage if that time is exceeded, is not an "agreement made in relation to the use or hire" of a ship within s. 2 of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Amendment Act, 1869, and hence the county court has no jurisdiction on the admiralty side to entertain a claim for demurrage against the colliery company. The Zeus, 13 P. D. 188; 59 L. T. 344; 37 W. R. 127; 6 Asp. M. C. 312.

A county court, exercising admiralty jurisdiction under the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, and the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Amendment Act, 1869, has jurisdiction under s. 2, sub-s. 1, of the latter Act to entertain a claim for demurrage arising out of a bill of lading. The Alina, supra, col. 938, followed. Pugsley v. Hopkins, 61 L. J., Q. B. 645; [1892] 2 Q. B. 184; 67 L. T. 369; 40 W. R. 596; 7 Asp. M. C. 215—C. A.

—— Necessaries.]—When a cause of necessaries is instituted in a county court, and is transferred to the Court of Admiralty, and the petition shews the claim to be based on a bottomry bond (the county court having no jurisdiction over bottomry bonds), the court will reject the petition. The Elpis, 42 L. J., Adm. 43; L. R. 4 A. & E. 1; 27 L. T. 664; 21 W. R. 576.

County courts exercising admiralty jurisdiction cannot, as such, entertain a claim for necessaries supplied either to a vessel in her own port, or when an owner of the vessel is domiciled in this country. The Dowse, 39 L. J., Adm. 46; L. R. 3 A. & E. 135; 22 L. T. 627; 18 W. R. 1008.

The court of passage has not a more extensive jurisdiction as to any claim for necessaries than that exercised by the Court of Admiralty. Ib.

—— Supplied to British Ship — Owners Domiciled in Great Britain.]—A county court having admiralty jurisdiction has no greater jurisdiction in respect of a claim for necessaries than that possessed by the Admiralty Division of the High Court, and consequently cannot entertain an action for necessaries supplied to a British ship, the owners of which are domiciled in Great Britain. The Dowse, supra, followed. The Alina, supra, distinguished. Allen v. Garbutt, 50 L. J., Q. B. 141; 6 Q. B. D. 165; 29 W. R. 287; 4 Asp. M. C. 520, n.

—— Damage to Cargo—Owner Domiciled in England.]—The county courts have jurisdiction in admiralty to entertain cases up to the amount of 300*l.*, where damage to cargo is caused by, and the claim arises out of, an agreement made in relation to the carriage of goods in a ship, notwithstanding that an owner or part owner of the ship is domiciled in England or Wales. The County Court Admiralty Jurisdiction Amendment Act, 1869, is not limited to cases in which the High Court of Admiralty had jurisdiction at the time. The Rona, 51 L. J., Adm. 65; 7 P. D. 247; 46 L. T. 601; 30 W. R. 614; 4 Asp. M. C. 520.

—— Wages.]—A county court has no jurisdiction in admiralty over a claim for a master's disbursements, and therefore, in an action for master's wages and disbursements in the High Court, a certificate under the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71), is not necessary to entitle a successful plaintiff to his costs, although he recovers less than 150*l.*, the limit of the county court jurisdiction over wages under s. 3. The Dictator, 38 L. T. 947; 4 Asp. M. C. 19.

The words "any claim for wages" in s. 3 of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, include a claim for damages for wrongful dismissal by the master of a vessel engaged under a special wages agreement. The Blessing, 3 P. D. 35; 38 L. T. 259; 26 W. R. 404; 3 Asp. M. C. 561.

—— Mate—Services rendered in Dock after Payment off of Crew.]—The chief mate of a vessel, who, on her arrival in port, was paid off with the rest of the crew, by direction of the owner remained on board at the same rate of wages as he had received during the voyage. While the vessel was loading for another voyage it was found necessary to take her into dock for repairs, and the officer went with her into dock and remained with her there for more than three months, at the end of which time the mortgagee entered into possession and dismissed him:—Held, on a rule for mandamus, that the City of London Court had jurisdiction under the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, to entertain an action in rem instituted by him to recover wages in respect of the time during which the vessel was in dock. Reg. v. City of London Court Judge, 59 L. J., Q. B. 427; 25 Q. B. D. 339; 63 L. T. 492; 38 W. R. 638; 6 Asp. M. C. 547.

—— Master's Wages.]—See The Sir Chas. Napier, 5 P. D. 73; 43 L. T. 364; 28 W. R. 713; 4 Asp. M. C. 321; supra, col. 92.

—— Master's Disbursements.]—The county court has no jurisdiction in admiralty in a claim for master's disbursements. The Dictator, 38 L. T. 947; 4 Asp. M. C. 19.

—— Towage.]—A tug having entered into a contract to tow a ship from A. to B. for a specified sum, the ship, during the performance of the agreed towage, was injured by collision, and the tug was detained nearly three days in attendance on the ship. In an action of towage instituted by the owner of the tug in a county court, and transferred to the Admiralty Division:—Held, that it had no jurisdiction to award, in addition to the sum agreed to be paid for towage, any remuneration for the delay. The Hjemmett, 49 L. J., Adm. 66; 5 P. D. 227; 42 L. T. 514; 4 Asp. M. C. 274.

A county court has under 32 & 33 Vict. c. 51, s. 2, sub-s. 1, jurisdiction to entertain a claim for damage for breach of a contract of towage. The Iseu, 56 L. J., Adm. 47; 12 P. D. 34; 55 L. T. 779; 35 W. R. 382; 6 Asp. M. C. 63.

—— Salvage.]—A county court having admiralty jurisdiction under the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71), has jurisdiction, under s. 3, in claims for salvage wherein the property salved does not exceed 1,000*l.*, or in the alternative where the amount claimed does not exceed 300*l.* The Glannibanta, Elmore v. Trim, 46 L. J., Adm. 75; 2 P. D. 45; 36 L. T. 27; 25 W. R. 513.

The word "or" in s. 3, sub-s. 1, must be read as indicating the alternative. Ib.

A salvage suit was instituted in the Court of Admiralty in a sum exceeding 300*l.*; the value of the property was less than 1,000*l.*:—Held, that the court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The Empress, 41 L. J., Adm. 32; L. R. 3

A. & E. 502; 25 L. T. 885; 20 W. R. 553; 1 Asp. M. C. 183.

—— Subject-matter of.]—The county court has no jurisdiction with regard to any other subject-matter than that which might be entertained by the High Court of Admiralty. Gas Float Whitton (No. 2), 65 L. J., Adm. 17; [1896] P. 42; 73 L. T. 698; 44 W. R. 263; 8 Asp. M. C. 110—C. A. See S. C. in H. L., supra, col. 595.

—— Necessaries.]—See Michael, Ex parte, ante, col. 966.

—— Collision—With Barge.]—The 31 & 32 Vict. c. 71, and 32 & 33 Vict. c. 51, do not give the county court, which has an admiralty jurisdiction under those acts, jurisdiction to try cases of damage by collision between vessels of a different class from those over which the Court of Admiralty has jurisdiction, and therefore a county court is not empowered by those acts to try a question of collision between barges propelled by oars only. Everard v. Kendall, 39 L. J., C. P. 234; L. R. 5 C. P. 428; 22 L. T. 408; 18 W. R. 892.

—— With Dock Wall.]—A ship, whilst under the control of the servants of a dock company, was through their negligence damaged by coming into collision with the dock company's wall whilst entering their dock. The shipowner brought an action in the Admiralty Division of the High Court and recovered a sum less than 300*l.*:—Held, that a county court having admiralty jurisdiction had, under s. 3 of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, and s. 4 of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Amendment Act, 1869, jurisdiction to try such a case, and therefore an order depriving the shipowner of his costs of the action in the high court was rightly made. The Robert Pow (Br. & Lush. 99) and The Ida (Lush. 6) commented on and disapproved. The Zeta, Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Turner, 63 L. J., Adm. 17; [1893] A. C. 468; 1 R. 307; 69 L. T. 630; 57 J. P. 660—H. L. (E.) Reversing 40 W. R. 535—C. A.

—— With object Ashore.]—Damage occasioned to an object on the bank of a river by contact with the sailing gear of a vessel afloat in the river is not "damage by collision" within s. 3, sub-s. 3, of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71), and a county court has not admiralty jurisdiction in respect of such damage. The Kate, Robson v. Kate (Owner), 57 L. J., Q. B. 546; 21 Q. B. D. 13; 59 L. T. 557; 36 W. R. 910; 6 Asp. M. C. 330.

—— Collision in Dock.]—A collision occurred in a dock connected with the river Thames by channels provided with gates and locks. An action was brought in a county court having admiralty jurisdiction in respect of damages arising out of the collision. On an application for a prohibition:—Held, that the claim was within the Admiralty Court Act, 1861, s. 7, and that the county court had jurisdiction. Reg. v. City of London Court Judge, or Kerr, 51 L. J., Q. B. 305; 8 Q. B. D. 609; 30 W. R. 566.

—— Amount Claimed.]—See Scovell v. Bevan, supra, col. 938.

—— Action against Pilot for Negligence.]—An action against a pilot for collision damage caused to a barge by a vessel under his charge is not an "admiralty cause" within the meaning of 31 & 32 Vict. c. 71, and 32 & 33 Vict. c. 51, which confer admiralty jurisdiction upon county courts. Flower v. Bradley, 44 L. J., Ex. 1; 31 L. T. 702; 23 W. R. 74; 2 Asp. M. C. 489.

The High Court of Admiralty had no jurisdiction to entertain an action in personam against a pilot to recover damages arising from a collision between ships upon the high seas caused by his negligence; nor has a county court exercising admiralty jurisdiction under the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, and the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Amendment Act, 1869, jurisdiction to entertain such an action. Reg. v. City of London Court Judge, 61 L. J., Q. B. 337; [1892] 1 Q. B. 273; 66 L. T. 135; 40 W. R. 215; 7 Asp. M. C. 140—C. A. And see The Alexandria, infra, col. 945.

—— Carriage of Passengers' Luggage.]—Passengers' luggage carried on board a ship is not "goods" within the meaning of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Amendment Act, 1869, and consequently the act does not confer jurisdiction to try a claim arising out of the loss of such luggage, as a court having admiralty jurisdiction. Reg. v. City of London Court Judge, 53 L. J., Q. B. 28; 12 Q. B. D. 115; 51 L. T. 197; 32 W. R. 291; 5 Asp. M. C. 283.

—— What Court—Residence of Parties.]—Under s. 74 of the County Courts Act, 1888, an admiralty action may be commenced in the county court (having admiralty jurisdiction) within the district of which the defendant resides or carries on business. The Hero, 60 L. J., Adm. 99; [1891] P. 294; 65 L. T. 499; 40 W. R. 143; 7 Asp. M. C. 86.

—— Property to which Action Relates.]—By the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, s. 21: "Proceedings in an admiralty cause shall be commenced (1) in the county court having admiralty jurisdiction within the district of which the vessel or property to which the cause relates is at the commencement of the proceedings; (2) if the foregoing rule be not applicable, then in the county court having admiralty jurisdiction in the district of which the owner of the vessel or property to which the cause relates . . . resides." The plaintiffs, owners of a steamship, commenced an action on the admiralty side of the county court within the district of which they resided, under s. 21, sub-s. 2, of the Act of 1868, against the defendants, assignees of a cargo of timber under a bill of lading, to recover damages for the detention of their ship in discharging the cargo. At the commencement of the action the plaintiffs' ship was on the high seas, and the cargo was at the port of discharge, which was not within the jurisdiction of the county court in which the action was commenced. On a motion for a prohibition on the ground that the cargo was the "property to which the cause related" within the meaning of s. 21, sub-s. 1, of the Act of 1868, and that consequently the action should have been commenced in the county court within the district of which the cargo lay at the commencement of the action:—Held, that the cause of action, being in respect of the detention of the plaintiffs' ship, related to the ship only and not to "property" within the meaning of s. 21, sub-s. 1; and as the ship was on the high seas when the proceedings were commenced, s. 21, sub-s. 1 was not applicable, and the action was properly commenced, under s. 21, sub-s. 2, in the county court within the district of which the plaintiffs resided. Pugsley v. Ropkins, 61 L. J., Q. B. 645; [1892] 2 Q. B. 184; 67 L. T. 369; 40 W. R. 596; 7 Asp. M. C. 215—C. A.

The defendants, who resided at Poole, where they also owned a wharf, entered into a charter-party with the plaintiffs, the owners of the "C. D.," in which they warranted the depth of water at their wharf. The "C. D.," while at the defendants' wharf, in pursuance of this charter-party, took the ground and was damaged. The "C. D." being subsequently at Newcastle-on-Tyne, the plaintiffs commenced an action in the county court of Northumberland against the defendants for breach of warranty in the charterparty:—Held, that the county court of Northumberland had jurisdiction to try the case. The County of Durham, 60 L. J., Adm. 5; [1891] P. 1; 64 L. T. 146; 39 W. R. 303; 6 Asp. M. C. 606.

—— Receiver of Wreck in another District.]—Semble, that a county court of one district has no jurisdiction over the receiver of wreck in another district. The John Evans, 43 L. J., Adm. 9; 30 L. T. 306; 2 Asp. M. C. 234.

—— Jurisdiction to Restrain Proceedings in Court of Admiralty.]—A debtor to the estate of a bankrupt seized in the vice-admiralty court in Sierra Leone a vessel which formed part of the bankrupt's estate, for a debt claimed to be due to him for necessaries supplied to such ship, and thereupon the trustee in the bankruptcy obtained an interim injunction from the county court of Manchester, in which the bankruptcy proceedings had been instituted, to restrain the debtor from prosecuting his suit in the vice-admiralty court at Sierra Leone; and, pending the continuance of such injunction, issues were directed by the judge of such county court to be tried before him as to whether he had a lien on such ship for necessaries. Upon an application by the debtor for a prohibition to prohibit such county court proceedings:—Held, that the county court judge had jurisdiction under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71, s. 72), to grant the injunction and to try such issues, if he deemed it expedient to do so for the purpose of doing complete justice or making a complete distribution of the bankrupt's property, and that if such court was improperly exercising its jurisdiction in the matter the remedy of the debtor was by appeal to the Court of Appeal in bankruptcy. Halliday v. Harris, 43 L. J., C. P. 350; L. R. 9 C. P. 668; 30 L. T. 680; 22 W. R. 756.

Transfer to Admiralty Division.]—Where a necessaries action against a ship in the City of London court has proceeded to judgment by which a sale of the ship is ordered, and subsequently another action is commenced in the high court by material-men having a possessory lien upon the ship, and an appearance has been entered to the action in the City of London court by the plaintiffs in the High Court, the sale will be stayed, and the City of London Court action transferred to the High Court upon the application of the plaintiffs in the High Court. The Immacolata Concezione, 8 P. D. 34; 47 L. T. 388; 31 W. R. 642; 4 Asp. M. C. 593.

The court of admiralty may transfer to itself an admiralty or a maritime cause pending in a county court, notwithstanding that the suit may relate to matters over which the court of admiralty has not original jurisdiction. The Swan, 40 L. J., Adm. 8; L. R. 3 A. & E. 314; 23 L. T. 633; 19 W. R. 424.

—— Transfer.—Pleadings.]—See The Carisbrook, infra, col. 992.

Affidavit of Value—Evidence to Contradict Affidavit.]—In a salvage action in the county court, if the defendant makes an affidavit of value, and the plaintiff does not apply for an appraisement, the Judge is not bound to admit evidence at the trial directed to show that the value of the ship salved was greater than that stated in the affidavit. The Argo, 64 L. J., Adm. 12; [1895] P. 33; 11 R. 675; 71 L. T. 640; 43 W. R. 415; 7 Asp. M. C. 534.

Semble, he has a discretion to admit such evidence if he thinks proper to do so. Ib.

Trial by Jury.]—Sect. 101 of the County Courts Act, 1888, does not give a party to an admiralty action the right to require a trial by judge and jury where the other party has, under s. 11 of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, requested the judge to summon assessors. The Tynwald, Kelly v. Isle of Man Steam Packet Co., 64 L. J., Adm. 1; [1895] P. 142; 11 R. 690; 71 L. T. 731; 43 W. R. 509; 7 Asp. M. C. 539.

Sect. 101 of the County Courts Act, 1888, does not confer a right upon the plaintiff or the defendant in an action brought on the admiralty side of a county court under s. 2 of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Amendment Act, 1869, to have the case tried by a jury. The Theodora, 66 L. J., Adm. 50; [1897] P. 279; 76 L. T. 627.

Costs—Amount of Claim.]—An action was brought in the Queen's Bench, in which an amount less than the sum of 300*l.* was claimed in the particulars of demand for damage by collision, and a further sum not exceeding 300*l.* for salvage services, and further sums for depreciation in value of ship and for demurrage. The causes of action arose within the district of a county court having admiralty jurisdiction. The defendant paid 254*l.* 12*s.* 10*d.* into court in respect of the claim for damage by collision, which the plaintiff accepted in full satisfaction, and entered a nolle prosequi as to the rest:—Held, that the superior courts of common law at Westminster were superior courts within s. 9, and that the right to costs depended upon the amount recovered and not the amount in the particulars of demand, and that the plaintiffs were therefore not entitled to costs. Hewitt v. Corry or Cory, 39 L. J., Q. B. 279; L. R. 5 Q. B. 418; 22 L. T. 666; 18 W. R. 954.

Held, also, that no suggestion of the facts necessary to shew that a county court had jurisdiction over the district where the cause of action arose was required to be entered on the record. Ib.

Sect. 7 of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, which deprived a plaintiff of and also rendered him liable to be condemned in costs, where in an action brought in a superior court, which might by that act be tried by a county court having admiralty jurisdiction, he did not recover a sum exceeding what a county court had by that act jurisdiction to try without agreement, is repealed by the effect of Ord. LV.

of the Judicature Act, 1875. Tenant v. Ellis, 50 L. J., Q. B. 143; 6 Q. B. D. 46; 43 L. T. 506; 29 W. R. 121.

3. PASSAGE COURT.

Suit against Pilot.]—A ship by compulsion of law in charge of a duly licensed pilot in the river Mersey, came into collision with and damaged another vessel. The owners of the damaged vessel instituted an admiralty suit against the pilot in the court of passage:—Held, that the court of passage had not jurisdiction to entertain the suit as an admiralty suit. The Alexandria, 41 L. J., Adm. 94; L. R. 3 A. & E. 574; 27 L. T. 565; 1 Asp. M. C. 464.

Claim for Necessaries.]—The court of passage has not a more extensive jurisdiction as to any claim for necessaries than that exercised by the Court of Admiralty. The Dowse, 39 L. J., Adm. 46; L. R. 3 A. & E. 135; 22 L. T. 627; 18 W. R. 1008.

Appeal from.]—The appeal from the court of passage of Liverpool exercising admiralty jurisdiction is under the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71), s. 26, and security for costs must be given before the instrument of appeal is lodged. The Ganges, 5 P. D. 247; 43 L. T. 12; 4 Asp. M. C. 317—C. A.

From the decision of the court of passage in an admiralty cause, an appeal lies to the Court of Admiralty. The Dowse, 39 L. J., Adm. 46; L. R. 3 A. & E. 135; 22 L. T. 627; 18 W. R. 1008.

Action in rem—Power to make Order that no Defence.]—Neither the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, nor the Amendment Act, 1869, enabled orders to be made purporting to apply to admiralty actions in rem and in personam, a procedure similar to that under R. S. C. Ord. XIV. enabling a plaintiff, on shewing that there was no defence to the action, to obtain judgment for the amount claimed. Fellows v. Lord Stanley (Owners), [1893] 1 Q. B. 98; 5 R. 115; 67 L. T. 857; 41 W. R. 253; 7 Asp. M. C. 298.

Distribution of Salvage Awarded by High Court—Jurisdiction.]—Injunction issued by the Admiralty Division to restrain one of the officers of a tug, to which a salvage award of 3,000*l.* had been made by the High Court, from proceeding with an action for distribution of salvage instituted in the Liverpool court of passage against the tug owners. The Theresa, 11 R. 681; 71 L. T. 347; 7 Asp. M. C. 505.

4. CINQUE PORTS.

Admiralty Jurisdiction of.] — The Cinque Ports have an admiralty jurisdiction. Stock (or Storke) v. Cullen, Jones, 66; 3 Keb. 598.

Enemies' Goods Stranded on the Goodwins—Droits.]—See The Ooster Ems, 1 C. Rob. 284, n.; Hay and Marriott, Preface, xxvii., infra, col. 950.

Appeal from.] — Appeals from the Cinque Ports admiralty lay to the privy council. Cinque Ports, Lord Warden v. Rex, 3 Hag. Adm. 438, 446.

There is no appeal from the Cinque Ports Admiralty Court to the High Court. Denew v. Stock, 3 Swanst. 662. S. C., nom. Stock v. Denew, Ca. in Ch. 305. S. P., Stock or Storke v. Cullen, Jones, 66; 3 Keb. 598.

5. VICE-ADMIRALTY, COLONIAL, AND CONSULAR COURTS.

Jurisdiction—Necessaries.] —Vice-admiralty courts have not (apart from statute) more than the ordinary admiralty jurisdiction, i.e. as it existed before 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65 enlarged it. The Vice-Admiralty Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 24), s. 10, sub-s. 10, does not create a maritime lien with respect to necessaries supplied within the possession. The Rio Tinto, Laws v. Smith, 9 App. Cas. 356; 50 L. T. 461; 5 Asp. M. C. 224—P. C.

A vice-admiralty court has no jurisdiction under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 24, s. 10, to entertain a suit for necessaries supplied at a port out of the possession, that is, the British possession, in which the court is established. The Albion, 27 L. T. 723; 1 Asp. M. C. 481.

Wages and Compensation.] — By an order in council, s. 15, passed in pursuance of 2 Will. 4, c. 51, the Vice-Admiralty Court has jurisdiction to entertain a suit brought by any number of seamen, not exceeding six, to recover their wages. The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, s. 189, does not take away such right of suit so long as the total aggregate amount claimed by such seamen exceeds 50*l.* Where, in a suit brought by six seamen in the Vice-Admiralty Court, the judge found that a total amount of 203*l.* 19*s.* 8*d.* was due to them, partly for wages and partly for wrongful dismissal, but that the amount due to each was less than 50*l.*:—Held, that, under the above rule and section, the judge was wrong in dismissing the suit for want of jurisdiction, and that a decree for 203*l.* 19*s.* 8*d.* should be made. The Ferret, Phillips v. Highland Ry., 52 L. J., P. C. 51; 8 App. Cas. 329; 48 L. T. 915; 31 W. R. 869; 5 Asp. M. C. 94—P. C.

The 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, applies to the colonies; and by s. 191, a master has a lien for his wages in the Vice-Admiralty Court, whatever may be the municipal law of the colony. The Rajah of Cochin, Swabey, 473.

—— Title to Ship.] —The vice-admiralty court at Hong Kong had only the ordinary admiralty jurisdiction possessed by admiralty courts previously to the passing of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 66; it had no jurisdiction to entertain a suit for possession for the purpose of trying a ship. The Australia, Lapraik v. Burrows, Swabey, 480; 13 Moore, P. C. 132; 7 W. R. 718.

Vice-Admiralty Court not of Record—Stipulation Enforceable by the Delegates.] — See Brymer v. Thompson, 1 H. Bl. 165. S. P., Smith v. Nicholls, 5 Bing. (N.C.) 208; 7 Scott, 147; 7 D. P. C. 282; 8 L. J., C. P. 92.

—— Offences against Revenue Laws.]—The vice-admiralty courts in the West Indies had no jurisdiction over offences against revenue laws committed out of their respective islands. The Fabius, 2 C. Rob. 245.

—— Sale of Ship.] —Vice-admiralty courts have no power to order a sale of the ship in case of distress—see per Sir W. Scott. The Fanny and Elmira, Edwards, 117.

The vice-admiralty courts abroad have no authority, upon the mere petition of the captain of a ship bound on a foreign voyage, to decree the sale of such a ship reported upon survey to be seaworthy or repairable, so as to carry the cargo to its place of destination, but at an expense exceeding the value of the ship when repaired. Reid v. Darby, 10 East, 143.

High Courts in India.]—Observations on the admiralty jurisdiction of the high courts in India. The Brinhilda, 45 L. T. 389; 4 Asp. M. C. 461—P. C.

Procedure — Colonial Courts.] — It may be presumed that the procedure in the vice-admiralty court of Victoria is so far analogous to that in the maritime courts of Great Britain and Ireland, that a shipwright of Melbourne would be entitled to arrest a British ship and detain her until his legal demands upon her were satisfied. The Staffordshire, Smith v. Bank of New South Wales, 8 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 443; 41 L. J., Adm. 49; L. R. 4 P. C. 194; 25 L. T. 137; 20 W. R. 557; 1 Asp. M. C. 365—P. C.

Breach of Revenue Laws—Security for Costs.] —Decree of the vice-admiralty court of Sierra Leone in a proceeding in rem for breach of the revenue laws of the colony, condemning the goods seized, and the owners in penalties, reversed by the committee, so far as the penalties were concerned, with costs, it appearing that though the claim of the owner of the goods was rightly rejected, because he failed to comply with the rule of the Vice-Admiralty Court requiring security for costs, yet that such rule did not apply, so far as regarded the penalties, against which he was entitled to be heard in the court below without giving any such security. George v. Reg., 4 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 287; L. R. 1 P. C. 389.

—— Probable Cause for Seizure.]—An appeal from a decree of the vice-admiralty court of Sierra Leone, restoring property seized for breach of the custom laws, but without damages or costs, the judge below being of opinion that there was probable cause for the seizure, was dismissed by the judicial committee with costs, on the ground that it appearing from the evidence that there was probable cause for the seizure, the judge of the Admiralty Court was justified in refusing to decree damages and costs to the appellants, the owners of the goods seized. Wilson v. Reg., L. R. 1 P. C. 405.

Appointment of Deputy Judge.]—The chief justice for the time being for Sierra Leone may lawfully appoint a deputy judge of the vice-admiralty court of that colony. Rolet v. Reg., 4 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 41; L. R. 1 P. C. 198; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 715; 15 W. R. 233.

Practice.]—The form of preliminary acts in use in the Admiralty Division of the High Court in collision cases should be used in similar cases in the vice-admiralty courts. The Norma, 35 L. T. 418; 3 Asp. M. C. 272—P. C.

In collision causes in the vice-admiralty courts witnesses should, as far as possible, be examined vivâ-voce before the court, not upon written interrogatories before an officer of the court prior to the hearing. Ib.

Consular Courts.] — The consular court at Constantinople possesses a jurisdiction in rem, in cases of collision between British and foreign ships; but although that court has such jurisdiction, it does not involve the administration of the common law of England. The Laconia, Papayanni v. Russian Steam Navigation and Trading Co., 2 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 161.

6. Registrar, Office of.

Registrar of Admiralty—Ouster of.]— Tenure of office of registrar of the admiralty; bond given that plaintiff should enjoy the same for his life; ouster by granter of admiral subsequently appointed. Parker and Harrold's Case, 2 Leon. pt. 2, 114.

7. Law Applicable.

Bankruptcy Law.] — The Admiralty Court, being a court of law and equity, will follow the decisions of the courts of law and equity in deciding questions under the bankruptcy law. The Heart of Oak, 39 L. J., Adm. 15; 21 L. T. 727.

General Maritime Law.]—There is a general maritime law administered alike by English and foreign courts, having admiralty jurisdiction, distinct from the municipal law of nations. The Patria, 41 L. J., Adm. 23; L. R. 3 A. & E. 436; 24 L. T. 849.

Generally, the Court of Admiralty is governed by the civil law, the law marine, and the law merchant. The Neptune, 3 Hag. Adm, 129, 135. S. C., reversed on App. 3 Knapp 94, infra, col. 960.

Equity.—The court, although influenced by equitable considerations, is not a court of equity, so as to allow matters, foreign to the issue, to be introduced in order that complete justice may be done between the parties; it follows rather in its pleadings and practice the courts of common law. The Don Francisco, Lush. 468; 31 L. J., Adm. 14; 5 L. T. 460.

By the ancient maritime law the Court of Admiralty would have an equity to moderate contracts made under pressure of necessity—per Sir W. Scott, The Nelson, 6 C. Rob. 217, 231.

8. High Court, not of Record.

The admiralty was no court of record. Thomlinson's Case, 12 Co. Rep. 104. S. P., Greenway and Baker's Case, Godb. 193, 261; and, semble, Jobson's Case, Noy, 24.

The Admiralty Court is not a court of record, and cannot fine or imprison. Empringham, vice admiral Yorkshire, and Kettlewell, his marshal, fined and imprisoned for citing persons wrongfully to the admiral's court. Empringham's Case, 12 Co. Rep. 84.

The Court of Admiralty could not proceed criminally against one in contempt. Tench v. Hubrison's Case, Style, 340.

Habeas corpus to bring up one imprisoned by the admiralty. Anon., Style, 183.

9. Wreck.

Generally.] — Nothing is wriccum maris but what is cast on land by the sea. Constable's Case, Sir Henry, 5 Co. Rep. 106 a; 1 Anders. 86.

The Court of Admiralty has no jurisdiction of wreck. Ib.

Below low water mark the admiral has sole jurisdiction, between high and low water the common law and the admiral have jurisdiction according as the tide is. Ib.

Infants, feme covert, executrix, men in prison and beyond sea are bound by nonclaim of wreck within a year and day. Ib.

Effect as against the office of admiralty of a grant from the Crown to a lord of a manor of "wreck of the sea." Claim by grant to flotsam within three miles from low water mark rejected. Wreck of the sea must have touched ground; goods afloat are droits. Rex v. Forty-nine Casks of Brandy, 3 Hag. Adm. 257.

Habeas corpus awarded to the lord warden of the Cinque Ports for the imprisonment of one for stealing wrecks. Bourn's Case, Cro. Jac. 543; Palmer, 96.

Over wreck and derelict, when landed, the admiralty had no jurisdiction. The Two Friends, 1 C. Rob. 271.

Municipal Corporations Act.]—The Municipal Corporations Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, does not transfer to the High Court all the jurisdiction (e.g. in wreck and salvage) formerly exercised by the vice-admiralty courts—per Dr. Lushington. Raft of Timber, 2 W. Rob. 251.

Grant of Wreck — Wreck appurtenant to Manor.]—Wreck belonging to a manor by prescription does not pass under a grant (to Lord Lisle, high admiral) of all wrecks of the sea, and other profits to the said office appertaining. Wiggon v. Branthwait, 1 Ld. Raym. 473; 12 Mod. 259; Holt, 758.

Owner entitled to.]—The owner of wreck is entitled thereto as against a grantee from the Crown, although no living creature comes ashore. Hamilton v. Davis, 5 Burr. 2732.

Right to—Trespass.] — A grantee of wreck may maintain trespass against a wrongdoer for taking away goods cast ashore, although people escaped from the ship alive, and although the goods were claimed by the owners within a year and day, and although the plaintiffs never seized them. Dunwich (Bailiffs) v. Sterry, 1 B. & Ad. 831; 9 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 167.

Customs Duty — 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 52, s. 50.]—Tobacco landed from a stranded ship held not to be wreck within the above act, so as to be liable to duty. Legge v. Boyd, 1 C. B. 92; 14 L. J., C. P. 138; 9 Jur. 30.

But the term "wreck" in the above statute is not confined to goods that would pass to the Crown or the crown's officer by virtue of the prerogative. It includes goods imported into England, entered and shipped for export, and afterwards picked up partly afloat and partly on shore from the wreck of the ship in an English port. Barry v. Arnaud, 10 A. &. E. 646; 2 P. & D. 633; 9 L. J., Q. B. 226.

Evidence of Right to.]—Parol evidence to support a prescriptive claim to wreck cannot be given where the property to wreck was in the crown at the time of Charles I. Alcock v. Cooke, 2 M. & P. 625; 5 Bing. 340; 7 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 126; 30 R. R. 625.

Dollars in the Sand.]—Dollars more than 100 years old found in the sand of the seashore will be presumed to have come from a wrecked ship, though no trace of the ship is found near them. Talbot v. Lewis, 6 Car. & P. 603.

10. Droits.

Enemies' Goods.]—By the common law, enemies' property taken by a subject vests in the captor; by admiralty law, in the king, if taken without letters of marque, the captor holding it in trust for the king; for breach of this trust a suit in the admiralty is very proper. Rex v. Broom or Brome, 12 Mod. 135; Carth. 398; Comb. 444.

Broom, by authority from the African Company, who, by patent, had power to take enemies' ships and dispose thereof at their will, took a French ship on the high sea, carried it into a river beyond sea and sold her there. The ship was condemned in the admiralty for prize; the grantee of the perquisites of the admiralty sued Broom in admiralty for conversion of the ship and non-delivery of her, claiming her as a droit. Sentence against Broom; appeal to the delegates; prohibition refused. Ib.

A Prussian ship was stranded on the Goodwins. Some specie on board was sent ashore and claimed by the warden of the Cinque Ports as enemies' goods. The master obtained a monition from the High Court of Admiralty to remove the cause to the prize court, where he claimed the goods as Prussian property. The delegates reversed the decree of the High Court on the ground that it had no jurisdiction. The Ooster Ems, 1 C. Rob. 284, n.: Hay and Marriott, Preface, xxvii.

An enemy's ship captured by a non-commissioned ship is a droit of the Admiralty. The Twee Gesusters, 2 C. Rob. 284, n.

A queen's ship, during the Russian war, fell in with a raft of timber belonging to the Russian government:—Held, that the timber was a droit of the Crown and not of the admiralty. Raft of Russian Timber, In re, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1109.

A capture made by crews of king's ships stationed at the island of St. Marcon adjudged to be prize, and not an admiralty droit. The Rebeckah, 1 C. Rob. 227.

A ship captured by the Gibraltar garrison in Gibraltar bay condemned to the admiralty as a droit. The Nostra Signora del Carmen, 1 C. Rob. 228, n.

A non-commissioned captor of an enemy's ship and gunpowder cargo rewarded by the whole of the proceeds; one-third to the owner, two-thirds to the crew. The Hause, 1 C. Rob. 286.

Breach of Navigation Act.]—A ship arrested as an admiralty droit was afterwards seized as forfeited for breach of a navigation act:—Held, that the forfeiture gave the prior title. Score v. Lord Admiral, Parker, 273. Quære as to the accuracy of this report, see per Thompson, B., 3 Anstr. 864.

Droits or Wreck.]—A log floating in the sea was drawn upon a rock by a person wading; another log cast upon the beach was afterwards swept out to sea, and being found floating was brought back to shore:—Held, that both logs were droits of the admiralty and did not belong to grantees of wreck. Stackpoole v. Reg., Ir. R. 9 Eq. 619.

Goods floating are not Wreck.]—Goods floating in the sea are not wreck; when grounded they are wreck, though water be round them; if again afloat they cease to be wreck. Two casks of tallow picked up afloat off the Norfolk coast condemned as droits of the admiralty. Rex v. Two Casks of Tallow, 3 Hag. Adm. 294. Cf. Rex v. Forty-nine Casks of Brandy, 3 Hag. Adm. 257; supra, col. 949. And see York (Duke of) v. Linstred, 1 Keb. 657, supra, col. 935.

An Anchor.] — Imprisonment for taking an anchor in the Cinque Ports. Habeas corpus awarded. Bourn's Case, Cro. Jac. 543; Palmer, 96.

Pirate Goods — Slave Ship.] — Unclaimed residue after recapture from pirates are admiralty droits. The Marianna, 3 Hag. Adm. 206.

A condemnation of a ship for engaging in the slave trade does not found title in the seizors. Ib.

Goods taken from Pirates.]—Property taken from pirates, the owners of which were unknown, held to be a droit of the admiralty. The Panda, 1 W. Rob. 423. Cf. The Helen, 1 Hag. Adm. 142.

A grant of pirates' goods to the admiral does not pass goods in the possession of pirates taken from others. Anon., 12 Co. Rep. 73.

There is no limit of time within which the owners may claim them. Ib.

11. Beaconage.

The Admiralty Court formerly had jurisdiction in suits for beaconage, but the jurisdiction is gone; prohibition granted. Crosse v. Digges (or Bigs), 1 Sid. 158; 1 Keb. 575.

Action at common law for Dungeness lighthouse tolls. Gibs v. Osbaston, 2 Keb. 114.

12. Illegal Colours.

Warrant to arrest a merchant ship wearing illegal colours. Reg. v. Ewen, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 454.

A master fined for wearing illegal colours. Reg. v. Benson, 3 Hag. Adm. 96.

13. Foreign Enlistment.

A ship was fitted out as a transport for persons in Cuba who had revolted from Spain and were exercising powers of government in Cuba, and conducting hostilities against Spain :—Held, a breach of the Foreign Enlistment Act, 59 Geo. 3, c. 69, s. 69; and the vessel forfeited. The Salvador, Reg. v. Carlin, 39 L. J., Adm. 33; L. R. 3 P. C. 218; 23 L. T. 203; 18 W. R. 1054.

As to the mode of proceeding in a claim for indemnity for detention of a ship under the Foreign Enlistment Act, see The Great Northern and The Midland, 26 L. T. 201; 1 Asp. M. C. 246; infra, col. 1004.

14. Prize.

The Court of Admiralty has no original jurisdiction in matters of booty of war. Its jurisdiction is derived solely from 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, and orders in council issued in pursuance of that statute. Banda and Kirwee Booty, In re, 44 L. J., Adm. 41; L. R. 4 A. & E. 436; 33 L. T. 332.

The matter of the "Banda and Kirwee" booty had been by order in council referred to the court to determine the persons entitled to share, and in what proportions, and as to costs. Certain moneys, the proceeds of the booty, had, as alleged, not been paid to the parties who had been declared by the court entitled to the booty: —Held, that the order in council gave the court no power to order that these moneys should be brought into court for distribution, and that, therefore, the court had no jurisdiction to make such an order. Ib.

A captured ship not taken infra præsidia is not lawful prize. Anon., March, 110.

No interest in a prize vests before condemnation; but upon condemnation it is taken to have vested at the capture. Stevens v. Bagwell, 15 Ves. 139; 10 R. R. 46.

The sentence of a foreign admiralty court is conclusive as to prize or no prize. Weston v. Wilty, Skinner, 152; and cases infra, col. 1109.

Action for False Imprisonment in Case of Wrongful Capture.]—An action will not lie at common law for false imprisonment, where the imprisonment was merely the consequence of taking a ship as prize. Le Caux v. Eden, 2 Dougl. 594.

Prize Jurisdiction—History and Origin.]—The foundation and nature of prize jurisdiction in the Court of Admiralty explained by Lord Mansfield. Lindo v. Rodney, 2 Dougl. 612, n.

15. Wages and Disbursements.

See also Prohibitions, supra, cols. 932, 933; VI. Seamen, supra, cols. 106, seq.; V. Master, supra, cols. 92, seq.

Jurisdiction as to.]—The gist of the admiralty jurisdiction in wages is service at sea. Howe v. Nappier, 4 Burr. 194.

Payment by Bill.]—A seaman took payment of his wages at Calcutta by a bill of exchange on his owners, in preference to cash. The bill was dishonoured and the owners became bankrupt :—Held, that he could not sue the ship. The William Money, 2 Hag. Adm. 136.

Paid out of Proceeds of Droit.]—Wages prior to 1 Will. 4, c. 25, paid out of proceeds of a derelict condemned as an admiralty droit. The Speculator, 3 Hag. Adm. 330, n.

Additional Sum promised to prevent Desertion —Wages Recoverable in Admiralty.]— The master at a foreign port where his crew was deserting gave each seaman a promissory note for 40*l.* in addition to the wages payable under the articles to induce them to remain with the ship. On arrival in England the owners tendered to the seamen their wages, upon condition that they should sign a release and give up the promissory notes. The seamen refused, and brought an action in admiralty for their wages: —Held, that in the admiralty action they were entitled to recover their wages and costs. The Mobile, Swabey, 256; 5 W. R. 830.

Arrest of Post-office Packet.]—A post-office packet may be arrested in a suit for mariners' wages. The Lord Hobart, 2 Dods, 100.

Suit pending Abroad.]—A suit in Canada against the master for wages was pending when a suit in rem against the ship for the same wages was instituted in England :—Held, that the suit in rem abated. The Lanarkshire, 2 Spinks, 189.

Second Mate Serving as First Mate.]—A second mate during the voyage becoming and serving as first mate, in the place of the former first mate, who had deserted :—Held, entitled to the same wages as first mate as his predecessor received, there being no new agreement. The Gondolier, 3 Hag. Adm. 190.

Purser not on Articles.]—Purser's wages pronounced for, though no figure specified for his wages in the articles. The Prince George, 3 Hag. Adm. 376. S. P., Alleson v. Marsh, 2 Ventr. 181.

Jurisdiction of Justices.]—Under 6 Will. 4, c. 19, ss. 15, 16, the Admiralty Court could not entertain a suit for wages under 20*l.*, except where justices were unable to administer full justice. The King William, 2 W. Rob. 231.

Master suing Owner for Seamen's Wages paid.]—The master having paid the mariners their wages could not (formerly) sue the owner in admiralty. Anon., Fort. 230.

Mate's Claim for Wages Paid and Disbursements.]—The Court of Admiralty has no jurisdiction to adjudicate upon a mate's claim for wages paid to the crew, and necessary disbursements in foreign ports. The Victoria, 37 L. J., Adm. 12.

Foreign Seamen in Ship of alien Enemy.]—The court will entertain a suit for wages of a foreign seaman on a ship of an alien enemy coming to this country under a licence. The Vrow Mina, 1 Dods. 234.

Wages claimed by foreign seamen. Objection to jurisdiction overruled. The William Frederick, 1 Hag. Adm. 138.

16. RESTRAINT.

And see IV. OWNERS, supra, col. 52 ; PROHIBITIONS, supra, col. 929 ; 17. POSSESSION, infra, col. 955.

Admiralty Jurisdiction.]—A dissenting part owner may sue in admiralty to compel his co-owners setting the ship to sea to give security for her safe return, or for a sale. Lambert v. Aeretree, 1 Ld. Raym. 223 ; Blacket v. Anstey, Ib. 235.

The majority of the part owners desiring the ship to go to sea may institute a suit in admiralty to compel a dissenting part owner to give up the certificate of registry. Prohibition refused. Anon., 2 Chit. 359.

Where there are several part-owners, the owners of the less shares may arrest the ship in the Admiralty Court, and compel a security to be given by the others before they will be permitted to navigate out of port. Ouston v. Hebden, 1 Wils. 101.

The Court of Admiralty is open all the year round to applications by part owners to restrain the sailing of ships without their consent, until security is given to the amount of the respective shares. Hale v. Goodson, 2 Mer. 77.

The court has jurisdiction to arrest a vessel in an action of restraint at the suit of a part owner holding a minority of shares, notwithstanding that the vessel is about to proceed on a voyage approved by a majority of the part owners. The Talca, 5 P. D. 169 ; 42 L. T. 61 ; 29 W. R. 123 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 226.

Dissenting part owners who have obtained security for the ship's return may sue thereon in admiralty. Grave or Degrave v. Hedges, 2 Ld. Raym. 1285 ; Holt, 470.

A stipulation taken from a dissenting part owner for the return of the ship not suable in admiralty. King v. Perry, 3 Salk. 23. And see c. PROHIBITIONS, supra, cols. 928, 929.

The admiralty always had jurisdiction in an action of restraint to detain a ship from sailing at the instance of a dissenting part owner, until the other part owners gave a bond to the full value of his share for her safe return ; upon her loss such bond is immediately payable. The Apollo, 1 Hag. Adm. 306.

Foreign Ship.]—The Admiralty Court had no jurisdiction, at the suit of a British part owner of a foreign ship, to arrest her until bail was given for her safe return to her own port abroad. The Graff Arthur Bernstorff, 2 Spinks, 30.

Bail, who can obtain—Ship's Husband.]—The plaintiff and all the other owners of a vessel appointed two persons as ship's husbands and managers by an agreement, which stated that they should be, and should at all times thereafter discharge the duties of, ship's husbands and managers of the said vessel and of agents for the owners, their executors and administrators. The agreement also gave the managers authority to perform all the usual duties of ship's husbands :—Held, that this agreement did not debar the plaintiff as owner of two sixty-fourth shares in the ship from obtaining in an action of restraint bail from the other part owners in the value of his shares. The England, 56 L. J., Adm. 115 ; 12 P. D. 32 ; 56 L. T. 896 ; 35 W. R. 367 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 140.

—— Part Owners.]—The court has jurisdiction to arrest a vessel in an action of restraint at the suit of a part owner holding a minority of shares, notwithstanding that the vessel is about to proceed on a voyage approved of by a majority of the part owners, and is being employed under a charter entered into by the ship's husband, appointed to act on behalf of all the owners. The Talca, 5 P. D. 169 ; 42 L. T. 61 ; 29 W. R. 123 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 226.

—— Charterer.]—In a cause of restraint the charterer of the vessel, if he has a substantial interest in the question before the court, is entitled to intervene in the suit. The Innisfallen, 35 L. J., Adm. 110 ; L. R. 1 A. & E. 72 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 653.

A vessel having been arrested in a cause of restraint between co-owners, the court, on a motion by the charterer, to whom the vessel had been let for a voyage, ordered her release, it appearing that the alleged co-owner was only a mortgagee. Ib.

Bail Bond.]—Where the defendants in an action of restraint have given a bond for the safe return of the ship they are still at liberty to dispute the plaintiffs' right to bring the action, and the court, if satisfied that the plaintiffs have no such right, will set aside the bond. The Keroula, 55 L. J., Adm. 45 ; 11 P. D. 92 ; 55 L. T. 61 ; 35 W. R. 60 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 23.

—— Release of Sureties.]—In an action of restraint two sureties executed a bail bond for the safe return of the ship. No time was fixed in the bond at which the liability of the sureties should cease. After the bond had been in existence for nearly three years, and when the vessel was in this country, and the owners of the majority of shares were changed, the sureties applied to be released from the bond:—Held, that the application was reasonable, and the bond was ordered to be cancelled. The Vivienne, 56 L. J., Adm. 107; 12 P. D. 185; 57 L. T. 316; 36 W. R. 110; 6 Asp. M. C. 178.

—— How long it Continues—Second Action.]—Where minority owners have instituted an action of restraint, claiming security for the safe return of the ship to a named port within the jurisdiction, and a bond is given by the defendants for that purpose, such bond remains in force until the ship returns to that port, and the plaintiffs are not entitled to institute another action for further security upon the ship's return to another port within the jurisdiction, and if such second action is instituted, it will be dismissed with costs. The Regalia, 51 L. T. 904; 5 Asp. M. C. 338.

—— Form.]—In an action of restraint the bail bond should not be given to pay what may be adjudged against the defendant in an action, but simply for the appraised or agreed value of the plaintiff's shares, in case the ship does not return to the particular port named in the bond. The Robert Dickinson, 54 L. J., Adm. 5; 10 P. D. 15; 52 L. T. 55; 33 W. R. 400; 5 Asp. M. C. 341.

As to the form of bonds given for the safe return of a ship, to dissenting part owners; and of decree upon her not returning. The Margaret, 2 Hag. Adm. 275. The Anne, 2 Hag. Adm. 279, n; The Waterhen. Ib.

17. POSSESSION.

See also PROHIBITIONS, supra. col. 929; IV. OWNERS, supra, cols. 52, seq.

Wrongdoer in Possession.]—The Admiralty Court had jurisdiction to take a ship from a mere wrongdoer and deliver her to her owner. Blanshard, In re, 2 B. & C. 244; 2 D. & R. 177; 26 R. R. 329.

Majority in Interest of Owners can Change.]—The Admiralty Court would not interfere to change the possession of a ship except at the instance of a majority of the part owners in interest. The Valiant, 1 W. Rob. 64, infra. S. P., The Elizabeth and Jane, 1 W. Rob. 278.

Owner of Moiety.]—The Admiralty Court in a default cause declined to decree possession to the owner of a moiety of a ship, but granted a monition calling upon the other interest to shew cause. The Egyptienne, 1 Hag. Adm. 346, n.

Where no adverse Title.]—The Admiralty Court would entertain a suit of possession where no adverse title was set up. The Frances, 2 Dods. 420. S. P., The Sisters, 3 C. Rob. 213; 4 C. Rob. 275; 5 C. Rob. 155. S. P., The Valiant, 1 W. Rob. 64, infra.

The court gave effect to a legal title without taking notice of equitable claims. The Valiant, 1 W. Rob. 64.

The Admiralty Court had no jurisdiction to interfere in cases of adverse title. Warrant of arrest refused to a mortgagee claiming under 6 Geo. 4, c. 110, s. 45, to arrest and sell the ship. The Fruit Preserver, 2 Hag. Adm. 181; The Guardian, 3 C. Rob. 93.

The Admiralty Court always had and retained its jurisdiction to interpose to transfer possession when no direct question of property was involved; but direct questions of property belonged to the courts of common law and chancery—per Sir W. Scott. The Martin of Norfolk, 4 C. Rob. 293. S. P., The Pitt, 1 Hag. Adm. 240; The Warrior, 2 Dods. 288.

Ownership of vessel formerly not triable in admiralty. Smith v. Gibson, Ca. t. Hardwicke, 271, 317. And see per Holroyd, J. Anon., 2 Ch. 359, 361; and Thompson v. Smith, supra, col. 935.

Attachment Refused.]—The court declined to issue an attachment in execution of a decree in a possession suit. The John of London, 1 Hag. Adm. 342.

Bonâ fide Possession not disturbed.]—In a cause of possession the Admiralty Court will not examine the title of a person in bonâ fide possession of a ship until it is impeached. Where the only title rests on a conditional assignment of a ship as a security not reduced into possession, the court has no jurisdiction to disturb the person in possession under a subsequent sale; nor does it vary the case that it is an appeal from a vice-admiralty court that has exercised the jurisdiction. The John, 2 Hag. Adm. 305.

Equitable and Legal Owners.]—The Court of Admiralty will not dispossess the equitable owner of the moiety of a ship at the instance of the legal owner of more than a moiety. The Victoria, Swabey, 408; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 204; 7 W. R. 330.

The court inclines against dispossession, and requires the plaintiff's claim to be clearly proved. Ib.

Owner dispossessed by Violence or Fraud.]—The court had, even when its jurisdiction was more restricted, authority to decree possession of a vessel to the owner, who had been deprived of it by force, violence or fraud. The Beatrice, otherwise The Rappahannock, 36 L. J., Adm. 9.

Against Master, Part owner.]—The majority of part owners in interest, are entitled to possession of the ship, as against the master who owns the remaining shares and is in possession, although he offers security for her safe return. The Kent, Lush. 495. S. P., The New Draper, 4 C. Rob. 287.

Order for Production of Ship's Papers.]—See The Lusitano; m. INSPECTION AND DISCOVERY, infra, col. 997.

Sale by Court without Jurisdiction.]—A ship sold under sentence of a pretended admiralty court at St. Domingo, stayed on her arrival at Liverpool at the instance of her former owner. The Thomas, 1 C. Rob. 322.

Sale by Master abroad.]—The ship was sold by the master abroad. Possession decreed to the original owner as against the purchaser, upon bail given. The Partridge, 1 Hag. Adm. 81.

Possession of a ship decreed to her former owners; it appearing that she had been sold without authority by Lloyds' agent at Archangel, having been ashore and abandoned by her master. The Lagan or Mimax, 3 Hag. Adm. 418.

Foreign Ship.]—Suit of possession not entertained by the court in the case of a foreign ship. The Johan and Siegmund, Edwards, 242.

The court interferes in a cause of possession of a foreign ship between foreign owners with reluctance; an order of the admiralty of Rostock executed by the admiralty of England. The See Reuter, 1 Dods. 22.

—— Default of Appearance by Part Owner.]—Action in admiralty against the ship, claiming possession, and an account against A., the managing owner; default of appearance by A. Possession given to plaintiffs holding majority of shares. Order to join A. as defendant, and for an account to be taken. Sale of A.'s shares before the reference, to satisfy costs, and any sum found due from A., refused. The Native Pearl, 37 L. T. 5 42; 3 Asp. M. C. 515.

Abortive Sale—Suit by Vendors.]—Vendors of shares in a ship sold by auction, the purchase-money having been partly paid, but the transfers not having been completed, institute a possession suit in admiralty. The ship was sold, but produced a few shillings only. Application that the purchaser at the auction be condemned in costs refused. The Virtue, 1 Spinks, 77.

Proceedings in Chancery.]—The master being unable to repair the plaintiffs' ship, sold her abroad, and executed a bill of sale to the defendants. The ship came to England, and the defendants, refusing to ratify the sale or consent to the registry, took possession of her. The plaintiffs applied to the Court of Chancery for an injunction:—Held, that the plaintiffs had no equitable, as distinct from legal, title: and that their title, if any, being legal, they must sue at law. Ridgway v. Roberts, 4 Hare, 106.

Bail.]—In suits for possession the Court of Admiralty can take bail. The Evangelistria, 46 L. J., Adm. 1; 35 L. T. 410; 25 W. R. 255; 3 Asp. M. C. 264.

18. Co-ownership.

Co-owners disagreeing—Sale of Ship by Court.]—The court will not exercise the power of selling a ship given by 24 Vict. c. 63, s. 8 (2), except in a very strong case; mere disagreement of co-owners not sufficient. The Marion, 54 L. J., Adm. 8: 10 P. D. 4; 51 L. T. 906; 33 W. R. 432; 5 Asp. M. C. 339.

Sale of Ship at Instance of Minority Owners—Majority Owners transformed into Limited Company.]—Where the owners of the majority of the shares in a ship had, without the consent of or notice to their co-owners converted themselves into a limited liability company, to which they had transferred their shares, the court, at the instance of the minority owners, ordered the ship to be sold. The Hereward, 64 L. J., Adm. 87; 11 R. 798; 72 L. T. 903; 44 W. R. 288; 8 Asp. M. C. 22.

Registered Owners.]—Quære, whether s. 8 of the Admiralty Court Act, 1861, giving the Admiralty Court jurisdiction to decide questions between co-owners is not confined to registered owners. The Bonnie Kate, 57 L. T. 203; 6 Asp. M. C. 149.

Petition to Restrain Sale of Ship—17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 65.]—A petition presented under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 65, by a part owner of a ship, which was the subject of a joint adventure, to have the other part owner restrained from dealing with his joint interest in the ship, held to be incompetent; because sub-s. 65 applied only where it was sought to prevent the sale of a ship under ss. 62, 63, and 64, alleged to be vested in a person not qualified to own a British ship. McPhail v. Hamilton, 5 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 1017. And see Roy v. Hamilton, 5 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (3rd ser.) 573.

Claim for Damages.]—In a co-ownership suit brought for sale of the ship by some of the part owners against the others, the latter set up in their defence a claim for damages alleged to have been caused by the wrongful act of the former:—Held, that under 24 Vict. c. 10, s. 8, the court had jurisdiction to entertain the claim. The Ceylon, 18 L. T. 417.

Under 24 Vict. c. 10, s. 8, the Admiralty Court ordered an account to be taken between co-owners relating to matters which took place before the date assigned for the act to come into operation, and relating to a ship lost before the institution of the cause. The Idas, Br. & Lush. 65.

Bill of Sale, Absolute or Mortgage.]—A bill of sale of shares in a ship was executed by the defendant, the sole owner, to T., with a declaration of ownership as required for registration. T. did not register the instrument for four years. In a co-ownership suit he sought to have the ship sold, and accounts taken between himself and the defendant. The bill of sale, though in form absolute, was really given as security for a debt. Application refused. The Jane, 23 L. T. 791 (Irish).

Sale of Ship—Registered in Guernsey.]—The Admiralty Division has no jurisdiction over an action in rem, instituted under s. 8 of the Admiralty Court, 1861, claiming an account of the earnings and sale of a ship when the ship is registered at the port of Guernsey, and not at any port in England or Wales. The Robinsons and The Satellite, 51 L. T. 905; 5 Asp. M. C. 338.

Receiver.]—The court will appoint a receiver in a co-ownership suit where the circumstances exist which in the opinion of the court render such a course just and convenient. The Ampthill, 5 P. D. 224.

Account—After Sale of Share.]—A. and B. were co-owners of a ship. A. sold his share to a third person, and afterwards instituted a suit in rem in the Court of Admiralty to have an account taken between himself and B. in relation to the employment and earnings of the ship during the time he and B. were co-owners:—Held, that as the suit related to questions which arose between the parties while they were co-owners, the court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit, notwithstanding A. had ceased to be a co-owner at the time of the institution of the suit. The Lady of the Lake, 39 L. J., Adm. 40; L. R. 3 A. & E. 29; 21 L. T. 683; 18 W. R. 528.

—— What should be Included—Account of Ship's Agent.]—In an action for settlement of accounts between co-owners under s. 8 of the Admiralty Court Act, 1861, the plaintiff is entitled only to settlement of such accounts as are or ought to be rendered before the writ. If a co-owner is ship's agent for a coasting steamer at a port of call the amount due to him as agent cannot be recovered in a co-ownership action. The Eider, 40 L. T. 463 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 104.

Of Managing Owner.]—See The Mount Vernon, and cases ante, cols. 59, et circa.

Reference—Report—Stay of Execution—Costs.]—A managing owner, who had not delivered accounts for nine years, instituted a co-ownership action for settlement of accounts, and for payment of the balance found due to him, and claimed certain items in respect of materials supplied to the ship for which he had not paid, and for which the defendants were being sued in the Queen's Bench Division. The registrar in his report allowed the plaintiff these items. Upon application to confirm the report, and for judgment, the court decreed payment of the amount found due by the registrar, but stayed execution until the defendants were protected against the claims in the Queen's Bench Division, and refused the plaintiff the costs of the action upon the ground of delay in rendering his accounts. The Charles Jackson, 52 L. T. 631 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 399.

—— Objection to Report.]—Where an action is instituted in an admiralty district registry by part owners of a ship against the managing owner for an account, and the writ claims an account under Ord. III. r. 8, and an order for the filing of the accounts is made under Ord. XV. r. 1, and the account is proceeded with pursuant to order, and the district registrar reports thereon, such report is to be treated as the usual report in an Admiralty Court action, and if the defendant seeks to take objection thereto, he must do so according to the provisions of Ord. LVI. r. 11, otherwise the plaintiff will be entitled to judgment thereon. Gowan v. Sprott, 51 L. T. 266 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 288.

—— Objecting to—Extension of Time.]—The court will not extend the time for objecting to the registrar's report in a co-ownership action without special grounds being shewn by the party seeking to object. Ib.

Charterparty—Authority of Managing Owner.]—The managing owner of the ship "V.," with the authority of his co-owners, entered into negotiations abroad with the view of chartering the ship. These negotiations were carried on by an agent abroad. On the 17th July, 1884, a form of charter, signed by the managing owner, was offered to the proposed charterers. They objected to certain provisions in it, to which objections the agent, with the managing owner's authority, assented. On the 19th July the charterers signed the charter, having previously introduced into it certain further alterations which had never been suggested to the managing owner's agent. On the same day certain of the co-owners gave notice to the managing owner that they refused to be bound by any charter. The managing owner, considering himself bound to sign the charterparty, signed it on the 22nd July. The execution of the charterparty was prevented by the arrest of the "V." by the dissentient owners, and damages resulted therefrom :—Held, in a co-ownership action, that there was no binding contract until the managing owner signed the charter on the 22nd July, and that, as the dissenting owners had revoked their authority on the 19th July, they were not bound by the charter. The Vindobala, 58 L. J., Adm. 51 ; 14 P. D. 50 ; 60 L. T. 657 ; 37 W. R. 409 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 376—C. A.

Citation.] — In a cause between co-owners, under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 10, s. 8, the court granted a citation in personam on the defendant, and a monition on the London Dock Company to bring in freight detained by them under a stop-order from the defendant. The Meggie, L. R. 1 A. & E. 77.

19. Necessaries.

a. Generally.

Material Men have no Lien on the Proceeds of the Ship sold by the Court.]—Material men have no lien for supplies furnished in England on the proceeds of a ship sold by decree of the Admiralty Court in a wages suit. The Neptune, Hodges v. Sims, 3 Knapp, P. C. 94.

Lien — Practice of Admiralty Court.] — Although there was no lien for necessaries, the Admiralty Court previously to The Neptune (supra), allowed material men to claim against the proceeds of a ship remaining in the registry. The Wharton, 3 Hag. Adm. 148, n.

—— Arrest for general Balance of Account.]—The agents of a foreign ship, being also part owners, supplied her from time to time with coals, and made disbursements, receiving freight, and crediting the same in their accounts. They arrested the ship for a balance due upon the same account :—Held, that the arrest was invalid. The West Friesland or The Twentje, Van Hasselt v. Sack, Swabey, 456 ; 2 L. T. 613 ; 8 W. R. 423—P. C. Reversing S. C., nom. The West Friesland (otherwise Twenje), Swabey 454 ; 5 Jur. (N.S) 658. See also The Ella A. Clark, infra, col. 965 ; The Princess Charlotte, infra, col. 965.

3 & 4 Vict. c. 65—Necessaries Supplied before the Act.]—The statute 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, enabled the admiralty to entertain a claim for necessaries supplied to a foreign ship before the passing of the act. The Alexander, 1 W. Rob. 288, 346.

Inquiry whether any Sum Due.] — Under Ord. XXXIII., Judicature Act, 1875, in an action for necessaries, the court, in its discretion, ordered enquiries to be made before judgment, whether any and what sum is due. The Sully, 48 L. J., Adm. 56.

Necessaries Supplied to Foreign Ship — Jurisdiction.]—See The Anna, infra, col. 965.

Jurisdiction of Court of Passage.]—See The Dowse, supra, col. 945.

Title of Suit—Repairs.]—The institution of a suit as a cause of necessaries does not estop the plaintiff from afterwards pleading, and proving that his claim is in respect of repairs ; but the title of the cause must be amended. The Shipworth, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 445 ; 10 L. T. 43.

Contempt of Court by Master.]—Where, on a claim for necessaries, the master, in contempt of the warrant, sailed out of the jurisdiction, the court allowed a cause for necessaries to be set down, and the plaintiff to file proofs; and, upon such proof of the facts, condemned the ship in the claim and costs. The Lady Blessington, 34 L. J., Adm. 72.

Bankruptcy Jurisdiction of County Court—Vice-Admiralty Court—Injunction.]—A county court had jurisdiction in bankruptcy under 32 & 33 Vict. c 71, s. 72, to restrain a person trading in London from enforcing in a vice-admiralty court at Sierra Leone a claim for necessaries supplied abroad, on the order of the master, to a ship belonging to the bankrupt after the filing of the petition. The Albion, Halliday v. Harris, or Harris v. Halliday, 43 L. J., C. P. 350; L. R. 9 C. P. 668; 27 L. T. 732; 22 W. R. 756; 1 Asp. M. C. 481.

Vice-Admiralty Court—24 & 25 Vict. c. 24.]—A vice-admiralty court in a British possession has no jurisdiction under 24 Vict. c. 24, s. 10, to entertain a suit for necessaries supplied at a port out of that possession. A master can only claim against the ship for disbursements from the date at which he is on the ship's register as master. Ib.

b. What are.

Meaning of Term Generally.] — The term "necessaries," in the statutes giving the admiralty court jurisdiction over such claims, has the same meaning as is given to it by the common law courts, and signifies whatever the owner of a vessel, as a prudent man, if present under circumstances in which his agent in his absence is called upon to act, would have ordered. The Riga, 41 L. J., Adm. 39; L. R. 3 A. & E. 516; 26 L. T. 202; 20 W. R. 927; 1 Asp. M. C. 246.

"Necessaries," in 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 6, mean articles immediately necessary for the ship, as contradistinguished from those merely neccessary for the voyage. The Comtesse de Trègeville, Lush. 329; 4 L. T. 713.

The statute does not apply to ordinary mercantile accounts between shipowner and agent. Ib.

Premiums on Insurance—Ship Dues—Brokerage.]—Premiums paid by a shipbroker at the owner's request to procure insurance on freight are necessaries. Mackintosh v. Mitcheson, 4 Ex. 175; 18 L. J., Ex. 385.

Charges paid by a shipbroker at the owner's request for entering, reporting, and piloting a ship, and for tonnage and light-dues, and for noting protest, are within the term. Ib.

Advances at the owner's request for travelling expenses of the master and goods supplied for the ship's use are necessaries. Ib.

Brokerage charges made by a ship's broker for acting as ship's agent, and for negotiating a charterparty may be necessaries within the meaning of the statutes, but must be proved to come within the definition. Ib.

Premiums on insurance not necessaries. The Heinrich Bjorn, supra, col. 966.

Coppering Ship.]—When it is necessary that a wooden ship bound upon a particular voyage should be coppered, the coppering is a necessary for the voyage, which gives the material-man doing the work to a foreign ship, upon the orders of the master, a maritime lien. The Turliani, 32 L. T. 341; 2 Asp. M. C. 603.

Copper sheathing is a necessary. The Perla, Swabey, 353; 4 Jur (N.S.) 741.

Agent's Expenses — Collision Suit.] — The expenses of an agent for coming from Newcastle to London to assist the master in the defence of a vessel prosecuted in a cause of collision, and for attending the trial are not necessaries. The Bonne Amélie, 35 L. J., Adm. 115; L. R. 1 A. E. 19; 14 L. T. 191; 6 Asp. M. C. 149.

Supplies Generally.]—Necessaries are whatever is fit and proper for the service of the ship, and whatever a prudent owner would provide. The onus of proving the necessity is on the material-man. The Alexander, 1 W. Rob. 288, 346.

Butcher's Meat.]—The N. R. Gosfabrick, Swabey, 344; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 742; 6 W. R. 871.

Coals.]—See The Twentje, or West Friesland, supra, col. 960.

Expenses of Defending Collision Action.]—The expenses of an agent coming from Newcastle to London to assist the master in a suit against the ship in admiralty:—Held, not to be necessaries. The Bonne Amélie, 35 L. J., Adm. 115; L. R. 1 A. & E. 19; 14 L. T. 191; 6 Asp. M. C. 149.

Repairs to Machinery.]—Repairs to machinery of a steamship, in order to make her seaworthy, are necessaries within 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65. The Flecha, 1 Spinks, 438.

Charterparty — Broker's Commission.] — The "M.," while on a voyage, was chartered by her owners, through shipbrokers, for a future voyage. Subsequently the shipbrokers arrested the "M." in a suit for necessaries, to recover their commission on obtaining the charterparty:—Held, that the commission was not a "necessary." The Marianne, 60 L. J., Adm. 39; [1891] P. 180; 64 L. T. 539; 7 Asp. M. C. 34.

Money Advanced.]—Money advanced to provide necessaries, held to be "necessaries" within 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 6. The Sophie, 1 W. Rob. 369.

Advances in a foreign port to procure necessaries may be recovered as necessaries. The Masonic, 5 L. T. 460.

Moneys obtained by means of a bill of exchange to procure necessaries are necessaries within 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 6. The Anna, 46 L. J., Adm. 15; 1 P. D. 253; 34 L. T. 895; 3 Asp. M. C. 337—C. A.

A simple contract creditor for payment of seamen's wages and board has no lien on the ship. The proceeds of a ship salved as a derelict therefore (following The Neptune, supra, col. 960) paid out to salvors and mortgagees. The New Eagle, 2 W. Rob. 441.

The agents of a foreign ship in a British port, who have paid for necessaries supplied to her, or who have rendered themselves liable to pay for such necessaries, may sue the ship for such advances as were made on her account, but not for the balance of a general account against her owners. The Underwriter, 25 L. T. 279; 1 Asp. M. C. 127.

A firm in England having accepted and paid a bill of exchange drawn on them by the master of a foreign ship abroad, to procure necessaries, may sue the ship in the admiralty court, as for necessaries. The Onni, Lush. 154; 3 L. T. 447. S. C., infra.

A repayment of a debt due from the ship for the supply of necessaries does not place the person making such repayment in the position of a person supplying the necessaries, even though such repayment was required by the law of the country where the supply was made, and the ship could not leave the port until such repayment had been made. The Pacific, Br. & Lush. 243; 33 L. J., Adm. 120; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1110; 10 L. T. 541; cf. The Flor de Funchal, infra, col. 967.

A claim for money advanced to a master to pay average dismissed, such advances not being necessaries within 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 6. The Aaltje Willemina, L. R. 1 A. & E. 107.

—— Liabilities of Master.]—Necessaries having been supplied to a ship in a foreign port, they were paid for by the agents at that port, the master indorsing the accounts to the agents, when sent to him, with a request to them to pay, and signing them. The master was accredited to the agents by his owners, and the former were to draw bills on the owners for the amounts advanced. No money passed through the master's hands. When the ship arrived in England, the mortgagees took possession of her and the freight:—Held, that as the master became personally liable for the amounts so paid, he had a right to proceed in rem against the ship. The Marco Polo, 24 L. T. 804; 1 Asp. M. C. 54.

—— To Release Ship.]—A master and sole owner of a vessel put her into a shipwright's dock for repair. The shipwright repaired the vessel, and refused to allow her to leave his dock until his bill for the repairs was paid for. The master having no funds the plaintiff lent him money to pay the shipwright's bill, and the master paid the bill with the money lent:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount of the loan in a suit for necessaries. The Albert Crosby, L. R. 2 A. & E. 37; 18 W. R. 410.

—— To pay off Bondholder.]—Money advanced to the master of a foreign ship in London to pay off a bondholder who had arrested the ship, is not necessaries within 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65. But the persons interested not opposing, moneys in court representing proceeds of the ship were paid out to the lender. The Henry Read, 7 W. R. 180.

A Dutch ship, on her voyage to Liverpool, was driven to Stornoway, where she had to refit. Merchants at Liverpool advanced 200*l.* for the purpose, and afterwards, at Liverpool, a further sum to defray port charges, and other necessary expenses. The ship was arrested and sold in a necessaries suit, under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 8, at the instance of the merchants:—Held, in the absence of opposition by the shipowners, that the 200*l.*, as well as the further sum advanced at Liverpool, could be paid out to the lenders. The Afina Van Singe, Swabey, 514; 1 L. T. 340.

An advance of money to pay off a bottomry bond for which a ship is arrested, being made under a contract to pay off claims outstanding on the ship, and outfit her for a new voyage, in consideration of receiving brokerage and the prepaid freight for the new voyage, is not within 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 6, and cannot be recovered in the admiralty court. The Onni, Lush, 154; 3 L. T. 447, S. C. supra.

—— To get Master out of Gaol.]—A foreign ship cannot be sued for money advanced to the master to enable him to come out of gaol, where he was imprisoned for a debt incurred for necessaries supplied to the ship. The N. R. Gosfabrick, Swabey, 344; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 742; 6 W. R. 871.

c. Lien.

There is no maritime lien for necessaries. Buxton v. Snee, 1 Ves. Sen. 154. But see Benzen v. Jeffries, aliter, and cases supra, col. 929.

One who supplies necessaries has no lien upon the ship. Wood v. Hamilton, H. L. 15th June, 1789, cited, Maclachlan on Shipping (3rd Ed.), 68.

One who supplied necessaries to a ship formerly held to have a lien on her. Watson v. Warner, Sid. pt. 2, 161; Farmer v. Davies, 1 Term Rep. 108; Anon., Sid. pt. 1, 453; Rich v. Coe, 2 Cowp. 636; 1 Term R. 108, n.

—— Or, in equity, upon her earnings, in case of the bankruptcy of her owner. Hill, Ex parte, 1 Madd. 61.

No lien for necessaries can be created by parol, or by bills drawn by the master. Hallett, Ex parte, 19 Ves. 474; 3 V. & B. 135; 2 Rose, 194, 229.

The ship cannot be sued in admiralty for provisions supplied to her. Nature of process against the ship considered. Smith v. Tilly, 1 Keb. 708.

The jurisdiction conferred on the court of admiralty by the Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (24 Vict. c. 10), s. 5, "over any claim for necessaries supplied to any ship elsewhere than in the port to which the ship belongs," does not create a maritime lien, nor render the ship chargeable for necessaries. The Two Ellens, Johnson v. Black, 8 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 398; 41 L. J., Adm. 33; L. R. 4 P. C. 161; 26 L. T. 1; 20 W. R. 592; 1 Asp. M. C. 208—P. C.

The material-man has no maritime lien, his right to the res as a security only arises upon his instituting a suit; any security he may thus obtain is subject therefore to any then existing claims; and a registered mortgage takes precedence as an existing encumbrance over a claim for necessaries, though supplied previously to the register of the mortgage. The Pacific, Br. & Lush. 243; 33 L. J., Adm. 120; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1110; 10 L. T. 541.

The lien of the plaintiff in an action in rem, under s. 4 of the Admiralty Court Act, 1861, takes effect from the moment of the arrest of the ship. Where, therefore, such an action was commenced against a vessel belonging to a limited company, and the company, after a warrant of arrest had been served, was ordered to be wound up:—Held, that the official liquidator had no claim to the proceeds of the vessel in the hands of the court as against the plaintiff. The Cella, 57 L. J., Adm. 55; 13 P. D. 82; 59 L. T. 125; 36 W. R. 540; 6 Asp. M. C. 293—C. A.

No maritime lien attaches to a ship in respect of costs or other necessaries supplied to it. The Rio Tinto, Laws v. Smith, 9 App. Cas. 356; 50 L. T. 461; 5 Asp. M. C. 224—P. C.

Necessaries do not ab origine give a lien, but only a statutory remedy against the ship. The Gustaf, Lush. 506; 31 L. J., Adm. 207; 6 L. T. 660.

A material-man, who supplies stores and materials for the equipment of a British ship, having no maritime lien, cannot enforce his claim against the ship in the hands of a subsequent purchaser, even though such purchaser has notice at the time of purchase that the claim is still unpaid. The Aneroid, 47 L. J., Adm. 15; 2 P. D. 189; 36 L. T. 448; 3 Asp. M. C. 418.

Court of Chancery—Jurisdiction.]—The court of equity had concurrent jurisdiction with the admiralty in cases of necessaries and wages, creating a lien on the ship. Allport v. Thomas, Gilbert, Eq. 227.

Proceeds of Ship sold by Court.]—Proceeds of a ship sold for wages, and bottomry not paid out to material-men. The Maitland, 2 Hag. Adm. 253. See also The Neptune, supra, col. 960.

d. Foreign Ships.

Ship Colonial built and owned.]—A vessel built and registered at New Brunswick and owned in Nova Scotia:—Held, not to be a foreign ship or sea-going vessel, within 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 6. The Ocean Queen, 1 W. Rob. 457.

Transfer to British Owner.]—A claim for necessaries supplied to a foreign ship may be enforced by proceedings in rem under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 6, notwithstanding a subsequent and bonâ fide transfer to a British owner, and this remedy is not taken away by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 10, s. 5, though the British owner is domiciled in England at the time of the institution of the cause. The Ella A. Clark, Br. & Lush. 32; 32 L. J., Adm. 211; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 312; 8 L. T. 119; 11 W. R. 524.

The 24 & 25 Vict. c. 10, s. 5, does not apply to ships foreign owned at the time when the necessaries were furnished. Ib.

A vessel foreign owned at the time when necessaries are supplied to her, cannot, by a subsequent sale, change her legal position so as to deprive the person supplying the necessaries of the remedies given by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 6. The Princess Charlotte, 33 L. J., Adm. 188.

Supplied in Foreign Port.]—The court of admiralty has no jurisdiction, either under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, or under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 10, to entertain a claim for repairs done, and necessaries supplied, to a foreign ship in a foreign port. The India, 32 L. J., Adm. 185; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 417; 9 L. T. 234; 11 W. R. 536. Overruled by The Mecca, infra.

Articles supplied for the equipment of a vessel building in a foreign dockyard are not necessaries within the meaning of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 6. The Ocean, 2 W. Rob. 368; 9 Jur. 381.

—— Supplied in Colonial Ports.]—The court has jurisdiction to entertain a claim against a foreign ship to recover payments made to enable the master of the ship to supply her with necessaries while lying in a British colonial port. The Anna, 46 L. J., Adm. 15; 1 P. D. 253; 34 L. T. 895—C. A.

The admiralty division of the high court has jurisdiction to entertain an action brought for necessaries supplied to a foreign ship in a British colonial port. Ib.

The master of a foreign vessel lying in the port of Quebec, being without funds or credit, by means of a bill of exchange drawn upon a firm of shipbrokers in London, procured the advance of a sum of money for necessaries for the ship. The bill was accepted and paid, but the acceptors, not having received the amount of the bill from the shipowners, instituted an action against the ship for the amount of the bill:—Held, that the court of admiralty had jurisdiction to entertain the action. Ib.

An American ship, supplied with necessaries at the Cape of Good Hope by an English firm having an establishment there, on her arrival in the port of London, was arrested at the suit of the merchant who supplied the necessaries, and, with the consent of the owner, sold. Payment to him out of the proceeds was opposed by the mortgagees of the vessel; but the court held that it had jurisdiction on a claim for necessaries supplied to a foreign vessel in the colonial as well as in British ports, and decreed payment accordingly. The Wataga, Swabey, 165; 5 W. R. 155.

—— Supplied to Foreign Vessel in English Port.]—The statute 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 6, does not give a maritime lien in respect of necessaries supplied to a foreign ship in an English port. The Heinrich Björn, Northcote v. Heinrich Björn (Owners), 55 L. J., Adm. 80; 11 App. Cas. 270; 55 L. T. 66; 6 Asp. M. C. 1—H. L. (E.)

The plaintiffs advanced to the part-owner of a foreign ship, then at Liverpool, money for necessaries for the ship. The part-owner having sold his interest in the ship to the defendants, the plaintiffs brought an action in rem for the amount of the advances:—Held, that the action could not be maintained. Ib.

—— Supplied in Foreign Port—"High Seas."]—An action in rem may be maintained against a foreign ship, if found in this country, in respect of necessaries supplied to such ship in a foreign port (not being the port to which the ship belongs), whether or not such foreign port be on the high seas. The India, supra, col. 965, overruled. As to what constitutes a place "on the high seas," quære. The Mecca, 64 L. J., Adm. 40; [1895] P. 95; 11 R. 742; 71 L. T. 711; 43 W. R. 209; 7 Asp. M. C. 529—C. A.

Owners domiciled in England or Wales—Meaning of Term.]—The term "domiciled," in 24 & 25 Vict. c. 10, s. 5, is used in its known legal sense; and an action for necessaries will not lie against a ship, the owner of which is temporarily absent from this country. The Pacific, Br. & Lush. 243; 33 L. J., Adm. 120; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1110; 10 L. T. 541.

—— County Court.]—When a suit is instituted in a county court, under 31 & 32 Vict. c. 71, s. 3, for necessaries supplied to a ship, the objection that the owner or part-owner of the ship is domiciled in England or Wales must be taken before judgment is pronounced. Michael, Ex parte, 41 L. J., Q. B. 349; L. R. 7 Q. B. 658; 26 L. T. 871; 1 Asp. M. C. 337.

When the objection is taken for the first time after judgment has been pronounced, a prohibition will not be granted. Ib.

Agent of Foreign Ship on the Spot ready to supply Necessaries.]—Semble, an action will not lie against a foreign ship for necessaries, under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, although there is an agent of the owner upon the spot ready to supply the necessary funds. The Helena Sophia, 3 W. Rob. 265.

The lender of money to buy necessaries has the same right against the ship as a material-man. Ibid.

e. Priorities.

Between Necessaries Men.]—Amongst several claimants for necessaries, he who first established his claim has precedence. The Queen, 19 L. T. 705.

Where one only of several plaintiffs in different causes of necessaries has obtained a decree of the court, he is entitled to be paid in priority; the others, being in pari conditione, share ratably. The William F. Safford, Lush. 69; 29 L. J., Adm. 109; 2 L. T. 301.

Plaintiff in possession of a ship, arrested for necessaries, under first decree; subsequent arrests by other claimants for necessaries; proceeds of sale of ship insufficient; pro rata payment ordered. The Desdemona, Swabey, 158.

Ship sold and Proceeds brought into Court—Order and Distribution of Fund.]—Where a ship has been sold and the proceeds paid into court, claims for necessaries, in respect of which actions have been brought, take priority inter se, neither according to priority of writ nor of judgment, but the fund is to be distributed pro ratâ as between the persons who assert their claims before an unconditional decree is pronounced. The Africano, 63 L. J., Adm. 125; [1894] P. 141; 6 R. 767; 70 L. T. 250; 42 W. R. 413; 7 Asp. M. C. 427.

Even if the decree in an action for necessaries were in any instance made in unconditional terms, it would appear that, so long as the fund remains in court, the decree could and should be modified so as to let in other persons who without laches put forth claims of a like character. Ib.

Quære, whether, when, as in the present case, a judgment has been obtained in the county court, and the action is subsequently transferred to the high court, such a judgment gives any priority. Ib.

Mortgagee.]—A claim by the plaintiff in an action for necessaries brought under s. 4 (or, semble, under s. 5) of the Admiralty Court Act, 1861, even though it includes wages paid to the ship's crew at the request of the owner, is not entitled to precedence of a mortgagee's claim. Semble, precedence might have been gained by obtaining prior permission from the court to make the payment. The Lyons, 57 L. T. 818; 6 Asp. M. C. 199. And see IX. MORTGAGE, ante, cols. 189, seq.

Advance of Freight to enable Master to Pay Disbursements.]—An advance of freight to enable a master to pay his ship's disbursements before sailing does not give the charterer a claim against the ship which will take precedence of the claim of a mortgagee; nor does an advance for a similar purpose made by an insurance company. The Turliani, 32 L. T. 841; 2 Asp. M. C. 603.

Necessaries Lien ranks after Bottomry.]—See The William F. Safford, supra.

A claim against a ship for necessaries supplied, when made, not by the person who actually supplies them, but by the broker who procured them to be supplied, and paid for them on account of the ship, does not take precedence of a claim under a bottomry bond. The Flor de Funchal, 35 L. J., Adm. 119; 13 W. R. 1000.

Ship Agent postponed to Shipwright.]—A ship's agent was appointed by the master on his arrival at Bristol. He had no previous knowledge of either master or owner, but made no inquiries as to how he was to be repaid his advances for necessaries. He allowed the vessel to be placed in the hands of a shipwright to be repaired, and when her value was by this means increased, caused her to be arrested:—Held, that he was not entitled to be paid his claim in priority to the shipwright. The Panthea, 25 L. T. 983; 1 Asp. M. C. 133.

Shipwright's Lien.]—A foreign ship in a builder's yard at Grimsby was arrested for necessaries. It appearing that the claim was for an amount exceeding her value, an order was made for her sale, without prejudice to the builder's right to claim against the proceeds. The Nordstjernen, Swabey, 260.

Time of Attachment of Claim.]—The lien of the plaintiff in an action in rem, under s. 4 of the Admiralty Court Act, 1861, takes effect from the moment of the arrest of the ship. Where, therefore, such an action was commenced against a vessel belonging to a limited company, and the company, after a warrant of arrest had been served, was ordered to be wound up:—Held, that the official liquidator had no claim to the proceeds of the vessel in the hands of the court as against the plaintiff. The Cella, 57 L. J., Adm. 55; 13 P. D. 82; 59 L. T. 125; 36 W. R. 540; 6 Asp. M. C. 293—C. A.

20. BREACH OF CONTRACT; DAMAGE TO CARGO.

24 Vict. c. 10, s. 6—Breach of Contract by Part Owner.]—Semble, that the court of admiralty has jurisdiction to proceed in rem against a ship for breach of contract within the above act, although that breach is committed by one of the part owners of the ship only (the master), and for which the other part owners would not be responsible. The Emilien Marie, 44 L. J., Adm. 9; 32 L. T. 435; 2 Asp. M. C. 514.

—— Master Refusing to Sail to Loading Port.]—A ship was chartered to proceed to a port abroad and there take in cargo. The charterers instituted a suit against the ship, and in their petition alleged that the master of the ship improperly refused to proceed with the ship to the agreed port of loading, and proceeded with her to another port:—Held, that such conduct on the part of the master did not constitute a breach of duty or breach of contract within the above act, and that the court had no jurisdiction to entertain any claim for damages arising therefrom. The Dannebrog, 44 L. J., Adm. 21; L. R. 4 Adm. 386; 31 L. T. 759; 23 W. R. 419; 2 Asp. M. C. 452.

—— Contract referred to—Bill of Lading.]—The general words of the Admiralty Court Act, 1861, s. 6, "any claim . . . for any breach of contract on the part of the owner, &c. of the ship," have relation to the contract in the bill of lading. The Pieve Superiore, Dapueto v. Wyllie, 43 L. J., Adm. 20; L. R. 5 P. C. 482; 30 L. T. 887; 22 W. R. 777; 2 Asp. M. C. 319.

—— Breach of Duty—Improper Abandonment.]—A petition alleged that a master who was also the owner of the vessel had wilfully, improperly and fraudulently injured and abandoned her on the high seas. She was subsequently taken into port by salvors, and the owners of cargo were compelled to pay salvage to get possession of their cargo, and its delivery was consequently delayed. The master and vessel were both foreign :—Held, that the allegation "fraudulently" might be struck out of the petition; that the court had jurisdiction over the cause; and that the owners of the cargo might sue the ship in the admiralty court for the constructive damage. The Princess Royal, 39 L. J., Adm. 43; L. R. 3 A. & E. 41; 22 L. T. 39.

——Stoppage in Transitu—Refusal to Deliver.]—Upon a vendor asserting his right to stop in transitu, the master, unless aware of some legal defeasance of such right, is bound to deliver the goods to him, and his refusal to deliver constitutes a breach of duty for which the ship will be liable. The Tigress, Br. & Lush. 38; 32 L. J., Adm. 97; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 361; 8 L. T. 117; 11 W. R. 538.

—— With respect to Protest.]—But the omission by the master of certain particulars in his protest is not a breach of duty or contract on the part of the shipowner or his servants, so as to give the owner of the damaged goods a right of action, even if such omission has been made from improper motives. The Santa Anna, 32 L. J., Adm. 198.

Collision—Damage to Cargo.]—Under 24 Vict. c. 10, s. 7, the admiralty division has no jurisdiction to entertain an action in rem by the owners of cargo against the vessel on which it was laden for damage done to such cargo. The Victoria, 56 L. J., Adm. 75; 12 P. D. 105; 56 L. T. 499; 35 W. R. 291; 6 Asp. M. C. 120.

Carriage into English Port.]—The admiralty court has jurisdiction under 24 Vict. c. 10, s. 7, in case of short delivery of cargo to be carried into an English port, although the goods are not in fact so carried into port. The Danzig, Br. & Lush. 102; 32 L. J., Adm. 164; 9 L. T. 236.

A ship under charter to proceed to certain ports in England for orders to discharge at a port in England or on the continent, entered Falmouth with her cargo for orders, and was ordered to discharge at Bremen, where she did discharge her cargo. She then sailed for Cardiff, where she was arrested by process of the admiralty court :—Held, that inasmuch as the cargo was deliverable at a port in England, and as the ship with her cargo had entered such a port for orders, the cargo had been "carried into a port" in England within the meaning of the above section. The Piere Superiore, supra.

The court has jurisdiction only where the breach of contract complained of has been committed by the ship which actually brings the goods into a port in England and Wales. The Ironsides, Lush. 458; 31 L. J., Adm. 129; 6 L. T. 59.

Where, therefore, a part of goods shipped on board vessel "A." was lost, and the remainder was transhipped and brought into an English port on board vessel "B." :—Held, that no jurisdiction was given to it to arrest "B." to satisfy the owner of the goods lost. Ib.

But the court of admiralty has jurisdiction over a claim for short delivery of cargo as per bill of lading in a British port, though the goods not delivered were not in fact carried into port. The Danzig, Br. & Lush. 112; 32 L. J., Adm. 164; 9 L. T. 236.

A foreign vessel was chartered to carry coals on the charterer's account to a foreign port, and bring home to England a return cargo of timber; the charterers sued the ship claiming damages for nondelivery of certain coals on the outward voyage and for the improper delivery of the timber on the return voyage :—Held, that they were not entitled to sue in respect of the nondelivery of the coals abroad, as the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 10, s. 6, did not give the court of admiralty such jurisdiction. The Kusan, Br. & Lush. 1; 32 L. J., Adm. 97; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 234.

To a claim for damage to goods imported, instituted under the above provision, a claim of set-off for freight due under the bills of lading will not be allowed. The Don Francisco, Lush. 468; 31 L. J., Adm. 14; 5 L. T. 460.

The words "goods carried into any port in England," in 24 & 25 Vict. c. 10, s. 6, do not mean goods imported into England exclusively. The Bahia, Br. & Lush. 61.

When, therefore, the master of a foreign ship having a cargo consigned from New York to Dunkirk, in France, put into Ramsgate and landed the cargo, and refused either to carry it on to Dunkirk or to give delivery to the owners at Ramsgate :—Held, that for such breach of duty by the master the ship could be sued in the Admiralty Court. Ib.

No Lien.]—The Admiralty Court Act, 1861, s. 6, does not confer a maritime lien. It only gives to the court of admiralty jurisdiction to entertain a suit either in personam or in rem by arrest of the ship whenever it comes within reach of process. The arrest cannot avail against any valid charge on the ship, nor against a bonâ fide purchaser. The Cella, ante, col. 968. S. P., The Piere Superiore, supra.

Who may Sue.]—An indorsee of a bill of lading may sue for damage to cargo under the Bills of Lading Act, 1856 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 111), and in the case of a foreign ship, take proceedings in rem under the Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (24 Vict. c. 10), although at the institution of the suit he has sold the cargo. The Marathon, 40 L. T. 163; 4 Asp. M. C. 75.

Where the plaintiffs in an action for damage to cargo had indorsed their bills of lading to a bank to secure advances :—Held, that they retained an interest in the cargo sufficient to enable them to maintain their suit, the money recovered to be for the benefit of the parties shewn to be entitled thereto. The Glamorganshire, 13 App. Cas. 454; 59 L. T. 572; 6 Asp. M. C. 344—P. C.

Interpleader.]—Where proceedings in admiralty have been taken against a ship by two persons claiming to be owners of cargo, for breach of duty by the master in not delivering the cargo :—Semble, interpleader will not lie because the suit is against the ship and not against the master. Sablicich v. Russell, L. R. 2 Eq. 441; 14 W. R. 913.

Damages referred to Registrar.]—In cases brought under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 10, s. 6, the damages will be referred to the registrar and merchants, with instructions to follow the rules of the courts of common law as to the measure of damage. The St. Cloud, Br. & Lush. 4; 8 L. T. 54.

Shipowner residing in England.]—See Michael, Ex parte, ante, col. 966. The Ella A. Clark, ante, col. 965.

Inspection.]—See Daniel v. Bond, post, col. 997.

Limitation of Liability—Stay.]—See The Alne Holme, post, col. 749.

Preliminary Act.]—See The John Boyne, post, col. 843.

County Court Jurisdiction.]—See The Rona, and cases, ante, col. 939.

21. SLAVE TRADE; PIRACY; BOUNTIES.

Slave Trade.]—The treaty with Portugal as to slave trade relates to seizures on the high sea and not in territorial waters. The Ricardo Schmidt, 4 Moore, P. C. 121; L. R. 1 P. C. 268. Approved, The Ovareuse, Reg. v. Casaca, 49 L. J., P. C. 41; 5 App. Cas. 548; 43 L. T. 290; 4 Asp. M. C. 308—P. C.

Evidence sufficient to justify seizures on the high sea is not sufficient when the vessel is in harbour and her papers may be examined. Ib.

A seizor may be condemned in costs and damages for wrongful seizure, notwithstanding the presence of suspicious articles on board. Ib.

In cases of joint capture of slave ships the same principles applied, as nearly as may be, as in cases of joint capture of a prize in war; statement of the principles. The Sociedade Feliz, 1 W. Rob. 303.

In a case of joint capture of a slave ship it is not necessary that the claimant should have been seen by the prize. Brig, name unknown, Br. & Lush. 370.

Ship condemned for Slave Trading—Title to Proceeds.]—The Marianna, ante, col. 951.

Pirates—Bounties for Capture of.]—Bounties under 6 Geo. 4, c. 49, decreed for destruction of pirates. Piratical Proahs, 3 Hag. Adm. 426. Vessel, name unknown, 1 W. Rob. 461. The Serhassan Pirates, 2 W. Rob. 354. The Illeanon Pirates, 6 Moore, P. C. 471.

Bounties for capture of pirates by boats detached from their ships distributable amongst the whole ship's company. Two Piratical Gunboats, 2 Hag. Adm. 407.

Meaning of "Piracy"—Extradition Act.]—In the Extradition Act, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 76, 81, "piracy" means piracy by the law of the United States, and not piracy by the law of nations. In time of peace any act of depredation to a ship is piracy; in time of war, aliter. Tivnan, In re, 5 B. & S. 645.

Claim of Admiral to share Bounty.]—The provisions of 6 Geo. 4, c. 49, as to salvage on rescue from pirates are not retrospective. The claim of the admiral to share as a constructive salvor rejected. The Calypso, 3 Hag. Adm. 209.

22. PRACTICE.

a. Practitioners.

Proctor's Lien.]—A proctor has the same lien for his costs as an attorney has on sums of money decreed by the court to be paid. The Araminta, Swabey, 81; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 310; 4 W. R. 396.

The court will give effect to a proctor's lien notwithstanding a garnishee order obtained against money in the registry. The Jeff Davis, L. R. 2 A. & E. 1; 17 L. T. 151.

Where, in a suit for master's wages, upon a counter-claim for purchase-money of shares in the vessel (contracted to be purchased) being set up by the owner, a reference to the registrar and merchants resulted in a balance being found against the master:—Held, that the solicitors for the master were entitled under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127, s. 28, to a charge upon such shares for their costs. The Philippine, L. R. 1 A. & E. 309; 16 L. T. 34; 15 W. R. 462.

After payment of the amount awarded for salvage and costs, the defendant's proctor has against the property salved a lien in priority to average expenses or necessaries incurred since the salvage. The Soblomsten, 36 L. J., Adm. 5; L. R. 1 A. & E. 293; 15 L. T. 393; 15 W. R. 591.

A plaintiff having obtained a decree for payment by the defendant of a sum of money and costs, he paid part of the sum to the judgment creditors of the plaintiff, under the authority of two garnishee orders. The plaintiff's attorneys had a lien for their costs at the time the orders were made, but no notice had been given to them previously to the application for the orders, nor was the existence of their lien mentioned to the judge who made the orders:—Held, that the defendant ought to have caused notice to be given to the attorneys, or ought to have apprised the judge of the existence of their lien before the orders were finally made, and that the payment under the orders was not a valid satisfaction of the judgment of the court. The Leader, 37 L. J., Adm. 57; L. R. 2 A. & E. 314; 18 L. T. 767; 17 W. R. 61.

The freight and proceeds of sale of a ship were insufficient to pay the following claims: first, solicitor's costs of successfully defending the ship in the first action, for breach of contract; second, necessaries supplied before and after the first suit; third, money advanced to pay harbour dues, &c.; fourth, wages of master, also part owner:—Held, that the solicitor's lien had priority to the necessaries supplied after, but not to those furnished before, the institution of the first suit, and to the claim for wages, but not to the claim for moneys advanced for harbour dues. The Heinrich, 41 L. J., Adm. 68; L. R. 3 A. & E. 505; 26 L. T. 372; 20 W. R. 759; 1 Asp. M. C. 79.

Solicitors for defendants in a salvage suit against a foreign ship, who are entitled to a charge upon the ship or the proceeds thereof for their costs and expenses incurred in the preservation of the property, do not take priority of the claim of the foreign government, who, on the abandonment of the ship by her owners, are entitled by the provisions of their code to a lien upon the ship or the proceeds for the expenses of sending back the ship's crew to their own country. The Livietta, 52 L. J., Adm. 81; 8 P. D. 209; 49 L. T. 411; 5 Asp. M. C. 151—C. A.

Exhibition of Proxies.]—A proctor in the admiralty court is not usually required to exhibit a proxy, but if called upon for a proxy, he satisfies the law by stating the name of the party for whom he is authorised to appear. The Euxine, Harvey v. Euxine (Owners), 41 L. J., Adm. 17.

L. R. 4 P. C. 8; 25 L. T. 516; 20 W. R. 561; 8 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 189; 1 Asp. M. C. 155.

In the vice-admiralty courts proctors are not bound to do more than this under rule 40 of the vice-admiralty rules and regulations, unless upon a strict order of the court. Ib.

The production of a proxy, purporting to be duly signed and sealed, but without proof of the handwriting of those who appear to have subscribed the instrument, is a primâ facie compliance with an order to produce a proxy, and throws the onus of disproving its authenticity on the opponents. Ib.

An objection to a suit on the ground of the non-production of a proxy is a preliminary objection, to be raised on motion, and not on protest, and the utmost a court can do where such proxies are produced is to stay proceedings until further information can be obtained. Ib.

Changing Solicitors.]—A suit was instituted against a vessel, and an appearance entered by a firm of solicitors on behalf of the owner. A sum of money was paid into court in lieu of bail, and the solicitors thereupon procured the release of the vessel, and incurred costs in defending the suit on behalf of the owner. Whilst the suit was pending, and before any sum had been paid to the firm of solicitors on account of such costs, another firm of solicitors entered a second appearance in the same suit on behalf of the same defendant. On an application on behalf of the firm of solicitors by whom the first appearance had been entered, the court made an order setting aside the second appearance, and condemned the defendant in the costs of the motion. The Oneiza, L. R. 4 A. & E. 36; 27 L. T. 632; 21 W. R. 232; 1 Asp. M. C. 470.

b. Parties.

See also XVIII. SALVAGE, 19. PRACTICE; XX. COLLISION, 13. JURISDICTION AND PRACTICE, col. 840.

Parties—Joinder of Plaintiffs.]—The practice which existed in the admiralty court before the judicature acts, permitting several plaintiffs to sue collectively, has not been affected or altered by the judicature acts, or the rules made thereunder. Smurthwaite v. Hannay (63 L. J., Q. B. 737; [1894] A. C. 494) distinguished. The Maréchal Sucket, 65 L. J., Adm. 94; [1896] P. 233; 74 L. T. 789; 45 W. R. 141; 8 Asp. M. C. 158.

Appearance—Action in Rem.]—When a proceeding in rem is instituted in the admiralty court to enforce a maritime lien, it is wholly immaterial to whom the res belongs. The owner or other person interested may intervene to defend the suit, but the court deals with the res only, and it is the res and not the owner that is liable in the suit. The Mullingar, 26 L. T. 326; 1 Asp. M. C. 252.

Appearances in Local Registry.]—When a cause in rem has been instituted in the Liverpool district registry of the court of admiralty, the owners of the ship proceeded against, if resident out of the limits of the Liverpool district, may appear in the London registry of the admiralty division of the high court of justice, but the præcipe to enter an appearance must contain a recital of the institution of the cause in the Liverpool district registry of the court of admiralty, shewing the title under which the cause was entered at Liverpool. The General Birch, 33 L. T. 792; 24 W. R. 24; 3 Asp. M. C. 99.

Appearance under Protest to Jurisdiction.]—A defendant in an admiralty action desiring to object to the jurisdiction of the court, may enter an appearance under protest, in accordance with the practice in force in the high court of admiralty before the coming into operation of the judicature acts. The Virar, 2 P. D. 29; 35 L. T. 782; 25 W. R. 453; 3 Asp. M. C. 308—C. A.

A collision took place at sea, about ten miles from the South Stack lighthouse, between an American and a Spanish vessel. Both vessels sank in consequence of the collision, and the owners of the American vessel applied in the registry for leave to issue a writ for service out of the jurisdiction in an action to recover compensation for the loss of their vessel, against a British subject resident in Spain, who was alleged to be one of the owners of the Spanish vessel. The registrar having granted the necessary leave, the writ was issued and service was effected on the defendant in Spain. Thereupon an appearance under protest was entered on his behalf. Afterwards, on these facts being brought before the judge of the admiralty court, the court ordered the action to be dismissed:—Held, on appeal, that the order was right. Ib.

An action of co-ownership was instituted on behalf of a foreigner against a foreign vessel. On the vessel being arrested an appearance under protest was entered for another foreigner, who applied that the action should be dismissed. It appeared that the representative of the state to which the ship belonged declined to interfere, and the court dismissed the action with costs. The Agincourt, 47 L. J., Adm. 37; 2 P. D. 239.

Semble, the practice of the court of admiralty with regard to pleadings on protest is still in force in admiralty actions in the high court of justice. The Evangelistria, 46 L. J., Adm. 1; 35 L. T. 410; 25 W. R. 255; 3 Asp. M. C. 264.

Petitions on Protest.]—When a petition on protest is filed on the ground of want of jurisdiction, before the plaintiff's petition setting forth the particulars of his damage, the petition on protest ought to state the facts which shew want of jurisdiction. The Piere Superiore, Dapueto v. Wyllie, 43 L. J., Adm. 20; L. R. 2 P. C. 482; 30 L. T. 887; 22 W. R. 777; 2 Asp. M. C. 319—P. C.

Effect of Appearance—Jurisdiction.]—Substantive objections to the jurisdiction entertained after absolute appearance. The Ida, Lush. 6; 1 L. T. 417.

An absolute appearance once given cannot be recalled. The Blakeney, Swabey, 428; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 418.

Formal objections to jurisdiction not allowed to be taken after an absolute appearance given. The Bilbao, Lush. 149; 3 L. T. 338.

Where the court has no jurisdiction, the defendant is not prejudiced in his claim for damages by having appeared absolutely. The Eleonore, Br. & Lush. 185; 33 L. J., Adm. 19; 9 L. T. 397; 12 W. R. 218. S. P., The Empire Queen, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 71.

An objection to the jurisdiction may be taken at any time during the progress of the cause. The Mary Anne, 34 L. J., Adm. 73; 12 L. T. 238.

—— Cross Actions.]—Where on a collision between an English and a foreign vessel cross actions were brought by the owners of the two vessels, and in the action by the English vessel the foreign vessel did not put in an appearance:—Held, that the court could not stay the action brought by the foreign vessel until she had entered an appearance in the action against her. The Heart of Oak, 29 L. J., Adm. 78. The Maria, 39 L. T. 549; 4 Asp. M. C. 94.

Appearance in Default Actions.] — See h. DEFAULT PROCEEDINGS, infra, col. 987.

c. Writ and Appearance.

Issue and Service of Writ of Summons against Foreign Owners.]—A ship sailing under a foreign flag, and belonging to a foreign company established abroad, came into collision with, and did damage to, an English ship on the high seas. The owners of the English ship applied for leave to issue a writ of summons, of which notice should be given out of the jurisdiction, claiming compensation for the damage against the foreign company. Leave refused. Smith, In re, City of Mecca, In re, 45 L. J., Adm. 92: 1 P. D. 300; 35 L. T. 380; 24 W. R. 903; 3 Asp. M. C. 259.

The phrase, "within the jurisdiction," used in R. S. C., 1876, Ord. XI. r. 1, means territorial jurisdiction. Ib.

The ordinary courts of this country have no jurisdiction over acts done by foreigners on the high seas below low-water mark; consequently, Ord. XI. r. 1, does not warrant an order for the service of a writ on a foreigner residing abroad, in respect of a cause of action arising at sea below low-water mark, though within three miles of the English coast. Harris v. Franconia (Owners), 46 L. J., C. P. 363; 2 C. P. D. 173.

The court will not exercise jurisdiction over a foreign river, if the parties are foreigners and the subject-matter of the action is of doubtful cognizance by the court. The Ida, Lush. 6; 1 L. T. 417.

Writ in Admiralty Court — Claim within Jurisdiction of County Court.] — When there are circumstances rendering it advisable that an action which a county court has jurisdiction to try under the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, s. 3, should be commenced in the high court, such as the necessity for a commission abroad, the court will grant leave for a writ to issue under 31 & 32 Vict. c. 71, ss. 3, 9, though the cause of action may be of less amount than the limit of the county court jurisdiction. Ellis v. General Steam Navigation Co., 38 L. T. 570; 3 Asp. M. C. 581.

In such a case notice of the order made by the court should be given when the writ is served. Ib.

The court, in pursuance of the provisions of 31 & 32 Vict. c. 71, s. 9, will, should it think fit, grant an order for instituting proceedings before it, which might have been taken without agreement in the county court. The Bengal, L. R. 3 A. & E. 14; 21 L. T. 727.

Writ in Personam, Setting aside—Misdescription of Party.] — A shipowner, residing and carrying on business in Scotland, having been described on the face of a writ of summons for service within the jurisdiction, sued out against him in an action of damage in personam, as "of the city of London," applied before service of the writ and after a cross action of damage in respect of the same collision had been instituted on his behalf, that the writ should be set aside. The court refused the motion. The Helenslea, The Catalonia, 51 L. J., Adm. 16; 7 P. D. 57; 47 L. T. 446; 30 W. R. 616; 4 Asp. M. C. 594.

Consolidation before Service of Writ.]—See S.C., infra, col. 1102.

Election of Remedies in Rem or in Personam.] —Where there is a remedy both in personam and in rem, a person who has resorted to one of these remedies may, if he does not get thereby full satisfaction, resort to the other; but if a person has resorted to one of these remedies, and has recovered full compensation, and such compensation has been paid, no further proceedings can be taken. Yeo v. Tatem, The Orient, 8 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 74; 40 L. J., Adm. 29; L. R. 3 P. C. 696; 24 L. T. 918; 20 W. R. 6; 1 Asp. M. C. 108.

Writ in Rem.]—Ord. IX. r. 10, as to service of writs of summons in admiralty actions in rem, is to be strictly followed. The Marie Constance, 37 L. T. 366; 3 Asp. M. C. 505.

Service of a writ of summons on the captain on board, and nailing the warrant of arrest on the mast, are not sufficient notice of a suit in rem against the ship to all whom it may concern. Ib.

—— Amendment—Adding Parties.]—Plaintiffs commenced an action in rem under Lord Campbell's Act, on the 4th January, 1884, in respect of loss of life by collision at sea on the 10th January, 1883. After the 10th January, 1884, it having been decided in the interim that the admiralty court had no jurisdiction in such actions, the plaintiffs applied to add as defendants the owners of the wrong-doing ship personally:—Held, that the court had no power to add parties as defendants in personam in an action in rem, and that even if such power existed, the proceedings against the owners would be deemed to commence from the date of service on them of the writ of summons, and would be too late. The Bowesfield, 51 L. T. 128; 5 Asp. M. C. 265.

—— Amount claimed — Amendment after Judgment.] — After judgment in a salvage action the court allowed an amendment of the indorsement on the writ by increasing the amount claimed therein. The Dictator, 61 L. J., Adm. 73; [1892] P. 64; 66 L. T. 863; 7 Asp. M. C. 175.

Service — Default Action in Rem.] — Where the proceeds of a vessel sold by the court are in the admiralty registry, and no owner has appeared, a writ, original or amended, must be personally served on the registrar. R. S. C., Ord. IX. r. 13 (1879). The Cassiopeia, 48 L. J., Adm. 39; 4 P. D. 118; 40 L. T. 869; 27 W. R. 703; 4 Asp. M. C. 148.

Service out of the Jurisdiction—R. S. C., 1875, Ord. XI. r. 1.] — In an action by a first mortgagee of a British ship and her freight against a second mortgagee, claiming an account, an order was made for service of the amended writ upon merchants at Antwerp, claiming to retain part of the cargo for a debt due from the second mortgagee. MacStephen v. Carnegie, 42 L. T. 309; 4 Asp. M. C. 215.

d. Arrest.

Collision — Cargo — Arrest of.] — Cargo consigned to Hamburg was shipped on board a barque which came into collision with a ship off Cornwall. The barque put into Plymouth, and was with her cargo arrested there, and remained under arrest. The consignees of the cargo declined to accept it at Plymouth, and the barque was subsequently held to blame for the collision. The court decreed a release of the cargo, without costs. The Flora, 35 L. J., Adm. 15; L. R. 1 A. & E. 45; 14 L. T. 192.

Cargo on board a ship to blame for a collision can only be arrested to obtain payment of the freight due to the shipowner; and therefore, if no freight has accrued, the court will decree a release of the cargo. Ib.

A vessel was arrested in a cause of collision. At the time of the collision she had a cargo on board; at the time of the arrest a portion only of such cargo remained on board. The vessel and cargo belonged to the same owner:—Held, that the freight due upon the whole cargo must be paid into court, before the portion on board at the time of the arrest could be released. The Roecliff, 38 L. J., Adm. 56; L. R. 2 A. & E. 363; 20 L. T. 586; 17 W. R. 745.

—— Freight.]—A vessel under charterparty as to both her outward and homeward cargo, whilst on the outward voyage came into collision with another vessel:—Held, that the freight for the homeward voyage was liable to arrest for the damage. The Orpheus, 40 L. J., Adm. 24; L. R. 3 A. & E. 308; 23 L. T. 855.

If a ship is arrested for ship and freight, a party shewing a primâ facie right to freight is entitled to a release of the ship on giving bail for payment thereof, without bringing it into court. The Ringdove, Swabey, 310.

—— Receiver in Chancery—Arrest in Admiralty.]—The court of chancery appointed receivers of a freight which was arrested in admiralty before they had obtained possession of it. Release decreed in admiralty. The Bloomer, 11 L. T. 46.

Wrongful Arrest of Cargo.]—Where in a cause of collision between two vessels, foreign owned, the value of the vessel that was found solely to blame, and of her freight, was not sufficient to satisfy the damages, the court discharged the cargo from an arrest which had been made on the ground of the deficiency (even though the owner of the ship was also the owner of the cargo), with satisfaction for all loss caused by the detention. The Victor, Lush. 72; 29 L. J., Adm. 110; 2 L. T. 331.

Re-arrest—Allegation of Insufficiency of Bail.]—Ship released from arrest upon bail re-arrested upon suggestion that the bail was objected to. The objection being unfounded, plaintiff condemned in costs and damages. The Corner, Br. & Lush. 161; 33 L. J., Adm. 16; 12 L. T. 62.

In a collision suit, the ship having been released upon bail for the full sum claimed, she cannot be re-arrested if the damages prove to exceed that sum; nor, after sale of the ship in another suit, can the court apply the proceeds remaining in court towards satisfying damages, interest or costs in the collision suit. The Wild Ranger, Br. & Lush 84.

When a suit has been instituted against a vessel, and bail has been given for an estimated amount to cover damages and costs, and the damages recovered and the costs taxed are a larger sum than the bail given, and there has been no carelessness on the part of the plaintiffs, the court will issue a writ for the re-arrest of the ship to satisfy the costs, and will direct the writ to the marshal for execution. The Freedom, 41 L. J., Adm. 1; L. R. 3 A. & E. 495; 25 L. T. 392; 1 Asp. M. C. 136.

The jurisdiction which the court undoubtedly possesses, to order a second arrest in respect of the same cause of action, should be cautiously exercised. The Flora, 35 L. J., Adm. 14; L. R. 1 A. & E. 45; 14 L. T. 191.

An application for such arrest should generally be made to the court itself. Ib.

No Bail—Caveat.]—When an admiralty cause, instituted in rem against a ship, has been transferred from a county court to the court of admiralty, and no bail has been given in either court, and the ship is already under the arrest of the high court in other suits, the high court will order the issue of a caveat to prevent her release, in case the other causes should be withdrawn. The Rio Lima, 28 L. T. 775; 2 Asp. M. C. 34.

Appeal from County Court.]—In an appeal by a plaintiff from a county court in a cause in rem, in which there was a decree for the defendant, and the ship had in consequence been released, the court of admiralty, on an ex parte application of the plaintiff ordered a warrant to issue for the detention of the ship, and, as the ship proceeded against was a foreign one, did not require notice of the intention to arrest to be given to the defendant. The Freir, The Albert, 44 L. J., Adm. 49; 32 L. T. 572; 2 Asp. M. C. 589. S. P., The Miriam, 43 L. J., Adm. 35; 30 L. T. 537; 2 Asp. M. C. 259.

Companies Act, 1862 — Sequestration.]—The arrest of a vessel by the admiralty court is a sequestration within the meaning of the Companies Act, 1862, s. 163. Australian Direct Steam Navigation Co., In re, Baker, Ex parte, 44 L. J., Ch. 676; L. R. 20 Eq. 325.

Transfer from County Court.]—When causes of necessaries and wages had been instituted against a ship in the court of admiralty, and other causes of necessaries in a county court against the same ship, and the latter had been transferred after decree made to the court of admiralty for the purpose of enforcing the decrees, the ship being under the arrest of that court, the latter court ordered all the causes to be referred to the registrar and merchants to report the amount due thereon. The Turliani, 32 L. T. 841.

Semble, that where a ship is under the arrest of the court of admiralty, and causes are also instituted in the county court against the ship, she should not be arrested by the county court, as it is not probable that the ship will be removed out of the jurisdiction of the county court without satisfaction of the several claims, within the meaning of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, s. 22. Ib.

Amount Due.]—Where a ship is arrested for a specific demand, the amount cannot be referred to the registrar unless it appears that something in any event is due. The West Friesland or The Twentje, Swabey, 456; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 658—P. C.

Warrant of Arrest—Service.]—A warrant of arrest in an action in rem was issued from the city of London court directed to the high bailiff, and others the bailiffs thereof, but was, without authority from the court, served by a clerk in the high bailiff's office:—Held, that this was not a proper service of the warrant. Per Sir James Hannen: "Any officer" mentioned in 31 & 32 Vict. c. 71, s. 23, means any officer duly authorised by the court. Per Butt, J.: "That it means any officer whose ordinary duty it is to serve processes, or one duly authorised so to do." The Palomares, 54 L. J., Adm. 54; 10 P. D. 36; 52 L. T. 57; 33 W. R. 616; 5 Asp. M. C. 343.

Notice—Telegram.]—When the marshal sends by telegram to his substitute at an outport notice of the issue of a warrant, and such substitute communicates it to the master of the ship against which it is issued, it is a contempt of court to move the ship from the place where it is lying. The Seraglio, 54 L. J., Adm. 76; 10 P. D. 120; 52 L. T. 865; 34 W. R. 32; 5 Asp. M. C. 421.

Arrest of Person.]—The proceeding by arrest of the person in admiralty is obsolete. The Clara, Swabey, 1.

Release—Expense caused by Delay.]—The defendants having occasioned great delay and extra expense, so that the amount in which the action had been entered proved insufficient to cover the amount pronounced to be due to the plaintiff, with his costs of suit, the court ordered that the ship should not be released from arrest until payment of the plaintiff's claim and costs should have been made. The Helen, 14 W. R. 502.

Possessory Lien—Sailmaker.]—A sailmaker with a possessory lien on the sails cannot retain them against the officer of the admiralty who is in possession of the ship under warrant from the court. The Harmonie, 1 W. Rob. 178.

Seizure by Sheriff on fieri facias.]—After sentence by the admiralty in a bottomry suit, and warrant to sell, the sheriff cannot seize the ship upon a fieri facias. Ladbroke v. Crickett, 2 Term. Rep. 649; 1 R. R. 571.

Ship belonging to Khedive of Egypt—Sovereign Prince—Arrest.]—In a collision suit instituted by the owners, master and crew of "The Batavier" against "The Charkieh," belonging to the Khedive of Egypt, an appearance under protest was entered on behalf of the khedive and his minister of marine. "The Charkieh," carrying the Ottoman navy flag, had come to England for repairs with a cargo on board, and at the time of the collision, which was in the Thames, was on her outward voyage to Alexandria under charter to a British subject, and advertised to carry cargo to Alexandria:—Held, that the khedive was not entitled to the privilege of a sovereign prince; protest overruled. The Charkieh, 42 L. J., Adm. 17; L. R. 4 A. & E. 59; 28 L. T. 513; 1 Asp. M. C. 581.

Semble, a suit in rem to enforce a damage lien may be entertained though the owner of the res be a foreign sovereign. Ib.

Semble, if the sovereign assumes the character of a trader, and uses the ship for trade to this country, he waives the privilege which might otherwise belong to the ship. Ib.

Mail Packet belonging to Foreign State.]—A packet conveying mails and carrying on commerce, which belongs to the sovereign of a foreign state, and is officered by officers commissioned by him, comes within the category of vessels which are exempt from process of law. The Parlement Belge, 5 P. D. 197; 42 L. T. 273; 28 W. R. 642; 4 Asp. M. C. 234—C. A.

The immunity of a public ship is not lost by her being used subordinately and partially for trading purposes. Ib.

Setting aside Warrant.]—Warrant to arrest not set aside on allegation of agreement to refer salvage claim to arbitration. La Parissima Concepcion, 13 Jur. 545.

Wrongful Arrest—Want of Reasonable and Probable Cause—Damages.]—In an admiralty action in personam for the wrongful arrest of a ship by admiralty process without reasonable and probable cause, it is not necessary to prove actual damage. The Walter D. Wallet, 62 L. J., Adm. 88; [1893] P. 202; 1 R. 627; 69 L. T. 771; 7 Asp. M. C. 398. And see XX. COLLISION, ante, cols. 852, 856.

The plaintiff in an action in rem is not condemned in damages for the arrest of the property unless he has been guilty of gross negligence or malice. The Evangelismos, Xenos v. Aldersley, 12 Moore, P. C. 352; Swabey, 378.

—— Damages.]—Where an arrest was made without notice of claim, and for a sum disproportionate to the value of the vessel and the services rendered, the court awarded damages. The Eleonore, Br. & Lush. 185; 33 L. J., Adm. 19; 9 L. T. 397; 12 W. R. 218. And see ante, col. 856.

Where it appeared upon affidavits that the plaintiffs were mistaken as to the identity of the vessel proceeded against, and the defendants offered to disclose the real wrongdoer, the court refused to accede to an application to extend the security to be given by the plaintiffs to meet the costs, if unsuccessful, so as to cover the damages caused by the wrongful arrest. The Peri, 32 L. J., Adm. 46; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1230; 11 W. R. 44.

No claim for demurrage or detention of a ship under warrant of arrest issued by the unsuccessful promoters of a salvage suit can be allowed in the absence of mala fides or malicious negligence. The Strathnaver, 1 App. Cas. 58; 34 L. T. 148; 3 Asp. M. C. 113—P. C.

Damages given for wrongful arrest and detention of a ship by a plaintiff in a collision action, the detention being in order that he might consider whether he would appeal. The Cheshire Witch, Br. & Lush. 362; 11 L. T. 350.

—— Problematical Earnings.]—A vessel was wrongly arrested as a slaver, and 20,000*l.* damages claimed for wrongful arrest, mainly in respect of possible earnings she might have made:—Held, that damages were not recoverable in respect of possible but problematical earnings. The Levin Lank, Swabey, 45.

Wrongful Arrest of Cargo.]—See The Victor, supra, col. 977.

Ship's Gear lost by Marshal.]—Decree against the marshal for a long boat and cable lost from a ship in his possession. The Hoop, 4 C. Rob. 145; cited, 6 C. Rob. 157.

Arrest in High Court and also in County Court—Possession Fees.—When an admiralty suit is instituted in a county court against a vessel which is under the arrest of the court of admiralty, it is unnecessary, so long as the vessel remains under such arrest, for the officer of the county court to incur expense in placing a person in possession, and a double set of possession fees will not be allowed. The Rio Lima, 43 L. J., Adm. 4; L. R. 4 A. & E. 157; 29 L. T. 517; 22 W. R. 303; 2 Asp. M. C. 143.

Arrest at Out-Port.]—Where a vessel is arrested in an out port, and not by the marshal of the court, the detention fees are to be paid by the arresting party, though successful in the cause. The North American, Swabey, 466; 2 Asp. M. C. 589.

Co-ownership—Accounts.]—Where a ship is arrested on a specific demand before a reference of accounts to the registrar and merchants can be made, it must be shewn to the court that something is due, although the actual amount may be the proper subject of inquiry. The practice differs from a reference by a court of equity on an unsettled account, where the court directs an account to be taken, leaving it to be shewn by the result on which side the balance lies. The Twentje, Van Hasselt v. Sack, 13 Moore, P. C. 185; 2 L. T. 613; 8 W. R. 423. Reversing 5 Jur. (N.S.) 658.

Attachment — Against Harbour-Master.]—Attachment against a harbour-master for carrying off gear from a ship under arrest, in order to pay harbour dues. The Harmonie, 1 W. Rob. 179.

—— Against Master.]—Attachment against a master, part owner, who took the ship to Jersey whilst under arrest. The Petrel, 3 Hag. Adm. 299.

Attachment against the master for contempt in taking the ship out of possession of the officer of the court. The Bure, 14 Jur. 1123.

—— Against Marshal of Queen's Bench Prison.]—Attachment addressed to the marshal of the queen's bench prison held valid. The Plym, 2 W. Rob. 345.

Power to Supersede Attachment.]—The admiralty court had no power to supersede an attachment issued in aid of a decree, except where it was wrongly executed. Ib.

Attachment or Monition to shew Cause.]—Contempt in breaking arrest of goods. Monition to shew cause why attachment should not issue, and not attachment in the first instance. Ship unknown. 1 C. Rob. 331.

Rescue of Ship arrested—Admiralty Jurisdiction.]—Conusance of rescue on land of a ship properly arrested by the admiralty belongs to the admiralty. Rigden v. Hedges, 1 Ld. Raym. 446; 12 Mod. 246.

Possession Suit.]—In suits for possession the court of admiralty can take bail. The Evangelistria, 46 L. J., Adm. 1; 35 L. T. 410; 25 W. R. 255; 3 Asp. M. C. 261.

—— Conditional—Offer by Mortgagee refused.]—A mortgagee, although entitled to intervene in a cause in rem for equipment and repair, is not entitled to claim a release of the vessel upon giving bail conditioned to pay the claim of the material men, in the event of its being held to have priority over the mortgage. The Acacia, 42 L. T. 264; 4 Asp. M. C. 254.

—— Discharge of.]—Bail given to answer judgment in a cause where the appearance is under protest will not be discharged on account of a change in the indorsement on the writ of summons, which renders the protest of no avail. The City of Mecca, 50 L. J., Adm. 53; 6 P. D. 106; 44 L. T. 750; 4 Asp. M. C. 412—C. A.

—— By whom given.]—A ship's husband and managing owner caused a bail bond to be given in the admiralty court, in the names of his co-owner and himself, in a suit for a collision, and the suit terminated in favour of the plaintiffs, and the bail were called upon to pay damages, interest and costs:—Held, that the co-owner was responsible to the bail for the money so paid. Barker v. Highley, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 27; 32 L. J., C. P. 270; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 391; 9 L. T. 228; 11 W. R. 968.

Where the interests are distinct, separate bails should be given. The Royal Arch, Swabey, 269; 6 W. R. 191.

Sureties to a bail bond must not be partners. The Corner, Br. & Lush. 161; 33 L. J., Adm. 16; 12 L. T. 62.

—— Objection to Sufficiency.]—A vessel released from arrest upon a bail bond taken before a commissioner in the country, and signed by two persons in partnership, ordered to be re-arrested, notwithstanding the twenty-four hours' notice of the bail tendered had been given to the plaintiff's agent in London, the plaintiff's solicitor in the country having within that time given to the defendant's solicitors formal notice of objection to the bail. Ib.

The objection to the bail having proved to be unfounded, the plaintiff was condemned in costs and damages. Ib.

—— Amount.]—The bail is only liable to the extent of the value of the ship and freight, and not for the full amount of the damage done, even though bail may have been given for a sum beyond the value of the ship and freight. The Duchesse de Brabant, Swabey, 264; 6 W. R. 329.

—— Reducing.]—Where, in an action against the ship, bail was given for the amount claimed, and a great proportion of this claim was not recoverable, the court ordered the bail to be reduced to an amount sufficient to cover the rest of the claim and costs. The Chieftain, Br. & Lush. 104; 32 L. J., Adm. 106; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 388; 8 L. T. 120; 11 W. R. 537.

—— Enlarging.]—An appellant will not be required to enlarge any security which he gave as defendant in the court of admiralty to answer judgment and costs in that court notwithstanding such security has proved insufficient for that purpose. The Hélène, infra.

—— Caveat Release.]—Where a caveat release is entered, and groundless objections are taken to the sufficiency of bail, the party entering the caveat will be condemned in damages and costs. The Don Ricardo, 49 L. J., Adm. 28; 5 P. D. 121; 42 L. T. 32; 28 W. R. 431; 4 Asp. M. C. 225.

The omission of the plaintiff's country solicitor to order by electric telegraph a caveat release to be entered does not amount to negligence. The Corner, supra.

—— Cross Actions.]—By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 10, s. 34, when bail to answer judgment has been given by the defendant in the principal cause, the same party, when plaintiff in a cross-action, may obtain a similar security, notwithstanding that he may be resident within the jurisdiction of the court. The Cameo, Lush. 408; 5 L. T. 773.

—— To answer Counter-claim.]—Where, in a damage action, the ship proceeded against is not arrested, and the plaintiffs do not require bail to be given, the defendants cannot compel the plaintiffs to give security to answer a counter-claim in the action under the provisions in the Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 10), s. 34, although they voluntarily give bail. The Alne Holme, 47 L. T. 307; 4 Asp. M. C. 591.

The power of the admiralty division under s. 34 of the Admiralty Court Act, 1861, to order an action to be stayed until bail has been given to answer a cross-action or counter-claim, does not extend to making an absolute order to give bail; and in a damage action in which the plaintiffs had discontinued after the defendants had counterclaimed, the court refused to enforce an order, made by the registrar, to give bail to answer such counter-claim. The Alexander, 48 L. T. 797; 5 Asp. M. C. 89.

Form of Bond.]—A bail bond to lead the supersedeas of an arrest, signed before a commissioner by the sureties simply, without the addition of their descriptions and addresses, is good. The Tamarac, Lush. 28.

The form of a bail bond appointed to be given in the admiralty court by the rules of 1859, to answer judgment with costs, does not receive a new interpretation from 24 & 25 Vict. c. 10, s. 33, and does not extend to cover the costs of an appeal. The Hélène, Br. & Lush. 425; 3 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 240; 35 L. J., Adm. 1; 13 W. R. 931.

—— What Bail — Value.] — A wrongdoing vessel was arrested in a cause of collision, having been herself injured in the collision. She was then repaired, and her value was materially increased by the repairs:—Held, that she was only liable to the extent of her value at the time when she was arrested, and that she ought to be released on bail to that amount being given. The St. Olaf, 38 L. J. Adm. 41; L. R. 2 A. & E. 360; 20 L. T. 758; 17 W. R. 743.

Prize Suit.]—A bail bond given in a prize suit is not a mere security given to the party, but is regarded as a pledge or substitute for the thing itself, in all matters fairly in adjudication before the court. The Ned Elwin, 1 Dods. 50.

Misdemeanour of Master or of Ship.]—A ship arrested for misdemeanour of the master is bailable; aliter, where the misdemeanour is of the boat and the king makes title. Anon., 1 Keb. 44.

Liability of Sureties.]—The sureties in a bail bond are not liable in respect of any action against the vessel other than that in which they have given bail. The Saracen, 6 Moore P. C. 56; 4 Not. of Cas. 498; 2 W. Rob. 451.

Costs of excessive Bail.]—See 24. COSTS, infra, col. 1022.

Privy Council—Dispensing with bail.]—See Hunter v. Hesketh Steamship, infra, col. 1012.

Action of Restraint—Bail for safe Return.]—See 16. RESTRAINT, infra, col. 953.

g. Appraisement and Sale.

Appraisement.] — A vessel which had been salved was valued by a receiver of wreck at less than 1,000*l*. The salvors obtained an order for a commission of appraisement, but did not execute it, and after three weeks gave notice that they proceeded no further in the suit:—Held, that they might, within four days of obtaining the order, have ascertained the value, and that therefore they must be condemned in damages for detention of the vessel during the rest of the three weeks. The Margaret and Jane, 38 L. J., Adm. 38; L. R. 2 A. & E. 345; 20 L. T. 1017; 17 W. R. 1064. See also Cases ante, cols. 670, seq.

The owner of a ship arrested in a damaged suit alleged the value of the ship to be one-fifteenth less than it was afterwards shewn to be upon a commission of appraisement obtained by the plaintiffs: the amount claimed by the plaintiffs was less than the sum for which the owners were willing to give security; but, assuming the claim to be sustained, the costs would extend the claim greatly beyond that sum:—Held, on a motion by the plaintiffs to condemn the defendants in the costs of the appraisement, that the proper order was that the costs should be costs in the cause. The Rapid, 18 W. R. 150.

An appraisement by order of the court is binding on both parties. Appeal by an owner to have the property sold, and the value so determined, rejected, The R. M. Mills, 3 L. T. 513. S. P., Venus, Cargo ex, L. R. 4 A. & E. 50; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 379; 14 W. R. 460.

Value of salved Property — Appraisement—Court will not open.]—See The Endeavour, ante, col. 634.

Default of Appearance—Order for Sale.]—Ship arrested on the 6th; motion for sale on the 7th in default of appearance, and no affidavit that the owners could not be found. Sale decreed, it appearing that underwriters on cargo were consenting to a sale of the cargo. The Bessy, 4 W. R. 92.

Appraisement after Sale.] — Appraisement made after sale held void. The Queen, 19 L. T. 705.

Costs of Appraisement.]—See The Persian, infra, col. 1021.

Co-owners—Sale by Court.]—See VIII. SALE AND TRANSFER, supra, col. 164.

Sale, when Ordered.]—An order will not be made for the sale of a vessel even upon the application of the owner, where such vessel is not proceeded against in the court. The Wexford, 57 L. J., Adm. 6; 13 P. D. 10; 58 L. T. 28; 36 W. R. 560; 6 Asp. M. C. 244.

Sale of Ship and Cargo—Freight.]—Where in an action in rem for collision against ship and freight, in which the defendants' ship was held solely to blame, the ship being still under arrest with the cargo on board, was ordered to be sold; the court on motion directed the marshal to discharge the cargo, to retain the same in his custody as security for the payment of the landing and other charges and freight, if any, due from the owners and consignees of the cargo in respect of the same, and that in default of any application for the delivery of the cargo within fourteen days, the marshal should be authorised to sell such part of the cargo as might be necessary to pay the said charges and freight, if any, due. The Gettysburg, 52 L. T. 60; 5 Asp. M. C. 347.

—— Foreign Ship—Affiadvit.]—The court ordered the sale of a foreign ship on the report of the marshal that it was desirable she should be sold, and subject to the filing of an affidavit, verifying the cause of action and stating that no appearance had been entered. The Hercules, 11 P. D. 10; 54 L. T. 273; 34 W. R. 400; 5 Asp. M. C. 545.

Sale by Private Contract.]—In an action for master's wages and disbursements, where the ship proceeded against was subject to other claims by mortgagees and material men, the court upon motion, no opposition being offered, ordered an official appraisement of the ship to be made, and the ship to be sold by the marshal by private contract for a sum of money not less than the appraisement, upon proof that the mortgagees assented to such sale, and that notice of the motion had been served upon all the claimants. The Planet, 49 L. T. 204; 5 Asp. M. C. 144.

Expenses—Marshal's Fees—Mortgagees.]—The "C." was arrested in an action for necessaries supplied by the plaintiff. The owners appeared but did not give bail or deliver pleadings. The mortgagees of the "C." intervened, and took possession under the mortgage, but the "C." still remained in the custody of the marshal, and was subsequently sold by him under an order of the court obtained by the interveners. Judgment with costs, by consent, for the interveners was afterwards entered. Under it the interveners claimed from the plaintiff the amount due to the marshal for the expenses of the sale:—Held, that as the interveners, though able to obtain the release of the "C." by giving bail, had not done so, but had obtained an order for the sale of the "C.," and had received the proceeds of such sale, they must bear the expenses of it. The Colonsay 55 L. J., Adm. 31; 11 P. D. 17; 54 L. T. 338; 5 Asp. M. C. 545.

Fund in Court—Priorities.]—When a fund, by a sale of a ship, is placed in court by one set of claimants, so as to be available for other claimants, the former are entitled to their costs up to and inclusive of the sale, though they do not rank first in respect of their actual claim. The Immacolata Concezione, 53 L. J., Adm. 19; 9 P. D. 37; 50 L. T. 539; 32 W. R. 705; 5 Asp. M. C. 208.

Sale—Practice to ascertain Priorities.]—Sale of vessel by decree of the high court of admiralty restrained in order to ascertain the respective priorities of material men and mortgagees before appraisement and sale, such priorities to be ascertained by petition and answer in the high court of admiralty. The Acacia. Hamilton v. Harland, 42 L. T. 264; 4 Asp. M. C. 254—C. A.

Sale of Ship—Proceeds of.]—When there are several claimants against the proceeds of a vessel in the registry, and she has been sold at the suit of one, the costs of such sale will be paid before all claims, as such sale was for the benefit of all. The Panthea, 25 L. T. 389; 1 Asp. M. C. 133.

In a cause of collision, the ship having been released from arrest upon bail given in the full sum in which the cause was instituted, cannot be re-arrested by the plaintiff to answer his damages, if, after the ordinary decree and reference, they prove to exceed that sum, and if the ship has been sold by the court in another action, brought by other parties, the court cannot order the proceeds of the ship to be applied to satisfy such damages, or interest, or costs of the first action. The Wild Ranger, Br. & Lush. 84.

Where a ship has been sold by order of the court, and the proceeds are in the registry, such proceeds are not money belonging to the owners of the ship under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 12, nor a debt owing to them under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, s. 61. Ib.

Where, after judgment against a ship in a damage action where bail had been given and the ship released, judgment is given against the same ship in a necessaries action, in which the ship is sold and the proceeds of the sale of the ship paid into court, the plaintiffs in the damage action cannot be paid out of the proceeds, to the prejudice of other claimants still having maritime liens upon the proceeds. The Falk, 47 L. T. 308; 4 Asp. M. C. 592.

—— Default Action—Sale before Judgment.]—Where in a salvage action, in which no appearance had been entered, it was alleged upon affidavit that the ship and cargo were daily deteriorating in value, and that large expenses were being incurred in respect of the charge of the property, and that the plaintiffs had been in communication with the owners as to a sale, the court, on motion by the plaintiffs prior to decree, ordered an appraisement and sale of the property. The Anna Helena, 48 L. T. 681; 5 Asp. M. C. 61.

Sale and Unlivery of Cargo.]—Order made on application of the respondents in a pending appeal, for unlivery of the sargo and sale of a mortgaged ship, the unlivery and sale of which had been decreed by the court of admiralty. The Jeff Davies, 5 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 25; L. R. 2 P. C. 19.

Attachment of Funds in Registry.]—A fund lying in the registry of the court cannot be attached by process of foreign attachment out of the mayor's court of London. The Albert Crosby, Lush. 101.

Injunction to restrain Removal of Ship sold Abroad.]—An Englishman entered into a contract abroad with a foreigner for the purchase of a ship, then on her homeward voyage to Cork, the purchaser to take possession of the ship immediately after the delivery of the homeward cargo at any place whither she might be ordered

The ship was ordered to Sunderland, where she discharged her cargo. On a motion by the purchaser for an injunction to restrain the removal of the ship from Sunderland:—Held, that substituted service on the captain in charge of the vessel was sufficient, and that the court had jurisdiction to restrain the removal of the ship pending the suit. Hart v. Herwig, 42 L. J., Ch. 457; L. R. 8 Ch. 860; 29 L. T. 47; 21 W. R. 663; 2 Asp. M. C. 63.

Prohibition from dealing in Shares.] — The court of probate, as a division of the high court of justice, to which the jurisdiction formerly exercised by the court of chancery has been transferred by the Judicature Act, s. 16, has power to issue an order prohibiting the dealing in any share of a ship for a time and on conditions to be named therein, and the registrar of shipping on being served with such order, or an official copy thereof, must obey the same. Nicholas v. Dracachis, 45 L. J., Adm. 45; 1 P. D. 72; 24 W. R. 461.

Ship sold in another Suit—Service of Writ.] —After the writ in an action in rem had been served on the ship, she was sold in another action and the proceeds brought into court. The writ was then amended and refiled, but was not served upon the registrar, nor indorsed with the date of service under Ord. IX. r. 13. The defendants did not appear:—Held, that the service was not sufficient, and the plaintiff not entitled to judment in default. The Cassiopeia, 48 L. J., Adm. 39; 4 P. D. 188; 40 L. T. 869; 27 W. R. 703; 4 Asp. M. C. 148.

Fieri facias—Claim of Sheriff.]—Upon sale of a ship in a wages suit by admiralty process issuing after seizure of the ship under a writ of fieri facias:—Held, that the claim of the sheriff to the surplus proceeds was good as against the late owner. The Flora, 1 Hag. Adm. 298.

Vice-Admiralty Courts—Power to order Sale of Ship in Distress.]—See The Fanny and Elmina, ante, col. 947.

Co-owners disagreeing—Sale by Court.]—See The Marion, ante, col. 957.

h. Default Proceedings.

Signing Judgment in Default.]—Proceedings by default in admiralty actions in rem are regulated by the practice which prevailed in the court of admiralty immediately before the passing of the Judicature Act, 1875. The Polymede, 1 P. D. 121; 34 L. T. 367; 24 W. R. 256.

Ord. XXIX. r. 2, as to signing judgment in default of pleading, does not apply to proceedings in rem. When in an action in rem for a liquidated sum for necessaries supplied, the defendant makes default in delivering his statement of defence, the plaintiff cannot at once sign final judgment, but must bring the case on for hearing before the judge upon affidavit. The Sfactoria, 2 P. D. 3; 35 L. T. 431; 25 W. R. 62; 3 Asp. M. C. 271.

Affidavit of Service.]—The affidavit of service required to be filed in the registry before proceedings can be taken to obtain judgment by default in an action in rem must have the original writ in rem annexed to it. The Eppos, 49 L. T. 604; 32 W. R. 154; 5 Asp. M. C. 180.

Service of Writ in rem.] — In an action in rem the writ of summons was served in the manner provided by Ord. IX. r. 12, no appearance was entered, and the action came on for judgment by default under Ord. XIII. rr. 12, 13. The affidavit of service of the writ was made by the solicitor's clerk who had served such writ:—Held, that service of a writ in rem by a solicitor or his clerk, and not by the marshal or his substitute, was a valid service, and that the affidavit was sufficient. The Solis, 54 L. J., Adm. 52; 10 P. D. 62; 52 L. T. 440; 33 W. R. 659; 5 Asp. M. C. 368.

Action in rem—Registrar and Merchants.]— In a default action in rem the admiralty court will not before judgment refer the plaintiff's claim to the registrar for assessment. The Titia, 64 L. T. 148; 7 Asp. M. C. 32.

Ten Days to elapse — Notice of Trial.] — In order to obtain judgment by default of appearance in an action in rem under Ord. XIII. r. 12, the ten days stated in Ord. XXI. r. 6, must elapse, and a notice of trial under Ord. XXXVI. r. 11, must be filed in the registry. The Avenir, 53 L. J., Adm. 63; 9 P. D. 84; 50 L. T. 512; 32 W. R. 755; 5 Asp. M. C. 218.

—— Motion for Judgment.]—As under Ord. XIII. r. 12, default actions in rem are to proceed as if the defendant had appeared, Ord. XXVII. r. 11, as to settling down an action on motion for judgment where the defendant makes default in pleading, applies to such actions, and judgment therein is to be obtained under the provisions of that rule. The Spero Expecto, 49 L. T. 749; 32 W. R. 524; 5 Asp. M. C. 197.

Where in an action in rem for collision the defendant makes default, the plaintiff should on moving for judgment, support his claim by affidavit. Ib.

Statement of Claim.]—Where the plaintiff in a default action in rem for necessaries had complied with all the formalities entitling him to judgment save service of a statement of claim, but it appeared that the writ, though not specially indorsed, contained particulars of the claim the court gave judgment for the plaintiff. The Hulda, 58 L. T. 29; 6 Asp. M. C. 244.

Writ served but Warrant not served—Judgment.] — Judgment by default given in an action in rem against a ship, after service of the writ within the jurisdiction, where afterwards and before service of the warrant to arrest she was taken out of the jurisdiction. The Nautik, 64 L. J., Adm. 61; [1895] P. 121; 11 R. 716; 72 L. T. 21; 43 W. R. 703; 7 Asp. M. C. 591.

Wages—Foreign Consul.] — A foreign ship was sold in a default action and the proceeds were in the registry. Upon an application by the master and crew for their wages, an order was made for payment out of the sum due to the solicitor for the applicants upon his undertaking to pay the foreign consul, who had advanced money to the crew for their expenses, waiving the preliminary steps in a default action. The Juliana, 35 L. T. 410; 3 Asp. M. C. 264.

Order for Sale of Ship and Cargo—Discovery of Owners—Ship.]—Arrest on the 5th; application for sale of ship and cargo on the 7th refused, there being no affidavit that the owners could not be found. The Bessy, 4 W. R. 92.

Assessment of Damages — Lord Campbell's Act.]—An action for damages under Lord Campbell's act was commenced in the admiralty division, and no application was made to transfer the cause to any other division:—Held, that upon default in pleading by the defendants the plaintiffs were entitled, under Ord. XXVII. r. 4, to enter interlocutory judgment and to have the damages assessed and apportioned by a jury. The Orwell, 57 L. J., Adm. 61; 13 P. D. 80; 59 L. T. 312; 36 W. R. 703; 6 Asp. M. C. 309.

i. Stay and Transfer.

Two Proceedings for Same Matter—Estoppel.]—To an action for an injury to a vessel by a collision in the Thames, the defendant pleaded that the merits in respect of the demand by the action sought to be enforced, had been tried and determined, and proceedings, to which the plaintiff and the defendant were parties, had been had in the admiralty court, and that the merits upon which the plaintiff sought to recover were thereby tried, and after due proceedings had and taken in that court, and in due form of law, determined by that court in favour of the defendant, and it was held and adjudged by the court that the collision occurred through the negligence of the plaintiff and not through the negligence of the defendant:—Held, that the plea was no answer, inasmuch as it did not shew upon the face of it that the admiralty court had jurisdiction over the matter. Harris v. Willis, 15 C. B. 710; 3 C. L. R. 609; 24 L. J., C. P. 93; 3 W. R. 238.

A. brought an action for freight. After action, the assignees of the freight to whom it had been assigned on a bottomry bond for necessary repairs while the ship was in a foreign port, commenced proceedings against the defendant in the admiralty court. That court issued a monition to the defendant to pay the freight into court. He did so, and then pleaded to the action the proceedings in the admiralty court and the payment of the freight into court:—Held, that the plea was a good answer. Place v. Potts, 5 H. L. Cas. 383; 24 L. J., Ex. 225; 3 W. R. 574.

—— Action In rem and Action In personam.]—A suit having been brought in rem, in which the proceeds of the res are insufficient to satisfy the claim, a separate suit in personam may be brought to recover the remainder. The Pet, 20 L. T. 961; 17 W. R. 899.

—— Arbitration.]—A claim for personal injury done by a ship was referred to arbitration, with a condition reserving the claimant's rights and remedies in case the award should not be performed. The arbitrator awarded a sum of money which had not been paid:—Held, that the claimant had not barred himself of his right to sue in the admiralty court. The Sylph, 37 L. J., Adm. 14; L. R. 2 A. & E. 24; 17 L. T. 519.

—— Award of Commissioners of Salvage.]—Salvage services had been rendered to a vessel by several sets of salvors off Ramsgate. The owners of the vessel summoned a meeting of the commissioners of salvage for the Cinque Ports, to adjudicate on the matter. No notice of the intended meeting was given to any of the salvors, and it was proved that it was not usual to give any such notice. At the meeting of the commissioners one set of salvors was unrepresented, but it was proved that they were aware of ths meeting, and were at hand. The commissioners made an award upon the whole matter. The salvors so unrepresented refused to accept their share of the money awarded, and brought their action in the admiralty court:—Held, that the award was no bar to the action, the plaintiffs not having been parties to the first decision. The Elise, Swabey, 436.

—— Collision—Lis Alibi Pendens.]—A collision occurred on the high seas between the "C." and the "J.," two foreign veseels. The "C." was arrested in Holland in an action brought by the owners of the "J." and her cargo, but was released with the consent of the agent of the "J." on the guarantee of a firm of underwriters interested in the "C." to answer judgment in the action. Cross proceedings were instituted in the Dutch court by the owners of the "C." and the "J." An action was subsequently commenced in this country against the owners of the "C." by the owners of the "J." and her cargo, and the "C." was arrested in respect of the same collision. The plaintiffs expressed their willingness to abandon the action in Holland:—Held (dissentiente Brett, M.R.), that the proceedings in this country must be stayed and the ship released. The Christiansborg, 54 L. J., Adm. 84; 10 P. D. 144; 53 L. T. 612; 5 Asp. M. C. 491—C. A.

In an action of damage in personam by the owners of the ship "G.," against the owners of the ship "P.," it appeared that a cause of damage in rem relating to the same collision had, prior to the proceedings in this court, been instituted by the owners of the "P." against the "G." in a vice-admiralty court abroad, and was then pending. The court, on the application of the owners of the ship "P.," stayed the proceedings in this court until after the hearing of the cause in the vice-admiralty court abroad. The Peshawur, 52 L. J., Adm. 30; 8 P. D. 32; 48 L. T. 796; 31 W. R. 660; 5 Asp. M. C. 89.

—— Guarantee given Abroad—Arrest of Ship in United Kingdom.]—The fact that the defendants have given a guarantee abroad to put in bail to answer the judgment of a foreign court in a case of collision is not a ground for ordering the release of their ship from an arrest in an action commenced in this country, where no legal proceedings have been instituted in the foreign court. The Christiansborg (supra), distinguished. The Mannheim, 66 L. J., Adm. 6; [1897] P. 13; 75 L. T. 424; 8 Asp. M. C. 210.

—— Suits in Ireland and England.]—When a plaintiff in a cause of damage has commenced two actions; one, first in order of date, in the court of admiralty of Ireland, and a second in the high court of justice in England, he will not be allowed to proceed with the latter until he has abandoned proceedings in the former. It is not sufficient that he is desirous of abandoning proceedings in the former, and that he is not allowed to do so by the Irish court; such refusal should be corrected by appeal. The Cattarina Chiazzaro, 45 L. J., Adm. 105; 1 P. D. 268; 34 L. T. 588; 3 Asp. M. C. 130.

—— Foreign Ships—One Sunk—Actions In rem and In personam.]—When a collision has occurred between two vessels, each belonging to foreign owners not resident within the jurisdiction of the court, and one of the vessels has been arrested in a cause of damage in rem, but the other has, in consequence of the collision, become a total wreck and cannot be arrested, the court may, on a cause in personam being properly instituted on behalf of the owners of the vessel arrested against the owners of the vessel which cannot be arrested, stay the proceedings in the principal cause in rem until security is given to answer judgment in the cross cause in personam. The Charkieh, 42 L. J., Adm. 70; L. R. 4 A. & E. 120; 29 L. T. 404; 22 W. R. 63; 2 Asp. M. C. 121.

—— Judgment in Vice-Admiralty Court.]—A judgment in a colonial vice-admiralty court is no bar to an action in a common law court in this country. Smith v. Nicholls, 5 Bing. (N.C.) 208; 7 Scott, 147; 7 D. P. C. 282; 8 L. J., C. P. 92.

—— Collision — Actions by Shipowner and Cargo Owner—Limitation of Liability.]—Where owners of cargo have recovered judgment in a collision action brought by them, and the owners of the ship carrying the cargo subsequently bring an action against the same ship to recover damages in respect of the same collision, and the damages in both actions would exceed the value of the defendant's ship at 8*l.* per ton, and the damage in the cargo action alone would not exceed that amount, the court will not stay proceedings in the cargo's action until after judgment in the ship's action, on the ground that without such stay the defendants have to institute a limitation of liability action, which would be unnecessary if the defendants obtained judgment in the ship's action. The Alne Holme, 47 L. T. 309; 4 Asp. M. C. 593.

And see further, as to stay and transfer in collision actions, XX. COLLISION, ante, cols. 841, 853.

Stay Pending Appeal.]—See The Annot Lyle, post, col. 1011.

Damage to Cargo — Staying Common Law Actions.]—In an action for loss of goods shipped on board a vessel, the court refused to stay proceedings on the ground that the court of admiralty had made an order, in a suit for determining the liability of the shipowners, declaring that they were entitled to limited liability, and ordering that all actions or suits pending in other courts in relation to the subject-matter of such suits should be stopped. Milburn v. L. & S. W. Ry., 40 L. J., Ex. 1; L. R. 6 Ex. 4; 23 L. T. 418; 19 W. R. 105.

Transfer from Inferior Court—Consolidation—Plaintiff.]—When an action is transferred from an inferior court and consolidated with a cross action begun in the high court, the plaintiffs in the action in the inferior court will be placed in the position of plaintiffs in the consolidated actions, if they began the action in the inferior court before the cross action in the high court. The Never Despair, 53 L. J., Adm. 30; 9 P. D. 34; 50 L. T. 369; 32 W. R. 599; 5 Asp. M. C. 211. S. P., The Bjorn, 9 P. D. 36, n.; 5 Asp. M. C. 212, n.; and The Cosmopolitan, 9 P. D. 35, n.; 5 Asp. M. C. 212, n.

Subject of Action—Jury.]—Although an action in which the sole question is a question of salvage may, under Ord. LXIX. r. 3, be properly transferred to the admiralty division, such a transfer should not be ordered where there are other questions in the action capable of being tried by a jury. Ocean Steamship Co. v. Anderson, 33 W. R. 536—C. A. And see S. C. in H. L. ante, col. 992.

Transfer from County Court—Pleadings.]—Where a case is transferred to the admiralty division of the high court under s. 8 of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, pleadings must be delivered as in actions originally commenced in the high court. The Carisbrook, 59 L. J., Adm. 37; 15 P. D. 98; 62 L. T. 843; 38 W. R. 543; 6 Asp. M. C. 507.

Damage to Cargo—Transfer to Queen's Bench Division.]—An action for damage to cargo on board a British ship whose owners resided in England was instituted in the admiralty division. Upon an application to transfer it to the queen's bench division an order for transfer was made upon the ground that it had been wrongly brought in admiralty: but not on the ground suggested that it could not be tried there by a jury. The Seaham, 40 L. T. 38; 4 Asp. M. C. 58.

Witness Abroad.]—It was a common case in the admiralty court to delay a cause till a material witness who was absent beyond sea came home—per Sir George Lee. Martin v. Robinson, 2 Lee, 397.

j. Preliminary Act.

Amendment.]—The defendants in a cause of damage applied to the court when the cause was called on for hearing, and before any evidence had been taken, for leave to amend a statement in their preliminary act, and to make a similar amendment in the answer. The court allowed the amendment to be made in the answer, but refused to allow any amendment to be made in the preliminary act. The Frankland, 41 L. J., Adm. 3; L. R. 3 A. & E. 511; 25 L. T. 889; 20 W. R. 592; 1 Asp. M. C. 207, 489.

The court will refuse to allow a mistake in a preliminary act to be amended, even though the application for an amendment be made before the hearing of the suit, and be supported by affidavit. The Miranda, 51 L. J., Adm. 56; 7 P. D. 185; 47 L. T. 447; 30 W. R. 615; 4 Asp. M. C. 595.

An application to amend a mistake in a preliminary act must be made immediately upon discovery, and must be supported by affidavit. The Vortigern, Swabey, 518; 1 L. T. 307.

When Necessary—"Actions for Damage by Collision between Vessels."]—An action was brought by the owner of a barge and her cargo against the owners of a tug for negligence in towing, in consequence of which, as the plaintiff alleged, the barge came into collision with another vessel, and was lost with her cargo:—Held, that the action was not one "for damage by collision between vessels" within the meaning of Ord. XIX. r. 28, and that the parties were not required to file preliminary acts as prescribed by the rule. Armstrong v. Gaselee, 58 L. J., Q. B. 149; 22 Q. B. D. 250; 59 L. T. 891; 37 W. R. 462; 6 Asp. M. C. 353.

The principle of filing a preliminary act, under Ord. XIX. r. 28, applies to every division of the high court, and is not confined exclusively to actions in the admiralty division. The plaintiff had a quantity of goods on board a barge. This barge was sunk by a vessel belonging to the defendants, and the plaintiff's goods were damaged. Cross-actions were brought by the owners of the barge and vessel respectively; but these actions were dismissed, as both parties were to blame. Afterwards an action was brought in the queen's bench division by the plaintiff, the owner of the goods, against the owners of the vessel for the damage to his goods. The defendants required the plaintiff to file a preliminary act under Ord. XIX. r. 28:—Held, that the damage sued for was "damage by collision" within the meaning of the rule, and that the plaintiff must file a preliminary act. Secretary of State for India v. Hewitt, 60 L. T. 334; 6 Asp. M. C. 384.

In an action by owners of cargo on board a ship that had been in collision against the other ship:—Held, that Ord. XXIX. r. 30, as to filing preliminary acts, did not apply. The John Boyne, 36 L. T. 29; 25 W. R. 756; 3 Asp. M. C. 341.

When Opened.]—Preliminary acts ordered to be opened in court upon examination of plaintiff's witnesses, after petition and answer filed. The Two Friends, Lush. 552.

k. Pleadings.

Form of Pleadings.]—Pleadings should be so framed as to assist not only the party in his statements of the case, but also the court in investigating the truth between the litigants; the defendant in a collision cause cannot rely on a simple negative, but must state the circumstances of the collision. The Why Not, 38 L. J., Adm. 26; L. R. 2 A. & E. 265; 18 L. T. 861.

In a suit for damage to cargo, the petition ought in general to state, so far as is practicable, the cause to which the plaintiff attributes the loss or damage. The Helene, Br. & Lush. 415; 4 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 70; 35 L. J., P. C. 63; L. R. 1 P. C. 231; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 675; 14 L. T. 875; 15 W. R. 202.

The rule that a party seeking redress for an injury can only recover secundum allegata et probata, applies only to cases where the averments alleged in the pleadings are material to the issue raised. The Alice and The Rosita, 5 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 300; 38 L. J., Adm. 20; L. R. 2 P. C. 214; 19 L. T. 753.

The pleadings should be so framed as, if necessary, to enable an examiner to elicit in evidence all the facts of the case. The Claus Thomesen, 32 L. J., Adm. 106; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 388; 8 L. T. 121; 11 W. R. 538.

In answer to a suit for damage to cargo, it is not sufficient to allege that the damage was caused by accidents and perils by the bill of lading excepted. The defendant must specify the particular accidents or perils. The Hakon Adelsteen, 43 L. J., Adm. 9.

In a cause of damage, where the evidence is taken before an examiner, the rule applies, that if it is intended to rely upon a defence of inevitable accident, such defence must be in terms distinctly raised on the pleading. The E. Z., 33 L. J., Adm. 200; 10 L. T. 790.

—— Since Rules of Supreme Court, 1883.]—A statement of claim in a salvage action was drawn in the Form No. 6 of Appendix C to the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883; on motion by the defendants under Ord. XIX. r. 7, for a further and better statement of claim or particulars:—Held, that the plaintiffs must deliver a fuller statement of claim, and that in salvage actions a fuller form than that given in Appendix C, No. 6, should generally be followed. The Isis, 53 L. J., Adm. 14; 8 P. D. 227; 49 L. T. 444; 32 W. R. 171; 5 Asp. M. C. 155.

—— Admissions in.]—Where the answer does not deny the truth of the preceding allegation, but draws a conclusion from it, it must be taken to admit the truth of the allegation. The Peerless, Lush. 103; 13 Moore, P. C. 484; 30 L. J., Adm. 89; 3 L. T. 125.

Admission by pleading extends to matters of fact, but not of law. Ib.

Counter-claim.]—Under the Judicature Act and rules, the defendant, where he admits his liability for the damage done by a collision, but claims to have his liability limited to 8*l.* or 15*l.* per ton of his vessel under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 63), s. 54, can so claim by counter-claim instead of by instituting a separate suit for limitation of liability. The Clutha, 45 L. J., Adm. 108; 35 L. T. 36; 3 Asp. M. C. 225.

Application to amend statement of defence by adding counter-claim at trial, refused. The Leon, 50 L. J., Adm. 59; 6 P. D. 148; 44 L. T. 613; 29 W. R. 916; 4 Asp. M. C. 414.

Default of Pleading.]—Ord. XXIX. r. 2, does not apply to proceedings in an admiralty action in rem where no statement of defence has been delivered. In such a case, the practice prevailing in the high court of admiralty immediately before the coming into operation of the Judicature Acts must be followed. The Sfactoria, 2 P. D. 3; 35 L. T. 431; 25 W. R. 62. S. P., The Polymede, 1 P. D. 121; 34 L. T. 367; 24 W. R. 256.

Amendment—Time.]—When the court orders a pleading to be amended, without naming a time within which the amendment is to be made, and there is unnecessary delay in making the amendment, the proper course is for the other party to apply to the court for a peremptory order. The Justyn, 11 W. R. 44.

Where a long delay had taken place through misapprehension or neglect in amending a replication in accordance with the direction of the court, but no application had been made for a peremptory order specifying a time within which the amendment was to be made, the court refused to strike out the amended replication. Ib.

Rejoinder.]—In a rejoinder the matter pleaded must be in answer to the plea of the adverse party; new matter not allowed. The Aurora, 1 W. Rob. 322.

Proof secundum allegata.]—Where the plaintiff alleged that the collision was caused by the defendant starboarding, and it was not proved that he did starboard, the suit was dismissed. The Ann, Lush. 55; 13 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 198; 3 L. T. 128; 8 W. R. 567.

Statute of Limitations.]—The Statute of Limitations must be pleaded and sentence given accordingly in admiralty. Barkeley v. Morrice, Hardr. 502.

Amendment — Withdrawing Plea.] — Leave given under special circumstances to withdraw answer and plead de novo. The Castiglione and Cargo, 20 L. T. 180 (Irish).

1. Particulars.

Rules same as in Queen's Bench Division—Damage to Cargo.]—The rule as to giving the opposite party particulars of any general allegation in pleadings ought to be the same in the admiralty as in the queen's bench division. Where, therefore, in an action in the admiralty division by cargo owners against shipowners for delivery of cargo in a damaged condition, the statement of claim alleged that the damage was not occasioned by any of the excepted perils mentioned in the bill of lading under which the cargo had been shipped, but was occasioned by the defective condition of the vessel, or by the negligence or breach of duty of the defendants or their servants, it was held that the defendants were entitled to particulars of the defects rendering the vessel not fit to carry the cargo. The Rory, 51 L. J., Adm. 73; 7 P. D. 117; 46 L. T. 757; 4 Asp. M. C. 537—C. A.

Collision.]—When a ship was totally lost in a collision, the court, contrary to the practice of the court, made an order, in an action by the shipowners against the vessel doing the damage, for particulars of the plaintiff's claim to be delivered to the defendants. The N. P. Neilsen, 34 L. T. 588; 24 W. R. 324; 3 Asp. M. C. 169.

Damage to Cargo.]—In an action for damage to cargo, the plaintiffs are not bound to set out the particular acts or character of the negligence which caused the damage. The Freedom, 38 L. J., Adm. 25; L. R. 2 A. & E. 346; 20 L. T. 220, 1018; 18 W. R. 48.

In action for damage to cargo, particulars of damage ordered to be delivered by the plaintiff, in order to enable the defendant to pay into court the amount for which he admitted liability. The Wetterhorn, 34 L. T. 587; 24 W. R. 323; 3 Asp. M. C. 168.

Action by Passenger against Shipowner.]—In an action by a passenger against a shipowner for damages by reason of the improper condition of the ship and negligent navigation, an application for particulars of negligence refused. George v. Watts, 30 L. T. 60; 2 Asp. M. C. 243.

m. Inspection and Discovery.

Depositions made before Receiver of Wreck.]—Depositions of the master and crew of a British ship, the "R.," in regard to a collision, had been taken by the receiver of wreck, and the board of trade refused to give copies of such depositions to the owners of the "P." in an action arising out of the collision between these vessels. Copies had however been obtained for the purpose of the action by the solicitors to the owners of the "R.," whose master and crew had made the depositions. On motion by the owners of the "P." for leave to inspect and take copies of the depositions in the possession of the solicitors of the owners of the "R.":—Held, that these copies were privileged. The Palermo, 53 L. J., Adm. 6; 9 P. D. 6; 49 L. T. 551; 32 W. R. 403; 5 Asp. M. C. 165—C. A.

Against Foreign Shipowners.]—In an action in rem against a foreign ship whose owners are resident abroad, the court will make an order for discovery of documents against such owners, but will always allow a reasonable time for making the affidavit of documents. The Emma, 34 L. T. 742; 24 W. R. 587; 3 Asp. M. C. 218.

Form of Affidavit.]—To obtain discovery of documents, the affidavit in support of the application must allege some one particular document to be in the possession of the party from whom discovery is sought. The Cordelia, 28 L. T. 776; 2 Asp. M. C. 35.

Costs of Motion.]—The court, where a motion is made for leave to inspect documents without a previous application to the person in possession, will condemn the party moving in costs of the motion. The Memphis, L. R. 3 A. & E. 23; 21 L. T. 727; 18 W. R. 74.

Compromise — Actions by Cargo Owner and Shipowner.]—In an action by the owner of cargo against a shipowner, he alleged damage in consequence of a collision with another ship, caused by the defendant's negligent navigation. A compromise of cross-suits in the admiralty court in respect of the collision had been entered into by the respective owners of the two ships:—Held, that the plaintiff had a right to inspect the terms of this compromise. Hutchinson v. Glover, 45 L. J., Q. B. 120; 1 Q. B. D. 138; 33 L. T. 605; 24 W. R. 185. Affirmed, 33 L. T. 834; 3 Asp. M. C. 120—C. A.

Court will examine Documents.]—Upon an application for inspection of documents, the court will order them to be brought into the registry, and after perusal of them decide whether or not the application should be granted. The Macgregor Laird, 36 L. J., Adm. 10; L. R. 1 A. & E. 307; 15 W. R. 262.

Private Documents.]—In a suit for damage to cargo, it is no answer to a claim for production of letters with reference to the shipment of the cargo that those letters disclose the private secrets of their owners. The Don Francisco, Lush. 468; 31 L. J., Adm. 205; 5 L. T. 466. See also Cases, cols. 998, 1317.

Damage to Cargo—Documents shewing Unseaworthiness.]—In an action for damage to cargo through the ship's unseaworthiness, copies of surveys, average statement, shipwright's bill for repairs and captain's protest, ordered to be produced for inspection by the plaintiff. Daniel v. Bond, 17 C. B. (N.S.) 716.

Possession Suit—Ship Papers.]—In a suit of possession the court of admiralty had power to compel production of the ship's papers; but it would not order production except in such a cause, or on an ex parte affidavit. The Lusitano, 1 W. Rob. 166.

False Representations as to Ship—Passenger induced to take Passage.]—In an action for making false representations respecting a ship whereby the plaintiff was induced to take a passage in her, and was afterwards obliged (with other passengers) to leave her, inspection was refused of letters written by other passengers to the defendants: also of letters of the captain to the defendants, written after the plaintiff left the ship, touching the plaintiff leaving the ship; also of letters to the defendants, who were agents for the ship, from the owner written after the plaintiff left her. Richards v. Gellatley, L. R. 7 C. P. 127; 26 L. T. 425; 1 Asp. M. C. 277.

Inspection of Ship by Trinity Masters.]—Before the hearing of an action an application was made under 24 Vict. c. 10, s. 18, by the plaintiffs, that two Trinity masters should inspect the lights of the defendants' ship:—Held, that the application was premature, and ought to be refused. The Victor Covacevich, 54 L. J., Adm. 48; 10 P. D. 40; 52 L. T. 632; 5 Asp. M. C. 417.

The court has power to order an inspection of a vessel by Trinity masters, and will direct that they be attended by the proctors, and a viewer on behalf of each party. The Germania, 37 L. J., Adm. 59; 19 L. T. 20.

An inspection to ascertain whether the lights carried by a ship were such as the regulations require, ought to be made at night. The Germania, 21 L. T. 44—P. C.

n. Interrogatories.

Striking Out.]—Interrogatories relating to the circumstances of the collision, will not be struck out as scandalous or unreasonable or vexatious, because the information sought to be obtained would for the most part be afforded by the preliminary act. The Radnorshire, 49 L. J., Adm. 48; 5 P. D. 172; 43 L. T. 319; 29 W. R. 476; 4 Asp. M. C. 338.

In an action of damage by collision, interrogatories which seek to obtain information given in the preliminary act of the party interrogated are inadmissible, and will be struck out on the application of the party sought to be interrogated. The Biola, 34 L. T. 185; 24 W. R. 524; 3 Asp. M. C. 125.

The plaintiffs applied for leave to deliver interrogatories to the defendant, stating, in an affidavit of themselves and their solicitor, that the deponents believed that they would derive material benefit in the cause from the discovery which they sought, and that there was a good cause of action upon the merits. The interrogatories asked, whether any and what documents relating to the cause were in possession of the defendant. The defendant opposed the application upon the ground that the court ought not to grant leave to deliver interrogatories for the discovery of documents without an affidavit by the plaintiffs of their belief that some document, to the production of which the plaintiffs were entitled, was in the possession or power of the defendant. The court overruled the objection, and granted the application. The Minnehaha, L. R. 3 A. & E. 148; 23 L. T. 747; 19 W. R. 304.

The court has power to order interrogatories to be administered to a defendant before the plaintiff has filed his petition. The Murillo, 28 L. T. 374; 1 Asp. M. C. 579.

When a cause of collision was instituted in personam against an owner of a ship, and he entered an appearance, alleging himself to be "improperly sued as one of the owners" of the ship, the court allowed interrogatories to be administered by the plaintiff to him for the purpose of ascertaining the ownership before the petition was filed. Ib.

The court will allow interrogatories to be administered rather in accordance with the practice of the courts of equity than of common law; and the principle by which the court will be governed is, that the interrogatories should be such as tend bonâ fide to support the case of the party seeking to administer them, and to favour a complete inquiry into the truth of the issue which the court has to decide. The Mary or Alexandra, 38 L. J., Adm. 29; L. R. 2 A. & E. 319; 18 L. T. 891; 17 W. R. 551.

On objection by a defendant to interrogatories tendered in a cause of possession, that his answers to them might subject him to penalties under the Foreign Enlistment Act:—Held, that the interrogatories should be administered, but that if the defendant stated upon his oath his belief that an answer to any particular interrogatory would subject him to such penalties, he should not be compelled to answer it. Ib.

In an action against a shipowner for non-delivery an interrogatory as to whether the cargo was insured is not admissible. Bolckow, Vaughan & Co. v. Young, 42 L. T. 690; 3 Asp. M. C. 301.

In an action for damage to cargo the defendants, shipowners, refused to answer interrogatories upon the ground that they had no personal knowledge of the facts inquired about, namely, the details of the navigation of the ship shortly before her loss:—Held, that if the information had been supplied to them in the ordinary course of business by their agents they were bound to answer. Bolckow, Vaughan & Co. v. Fisher, 52 L. J., Q. B. 12; 10 Q. B. D. 161; 47 L. T. 724; 31 W. R. 235; 5 Asp. M. C. 20—C. A. Cf. The Minnehaha, supra, col. 998.

o. Assessors.

Duties of Judge and Assessors.]—The duty of Trinity masters, sitting as assessors, is to assist the judge in questions of nautical skill. In case of a difference of opinion between the judge and the assessors, the judge is not at liberty to act upon any inferences which they may draw from the evidence, except they accord with his own. It is the duty of the judge to decide the case on his own responsibility. The Magna Charta, 25 L. T. 512; 1 Asp. M. C. 153—P. C.

The judgment is that of the judge, and he may decide in accordance with the advice of one or more of the assessors or not, as he thinks fit. The Philotaxe, 37 L. T. 540; 3 Asp. M. C. 512; 4 Asp. M. C. 321.

Nautical assessors summoned under the County Court Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, to attend at the hearing of an admiralty action tried by a county court judge, are present merely to advise the judge, and the judge ought to decide the case in accordance with his own opinion as to the law and merits of the case. The Aid, 50 L. J., Adm. 40 ; 6 P. D. 84 ; 44 L. T. 843 ; 29 W. R. 614 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 432.

If the judge who tries the case differs from his assessors, he is bound to decide in accordance with his own opinion. The Beryl, 53 L. J., Adm. 75 ; 9 P. D. 137 ; 51 L. T. 554 ; 33 W. R. 191 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 321—C. A. S. P., The Alfred, 7 Not. of Cas. 354. And see The Fred, infra.

The judge decides questions of fact ; function of nautical assessors in admiralty. The James Watt, 2 W. Rob. 271.

Evidence—Matters of Nautical Skill—Trinity Masters.]—In admiralty actions, where the court is assisted by nautical assessors, evidence as to matters of nautical skill and knowledge is not admissible. The Assyrian, 63 L. T. 91 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 525—C. A. S. P., The Kirby Hall, 52 L. J., Adm. 31 ; 8 P. D. 75 ; 48 L. T. 797 ; 31 W. R. 658 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 90. The Earl Spencer, L. R. 4 A. & E. 431 ; 33 L. T. 235 ; 3 Asp. M. C. 4—C. A. Affirming 32 L. T. 370 ; 23 W. R. 661. The Ann and Mary, 2 W. Rob. 189. The Ivo, 1 Spinks, 184. The Sir Robert Peel, 43 L. T. 364 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 321—C. A. The Nimrod, 14 Jur. 942.

Where in a damage to cargo action the judge found on the advice of his assessors that all screw alleys, however well made, may emit smells which may damage sensitive cargo stowed in the vicinity, the court of appeal, being assisted by assessors, refused to allow the appellants, the shipowners, at the hearing of the appeal, to call evidence to shew that the particular screw alley did not emit a smell, on the ground that it was a question of nautical skill. The Assyrian, 63 L. T. 91 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 525.

Assessors Disagreeing.]—Semble, that where two assessors disagree, the court can call in a third, and, after submitting the evidence already given to him, have the case re-argued before the three assessors. The Philotaxe, supra, col. 998.

Engineer Assessor.]—In an action of wages which involved questions as to the state of machinery of a steamship, engineer assessors were summoned to assist the court. The Marina, 50 L. J., Adm. 33 ; 29 W. R. 580.

Inspection by Trinity Masters—Report.]—Where Trinity masters are desired to inspect and report to the court, their report may include all matters in their opinion affecting the merits of the case. The Marathon, 40 L. T. 163 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 75.

Admission of Plea—Attendance of Assessors.]—Application for attendance of Trinity masters, upon a question as to the admissibility of a plea, refused. The Vargas, 15 Jur. 710.

Advice as to Entries in Log.]—Trinity masters called in to advise as to the effect of entries in the log-book as to the ship's course and probable destination. The Edward, 4 C. Rob. 68.

Appeal—Reasons of Nautical Assessors.]—See The Banshee, infra, col. 1012.

Advise only when Requested.]—Trinity masters advise the court when requested, and no more. The Alfred, 7 Not. of Cas. 354 ; 3 W. Rob. 232.

Judgment of Assessors, not of Judge—Power of Divisional Court to alter Judgment.]—In a collision action brought in the county court the judge formed an opinion on the evidence in favour of the plaintiffs, but the nautical assessors took the view that the plaintiffs' vessel was to blame for a wrong manœuvre. The judge found himself bound to give judgment in accordance with the view of the assessors, expressing at the same time his dissent therefrom. The plaintiffs appealed :—Held, that, on these facts, the court had no power to alter the decision of the learned judge. The Fred, 72 L. T. 153 ; 7 Asp. M. C. 550.

p. Evidence.

Examination of Witness before Examiner—Correction of Transcript—Application to take off File—Costs.]—If, after filing in the admiralty registry the transcript of the shorthand notes of the evidence of a witness taken before an examiner, a mistake is discovered to have been made by the shorthand writer in transcribing his notes, application should be made by the party grieved to the court for an order directing that the transcript be taken off the file and returned to the examiner for amendment, and the costs thereby incurred will be costs in the cause. The Knutsford, [1891] P. 219 ; 64 L. T. 352 ; 39 W. R. 559 ; 7 Asp. M. C. 33.

Evidence in Prior Suit when Admitted.]—The court cannot, except by consent, order that evidence in one suit that has been heard, shall be admitted as evidence in a subsequent suit. Two suits in rem by the owners of two ships which came into collision were instituted, and judgment had been given. An application that the evidence in those suits be admitted in a suit in personam by the owners of cargo on board of one of the ships was refused. The Demetrius, 41 L. J., Adm. 69 ; L. R. 3 A. & E. 523 ; 26 L. T. 324 ; 20 W. R. 761 ; 1 Asp. M. C. 256.

Admissions in Pleadings.]—When the defendant admits all the facts pleaded in the statement of claim in a salvage action, the plaintiff will not be allowed to call evidence except by permission of the court, and on special grounds. The Hardwick, 53 L. J., Adm. 23 ; 9 P. D. 32 ; 50 L. T. 128 ; 32 W. R. 598 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 199.

Letter of Captain to Owners.]—A letter written by the captain of a ship to his owners is admissible in evidence against the owners ; though all the statements contained in the letter may not be evidence. The Solway, 54 L. J., Adm. 83 ; 10 P. D. 137 ; 53 L. T. 680 ; 34 W. R. 232 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 482.

Engineer's Log.]—In an action of damage the engineer's log is admissible as evidence against the shipowner by whom the engineer is employed. The Earl of Dumfries, 54 L. J., Adm. 7 ; 10 P. D. 31 ; 51 L. T. 906 ; 33 W. R. 568 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 342.

Rejection of Evidence—New Trial.]—See The Sir Robert Peel, post, col. 1014.

Reference—Cross-Examination of Deponent.]—Under Ord. XXXVII. r. 2, which enables the evidence in references in admiralty actions to be given by affidavit, it is in the discretion of the registrar to refuse if he thinks fit to give weight to such evidence unless and until the deponent has been cross-examined on his affidavit, and where the deponent is a party to the action, he may, though resident abroad, be required to attend in this country for such cross-examination. The Parisian, 57 L. J., Adm. 13 ; 13 P. D. 16 ; 58 L. T. 92 ; 36 W. R. 704 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 249.

Extra Articulate Evidence—Application to strike out.]—In a proceeding by plea and proof each party has a right to have extra articulate evidence struck out at the hearing or previously. The Neptunus, 6 W. R. 262.

Rules of, in Admiralty.]—The rules of evidence as to what is admissible were not always the same in the admiralty and common-law courts. The Peerless, Lush. 30.

On Appeal from the Registrar.] — On an appeal from the registrar new evidence is admissible. The Ironmaster, Swabey, 441. And see The Thuringia, The Newport, infra, cols. 1005, 1006.

Questions of Seamanship.]—See o. ASSESSORS, supra, col. 999.

q. Consolidation.

Reference to Registrar.] — The court will, where it is convenient to do so, order one of several consolidated causes to be referred to the registrar separately. The Helen R. Cooper, L. R. 3 A. & E. 339 ; 40 L. J., Adm. 46.

After Judgment.]—When judgment has been given in one of two suits, the court cannot order the two suits to be consolidated. The Demetrius, 41 L. J., Adm. 69 ; L. R. 3 A. & E. 523 ; 26 L. T. 324 ; 20 W. R. 761 ; 1 Asp. M. C. 251.

Discretion as to.]—The court will, in the exercise of its discretion, make such order for consolidation as it considers will meet the justice of the case, and protect the interest of the suitors. The Vildosala, The Emerald, The Satellite, The Toiler, 42 L. T. 95 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 228.

Refusal of Consolidation Order before Service of Writ.]—The court will refuse to consolidate cross-actions of damage in personam where there has been no service of the writ in the principal action. The Helenslea, The Catalonia, 7 P. D. 57 ; 47 L. T. 446 ; 30 W. R. 616 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 594.

In Salvage Suits.]—See The Strathgarry and cases ante, col. 668.

r. Amendment of Proceedings.

Error in Decree.] — To entitle a party to amend an error in a decree, the mistake should be brought to the notice of the court with the utmost possible diligence. An application to alter a decree five months after the decree was made was rejected. The Orient, 39 L. J., Adm. 10 ; 21 L. T. 762.

Amount for which Damage Suit entered increased.] — An action for damage had been entered in a sum which was subsequently found to be insufficient to cover the damages ; an appearance had been entered, but no bail given, and the ship had not been arrested. Motion to increase the amount granted. The Florence Nightingale and The Mœander, 2 Br. & Lush. 29 ; 1 Moore, P. C. 63 ; 6 L. T. 400. And see The Dictator, supra, cols. 851, 976.

Præcipe.]—In a cause of collision after their vessel had been arrested and released on bail, the defendants admitted their liability and consented to a reference. The court afterwards, under special circumstances, granted leave to the plaintiff to amend the præcipe to institute, by increasing the amount in which the suit was instituted. The Johannes, 39 L. J., Adm. 41 ; L. R. 3 A. & E. 127 ; 23 L. T. 26.

In a præcipe to institute the cause the plaintiffs stated the suit as one of damage to cargo, and the affidavit to lead warrant alleged that they had sustained damage by breach of duty and breach of contract. After the arrest of the ship, and appearance entered on behalf of her owners, leave to amend by striking out of the præcipe to institute the words "damage to cargo," and substituting the words "breach of duty and breach of contract on the part of the master and crew," granted on payment of the costs occasioned by the misstatement in the præcipe. The Princess Royal, 39 L. J., Adm. 29 ; L. R. 3 A. & E. 27 ; 22 L. T. 29.

The præcipe to institute an action having been by mistake entered in a smaller sum than that intended, the defendant's ship was arrested and bailed in that sum. On the mistake being discovered before the hearing of the cause, the court gave permission (on payment of costs occasioned by the mistake) for the præcipe to be amended, and the ship to be re-arrested. The Hero, Br. & Lush. 447 ; 13 W. R. 927.

Amendment of Title of Action—Necessaries or Repairs.]—A suit instituted as for necessaries, but really in respect of repairs : the title must be amended. The Shipwith, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 445 ; 10 L. T. 43.

Amendment of Decree.]—See The Georg, ante, col. 633 ; The Monarch, post, col. 1022.

s. Jury.

Trial by Jury—Discretion.]—The plaintiff in an action in rem for disbursements in the probate, divorce, and admiralty division, applied for an order that the action should be tried by a judge with a jury :—Held, that Ord. XXXVI. r. 6, gives no absolute right to a jury in actions which before the passing of the Judicature Act, 1873, would have been tried without a jury ; that the case fell within Ord. XXXVI. rr. 4 and 7a, and that the judge had a discretionary power only, to allow trial by a jury. The Temple Bar, 55 L. J., Adm. 1 ; 11 P. D. 6 ; 53 L. T. 904 ; 34 W. R. 68 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 509—C. A.

Power to Summon—30 & 31 Vict. c. 114, s. 61, Admiralty Court (Ireland) Act.] — There is no power given by the above act to the judges of the admiralty in Ireland to summon a jury. The Anderida, 20 L. T. 180.

County Court—Right to a Jury in.]—See The Tynwald, ante, col. 944.

Assessment of Damages by Jury under Lord Campbell's Act.]—See The Orwell, ante, col. 989.

t. Right to Begin.

Collision.]—Where it appeared on the pleadings in a cause of damage by collision that at the time of the collision the plaintiff's vessel, a fishing smack, was riding attached to her nets, and stationary, with a single white light exhibited, but one of the charges made against her by the defendants in their answer was that she improperly neglected to exhibit the lights required by the Sea Fisheries Acts, 1868, two lights, one above the other:—Held, that as it must be implied that the neglect to exhibit such lights contributed to the collision, the plaintiff ought to begin. The Bottle Imp, 42 L. J., Adm. 48; 28 L. T. 286; 21 W. R. 600; 1 Asp. M. C. 571.

In a cause of collision, where the defendants plead inevitable accident alone, it lies upon the plaintiff to shew a primâ facie case of negligence against the defendants, and the plaintiffs must therefore begin. The Abraham, 28 L. T. 775; 2 Asp. M. C. 34.

In a cause of damage the defendant, by his pleading, made no charge of negligence against the plaintiff, but denied generally the averments in the petition, and pleaded inevitable accident:—Held, that the plaintiff ought to begin. The Benmore, 43 L. J., Adm. 5; L. R. 4 A. & E. 132; 22 W. R. 190.

In a damage suit the practice of the court requires the plaintiff to begin, notwithstanding that the defendant raises no other defence than that of inevitable accident. The Otter, L. R. 4 A. & E. 203; 30 L. T. 43; 22 W. R. 557; 2 Asp. M. C. 4.

Salvage.]—Where there are rival salvors the salvor who first enters his suit has the right to begin, unless special circumstances are shewn. The Morocco, 24 L. T. 598; 1 Asp. M. C. 46.

u. Tender.

Effect of.]—A tender in admiralty admits that something is due to the plaintiff. The Porcupine, 1 Hag. Adm. 378.

Payment out of Court.]—Rules of the supreme court, Ord. XXII. rr. 1 and 2, do not apply to the practice of the admiralty division as to tender by act in court. Where a collision action is settled upon the terms that the defendant shall pay to the plaintiff a specified percentage of his damages, and the defendant pays into court a sum which by notice, filed in court, he tenders to the plaintiff in satisfaction of his claim, in the event of such sum exceeding that which the registrar finds to be due to the plaintiff for damages and interest, the defendant is entitled to the balance. The Mona, 63 L. J., Adm. 137; [1894] P. 265; 6 R. 707; 71 L. T. 24; 43 W. R. 173; 7 Asp. M. C. 478.

Money paid into court in a wages suit not paid out until conclusion of the suit. The seamen continuing to claim a larger sum, motion to pay out refused. The Annie Childs, Lush. 509.

Tender in Salvage Suits.]—See ante, col. 669.

Plea of Tender without Payment into Court.]—Is bad. The Nasmyth, 54 L. J., Adm. 63; 10 P. D. 41; 52 L. T. 392; 33 W. R. 736; 5 Asp. M. C. 364.

v. Proceedings in Actions—Various.

Repairs to Damaged Ship—Bankruptcy of Shipowner—Money in Court in Collision Suit.]—Where in the registrar's report in a collision action it appears that the claimant claims (inter alia) as part of his damages the cost of repairing his ship, but has not paid the shipwright, and has since the repairs were effected become insolvent, and the registrar allows such item, the court has no power to do anything to ensure the money being paid over by the claimant to the shipwright, and will not retain the money in the registry until the claimant has given satisfactory evidence that he has paid the shipwright. The Endeavour, 62 L. T. 840; 6 Asp. M. C. 511.

Garnishee Order.]—Where the proceeds of a ship are in court, effect will be given to a prior lien, so as to give effect to a garnishee order. The Jeff Davis, L. R. 2 A. & E. 1; 17 L. T. 151.

Discontinuance.]—The plaintiffs in an action of co-ownership having obtained an order requiring the defendant to deliver up the certificate of registry of the ship to them, before delivering a statement of claim wholly discontinued the action without leave of the court. The defendant thereupon applied to have the action dismissed with costs:—Held, that the action must be dismissed, and that, under Ord. XXIII. r. 1, he was entitled as of right to all the costs of the action. The St. Olaf, 46 L. J., Adm. 74; 2 P. D. 113; 36 L. T. 30; 3 Asp. M. C. 341.

Re-hearing.]—The admiralty court had a discretion as to allowing a re-hearing; but it would only allow it upon fraud or its equivalent being shewn. The Fortitudo, 2 Dods. 58, 70.

Scotch Law—Arrestment—Bottomry Bondholder—Priority.]—See Ranking v. Todd, 8 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (3rd ser.) 914; X. BOTTOMRY, supra, col. 217.

Foreign Enlistment—Indemnity for Detention.]—An application to the court of admiralty for an indemnity by the crown for detention of a vessel under 33 & 34 Vict. c. 90, s. 24, should be made by motion upon affidavit. The Great Northern and The Midland, 26 L. T. 201; 1 Asp. M. C. 246.

Third Party Procedure—Collision.]—See Spiller v. Bristol Steam Navigation Co., supra, col. 552; The Curtsburn, supra, col. 758; The Bianca, supra, col. 668; The Hereward, supra, col. 958.

Action in rem—Notice of Action—City of Dublin Steam Packet Company.]—By 6 & 7 Will. 4, ch. c., s. 8, no action shall be brought in which the City of Dublin Steam Packet Company shall be liable for any damage to any ship against such company, unless one month's notice in writing shall have been given to the company :—Held, that the word "action" in s. 8 did not apply to an action in rem. The Longford, 58 L. J., Adm. 33 ; 14 P. D. 34 ; 60 L. T. 373 ; 37 W. R. 372 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 371—C. A.

Affidavits—Adjournment of Motion.]—The adjournment of the hearing of a motion for the convenience of counsel does not preclude the parties making the motion from filing and using a further affidavit. The Thuringia, 41 L. J., Adm. 20 ; 25 L. T. 605 ; 1 Asp. M. C. 166.

Parties—Minor.]—A minor sues by proxy. The Albert Crosby, Lush. 44.

Assignment of Cause of Action.]—In a suit for building and equipping a vessel, the defendant pleaded that the plaintiffs'.claim vested in their trustee under a composition deed ; and the plaintiffs in their reply alleged that they assigned the causes of action before the execution of the deed, and that the suit was brought in their names as trustees for the assignee :—Held, that the assignment of the causes of action carried with it all rights of action, which though inchoate at the time might subsequently become complete. The Wasp, L. R. 1 A. & E. 367 ; 16 L. T. 854.

Winding up Company—Enforcing Lien.]—The proper mode of enforcing a maritime lien on a vessel belonging to a company which has been ordered to be wound up, is by a proceeding in the winding-up, and not by a proceeding in rem in the admiralty court. Australia Direct Steam Navigation Co., In re, Baker, Ex parte, 44 L. J., Ch. 676 ; L. R. 20 Eq. 25.

In Salvage Actions.]—See XVIII. SALVAGE.

w. Reference to Registrar.

In what Cases.]—It is not an inflexible rule of practice that all questions of damage should be referred to the registrar and merchants. Therefore when the question of consequential damages was distinctly raised by the pleadings, and the court, assisted by Trinity masters, was admittedly the best tribunal to determine the issues so raised, the court ruled that evidence with respect to such issues might be given at the hearing, and that it would itself decide them, and not refer them to the registrar and merchants. The Maid of Kent, 50 L. J., Adm. 71 ; 6 P. D. 178 ; 45 L. T. 718 ; 29 W. R. 897 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 476.

A reference will not be ordered when the court can itself satisfactorily dispose of the question. The Eleonore, Br. & Lush. 185 ; 33 L. J., Adm. 19 ; 9 L. T. 397 ; 12 W. R. 218.

Objections to, and Appeals from, Report.]—A French fishing brig of 142 tons, employed in the cod fishery off the banks of Newfoundland, came into collision on the 6th of July, 1881, with an Italian barque, and in consequence of the collision was compelled to put into port for repairs, but, her repairs having been completed, returned to the fishing ground before the close of the fishing season. In an action of damage instituted on behalf of the owners of the brig against the barque, the court pronounced the barque solely to blame for the collision, and referred the question of damages to the registrar and merchants. At the reference the plaintiffs claimed 1,200*l.* for demurrage of their vessel from the date of the collision to the 26th of August, 1881, the date of her return to the fishing ground ; and of the amount so claimed, the registrar, by his report, allowed the plaintiffs 880*l.* as the loss sustained by the interruption of their fishing. The defendants moved the court in objection to the report :—Held, that the motion must be dismissed. The Resolute, 52 L. J., Adm. 46 ; 8 P. D. 109 ; 48 L. T. 909 ; 31 W. R. 657 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 93.

Upon appeal from the report of the registrar and merchants, the court will not admit additional evidence unless satisfied that such evidence could not by proper diligence and application have been produced before the registrar and merchants. The Thuringia, 41 L. J., Adm. 20 ; 25 L. T. 605 ; 1 Asp. M. C. 166.

An affidavit in support of a motion for leave to produce further evidence, where the object is to vary the evidence already given, should be clear and precise as to the witnesses it is proposed to call, and the nature of their testimony. Ib.

An affidavit of a witness, who is not tendered for cross-examination, and who deposes to a fact material to the inquiry before the registrar and merchants, should be filed before the hearing. Ib.

On an appeal from a report of a registrar and merchants, new evidence is admissible. The Newport, Swabey, 317. S. P., The Ironmaster, Swabey, 441.

When a cause has been referred to and heard by the registrar and merchants, it is competent to the judge, in considering the report thereon, in his discretion, to admit fresh evidence. H.M.S. Flying Fish, Br. & Lush. 436 ; 2 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 77 ; 34 L. J., Adm. 113 ; 12 L. T. 619—P. C.

In a cause of limitation of liability arising out of a collision, where, the fund in court being insufficient to satisfy the claims against it, a reference has been made to the registrar and merchants to assess the damages as to time and rate, the court will review the registrar's report and correct it, if it should appear that any portions of the report are founded on what the court deems to be an erroneous view of the evidence. The City of Buenos Ayres, 25 L. T. 672 ; 1 Asp. M. C. 169.

On appeal from the report of the registrar, disallowing a claim for total loss in a cause of damage by collision :—Held, that the master of the plaintiff's vessel was not justified in abandoning her after the collision. Report confirmed with costs. The Thuringia, 41 L. J., Adm. 44 ; 26 L. T. 446 ; 1 Asp. M. C. 283.

Report of registrar amended on motion by adding items for which no vouchers had been produced at the reference. The Englishman, 38 L. T. 756.

On appeal from a report of the registrar and merchants, no objection can be made before the court to an item which was not questioned before them. The Princess Helena, Lush. 190 ; 30 L. J., Adm. 137 ; 4 L. T. 869.

An objection to the registrar's report cannot be heard on motion, except by consent. The Edmond, Lush. 211; 30 L. J., Adm. 128; 2 L. T. 521.

In an appeal from his report, the court will not allow a party to set up a case which he did not endeavour to establish at the reference. The Glenmanna, Lush. 115.

The court will not interfere with the report of registrar and merchants, unless it is fully convinced that they are in error. The Clyde, Swabey, 23.

Cross-Examination of Deponent.]—Under Ord. XXXVII. r. 2, which enables the evidence in references in admiralty actions to be given by affidavit, it is in the discretion of the registrar to refuse, if he thinks fit, to give weight to such evidence unless and until the deponent has been cross-examined on his affidavit, and where the deponent is a party to the action, he may, though resident abroad, be required to attend in this country, for such cross-examination. The Parisian, 57 L. J., Adm. 13; 13 P. D. 16; 58 L. T. 92; 36 W. R. 704; 6 Asp. M. C. 249.

Report referred back for further Evidence.]—Report of registrar referred back for reconsideration for the production of further evidence, the applicant paying costs of previous reference and application to refer back. The Matchless, 10 Jur. 1017.

Objection to Registrar's Report.]—Where an action is instituted in an admiralty district registry by part owners of a ship against the managing owner for an account, and the writ claims an account under Ord. III. r. 8, and an order for the filing of the accounts is made under Ord. XV. r. 1, and the account is proceeded with pursuant to order, and the district registrar reports thereon, such report is to be treated as the usual report in an admiralty court action, and if the defendant seeks to take objection thereto, he must do so according to the provisions of Ord. LVI. r. 11, otherwise the plaintiff will be entitled to judgment thereon. Gowan v. Sprott, 51 L. T. 266; 5 Asp. M. C. 288.

—— Time for.]—A report of the registrar and merchants does not necessarily stand confirmed by reason of the defendants failing to take objection thereto within the time provided for in r. 117 of the Admiralty Court Rules, 1859, so as to absolutely entitle the plaintiffs to payment to them by the defendants of a sum of money which the court is of opinion ought not to have been allowed them in the report. The Thyatira, 49 L. T. 713; 5 Asp. M. C. 178.

—— Extension of Time.]—The court will not extend the time for objecting to the registrar's report in a co-ownership action without special grounds being shewn by the party seeking to object. Gowan v. Sprott, supra.

The court has power to extend the time within which objection to the report of the registrar and merchants may be taken. The Thyatira, supra.

x. Decree—Judgment—Execution.

Priority.]—The rule that the court will give priority to the suitor who first obtains a decree applies only as between claimants in pari conditione. The Markland, L. R. 3 A. & E. 340; 24 L. T. 596; 1 Asp. M. C. 44.

Varying.]—Where in a suit in rem, a decree has been made per incuriam for the payment of money out of the proceeds in court to satisfy the claim of the plaintiff, the court may, before the money has been paid, revoke or vary the decree. Ib.

Rescinding or Setting Aside.]—Fraud sufficient to set aside in the court of admiralty the decree of a competent court of vice-admiralty, must be fraud in procuring the decree. The Justyn, 6 L. T. 553.

By Consent.]—Final as well as interlocutory decrees and orders may be obtained by consent, without an order of the judge in person, but the consent must be express. The Buenos Ayres, 17 W. R. 627.

The court refused an application to rescind a decree pronouncing for the validity of a bottomry bond, founded upon an affidavit by the defendants' solicitor that there was a good defence on the merits, the decree having been pronounced with the consent of the defendants. The Glenburn, Br. & Lush. 62; 11 W. R. 685.

Amendment of.]—See The Georg, ante, col. 633.

Execution.]—The admiralty court has no power of levying execution upon a defendant's goods and chattels, to satisfy the judgment of the court. The Victor, Lush. 72; 29 L. J., Adm. 110; 2 L. T. 331. But see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 10, s. 15.

Interest on Damages.]—In an action in the admiralty division, which could not, prior to the Judicature Acts, have been tried in the admiralty court, the defendant made no objection to the jurisdiction, and interest was, according to the practice in the admiralty registry, allowed on the assessed damages from the time when the plaintiff's claim arose. In another action transferred by consent, after verdict for the plaintiff, to the admiralty division for the assessment of the damages by the registrar and merchants, the same practice was followed in regard to the interest:—Held, that interest on the damages was properly awarded by the registrar, on the ground that the parties, in both cases, having proceeded on the understanding that the admiralty practice should apply, had impliedly consented to abide by such practice. The Gertrude, The Baron Aberdare, 13 P. D. 105; 59 L. T. 251; 36 W. R. 616; 6 Asp. M. C. 315—C. A. Affirming 56 L. J., Adm. 106.

In Collision Actions.]—See ante, cols. 719, 853 et seq.

Effect of Judgment in Rem—Salvage Action.]—A judgment in rem of the admiralty division in a salvage action, is conclusive against all the world as to the status of the res, but is not conclusive as to the grounds of the decision except as between the parties to the action. A judgment in rem by a court of competent jurisdiction is conclusive against all the world as to the status of the res, but there is no distinction between a judgment in rem and a judgment in personam as to its being only conclusive as to the point adjudicated upon, except that in the case of a judgment in rem the point adjudicated upon, which is always as to the status of the res, is conclusive against all the world as to that status, whereas in the case of a judgment in personam the point adjudicated upon, not being as to the status of the res, is only conclusive as between parties or privies. Ballantyne v. Mackinnon, 65 L. J., Q. B. 616; [1896] 2 Q. B. 455; 75 L. T. 95; 45 W. R. 70; 8 Asp. M. C. 173—C. A. And see Castrique v. Imrie, supra, cols. 162, 165.

y. Security for Costs.

To answer Counter-claim—Bail.]—Where in a damage action the ship proceeded against is not arrested, and the plaintiffs do not require bail to be given, the defendants cannot compel the plaintiffs to give security to answer a counter-claim in the action under the provisions in the Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 10), s. 34, although they voluntarily give bail. The Alne Holme, 47 L. T. 307; 4 Asp. M. C. 591.

The power of the admiralty division under s. 34 of the Admiralty Court Act, 1861, to order an action to be stayed until bail has been given to answer a cross-action or counter-claim, does not extend to making an absolute order to give bail; and in a damage action in which the plaintiffs had discontinued after the defendants had counter-claimed, the court refused to enforce an order, made by the registrar, to give bail to answer such counter-claim. The Alexander, 48 L. T. 797; 5 Asp. M. C. 89.

When the owners of a ship which has sunk, and the owners of the cargo laden on board her join in an action against another ship for damages, sustained by collision, the court will order the claim by the owner of the ship to be dismissed, unless security for the counter-claim is given, but will allow the owner of cargo to proceed without security. The Carnarvon Castle, 38 L. T. 736; 26 W. R. 876; 3 Asp. M. C. 607—C. A.

Foreigners.]—In a suit instituted in 450*l.* for recovery of wages by German seamen against a German ship, the court ordered the plaintiffs to give security for costs. The Zufall, 44 L. J., Adm. 16; 32 L. T. 571; 23 W. R. 328; 2 Asp. M. C. 589.

Where a plaintiff has recently executed a deed of assignment of all his property, he will be required to give security for the costs of suit, unless he satisfy the court that he is solvent. The Lake Megantic, 36 L. T. 183; 3 Asp. M. C. 382.

A defendant is not bound to give security for costs, even though, from the circumstances of the case, it may happen that the burden of proof of the issues in the case lies upon him. Ib.

Plaintiffs beyond the jurisdiction of the court, in a cause of possession, though liable to give security for costs, will not be required, as a general rule, to give security for damages. The Mary or Alexandra, L. R. 1 A. & E. 335; 16 L. T. 98. The Peri, 32 L. J., Adm. 46; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1230; 11 W. R. 44.

The master of a foreign ship suing for his wages will be required to give security for costs. The Franz et Elize, Lush. 377; 5 L. T. 290.

It is in the discretion of the court to allow the mate of a foreign vessel, though not domiciled in England, to prosecute an action for wages without giving security for costs. The Don Ricardo, 49 L. J., Adm. 28; 5 P. D. 121; 42 L. T. 32; 28 W. R. 431; 4 Asp. M. C. 225.

Where, in a suit against the owners of a foreign vessel for damage done in collision, the owners had filed a petition for a limitation of their liability, the court ordered them to give security for costs. The Wild Ranger, Lush. 553; 31 L. J., Adm. 206; 6 L. T. 164.

Foreigners resident out of the jurisdiction who have intervened as defendants in an action of collision in rem instituted on behalf of foreign plaintiffs by whom security for costs has been given, must, if they seek relief by way of counter-claim, give security for the whole costs of the action. The Julia Fisher, 2 P. D. 115; 36 L. T. 257; 25 W. R. 756.

In an action and cross-action, if the proceedings are in personam, and the ship has not been arrested nor bail given in the principal cause, the court cannot stay the proceedings in the cross-action until the plaintiff in the principal cause has given security for costs as defendant in the cross-cause. The Amazon, The Osprey, 36 L. J., Adm. 4.

Plaintiffs resident out of the jurisdiction must give security for costs. The Sophie, 1 W. Rob. 326. Cf. Mylander v. Barnes, 6 H. & N. 509.

—— Foreign Government.]—A foreign government ordered to give security for costs as plaintiffs; not as defendants. The Beatrice, otherwise The Rappahannock, 36 L. J., Adm. 10.

—— Appeal to Privy Council.]—In a proceeding in rem, a bail bond given in court below only covering the costs in that court, the appellants, who were foreigners, were called upon to give security for the costs of the appeal; the court of appeal will not, however, entertain any question as to uncovered costs in the court below. The Hélène, Br. & Lush. 425; 3 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 240; 35 L. J., Adm. 1; 13 W. R. 931.

—— To Court of Appeal.]—The court refused to direct a defendant who had appealed from a judgment of the admiralty division, although his ship had been arrested and released on bail, and although he had obtained a stay of execution pending the appeal, to give security for the costs of the appeal. The Victoria, 1 P. D. 280; 34 L. T. 931; 24 W. R. 596; 3 Asp. M. C. 230—C. A.

23. Appeals.

a. To Court of Appeal.

When it Lies.]—An appeal will not lie from a refusal by the judge of the admiralty division to allow, under 31 & 32 Vict. c. 71, s. 27, an appeal from a county court judgment to be prosecuted. The Amstel, 47 L. J., Adm. 11; 2 P. D. 186; 37 L. T. 138; 26 W. R. 69; 3 Asp. M. C. 488—C. A.

Leave.]—In cases raising important points of law, the court will give leave to appeal to the court of appeal where, on a proper construction of the acts governing appeal, such leave is necessary. The Rona, 51 L. J., Adm. 65; 7 P. D. 247; 46 L. T. 601; 30 W. R. 614; 4 Asp. M. C. 520.

Principle of Court in dealing with Decisions appealed against.]—When the judge of the court below has come to a conclusion of fact after hearing witnesses, the court of appeal will not, except in cases of extreme pressure, reverse his decision; but where the decision of the court does not depend upon the credibility of the witnesses, but on the inferences from the evidence drawn by the judge, his decision may, even without such pressure, be reversed by the court of appeal. The Glannibanta and The Transit, 1 P. D. 283; 34 L. T. 934; 24 W. R. 1033; 3 Asp. M. C. 339—C. A.

The court of appeal will not reverse a judgment of the court of admiralty which has been arrived at after hearing witnesses and on their credibility. The Sisters, 45 L. J., Adm. 39; 1 P. D. 117; 34 L. T. 338; 24 W. R. 412; 3 Asp. M. C. 3220—C. A.

The reasons for judgment of the county court judge, as well as for that of the high court, should be before the court of appeal when a further appeal is allowed to that court. The Swallow, 36 L. T. 231; 3 Asp. M. C. 371—C. A.

When the court of admiralty has given no opinion on a question, which in the opinion of the court of appeal is a vital one in the cause, the court of appeal will decide that question on the evidence before them. The C. M. Palmer and The Larnax, 29 L. T. 129; 21 W. R. 702; 2 Asp. M. C. 94.

In Claims for Salvage as to the Quantum.]—See XVIII. SALVAGE.

—— To Court of Appeal from Divisional Court.]—Where, on appeal from a county court in an admiralty cause, the probate, divorce and admiralty division alters the judgment, an appeal lies without leave to the court of appeal under s. 10 of the County Courts Acts, 1875, notwithstanding s. 45 of the Judicature Act, 1873. The Lydia, 58 L. J., Adm. 37; 14 P. D. 1; 59 L. T. 843; 37 W. R. 161—C. A.

From County Court.]—See col. 1014; The Dart, infra, col. 1017.

Collision—Reasons of Nautical Assessors.]—Where in a collision action the nautical assessors sitting in the admiralty division reduce their reasons into writing, parties appealing from their decision are not entitled to see these reasons or have copies of them for the purposes of the appeal. The Banshee, 56 L. T. 725; 6 Asp. M. C. 130—C. A.

Staying Proceedings pending Appeal to House of Lords.]—When an appeal is brought from the court of appeal to the house of lords in an admiralty action in which bail has been given by the parties, an application by the appellant to stay execution pending the appeal will not be granted, unless special circumstances are shewn by affidavit. The Annot Lyle, 55 L. J., Adm. 62; 11 P. D. 114; 55 L. T. 576; 34 W. R. 647; 6 Asp. M. C. 50—C. A.

Appeal from an Inferior Court—Application to adduce fresh Evidence.]—An application to allow fresh evidence to be adduced at the hearing of an admiralty appeal from an inferior court may be made to a single judge of the admiralty division. The Eclipse, 14 P. D. 71; 60 L. T. 899; 6 Asp. M. C. 409.

Appeals in Prize Cases.]—Origin and history considered. Brymer v. Atkins, 1 H. Bl. 164.

b. To Privy Council.

Time for—From Vice-Admiralty Court.]—The time for appealing from the judgment of a vice-admiralty court is governed strictly by the rules and regulations made by order in council, June 27, 1832. The Brinhilda, 45 L. T. 389; 4 Asp. M. C. 461—P. C.

—— Excuse for Delay.]—Where the time for appealing from a vice-admiralty court has expired, owing to a delay by counsel in advising on the success or failure of such appeal, such delay being caused by counsel's waiting for the decision of another appeal pending before the privy council, which decision it is reasonably possible may throw light on the appeal to be advised upon, such apology may, in the absence of circumstances to destroy its effect, induce the committee to allow the prosecution of the appeal under 26 & 27 Vict. c. 24, s. 23. The Ricardo Schmidt, Cassanova v. Reg., L. R. 1 P. C. 115; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 127; 14 W. R. 617.

—— From Admiralty Courts.]—The time for appealing from any court of admiralty jurisdiction is limited to fifteen days by the practice of the court. The Brinhilda, supra.

An appeal from the high court of admiralty asserted after ten, but before fifteen days from the sentence, was in time. The Ulster, Laird v. Brownlie, Lush. 424; 1 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 31; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1067; 10 W. R. 794.

A plaintiff in one of two cross-suits for damage arising out of a collision, lodged an appeal within fifteen days of the decree, but did not give to the defendants notice thereof till after the expiration of fifteen days from the date of the decree. On a petition by the defendants for leave to lodge a cross appeal:—Held, first, that the 24 Hen. 8, c. 12, s. 7, which provides that appeals shall be made by the parties aggrieved within fifteen days after judgment, is confined to causes cognizable in the ecclesiastical courts. The Florence Nightingale and The Mœander, 1 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 42; 32 L. J., Adm. 1; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1067; 6 L. T. 765; 10 W. R. 794.

Held, secondly, that the limitation of the time of appealing from a decree of the high court of admiralty to fifteen days depends not upon legislative enactment, but upon long-established practice. Ib.

The judicial committee is not precluded either by statute or by practice from recommending an extension of the time in which an appeal may be made in cases which call for such indulgence. Ib.

The time for appealing from the high court of admiralty to the privy council was fifteen days. The Ulster, 1 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 31; 10 W. R. 794.

From Vice-Admiralty Court—Bail.]—Rule 15 of the Privy Council Rules of 1865, regulating appellate procedure from vice-admiralty courts, by which an appellant is required to give bail in 200*l.* to answer the costs of appeal, is not impliedly repealed by rule 150 of the Vice-Admiralty Court Rules of 1883, by which an appellant may be required to give security not exceeding 300*l.* for the costs of the appeal, but the judicial committee has a discretion in fitting cases to release the appellant from giving security under rule 15 of the Privy Council Rules, 1865. The Hesketh, Hunter v. The Hesketh, 61 L. J., P. C. 84; [1891] A. C. 628; 66 L. T. 305; 7 Asp. M. C. 160—P. C.

Report of Vice-Admiralty Court.]—Where, upon the hearing of an appeal to the privy council from a judgment upon the report of the registrar of a vice-admiralty court the privy council is of opinion that the report must be referred back for the finding of other facts and figures, such reference will be to the registrar of her majesty in ecclesiastical and maritime appeals, if convenient and less expensive than a reference back to the vice-admiralty court. The City of Peking, 59 L. J., P. C. 88; 15 App. Cas. 438; 63 L. T. 722; 6 Asp. M. C. 572—P. C.

Appeal from Vice-Admiralty Court—Security to restore Ship — Nature of Recognizance.]—Though the security taken was in the form of a debt to the king, not being taken in a court of record, it was not a recognizance, but operated as a stipulation to abide the decision of the court of appeal. Origin and history of appeals in prize cases considered. Brymer v. Atkins, 1 H. Bl. 164.

When it Lies.]—In any admiralty or vice-admiralty cause the right of appeal to the privy council is perempted by any proceedings being taken by the appellant under the decree to be appealed from. The Brinhilda, supra.

An offer by a defendant out of court to pay the plaintiff a specific sum and costs, made after judgment pronouncing the defendant liable in general damages, does not perempt his right of appeal. Laird v. Brownlie, supra.

—— Interlocutory Matters.]—Before 24 & 25 Vict. c. 10, s. 30, there was no appeal from an interlocutory order, which was a mere grievance: but the cause being appealed on the merits, the party might bring the grievance to the notice of the superior court. Failing to do so, the party was held to adopt the interlocutory order; and, upon the cause being remitted, was estopped from moving the court to rescind such order. The William Hutt, Lush. 25; Swabey, 696; 2 L. T. 448.

Adduction of Fresh Evidence.]—A special libel of appeal, with allegation and responsive allegation, pleading new matter, admitted by the court of appeal, and evidence taken thereon. The Newport, Swabey, 317.

An allegation pleading facts noviter ad notitiam perventa, admitted by the appellate court, and evidence taken vivâ voce thereon. Dionissis v. Reg., The Laura, 3 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 181.

On a motion for leave to adduce fresh evidence before the hearing of an appeal, it appeared that the evidence might have been adduced at the hearing in the court below, if application had been made to postpone the hearing for that purpose, but that no such application was made. The committee, therefore, refused to admit further evidence, and dismissed the motion, with costs. The Scindia, 35 L. J., P. C. 53; L. R. 1 P. C. 241; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 534.

Semble, where an objection is taken to the exclusion of evidence by the judge of the admiralty division, the proper course is to apply for a new trial on that ground, and not to tender the evidence afresh in the court of appeal. The Sir Robert Peel, 43 L. T. 364; 4 Asp. M. C. 321—C. A.

Principles of Dealing with Judgment or Decree appealed against.] — Where a disputed fact, involving nautical questions, is raised by an appeal, as in a case of collision, the court will not reverse the decree appealed from, unless conclusively satisfied that the decree is wrong, even though the court may entertain doubts as to the finding of the admiralty court. The Julia, 14 Moore, P. C. 210; Lush. 224.

The court must be satisfied that the decree is founded on some substantial mistake, either in law or fact. General Iron Screw Co. v. Moss, 15 Moore, P. C. 122.

Although there may be considerable doubt in the estimate taken by the court, in respect of the evidence of the witnesses upon questions of nautical skill, yet, considering the advantage that court has with the assistance of the Trinity masters, the appeal court must be satisfied that the court below was wrong, to justify a reversal of such finding. The Constitution, Dean v. Mark, 2 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 453.

Though the judicial committee will not lay down any exclusive rule as to appeals from judgments of the court of admiralty, upon questions which are entirely of fact, yet they are most reluctant to come to a conclusion different from that of the judge of the court below, merely on a balance of testimony: the judge having had the opportunity of seeing and testing the conduct and demeanour of the witnesses. The Alice and The Princess Alice, 38 L. J., Adm. 5; L. R. 2 P. C. 245; 19 L. T. 678; 17 W. R. 209.

Security for Costs.]—See The Hélène, ante, col. 1011.

c. From County Court.

When it Lies.]—Cross causes of damage heard together in a county court are, as to the right of appeal, to be considered distinct. The Elizabeth, 39 L. J., Adm. 53; L. R. 3 A. & E. 33; 21 L. T. 729.

The plaintiffs in a cause of damage in a county court claimed 100*l.*, and recovered an amount under 50*l.*:—Held, that no appeal lay to the court of admiralty. Ib.

The County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, s. 27, provides that the judge of the court of admiralty may, on sufficient cause being shewn to his satisfaction, allow an appeal from a final decree or order of a county court in an admiralty cause to be prosecuted, notwithstanding that the instrument of appeal has not been lodged in the registry of the court of admiralty within ten days from the date of the decree or order appealed from:—Held, that an application for leave to appeal under this section was rightly made to the judge of the court of admiralty sitting as a judge of the high court of justice. The Two Brothers, 45 L. J., Adm. 47; 1 P. D. 52; 33 L. T. 792; 24 W. R. 112; 3 Asp. M. C. 99.

No appeal lies from the decision of a county court in a salvage cause where there is a tender of less than 50*l.* and that tender is upheld, the amount tendered being the amount "decreed or ordered" within the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71), s. 31. The Fyenword, 34 L. T. 918; 3 Asp. M. C. 218.

A plaintiff claiming an amount not exceeding 50*l.* in an admiralty cause in a county court, is precluded from appealing from the decision of the court by s. 31 of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71). The Falcon, 47 L. J., Adm. 56; 3 P. D. 100; 38 L. T. 294; 26 W. R. 696; 3 Asp. M. C. 566.

By a decree of the city of London court an action of damage instituted in that court in the sum of 30*l.* was, after having been heard on the merits, dismissed with costs. The plaintiff appealed. At the hearing of the appeal the respondent objected to the jurisdiction of the court to entertain the appeal. The court dismissed the appeal on the ground that as the appellant, if successful, could not have recovered more than 30*l.* in the action, he was precluded from appealing by the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, s. 31. Ib.

The restriction as to amount due applies only to appeals by defendants. The Doctor Van Thunnen Tellow, 20 L. T. 960; 17 W. R. 899.

Extension of Time.]—The power of extending the time for appealing from a decree or order of a county court in an admiralty suit, conferred on the judge of the court of admiralty by the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, s. 27, may, since the coming into operation of the Judicature Act, 1873, be exercised by the judge of the court of admiralty sitting as a judge of the high court of justice. The Two Brothers, supra.

The power conferred by s. 27 of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, to extend the time within which an instrument of appeal may be lodged, provided sufficient cause be shewn, is not altered or curtailed by s. 6 of the County Courts Act, 1875, this latter section providing an alternative mode of appeal. The Humber, 53 L. J., Adm. 7; 9 P. D. 12; 49 L. T. 604; 32 W. R. 664; 5 Asp. M. C. 181.

Security for Costs.]—Upon appeal from a county court to the court of admiralty, security for the costs of the appeal must be given in the county court, and not in the court of admiralty. The Forest Queen, 40 L. J., Adm. 17; L. R. 3 A. & E. 299; 23 L. T. 544; 19 W. R. 167.

Judge's Notes on Appeal.]—In an appeal to the court of admiralty from a county court where there is a conflict between the transcript of the notes of evidence and the judgment taken by a shorthand-writer in the county court, and the county court judge's own notes, the version given by the county court judge must be accepted as binding; and if the county court judge alters the shorthand-writer's notes so as to correspond with his own version, the court of admiralty will order the alteration so made to be carried into effect in the printed copies of the appendix. The Raithwaite Hall, 30 L. T. 233; 2 Asp. M. C. 210.

In the absence of the judge's notes of evidence, the court of admiralty on the appeal allowed a witness to be examined who had given evidence in the court below. The C. S. Butler, L. R. 4 A. & E. 238; 31 L. T. 549; 23 W. R. 113; 2 Asp. M. C. 408.

Where there were no notes of the evidence taken before the county court and no judge's notes, the judge of the admiralty division ordered the appeal to be heard in vivâ voce evidence. The Confidence, The Susan Elizabeth, 40 L. T. 201; 4 Asp. M. C. 79.

Evidence on Appeal.]—The court may order witnesses to be examined vivâ voce at the hearing of a cause of appeal from the county court. But such order will not be made except under special circumstances. The Busy Bee, L. R. 3 A. & E. 527; 26 L. T. 590; 20 W. R. 803; 1 Asp. M. C. 293.

Wherever there is a probability of an appeal, notes of the evidence given in the county court should be taken by a reporter duly appointed according to the provisions contained in the rules for regulating the admiralty jurisdiction of the county court. Ib.

The court of admiralty is very cautious as to admitting fresh evidence at the hearing of an appeal from the county court, and will not do so unless the principles of justice require the admission of such evidence. The Moorsley, 29 L. T. 663; 1 Asp. M. C. 471.

Semble, that surprise is a ground for the admission of fresh evidence. An application for admission of evidence refused on the ground that there was no surprise shewn. Ib.

An application to allow fresh evidence to be adduced at the hearing of an admiralty appeal from an inferior court may be made to a single judge of the admiralty division. The Eclipse, 14 P. D. 71; 60 L. T. 899; 6 Asp. M. C. 409.

Leave to Appeal.]—As a general rule, the court of admiralty will not grant permission to appeal from a decree or an order of the court made on appeal from a county court except in cases where the law is doubtful, or where the facts are such as to leave a substantial doubt on the mind of the court whether the conclusion at which it has arrived is right, or where the pecuniary interest involved is large. The Samuel Laing, 39 L. J., Adm. 42; L. R. 3 A. & E. 284; 22 L. T. 891.

Leave to set down an appeal from a county court judge in admiralty, which could not be set down without leave, was refused by the judge of the admiralty division. On appeal from this decision, the court of appeal held they had no jurisdiction to interfere. The Amstel, 47 L. J., Adm. 11; 2 P. D. 186; 37 L. T. 138; 26 W. R. 69; 3 Asp. M. C. 488. And see The Rona, supra, col. 1010.

—— From County Court.]—Appeal lies by permission of the judge below to the high court from an interlocutory order made by a county court in an admiralty action, although the action is for a less sum than 50*l.* The Alert, United Steam Tug Co. v. The Alert (Owners), 11 R. 702; 72 L. T. 124; 7 Asp. M. C. 544.

—— Interlocutory Matter.]—Under s. 26 of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, leave to appeal from an interlocutory order in county court actions on the admiralty side must be obtained from the county court judge, and this enactment is still applicable to such actions, notwithstanding the general provisions of s. 120 of the County Courts Act, 1888, and hence a party cannot appeal from such orders without leave. The Cashmere, 59 L. J., Adm. 57; 15 P. D. 121; 62 L. T. 814; 38 W. R. 623; 6 Asp. M. C. 515.

—— Judgment of County Court varied by Divisional Court—Appeal to Court of Appeal without Leave.]—Where a divisional court of the probate, divorce and admiralty division "alters" on appeal the judgment of a county court in an admiralty action, an appeal lies without leave from the judgment of the divisional court to the court of appeal. The Dart, 62 L. J., Adm. 32 ; [1893] P. 33 ; 1 R. 572 ; 69 L. T. 251 ; 41 W. R. 153 ; 7 Asp. M. C. 353—C. A. And see The Lydia, supra, col. 1011.

Amount decreed not exceeding £50—Question of Law.]—The effect of s. 120 of the County Courts Act, 1888, is to give an appeal from a decision of the county court on a point of law in an admiralty action, although the amount decreed to be due does not exceed 50*l.* The Eden, 61 L. J., Adm. 68 ; [1892] P. 67 ; 66 L. T. 387 ; 40 W. R. 415 ; 7 Asp. M. C. 174.

An appeal now lies to the high court from the decision of a county court on a question of law in an admiralty action, although the amount of the judgment does not exceed 50*l.*, and although no security for costs has been given ; the general words of s. 120 of the County Courts Act, 1888, by implication repealing, so far as regards appeals on questions of law, the special provisions contained in ss. 26 and 31 of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868. The Delano, 64 L. J., Adm. 8 ; [1895] P. 40 ; 6 R. 810 ; 71 L. T. 544 ; 43 W. R. 65 ; 7 Asp. M. C. 523—C. A.

Per Lord Esher, M.R. : An appeal on a question of law in an admiralty action in the county court is now governed by the act of 1888, whether the amount does or does not exceed 50*l.* ; an appeal on a question of fact in such an action is still governed by the act of 1868, and must comply with the conditions in ss. 26 and 31. Ib.

Cross-appeal — Jurisdiction.] — The divisional court has no jurisdiction to hear a cross-appeal the subject-matter of which it has no jurisdiction to hear as an original appeal. The Alne Holme, 62 L. J., Adm. 51 ; [1893] P. 173 ; 1 R. 607 ; 68 L. T. 862 ; 41 W. R. 572 ; 7 Asp. M. C. 344.

Certificate for.]—The defendants in an action for damage, before any statement of claim had been delivered, admitted their liability for the damage, and by consent the question of amount was by an order of court referred to the registrar and merchants to report thereon. At the reference before the registrar the plaintiffs claimed as damages 295*l.* 18*s.* 1*d.*. The registrar reported to the court that there was due to the plaintiffs 199*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.* Afterwards they moved the judge to condemn the defendants in the costs of the action and of the reference. Evidence was given on affidavit in support of the motion to the effect that the plaintiffs at the time their action was instituted were liable to a claim for salvage in respect of services rendered to their vessel after the collision, and that subsequently and before the reference 60*l.* had been paid and accepted in settlement of such claim :—Held, that the court had jurisdiction to certify that the case was a fit case to be tried before it, and that the proper order to be made was that the plaintiffs should have the costs of the action, but that each party should bear their own costs of the reference. The Williamina, 3 P. D. 97.

Since the Judicature Acts it is not necessary to obtain a certificate to enable a plaintiff to recover his costs in an action in the high court, where such action is within the admiralty jurisdiction of the county court, but not within its common law jurisdiction. The Englishman, 38 L. T. 756. See also The Naomi, infra, col. 1022.

Costs in Cross Causes of Damage.]—In cross causes of damage the defendants in the principal suit alleged various defences, and established only the defence of compulsory pilotage. The court refused to apportion the costs, so as to allow the plaintiffs the costs of the defences they had established. The Schwan, The Robert Morrison, 43 L. J., Adm. 18 ; L. R. 4 A. & E. 187 ; 30 L. T. 537 ; 22 W. R. 743 ; 2 Asp. M. C. 259.

Separate Appearance at Trial.] — Where a party obtains leave to appear separately at the trial, he does so subject to his costs being disallowed. The Longford, 50 L. J., Adm. 28 ; 6 P. D. 60 ; 44 L. T. 254 ; 29 W. R. 491 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 385.

Liability of Co-Plaintiffs.]—Immunity of a co-plaintiff from costs does not create a like immunity for the remaining co-plaintiffs. In the admiralty court each co-plaintiff is severally liable for the whole of the costs. The Leda, Br. & Lush. 19 ; 32 L. J., Adm. 58 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 208 ; 7 L. T. 864 ; 11 W. R. 302.

Proof of Documents.]—The plaintiffs, in a collision suit, subpœnaed the receiver of wreck to produce the original depositions, and did not call upon the defendants to admit copies. The court pronounced the defendants' vessel alone to blame, and condemned the defendants in the costs of suit. The registrar disallowed the costs of the subpœna and the expenses of the attendance of the receiver of wreck, and the court refused to interfere with his decision. The Cromwell, L. R. 3 A. & E. 316.

Tender in Salvage Suit.]—Where a tender in a salvage suit is pronounced for, the usual practice is to condemn the plaintiffs in the costs incurred since the time of tender, but this practice is not invariable, and where the court is of opinion that the tender is not a liberal one, it will, in its discretion, make no order with regard to such costs. The Lotus, 7 P. D. 199 ; 47 L. T. 447 ; 30 W. R. 892 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 595. See also ante, col. 669.

Form of Tender—Offer to Pay Costs.]—A tender which does not contain an offer to pay costs must specify the grounds upon which the defendant contends the plaintiff is not entitled to costs. The Thracian, 41 L. J., Adm. 71 ; L. R.

3 A. & E. 504; 25 L. T. 889; 20 W. R. 380; 1 Asp. M. C. 207.

Collision—Inevitable Accident.]—See Cases ante, cols. 858, seq.

—— Co-defendants — Costs of Successful Defendant.]—The dumb barge "E.," while in tow of the steam tug "S.," was damaged by a collision with the steamship "R. L." The owners of the "E." commenced an action joining the owners of both vessels as defendants. At the trial the "R. L." was found alone to blame:—Held, that the owners of the "R. L.," having endeavoured to throw the blame on the "S.," must pay her costs as well as those of the plaintiffs. The River Lagan, 57 L. J., Adm. 28; 58 L. T. 773; 6 Asp. M. C. 281.

—— Defence of Compulsory Pilotage.]—See Cases ante, cols. 856, seq.

Costs of Motion.]—The court will not give the costs of appearing to consent to a motion where the party appearing is not in any way prejudiced by the motion. The Achilles, 25 L. T. 605; 1 Asp. M. C. 165.

Action in High Court—Less than £300 recovered—High Court Scale.]—Where in action of damage by collision instituted in the high court less than 300*l.* is recovered, the court, in exercising its discretion as to costs, will regard the size of the vessels, the nature of the collision, the length of time occupied at the trial, and the judgment delivered by the court. The Saltburn, [1892] P. 333; 1 R. 543; 69 L. T. 88; 7 Asp. M. C. 325.

Taxation.]—In an outport bill brought into the registry for taxation by a proctor who acted as proctor for parties in a cause, charges were made for work done in the cause by a notary at an outport. The notary was neither a proctor, an attorney, nor a solicitor. A portion of the work for which these charges were made was work connected with the preparation of briefs and affidavits in the cause, and was such as is usually done by solicitors. The charges for this portion of the work the court disallowed. The City of Brussels, 42 L. J., Adm. 72; L. R. 4 A. & E. 194; 29 L. T. 312; 22 W. R. 71.

On a taxation between solicitor and client of the costs of a cause, objections were taken on behalf of the client to charges occasioned by the postponement of the trial and the amendment of the pleadings, on the ground that the postponement of the trial and the amendment of the pleadings had been rendered necessary by the negligence of the solicitor; the registrar refused to disallow the items, on the ground that it was not within his province as taxing-master to inquire into the question of negligence:—Held, that the ruling of the registrar was right. The Papa de Bossie, 3 P. D. 160; 27 W. R. 367.

Upon disallowance of a fee to counsel for advising as to the admissibility of a plea, the court reviewed the registrar's taxation, and directed the allowance of the fee and the costs attendant thereon. The Rouen, 31 L. J., Adm. 132; 6 L. T. 508.

The costs of an issue, upon which he is unsuccessful, may be taxed against a party, though successful in the suit. The Laurel, Br. & Lush. 191; 33 L. J., Adm. 17; 9 L. T. 457.

—— Country Solicitor attending Trial in London—Discretion.]—In taxing costs between party and party a charge for the attendance of the country solicitor at the hearing in London is discretionary. Where in admiralty cases the attendance of the country solicitor, who has taken the examination of the witnesses and managed the proceedings up to the trial, is necessary for the proper conduct of the case, his charges for such attendance ought to be allowed. The Soto, 62 L. J., Adm. 17; [1893] P. 73; 1 R. 579; 69 L. T. 231; 41 W. R. 479; 7 Asp. M. C. 335.

—— Printing Evidence.]—The parties to an action between the owners of the "B." and the "C." agreed that the evidence taken in an action between the owners of the "A." and the "C.," and printed for the purpose of an appeal, should be used in the action between the "B." and the "C." The plaintiffs paid the solicitors of the "A." for such prints, and charged the sums so paid in addition to the regular charge of 3*d.* per folio, as though the printing had been done in this action, under Ord. LXVI. r. 7:—Held, on objection to the taxation, that the charge of 3*d.* per folio was not improper. The Mammoth, 53 L. J., Adm. 70; 9 P. D. 126; 51 L. T. 549; 33 W. R. 172; 5 Asp. M. C. 289.

—— Third Counsel.]—In an action arising out of a collision where damage had been done to the amount of 2,700*l.*:—Held, that the charges of a third counsel should not be disallowed. Ib.

—— Counsel's Fees.]—In an action for damage by collision, where the damage to one vessel amounted to 20.000*l.*, the registrar, on taxation, reduced counsels' fees to sixty guineas, forty guineas, and twenty-seven guineas; the court, on appeal from the taxation, allowed the original fees, holding that they were proper fees in a case of that magnitude. The City of Lucknow, 51 L. T. 907; 5 Asp. M. C. 340.

—— Retainers — Refreshers.] — Refreshers allowed in the admiralty division to senior and junior counsel; but not where the hearing of a case though taken on two days does not amount in the whole to one day. The Neera, 5 P. D. 118; 42 L. T. 743; 4 Asp. M. C. 277.

Discontinuance—Commissions for Bail.]—The expenses of procuring bail for the release of a ship cannot be recovered as costs against a plaintiff who has discontinued his action, though in certain circumstances they may be recovered as damages. The Numida, The Collingrove, 54 L. J., Adm. 78; 10 P. D. 158; 53 L. T. 681; 34 W. R. 156; 5 Asp. M. C. 483.

On Higher Scale.]—Costs on the higher scale will only be allowed under exceptional circumstances. The Raisby or Cardiff Steamship Co. v. Barwick, 54 L. J., Adm. 65; 10 P. D. 114; 53 L. T. 56; 33 W. R. 938; 5 Asp. M. C. 473.

Costs on the higher scale will only be granted when special grounds of urgency or importance are shown, as it was intended that the lower scale should be the ordinary scale. An award of 2,400*l.* having been made in a salvage action, an application under Ord. LXV. r. 9, for costs on the higher scale was made to the court:—Held, that this was not a special ground so as to take the case out of the ordinary rule. The Horace, 53 L. J., Adm. 64; 9 P. D. 86; 50 L. T. 595; 32 W. R. 755; 5 Asp. M. C. 218.

Detention Fees at Outport.]—Detention fees at an outport are paid by the party arresting; but where the marshal arrests he has the security of the ship for his fees. The North American, Swabey, 466; Lush. 79.

Costs of Appraisement.]—Costs of appraisement, where it does not shew a greater value than that stated by the owners, are to be borne by the salvors. The Persian, 1 Not. of Cas. 304.

Decree against Defendant Personally.]—The admiralty court could decree a defendant personally to pay costs, though the ship was arrested and bail given. The Volant, 1 W. Rob. 383.

Marshal's Expenses.]—See The Queen, 19 L. T. 705.

Costs of Witnesses.]—The expenses of detaining a witness will not be allowed, unless it can be shewn that his detention was absolutely necessary to insure his attendance as a witness, and was not for any other purpose, e.g. merely to watch the proceedings in a suit. The Bahia, L. R. 1 A. & E. 15; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 1008; 14 W. R. 411.

A master's expenses, at the rate of 1*l.* per week, allowed from the arrest of the vessel in March, 1863, to July, 1864, when the defendant applied to have the cause put off. Ib.

A party in a cause is not bound to examine any of his witnesses before the hearing; and if judgment is given in his favour with costs, he is in general entitled, with respect to seamen who are reasonably detained by him as necessary witnesses, to the expenses of maintaining them to the time of the hearing. The Karla, Br. & Lush. 367; 13 W. R. 295.

In the case of the witnesses being foreign seamen, a reasonable charge incurred for agency or interpretation may be allowed. Ib.

In estimating the allowance and compensation for loss of time in the case of a seaman detained to give evidence, the rate of wages is a fair criterion. The Olive, Swabey, 292.

The expenses of material and necessary witnesses may be allowed, though they may not have been called at the trial. The Biddick, 38 L. J., Adm. 24; 19 L. T. 705.

Enforcing Payment—Attachment.]—In a suit for wages brought by a master a tender was made, and accepted. Proceedings were then taken in the court of exchequer, under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, ss. 61, 65, to attach these costs in the hands of the party from whom they were due, and such party was compelled to pay them over to the judgment creditors of the master. The proctor for the master having received notice of these proceedings, but not having opposed them:—Held, that the court of admiralty was bound by the order of the court of exchequer, and could not enforce payment of costs against the mortgagee in possession of the vessel, the party proceeded against. The Olive, Swabey, 423; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 445.

Excessive Bail.]—A ship was arrested, and bail required for an exorbitant sum:—Held, that the plaintiffs must pay the costs and expenses incurred by the defendants in giving this bail. The George Gordon, 53 L. J., Adm. 28; 9 P. D. 46; 50 L. T. 371; 32 W. R. 596; 5 Asp. M. C. 216; and see The Earl Grey, 1 Spinks, 180.

Varying Decree as to.]—A decree made by a former judge, as to costs in a collision cause where both ships were held in fault, varied. The Monarch, 1 W. Rob. 21.

Solicitors' Lien—Charging Order—Solicitors Act, 1860, s. 28.]—A collision action was compromised upon the terms that the defendants, the owners of the "Paris," should pay 50 per cent. of the damage, each party to bear their own costs, and the amount to be ascertained by an arbitrator. After the compromise the plaintiff wrote to the defendants' solicitors, who were pressing for payment of money due from the plaintiff to certain clients of theirs, and also for payment of certain costs due to them from the plaintiff in other matters, that they might settle these claims "out of money coming in from 'Paris' s.s." After the arbitrator had made his award the defendants' solicitors sent to the plaintiffs' solicitors a cheque for a small sum, being the balance after payment of the above-mentioned claims. The plaintiffs' solicitors took out a summons under the Solicitors Act, 1862, s. 25, for a charging order for the amount of their costs:—Held, that they were entitled to the order. The Paris, 65 L. J., Adm. 42; [1896] P. 77; 73 L. T. 736.

b. Of Reference.

Damage.]—It is within the discretion of the registrar to order that all the costs of a reference shall be borne by the defendants, though more than one-fourth of the plaintiff's claim be disallowed. The Amelia, 23 L. T. 544; 19 W. R. 216.

When more than one-third of the claim is struck off at a reference by the registrar and merchants, the court will consider itself bound by the rule of practice as to costs, and condemn the plaintiff in the costs of the reference, notwithstanding hardship in the particular case. The Englishman, 38 L. T. 756. See also The Williamina, supra, col. 1018.

A ship was damaged by another outward bound, and the owners of the injured vessel, in the bonâ fide belief that their damage was greater than it actually was, instituted a suit in the court of admiralty and arrested the ship for a large amount, but accepted bail and released the ship at once on ascertaining their actual damage; the defendants admitted liability, and the damage was referred to the registrar; the claim made by the plaintiffs was a little over 300*l.*, but the registrar reduced the amount claimed by more than one-third, and made no report as to costs. On application by the plaintiffs, the court certified for the costs of suit, under the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, but condemned the plaintiffs in the costs of the reference. The Naomi, 32 L. T. 836; 23 W. R. 387; 2 Asp. M. C. 588.

Where in an action of damage, the defendant sets up a counter-claim relating to the collision in respect of which the action is brought, and both ships are held to blame, and a reference is ordered to ascertain the amount of damage sustained by each ship, each party is, as a general rule, entitled to the costs of establishing his claim before the registrar, provided that not more than one-fourth of his claim has been disallowed. The Mary, 7 P. D. 201; 48 L. T. 28; 31 W. R. 298; 5 Asp. M. C. 33.

Where a plaintiff in a reference in a collision action withdraws a large item of his claim at the reference, and not before, and he recovers less than two-thirds of the amount originally claimed, but more than two-thirds of the amount which remains after his withdrawal of the above item, the original amount of his claim before withdrawal is the claim upon which costs are to be given, and he is not entitled to his costs. The Eilean Dubh, 49 L. T. 444; 5 Asp. M. C. 154.

As by Ord. LXV. r. 1, of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, the costs of all proceedings are in the discretion of the court, the general rule of practice in the admiralty court as to the costs of references, namely, that when more than a fourth is struck off a claim, each party pays his own costs, and when more than a third the claimant pays the other party's costs, is wrong, and the court must exercise its discretion according to the circumstances of each particular case. The Empress Eugénie (Lush. 140) overruled. The Friedeberg, 54 L. J., Adm. 75; 10 P. D. 112; 52 L. T. 837; 33 W. R. 687; 5 Asp. M. C. 426—C. A.

Claimant condemned in whole costs of the reference where a large part of the claim was disallowed, and no objection made to the registrar's report. The J. J. Hathorn, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 790.

Taxation—Interference with.]—The court will not ordinarily interfere with the registrar's discretion as to taxation, unless a mistake in principle has been made. The Neera, 5 P. D. 118; 42 L. T. 743; 4 Asp. M. C. 277.

Costs attending Claim for Freight disallowed.]—The shipowner claimed as damages for the collision freight which his ship might have earned under a charterparty entered into before the collision for a voyage to be performed after the collision:—Held, that he must pay the costs attending the claim for freight at the reference. The South Sea, Swabey, 141.

Masters' Wages.]—The rule obtaining in references in causes of collision, that if the registrar strikes off more than one-third of the plaintiff's claim, the plaintiff shall be condemned in the costs of the reference, does not apply to a reference in a cause of master's wages; but the court will decide equitably according to the circumstances of the particular case. The Lemuella Lush. 147; 30 L. J., Adm. 1.

Upon a report by the registrar in a cause of master's wages, the court will not determine the incidence of the costs of the reference by any fixed rule, but according to circumstances of the case. The William, Lush. 199.

On a reference of the accounts in a master's wages suit, more than half of the owner's claim of set-off and nearly two-thirds of the master's claim, were disallowed. Charges of immorality were made by the owners but not sustained. The master was allowed his costs of reference. The Strathallan, 6 L. T. 107.

Of Appeal from Registrar.]—See The Black Prince, infra.

c. Of Appeal.

Costs to follow Event—Special Circumstances.]—The costs of an admiralty action, both in the court of appeal and in the court below, follow the event in the absence of special circumstances. The Batavier, 59 L. J., Adm. 54; 15 P. D. 37; 62 L. T. 406; 38 W. R. 522; 6 Asp. M. C. 500—C. A. S. P., The Swansea and The Condor, 48 L. J., Adm. 33; 4 P. D. 115; 40 L. T. 442; 27 W. R. 748; 4 Asp. M. C. 115—C. A.

Where leave necessary.]—Costs not allowed when the court of appeal reversed the decision of the court below in an appeal for which permission was necessary. The Swallow, 36 L. T. 231; 3 Asp. M. C. 371—C. A.

Collision—Inevitable accident.]—In an action for damage by collision in which the defence was inevitable accident, the plaintiffs obtained judgment on the ground that negligence on the part of the defendants had been proved. On appeal to the court of appeal, the defence of inevitable accident was established, and the judgment reversed:—Held, that as the admiralty court is a division of the high court of justice, the general rule, in force in the other divisions—that, in the absence of special circumstances, costs follow the event—ought to be followed in that court, and that on the appeal being allowed, the defendants were entitled to the costs both of the appeal and in the court below. The Monkseaton, 58 L. J., Adm. 52; 14 P. D. 51; 60 L. T. 662; 37 W. R. 523; 6 Asp. M. C. 383—C. A.; and see The Naples, 55 L. J., Adm. 64; 11 P. D. 124; 55 L. T. 584; 35 W. R. 59; 6 Asp. M. C. 30.

—— One or both Ships in fault.]—When in a cause of collision the appellant was found in the court below solely to blame, and condemned in the whole damage, and the court of appeal found both parties to blame, and divided the damage, costs of appeal were given. The Fyenoord, Swabey, 374.

Where both parties appeal from a sentence, pronouncing both to blame, and the sentence is affirmed, no costs of the appeal are given. The North American and The Tecla Carmen, Swabey, 358; 12 Moore, P. C. 331.

Material mistakes in respect to certain facts in evidence occurred in the summing up of the judge. The committee, though it sustained the decree appealed from, under the circumstances affirmed the judgment without costs. General Iron Screw Co. v. Moss, 15 Moore, P. C. 122.

And see further as to costs in collision appeals, ante, col. 860.

Salvage.]—Though in appeals as to the amount of salvage the privy council generally did not give a successful appellant his costs of the appeal, such appeals under the Judicature Act form no exception to the general rule that a successful appellant is entitled to his costs. The City of Berlin, 47 L. J., Adm. 2; 2 P. D. 187; 37 L. T. 307; 25 W. R. 793; 3 Asp. M. C. 491—C. A. And see further as to costs in salvage appeals, ante, col. 677.

From Registrar.]—The costs of an appeal from the registrar, as a general rule, follow the result of the appeal. The Black Prince, Lush. 568.

1. Stamping and Requirements.

a. Necessity of Stamp.

Under early Acts.]—Under 25 Geo. 3, c. 44, where several persons were interested in an insurance all their names had to be inserted in the policy. Wilton v. Reatson, 1 Park. Ins. (8th ed.) 16.

Stamped policy is alone binding. Rogers v. M'Carthy, 1 Park. Ins. (8th ed.) 39.

Admissibility in Evidence.]—By 35 Geo. 3, c. 63, s. 14, and 48 Geo. 3, c. 149, if several distinct interests were insured in the same policy, though for one entire sum, on goods "to be thereafter declared and valued"; and it appeared in fact that the several interests included fractional parts of 100*l.*, which interests were afterwards declared and indorsed on the policy, such policy could not be given in evidence, nor was available in law to any extent, unless stamped with a stamp of sufficient value to cover all such fractional parts; though sufficient to cover the entire sum insured. Rapp v. Allnutt, 15 East, 601.

Where a policy produced at the trial of an action has a sufficient stamp, evidence will be received that it had no such stamp when it was effected, in which case it is a mere nullity, though stamped afterwards by order of the commissioners. Roderick v. Hovil, 3 Camp. 103.

A. insured a ship in a mutual marine insurance association in 1863, and the policy, which was not stamped, was annually renewed up to the year ending March, 1868. In February, 1868, the ship, with A. on board, was lost at sea. The loss of the ship was reported to the association, and from entries in the minute-books the money due upon the policy was raised by order of the committee, but retained by the secretary until a personal representative to A. had been appointed.

The company was ordered to be wound up in January, 1870, and A.'s widow obtained letters of administration to him in December, 1871. Upon a claim by the widow under the winding-up for the amount secured by the policy:—Held, that there was a sufficient admission of liability in the books of the company to enable the widow to recover as a creditor for the amount secured by the policy, although, from the absence of a stamp, the policy itself, upon which the claim arose, could not be given in evidence. Teignmouth and General Mutual Shipping Association, In re, Martin's claim, 41 L. J., Ch. 679; L. R. 14 Eq. 148; 26 L. T. 684; 1 Asp. M. C. 325.

Question for Jury.]—On the trial of an action on a policy in which the existence of the policy was in issue, the plaintiffs, pursuant to notice to produce, called on the defendant to produce the original policy. He declined, and they thereupon, with a view of proving that it had been duly executed, proceeded to put in a document, purporting to be a copy of the policy which they had received from the defendant's broker. The defendant objected, and requested the judge to hear evidence to shew that no original policy was or ever had been in existence. The objection was overruled, and the alleged copy admitted. Later in the cause the defendant gave evidence tending to prove that in fact there had never been any duly stamped policy, or indeed any policy at all executed, and the judge left it to the jury to say whether there had or had not been executed a duly stamped policy by the defendant. The jury found in the affirmative:—Held, that the question was rightly left to the jury, inasmuch as if the judge had himself decided it, he would in fact have decided the main issue between the parties. Stowe v. Querner, 39 L. J., Ex. 60; L. R. 5 Ex. 155; 22 L. T. 29; 18 W. R. 466.

Letter referring to Rules not Stamped.]—B. & Co., by letter, authorised the managers of a mutual marine insurance association to insure a ship with the association, and undertook to abide by the rules and regulations thereof. By the rules, each insurer became liable to contribute to the losses of any other insurer in certain proportions. In pursuance of the authority given by B. & Co., a duly stamped policy was issued to them, which, however, contained no reference to the rules:—Held, that the letter, although not stamped, was admissible in evidence, and that B. & Co. were contributories. Albert Average Association, In re, Blyth & Co.'s Case, L. R. 13 Eq. 529; 20 W. R. 504.

Court will take Notice of, notwithstanding Parties' Admissions.]—In an action on an alleged contract of insurance, a special case was stated without pleadings, from which it appeared that no stamped policy had ever been executed; but it was stated that, for the purpose of the case, it was to be taken as if the defendants had executed a valid policy in the ordinary form. The case was ordered to be struck out on the ground that there was no legal contract, on which the judgment of the court could be delivered, and that the admission did not authorise the court to discuss the case. Nixon v. Albion Marine Insurance Co., 36 L. J., Ex. 180; L. R. 2 Ex. 338; 16 L. T. 568; 15 W. R 964.

30 Vict. c. 23, ss. 1, 4.]—A time policy embracing several ships with separate sums insured on each is properly stamped at the aggregate amount insured. Great Britain Steamship Premium Association v. Whyte, 19 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 109.

Ship Insured without Stamped Policy—Estoppel.]—Where a member of a mutual insurance company, afterwards converted into a limited company, has vessels on its books as insured, and pays calls, and otherwise acts as if he were a member of the company, he is, in any action brought against him by the limited company for calls on losses, estopped from denying his liability, and from setting up either any irregularity in the transfer from the one company to the other, or that the losses were paid without any stamped policies being entered into in contravention of 30 Vict. c. 23, s. 7. Barrow-in-Furness Mutual Ship Insurance Co. v. Ashburner, 54 L. J., Q. B. 377; 54 L. T. 58; 5 Asp. M. C. 527—C. A.

Policy issued by Mutual Company—Sealing—Validity—Stamp Act.]—Where a policy issued by a mutual insurance company is sealed with the company's seal and attested by the manager it is sufficiently signed within the meaning of the Stamp Act, 30 & 31 Vict. c. 23, s. 7. Marine Mutual Insurance Co. v. Young, 43 L. T. 441; 4 Asp. M. C. 357.

b. Upon Alteration.

Where Stamp Required.]—A stamped policy, on which an unstamped memorandum has been afterwards indorsed, is not admissible, unless the memorandum is also stamped. Rex v. Gillson, 2 Leach, C. C. 1007; R. & R. 138; 1 Taunt. 95.

Goods and specie to a certain amount having been insured by a policy on ship or ships which should sail on the voyage insured between the 1st October, 1799, and the 1st June, 1800, a memorandum written on the policy on the 11th June, extending the time of sailing to the 1st August, 1800, did not require a new stamp, being within the 35 Geo. 3, c. 63, s. 13, which provided that the act imposing the stamp shall not extend to prohibit the making any lawful alteration in the terms or conditions of any policy. Kensington v. Inglis, 8 East, 273; 9 R. R. 438.

A policy of insurance duly stamped was effected on a ship on a voyage at and from Liverpool to Quebec. The ship being detained beyond the intended time of sailing, the following memorandum was indorsed on the policy: "The 'Hebe' being unavoidably detained beyond the intended time of sailing to Quebec, the voyage is changed, and the vessel proceeds from Liverpool to St. John's, New Brunswick, at and from thence to London; and in consideration of one guinea per cent. additional, the underwriters agree to continue on the risk until the vessel shall be arrived back in London, or her port of discharge in the United Kingdom":—Held, that the change of destination of the ship, provided for by the memorandum, was an alteration in the terms and conditions of the policy, within 35 Geo. 3, c. 63, s. 13; and, therefore, the policy so altered by the memorandum did not require a new stamp. Brockelbank v. Sugrue, 1 B. & Ad. 81; 1 M. &

Rob. 102; 5 Car. & P. 21; 8 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 371.

Where there was a policy on goods at and from S. to R., and the ship being driven into W. and detained, the assured wrote to their agents in L. "that the captain had been ordered to proceed to C., as they were not certain whether the enemy might be at R. or not, and that the passage to C. was nearly the same, but rather the shortest and safest, and they desired the agents to arrange the matter with the underwriters," which letter the agents receiving on 12th July, applied to the underwriters for their consent to alter the policy, by adding the words "S. or M. after R." which consent was obtained, and the ship and goods were afterwards lost in the voyage to C.:—Held, that this alteration did not require a new stamp, it being within 35 Geo. 3, c. 63, s. 13. Ramstrom v. Bell, 5 M. & S. 267.

A policy effected on ship and outfit on a voyage upon the southern whale fishery out and home, cannot be altered by consent after the ship sails, and the risk attaches to an insurance on "ship and goods" without a new stamp; outfit, the subject-matter of insurance, being essentially different in such a voyage from goods, and therefore not within the exception of the 35 Geo. 3, c. 63, s. 13, which enabled alterations to be made in the terms or conditions of a policy, without having a new stamp, so that the thing insured remained the property of the same persons. Hill v. Patten, 8 East, 373; 1 Camp. 72; 9 R. R. 469. And see French v. Patton, 9 East, 351; 1 Camp. 180; 9 R. R. 571; Reed v. Deere, 7 B. & C. 261; 2 Car. & P. 624; 31 R. R. 190.

A vessel having sailed and put back to the Downs, and then sailed again, laboured and strained much from being overloaded, and then put back a second time; and upon an application to the underwriters for liberty for the ship to go into port to discharge part of the cargo, it was only communicated to them that the ship was too deep in the water:—Held, that the memorandum giving such liberty did not require a new stamp. Weir v. Aberdeen, 2 B. & Ald. 320; 20 R. R. 450.

A policy was effected at four guineas per cent. on hemp, marked R., and valued, with certain returns of premium upon arrival at certain ports, and warranted to sail before the 20th of August, which was a summer risk and premium; by a memorandum indorsed, the underwriters for four guineas additional and the return of 5*s.* less for arrival, absolved the assured from the warranty of sailing before 20th August, so making it a winter risk; and withdrew the mark of the hemp:—Held, that these were not such alterations of the subject-matter insured, and of the terms of the policy, but that they might be made by 35 Geo. 3, c. 63, s. 13, without any new stamp. Hubbard v. Jackson, 4 Taunt. 169; 13 R. R. 574.

A broker, instructed to effect a policy on goods, effected it on the ship; the mistake was afterwards rectified by the underwriter subscribing a memorandum in the margin:—Held, that no new stamp was necessary. Sawtell v. Loudon, 5 Taunt. 359; 1 Marsh. 99.

A mistake made by an agent in declaring the interest in the margin of the policy to be on a ship by a wrong name, may be rectified by inserting the true name, without a fresh stamp. Robinson v. Touray, 1 M. & S. 217; 3 Camp. 160; 13 R. R. 781; and see 16 R. R. 284, n.

c. Slips and Informal Contracts.

Slips, Effect of.]—The unsigned underwriters' slips constitute only a provisional insurance, not binding in law on the underwriters; and the rights of the parties must be determined by the policies when executed. Mildred v. Maspons, 53 L. J., Q. B. 33; 8 App. Cas. 874; 32 W. R. 125; 5 Asp. M. C. 182—H. L. (E.) Affirming S. C. nom. Hermano v. Mildred.

—— As Evidence.]—Although by 30 Vict. c. 23, ss. 4 and 9, a slip in the ordinary printed form of an insurance office, not being stamped, is not available as a policy, it may be referred to for the purpose of shewing what was the intention of the parties at the time of the execution of a policy which is founded upon the slip. Ionides v. Pacific Fire and Marine Insurance Co., 41 L. J., Q. B. 190; L. R. 7 Q. B. 517; 26 L. T. 738; 21 W. R. 22; 2 Asp. M. C. 454—Ex. Ch.

By 30 Vict. c. 23, s. 7, no contract or agreement for sea insurance shall be valid, unless expressed in a policy:—Held, that, notwithstanding that statute, the slip might be given in evidence, though not valid as a contract, as evidence of the intention of the parties. Ib.

A slip signed by underwriters is not admissible as evidence of a contract of insurance unless stamped. Morrison v. Universal Marine Insurance Co., 25 L. T. 108; 1 Asp. M. C. 100. See S. C., 27 L. T. 791; 1 Asp. M. C. 503—Ex. Ch.

—— Custom as to.]—A custom whereby an underwriter is held bound to issue a policy in accordance with the terms of the slip, notwithstanding that it was discovered after the signing of the slip that the subject-matter of the insurance was lost, is bad. Ib.

—— No Contract to Execute Stamped Policy.]—A Liverpool insurance company employed the firm of E. & Co. as its agents in London. The plaintiff instructed P. & Co. to insure for him steel rails, and P. & Co. prepared a slip, which was initialed by E. & Co. on behalf of the insurance company. According to the course of business observed by the insurance company, P. & Co. sent a copy of the slip to E. & Co., who the same night sent it to the company at Liverpool. P. & Co. paid to E. & Co. the premium due on the policy and the amount due for the stamp duty. The steel rails were afterwards totally lost by the perils intended to be insured against, and the company then refused to execute any stamped policy:—Held, that no action would lie; for that the initialing of the slip and forwarding the copy slip to the company were parts of one contract; and that no further contract could be implied to execute a stamped policy within a reasonable time after the copy slip was transmitted to the company, and as no stamped policy had been executed, 30 Vict. c. 23, ss. 7 and 9, prevented the plaintiff from maintaining an action. Fisher v. Liverpool Marine Insurance Co., 43 L. J., Q. B. 114; L. R. 9 Q. B. 418; 30 L. T. 501; 22 W. R. 951; 2 Asp. M. C. 454—Ex. Ch.

The memorandum, or slip, which, by the custom of Lloyd's, is given by underwriters prior to the grant of a policy will not be enforced in equity as a contract to grant a policy. Morocco

Land and Trading Co. v. Fry, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 76; 11 L. T. 618; 13 W. R. 310.

Underwriters having executed to the defendants, iron merchants, a policy of marine insurance on a cargo which suffered loss, filed a bill in equity for a rectification of the policy, so as to make it conformable to that which they said was the real contract between the agents, in proof of which they produced in evidence the slip which was signed by their agent when presented at Lloyd's by a clerk of the defendants' insurance broker. They denied that they ever entered, or intended to enter, into any contract other than that expressed by the policy:—Held, that as the slip formed no contract, and there was no binding agreement between the parties until the policy was signed and the premium paid, the bill must be dismissed with costs. Mackenzie v. Coulson, L. R. 8 Eq. 368.

—— On Contract to keep Insured.]—A plaintiff having brought an action against a ship's company for the recovery of a debt, it was agreed between the parties that proceedings should be stayed and no judgment signed, upon the terms that the company should execute to the plaintiff a mortgage of the ship for the amount of his debt, and keep the same insured. On the day before the expiration of the then existing policy, slips of policies were signed by the underwriters, but the new policies themselves were not completed until three days after the expiration of the old ones:—Held, that this was a non-compliance on the part of the company of their undertaking to keep insured, and that the plaintiff was therefore entitled to sign judgment. Parry v. Great Ship Co., 4 B. & S. 556; 33 L. J., Q. B. 41; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 294; 9 L. T. 379; 12 W. R. 78.

—— On Winding up.]—S. agreed by writing to become a member of an association, each member of which on effecting an insurance on his own ship became bound to contribute to the loss of any other member. S. agreed to become a member in respect of an insurance for 300*l.* on his own ship, but no stamped policy was ever executed. He contributed to the losses of other members, and his own ship having been injured he made a claim in respect of it, but before anything had been paid the association was ordered to be wound up:—Held, that under 35 Geo. 3, c. 63, no agreement for insurance of ships can be valid unless duly stamped according to that act, that therefore there was no evidence of a binding mutual contract for insurance having been entered into, and that S. was not a contributory. London Marine Insurance Association, In re, Smith, Ex parte, 38 L. J., Ch. 681; L. R. 4 Ch. 611; 21 L. T. 97; 17 W. R. 941.

"Open Cover"—Refusal of Policies in Terms of Cover — Specific Performance.] — An open cover, or proposal to insure before the goods to be insured are shipped, was given by the respondents to M. in order that he might give it to the charterer, who after shipment applied for policies to the amount mentioned in the cover and was refused:—Held, that such application constituted an acceptance of a subsisting proposal, and that there was a binding contract with the charterer to issue a policy in terms of the open cover. The asking for two policies did not prevent the acceptance being sufficient as there was a refusal to give any. Bhugwandass v. Netherlands India Sea Insurance Co., 14 App. Cas. 83 —P. C.

Effect of Misnomer.]—The plaintiffs, by order of K., at Hamburg, opened with an insurance company a policy on hides by ship or ships to the extent of 5,000*l.* The slip was signed on the 23rd of September, 1869, but the policy had not then been made out; on the 3rd of February, 1870, one of the plaintiffs went to the company's office, taking with him the slip for the 5,000*l.* policy, and filed up two slips, one for 2,455*l.* on hides, per "Socrates," and another slip for 2,500*l.* on hides by another vessel; he stated to the clerk of the company that it would be more convenient to both parties to have two separate policies, instead of drawing up an open policy for 5,000*l.*, and then declaring it on 4,955*l.* The clerk acquiesced, and initialed the two slips, and afterwards the policies were executed by the company. There was a Norwegian ship, the "Socrates," and a French ship, the "Socrate," both described in the Veritas, the risk on the latter being greater than on the former. The hides insured by the policy were shipped on board the "Socrate" and lost. At the trial the jury found that the parties, on entering into the contract, both meant to insure the hides by the vessel on which they were actually shipped, whatever her name might be, though they supposed it to be the "Socrates," and that the company did not mean only to insure hides on board the "Socrates":—Held, that the company being bound on the 3rd of February to insure hides on board any ships selected by the plaintiffs, the misnomer was of no consequence, and the company were liable. Ionides v. Pacific Fire and Marine Insurance Co., 41 L. J., Q. B. 190; L. R. 7 Q. B. 517; 26 L. T. 738; 21 W. R. 22; 1 Asp. M. C. 330—Ex. Ch.

Disclosure after Slip initialed.]—When underwriters have, by initialing a slip, made a contract of assurance, which, although invalid at law and in equity for want of statutory requisites, is, nevertheless, in practice, and according to the usage of those engaged in marine insurance, a complete and final contract binding upon them in honour and good faith, whatever events may subsequently happen, the assured need not communicate to the underwriters facts which afterwards come to his knowledge material to the risk insured against; and the non-disclosure of such facts will not vitiate the policy of insurance afterwards executed. And it makes no difference that, the insurance being negotiated by an agent of the assured, the slip was initialed subject to the ratification of the assured. Cory v. Patton, 43 L. J., Q. B. 181; L. R. 9 Q. B. 577; 30 L. T. 758; 23 W. R. 46; 2 Asp. M. C. 302.

See S. C., on demurrer, 41 L. J., Q. B. 195, n.; L. R. 7 Q. B. 304; 26 L. T. 161; 20 W. R. 364; 1 Asp. M. C. 225.

An underwriter signed a slip effecting an insurance on the freight of a ship; at the time of his so signing the plaintiff knew of, but did not communicate to the defendant, a fact which the court held to be a material fact, which the plaintiff was bound to communicate. The defendant subsequently, at the time when he was fully acquainted with this fact, signed a policy in conformity with the terms of the slip, but also at the same time wrote a letter of protest to the plaintiff's brokers, declaring that he would resist any claim made under the policy :—Held, that the policy was vitiated by the concealment, and the action was not maintainable. Nicholson v. Power, 20 L. T. 580.

—— Estoppel by Conduct.]—Where the assurer discovers the concealment of a material fact between the initialing of the slip and the issuing of the stamped policy, but issues the policy without protest, he is not estopped from disputing his liability, nor is the burden of proof thrown on him to shew that the assured was not misled into treating the contract as still subsisting. Morrison v. Universal Marine Insurance Co., 42 L. Under Repealed Acts.]—A. & B. were secret partners in underwriting, each signing policies in his own name :—Held, that such policies were not void under 35 Geo. 3, c. 63, s. 11. Brett v. Beckwith, 26 L. J., Ch. 130 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 31 ; 5 W. R. 112.

A policy effected in the name of the broker of the assured not describing the broker as agent was not contrary to 28 Geo. 3, c. 56. De Viguier v. Swanson, 1 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 346, n. ; 4 R. R. 825, n.

Semble, a transfer by one underwriter to another at a higher premium his subscription to a policy is not a reassurance prohibited by 19 Geo. 2, c. 37, s. 4. Delver v. Barnes, 1 Taunt. 48 ; 9 R. R. 707.

A policy made by a company not subscribed by the individual members of the company is not void under 25 Geo. 3, c. 63. Dowdall v. Allan, 19 L. J., Q. B. 41. And see Reid v. Allan and cases infra, col. 1351.

A. and B. were in partnership carried on in A.'s name, to insure ships. A. paid all the losses. The partnership being illegal under 6 Geo. 1, c. 18, A. could not recover from B. his share of the losses. Mitchell v. Cockburne, 2 H. Bl. 380.

Advances on Ship—Full interest admitted—19 Geo. 2, c. 37, s. 1.]—See Smith v. Reynolds, post, col. 1132.

Names of Subscribers.]—A mutual marine insurance association issued policies signed by managers per procuration of the several members of the association :—Held, that this was not a specification of the names of the subscribers or underwriters within the meaning of the 30 Vict. c. 23, s. 7, and that on this ground the policies were void. Arthur Average Association, In re, Cory, Ex parte, Hargrove, Ex parte, 45 L. —— Companies.]—Since the 5 Geo. 4, c. 114, where a marine insurance is effected by an insurance company, it is not necessary that the name of each member of the company should be expressed in the policy. Reid v. Allan, 4 Ex. 326 ; 19 L. J., Ex. 39 ; 13 Jur. 1082. S. P., Dowdall v. Clark, 19 L. J., Q. B. 41 ; 14 Jur. 311 ; Hallett v. Dowdall, 18 Q. B. 2 ; 21 L. J., Q. B. 98 ; 16 Jur. 462.

Person Interested or Agent.]—If an agent residing abroad effected a policy without inserting his name as agent, such policy was void by 25 Geo. 3, c. 44 (repealed by 28 Geo. 3, c. 56). Pray v. Eadie, 2 Term Rep. 313 ; 1 R. R. 200.

And the name of the party interested must have been inserted in the policy, otherwise he could not recover upon it. Cox v. Parry, 1 Term Rep. 464.

If the name of the broker effecting a policy is inserted in a policy as agent, it is a sufficient compliance with 28 Geo. 3, c. 56. Bell v. Gilson, 1 Bos. & P. 345 ; 4 R. R. 823.

In a policy the persons interested were denominated "the trustees of Messrs. K. F. & Co.":—Held, that this might be considered their usual style and firm of dealing. Hibbert v. Martin, 1 Camp. 538.

A declaration stating that M. and another caused to be effected a policy containing that J. G. & Co. did make assurance, and averring the interest in F. W. S., with a promise by the defendant to the plaintiffs, in consideration of the premium paid by them, was held good after verdict ; for it must be intended that the plaintiffs insured under the names of J. G. & Co., and that they were proved to be within one or other of the descriptions of persons in 28 Geo. 3, c. 56, in whose names or usual style or firm of dealing insurance may be made. Mellish v. Bell, 15 East, 4 ; 13 R. R. 344.

A. having consigned a cargo to B., and drawn bills on him to the amount of it in favour of C., his general agent, sent these bills together with the bills of lading to C., desiring him to transmit them to B., "that B. may have an opportunity of insuring"; he also drew a bill for 300*l.* on C., which was accepted ; B. refused to take to the cargo or accept the bills drawn on him ; C. then effected a policy in his own name, and informed A., who approved of his conduct :—Held, that the policy was good within 28 Geo. 3, c. 56. Wolf v. Horncastle, 1 Bos. & P. 316 ; 4 R. R. 808.

Policy signed by Three for Themselves and Others—Validity—30 Vict. c. 23, s. 7.]—A policy signed by three persons "for ourselves and the other members of the I. Assurance Association," which was an unincorporated and mutual society, does not comply with 30 Vict. c. 23, s. 7. (Lord Justice Clerk and Lord Young, contra), Inverkeithing Marine and Freight Assurance Association v. Mackenzie, 9 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 1043.

Commission.]—Insurance of captain's commission, &c. in the African trade is legal. King v. Glover, 2 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 206 ; 9 R. R. 638.

2. RE-INSURANCE.

Liability on.]—Formerly every re-insurance in this country, either by British subjects or by foreigners, whether on British or on foreign ships, was void, and an action to recover the premiums would not lie. Andree v. Fletcher, 2 Term Rep. 161 ; 3 Term Rep. 266 ; 1 R. R. 701. But see 30 & 31 Vict. c. 23, s. 3.

By a policy a vessel was insured from Bombay to Calcutta, and for thirty days after she had been moored at the latter place. She had arrived there ten days before such policy was effected; and on receiving news of her arrival, her owners effected a second policy on her with the same insurers, by which she was insured at and from Calcutta to Bombay. The vessel was totally lost at Calcutta during the continuance of the risk under both policies, and the insurers having paid the owners as for a total loss upon the second policy sought to recover the full amount upon a policy of re-insurance which they had effected of the risk under the second policy, without deducting the money payable upon the first policy. The court was of opinion that the second policy was intended as a substitution for the first, and that the original insurers were liable only on the second policy, and were, therefore, entitled to recover the full amount on the policy of re-insurance. Union Marine Insurance Co. v. Martin, 35 L. J., C. P. 181.

Need not be Mentioned.]—An underwriter "on goods" may reinsure by the same description; and the policy need not be expressed to be a reinsurance. Mackenzie v. Whitworth, 45 L. J., Ex. 233; 1 Ex. D. 36; 33 L. T. 655; 24 W. R. 287; 2 Asp. M. C. 490—C. A.

An underwriter having subscribed a marine policy of insurance on certain goods, afterwards insured his risk by effecting with other underwriters a policy on the goods without stating that the latter transaction was a re-insurance. In an action by him upon the second policy, a common practice to state the fact of a re-insurance in the slip or policy was admitted; but the jury found the fact immaterial and negatived concealment: —Held, that he was not bound by law to disclose the fact of re-insurance unless inquiry were made of him with respect to it, and was, therefore, upon the findings of the jury, entitled to the verdict. Ib.

Declarations of Risk.]—In accordance with an agreement entered into between the plaintiffs, a marine insurance company, and the defendants, a fire insurance company, the defendants subscribed a policy whereby they undertook to reinsure the plaintiffs against loss or damage by fire to the extent of 50,000*l.* by the ships as might be declared at and from certain ports to destination, the policy to be subject to the same conditions (as far as they related to the fire risk only) as the original policy or policies, and would pay as might be paid thereon. The policy provided that the arrangement was to be in force for one year from the 1st of October, 1876, and to include only such vessels as were coal-laden; the policy to be supplemented by further policies on like terms should the amount thereof not prove sufficient for the year's transactions. The policy becoming exhausted by declaration of risk, the defendants, on the 9th of July, subscribed a second policy similar in terms to the former policy, and this second policy becoming likewise exhausted, a third policy was, on the 25th of October, subscribed by the defendants, similar in terms to the former policies. On the 7th of June the plaintiffs insured a coal-laden ship, the "Hampden," and there was a loss by fire of the cargo on the 18th of September, which would have been covered by the policy of insurance if the risk had been duly declared, but through the negligence of the plaintiff's manager the risk had not been declared. At the time the third policy was effected the plaintiffs knew of the loss, and on the 2nd of November they declared the "Hampden" and claimed for a loss. The plaintiffs having brought an action to recover the loss, it was:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover, for that the defendants were insurers in respect of a marine risk, and as such subject to the usage of underwriters, stated in Stephens v. Australian Insurance Co. (L. R. 8 C. P. 18), by which in the case of open policies on ships to be declared, the policy attaches to the goods as soon as, and in the order in which, they are shipped, in which order the assured is bound to declare them, and in case of mistake as to the order of shipment, the assured is bound to rectify the declaration, which may, in the absence of fraud, be altered even after the loss is known. Imperial Marine Insurance Co. v. Fire Insurance Corporation, 48 L. J., C. P. 424; 4 C. P. D. 166; 40 L. T. 166; 27 W. R. 680; 4 Asp. M. C. 71.

"To pay as may be paid" on Original Policy —Indemnity — Condition precedent.]—The W. Company, having insured a ship, re-insured part of their risk with the E. Company, and duly paid the premiums. The re-insurance policy was not an exact copy of the original policy, but contained the following clause:—"Being a re-insurance applying to the lines of the Western Iusurance Company, Limited, policy No. , subject to the same terms and conditions as the original policy or policies, and to pay as may be paid thereon." The ship insured had suffered damage from the perils insured against, but the W. Company had not as yet paid any part of it. Both companies were in liquidation, and the liquidator of the W. Company made a claim in the winding-up of the E. Company for the amount secured by the policy of reinsurance:—Held, that payment by the W. Company on the original policy was not a condition precedent to their recovering against the E. Company. Western Insurance Co., Ex parte, Eddystone Marine Insurance Co., In re, 61 L. J., Ch. 362; [1892] 2 Ch. 423; 66 L. T. 370; 40 W. R. 441; 7 Asp. M. C. 167.

Appropriation.] — The plaintiffs were the London agents of an insurance company, who had also an agent at Calcutta. The company issued policies on cargoes proceeding from Calcutta to the United Kingdom, re-insuring the excess above 5,000*l.* on any one ship, through their agents, the plaintiffs, with the defendants, lost or not lost, in any one ship, as may be declared. From time to time the plaintiffs received advices from the agent at Calcutta, stating the names of the ships, and particulars of the excess of 5,000*l.* upon each, whereupon they declared the ships to the defendants, together with the amount of excess, indorsements of which were made on the back of the policy, which was thereby appropriated to the particular risk. By a letter of the 15th February, 1860, the Calcutta agent informed the plaintiffs of an excess insured by the company on the ship "R." On the 16th March both the plaintiffs and defendants had information, as the fact was, that the "R." had been destroyed by fire. On the 17th March the plaintiffs appropriated the whole of the amount remaining on the then current policy to other ships. On the 19th March the plaintiffs effected a fresh policy with the defendants, in continuation of the former one; and on the 21st the plaintiffs received the letter of the Calcutta agent of the 15th February; whereupon they immediately declared to the defendants that the policy of the 19th would be appropriated to the excess of 5,000*l.* on board the "R." ; and on the 26th March made an indorsement thereof upon the policy, the defendants disputing their right to do so :—Held, that the fact of the loss of the "R." being known to both plaintiffs and defendants at the time of the issuing of the policy was immaterial, as it was not at that time known to either party that the company had undertaken any risk with respect to the ship ; and that the declaration and appropriation were sufficient. Gledstanes v. Royal Exchange Insurance Corporation, 5 B. & S. 797 ; 34 L. J., Q. B. 30 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 108 ; 11 L. T. 305 ; 13 W. R. 71.

Voyage ended when Policy effected.] — The defendant, who had insured a cargo by a certain vessel, lost or not lost, for a certain voyage, believing such vessel to be overdue, effected a policy of reinsurance with the plaintiff on the same cargo and risk. Before effecting the policy of reinsurance, the vessel and cargo had in fact arrived safely at the port of destination ; but this was not known to either the plaintiff or defendant at the time the policy was effected :—Held, that the policy had attached, and that therefore the plaintiff was entitled to the premium at which it had been effected. Bradford v. Symondson, 50 L. J., Q. B. 582 ; 7 Q. B. D. 456 ; 45 L. T. 364 ; 30 W. R. 27 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 455—C. A.

Construction of Clause "to Pay as may be Paid" — Liability of Reinsurer.]—A policy of reinsurance contained the following clause : "Being a reinsurance subject to the same clauses and conditions as the original policy, and to pay as may be paid thereon, but against the risk of total and (or) constructive loss, total loss only." The ship insured by the original policy stranded and was abandoned, and the underwriters paid a total loss. The reinsurers refused to admit any liability to pay under the policy of reinsurance, upon the ground that the ship had never been shewn to be a constructive total loss : —Held, that, upon the true construction of this clause, it did not bind the reinsurer to pay such sum as the insurer might choose to pay the assured, whether liable or not. Chippendale v. Holt, 65 L. J., Q. B. 104 ; 73 L. T. 472 ; 44 W. R. 128 ; 8 Asp. M. C. 78.

Reinsurance against Fire—Usage — Order of Attachment of Policies.]—See Maritime Marine Insurance Co. v. Fire Reinsurance Co., infra, col. 1046.

3. Double Insurance.

Amount Recoverable.]—In a case of double insurance, the insured may recover the whole against any of the insurers, and leave him to recover satisfaction from the rest. Newley v. Reed, 1 W. Bl. 116. S. P., Rogers v. Davis, 1 Park. Ins. (8th ed.) 601.

In an action on a valued policy, it is no defence that the assured has received the amount of the valuation in the policy from the underwriters on another policy, if the subject-matter insured is proved to be of a value equal to the sum received and that sought to be recovered. Bousfield v. Barnes, 4 Camp. 228 ; 16 R. R. 780.

Where two policies for different sums were effected on goods on board any ship or ships on a particular voyage, and goods were put in different proportions on board two ships which sailed on the voyage, one of which was lost, but the other arrived in safety :—Held, that the insured might apply either policy to the ship which was lost. Henchman v. Offley, 2 H. Bl. 345, n. ; 3 Dougl. 135.

Bankruptcy of Assured—Second Insurance by Assignees—Payment.]—J. S. made a policy on a ship valued at 2,500*l.*, and became bankrupt. His assignees reinsured for 2,500*l.* ; and upon the loss of the ship the underwriters on the second policy paid J. S. 2,500*l.* for the loss :—Held, that J. S. could not sue on the first policy. Morgan v. Stockdale, 4 Ex. 615.

4. Grant and Issue of Policy.

Formalities.] — A policy purported to be signed, sealed and delivered by two of the directors of an insurance company in the presence of their secretary, and according to the powers vested in the directors by the deed of settlement of the company. This statement was taken, as against the company, to be conclusive that it was not only duly signed and sealed, but also duly delivered. Xenos v. Wickham, 36 L. J., C. P. 313 ; L. R. 2 H. L. 296 ; 16 L. T. 800 ; 16 W. R. 38.

A policy signed, sealed and delivered is complete and binding as against the party executing it, though, in fact, it remains in his possession, unless there is some particular act required to be done by the other party to declare his adoption of it. Ib.

It is not necessary that the assured should formally accept or take away a policy in order to make the delivery complete. Ib.

After the broker had prepared a slip, and the proposed insurer had accepted it, and had prepared a policy in accordance with it, a desire was expressed by him and assented to by the underwriter that the policy should be cancelled, on which a cancellation was in form effected :—Held, that this was not effectual as to the assured, who had not, in fact, given the broker any authority to cancel the policy. Ib.

Mistake — Cancellation.] — A broker was instructed to effect for a shipowner an insurance on a ship. The broker gave a slip to C. (the authorised representative of an insurance company), which was accepted, and a policy prepared accordingly. When the policy (with the amount debiting the broker with the premium) was sent to his office, duly signed, sealed and delivered, his clerk said there had been a mistake, that the policy ought not to have gone forward, and that there was no premium due. This was repeated by another clerk, who came to C.'s office for the purpose, and requested the cancellation of the policy. C. acted on these representations (which, however, had been made by the broker's clerks without any authority from the shipowner), and cancelled the policy, but charged the broker with the stamp duty paid, and gave the policy to him in order to enable him, if possible, to get a return of the stamp duty on it. The ship was lost, and the shipowner made his claim for the loss :—Held, that the circumstances were sufficient to shew an execution and a delivery of the policy, and that the unauthorised act of the broker afforded no answer to the claim. Ib.

At what Time Valid.]—A policy on a ship "lost or not lost," executed after the ship is known by all the parties to be lost, in pursuance of a previous agreement to insure, is valid. Mead v. Davison, 4 N. & M. 701; 3 A. & E. 303; 1 H. & W. 156; 4 L. J., K. B. 193.

5. ALTERATION AND CORRECTION.

Usage to Alter.]—A shipowner who was in the habit of receiving shipments of cotton to be carried on deck, sometimes at the request and risk of the shippers, sometimes for his own convenience, and under a clean bill of lading at his own risk—to protect himself as to jettison in the latter case, entered into open policies of insurance as to which the usage was that he was bound to declare all his risks in order of shipment, and rectify any mistake even after loss known. His agent, by negligence or by mistake, gave a clean bill of lading for a certain shipment and gave no notice to him, but such shipowner on discovering the omission altered his declaration by inserting this shipment though after loss known:—Held, that the shipowner had an insurable interest, as at law a written contract cannot be varied on the ground of negligence or mistake, and was entitled to alter the declarations both according to the usage, which could not be said to be unreasonable, and according to the doctrine to be deduced from decided cases, that by the usages of merchants and underwriters, recognised by the courts without formal proof, such declarations may be altered even after loss known, if the alterations are made innocently and without fraud. Stephens v. Australasian Insurance Co., 42 L. J., C. P. 12; L. R. 8 C. P. 18; 27 L. T. 585; 21 W. R. 228; 1 Asp. M. C. 458.

Addition of Subject-matter.]—If a policy is executed in the printed form, without any specific subject of insurance being inserted in writing, and the subject-matter is afterwards added in writing, and the addition signed by some of the underwriters only, the assured cannot recover against those underwriters who do not so sign, on the contract as it stands altered by the insertion. Langhorn v. Cologan, 4 Taunt. 330; 13 R. R. 613.

A policy originally underwritten on "ship and outfit" was, after the ship sailed, declared by consent of all parties to be on ship and goods, by a memorandum written on a blank space in the body of the policy; but without any new stamps; and it having been before decided, that for want of the stamp the plaintiff could not recover as upon a policy on ship and goods, as declared by the memorandum, it was now held that he could not recover upon the policy in its original state as an insurance on "ship and outfit," by reason of the alteration apparent upon the face of the instrument itself, and which was made by parties interested. French v. Patton or Patten, 9 East, 351; 1 Camp. 72, 180, 180 b; 9 R. R. 571. And see Hill v. Patten, 8 East, 373; 1 Camp. 72; 9 R. R. 469.

As to Voyage.]—A policy was effected on goods from Batavia to London; after the execution of the policy, the time of sailing was enlarged from the 10th October to the 31st December by the assured, and acquiesced in by all the underwriters, except the defendant:—Held, that it was a material alteration, although the defendant had signed three memoranda subsequent thereto; yet, not having assented to it, the policy was void as to him; and that, consequently, the assured could not recover the amount of his subscription. Fairlie v. Christie, 1 Moore, 114; 7 Taunt. 412; Holt, 331; 18 R. R. 515.

The owner of a vessel bound from London to Berbice, which had deviated by taking in goods at Madeira, insured her, with notice to the underwriter of the circumstances, "at and from London to Berbice," and inserted the words "at sea" in another part of the policy:—Held, that the deviation was a good defence, as the policy was thereby vacated. Redman v. London or Lowden, 5 Taunt. 462; 1 Marsh. 136; 3 Camp. 503.

A policy "at and from A. and B." is not vitiated by inserting, without the consent of the underwriter, the words "both or either." Clapham v. Cologan, 3 Camp. 382.

On a policy on ship and goods "at and from Cuba to Liverpool, with liberty in that voyage to proceed and sail to and touch and stay at any ports and places whatscever; and with leave to discharge and take in at any ports or places she might call at, without prejudice to that insurance," the assured, after the subscription of the policy, inserted in the body of it the words, "with leave to call off Jamaica," which was acquiesced in by all the underwriters except the defendant, without increase of premium:—Held, that this was a material alteration, and avoided the policy as against the defendant. Forshaw v. Chabert, 6 Moore, 369; 3 Br. & B. 158; 23 R. R. 596.

A policy from Calmar to Portsmouth was altered with the consent of some of the underwriters, by inserting the words "or Weymouth" after Portsmouth:—Held, that the policy was void against an underwriter who was ignorant of the alteration when it was made, although afterwards, on being informed of it, he said he would not take advantage of it. Campbell v. Christie, 2 Stark. 64.

Policy differing from Slip.]—If a policy differs from the label, which is the memorandum of the agreement, it shall be made agreeable thereto; for the owner's agent, when he fetches the policy, is not bound to compare it with the label; and it is not a sufficient ground in equity to say that the insurance is in the name of a trustee, unless he denies the cestui que trust the use of his name in an action at law. Motteaux v. London Assurance Co., 1 Atk. 545.

Alteration must be in Writing.]—A policy cannot be varied by agreement not in writing. Kaines v. Knightley, Skinner, 54.

Policy on Goods in Ship "M.," her real Name being "M. G."—Alteration.]—A policy was effected on goods in the "Mary" by mistake, the ship intended being the "Mary Galley." The "Mary Galley" was lost, and the insurers after the loss consented to alter the policy, and did so. In an action on the policy:—Held, that the insurers were liable; and that they were not entitled to an increase of premium on the ground that the "Mary" was the stouter ship. Bates v. Grabham, Holt, 469.

Alteration of Destination—Policy Avoided.]—A ship is insured for a voyage from Virginia to Rotterdam, with leave to call at a port in England. After the underwriters had signed the policy the destination was altered to Hull, and a memorandum of the alteration was indorsed on the policy. Hull is not a port on the voyage from Virginia to Rotterdam :—Held, that the alteration avoided the policy as to all the underwriters who did not sign the memorandum. Laird v. Robertson, 4 Bro. P. C. 688.

Immaterial—Addition of "and Trade."]—A policy was effected on a ship from Liverpool to Africa, and during her stay there and from thence back to Liverpool, with liberty to proceed to and stay at any ports of discharge and loading in Africa, to sell, barter and exchange goods, and load, unload and reload goods at all or any of the ports she might call at and proceed to. After the execution of the policy, the assured inserted the words "sell, barter and exchange goods," as well as the words "and trade," after those of "during her stay," and to which several of the underwriters assented :—Held, that the alteration was unimportant, and therefore did not avoid the policy against an underwriter who had subscribed his initials to the words "sell, barter and exchange goods," but had not assented to the insertion of the words "and trade," although his initials were subscribed to them. Sanderson v. M'Cullom, 4 Moore, 5.

So, where a vessel was insured from Liverpool to Africa, and during her stay there and back, with liberty to sell, barter, exchange, load, unload and reload goods. After the execution of the policy, the assured inserted the words "and trade" in the risk without the consent of the defendant (an underwriter), although others had assented thereto :—Held, an immaterial alteration, as the ship had liberty to trade without the introduction of those words. Sanderson v. Symons, 4 Moore, 42; 1 Br. & B. 426; 21 R. R. 675.

Value of Share.]—A policy was effected on the plaintiff's share of goods, valued at 500*l.*, but upon its turning out that his interest was larger, the words were added in the margin of the policy on the plaintiff's goods, "say one-fifth valued at 100*l.*," to which the defendant's initials were subscribed; the declaration need not notice the original stipulation. Robinson v. Tobin, 1 Stark. 336.

Further Premium.]—A policy containing a warranty that the ship shall sail on or before a given day may be altered pending the risk, by a memorandum, whereby the underwriters, in consideration of a further premium, agree to cancel the warranty, and to make a return of premium if the ship sails with convoy. Ridsdale v. Shedden, 4 Camp. 107.

Necessity of Fresh Stamp.]—See ante, col. 1030.

Alteration of Adventure Passage Money not Freight.]—See Denoon v. Home and Colonial Insurance Co., post, col. 1124.

Bill to Rectify Policy.]—Bill to rectify a policy of insurance dismissed; there not being evidence to vary the contract. Henkle v. Royal Exchange Assurance Co., 1 Ves. sen. 317.

6. Construction.

Rule for Construing.]—Policies of insurance are to be construed by the same rules as other instruments, unless where, by the known usage of trade, or the like, certain words have acquired a peculiar sense, distinct from their ordinary and popular sense. See Cazalet v. St. Barbe, 1 Term Rep. 191; 1 R. R. 178.

Policies are to be construed according to the same rules as all other written contracts, namely, by ascertaining the intention of the parties, to be gathered, in the first instance, from the words of the instrument, but interpreted, if necessary, by the surrounding circumstances. Carr v. Montefiore, 5 B. & S. 408; 33 L. J., Q. B. 256; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1069; 11 L. T. 157; 12 W. R. 870—Ex. Ch.

The words "perils of the seas" in a policy are terms of general import, upon which the court is to put a construction. Crofts v. Marshall, 7 Car. & P. 597.

A policy of insurance was effected on a ship on 22nd January, 1872, to 23rd January, 1873, both inclusive. These words were written in on a printed form, which also contained in print the words "at and from," and "for this present voyage," and other similar words which were commonly found in the form of a voyage policy, and which had not been erased :—Held, that this policy was really a time policy, and its character was not affected by the printed words left in. Dudgeon v. Pembroke, 46 L. J., Q. B. 409; 2 App. Cas. 284; 36 L. T. 382; 25 W. R. 499; 3 Asp. M. C. 393—H. L. (E.)

A policy of insurance is "to be construed according to its sense and meaning as collected in the first place from the terms used in it, which terms are themselves to be understood in their plain ordinary and popular sense, unless they have generally in respect to the same subject-matter, as by the known usage of trade or the like, acquired a peculiar sense distinct from the popular sense of the words; or unless the context evidently points out that they must in the particular instance, and in order to effectuate the immediate intention of the parties to that contract, be understood in some other and peculiar sense." Per Lord Ellenborough. Robertson v. French, 4 East, 130, 135; 4 Esp. 246.

Written words in policies to have a greater weight in case of ambiguity than the printed words. Ib.

Construction of Condition.]—When a warranty or a condition in a policy of marine insurance is expressed in clear terms, evidence will not be admitted to shew that it is to be construed contrary to the apparent meaning of those terms, although the desired construction may be that which has ordinarily been put upon it by persons making use of that form of policy. Provincial Insurance Co. of Canada v. Leduc, 43 L. J., P. C. 49; L. R. 6 P. C. 224; 31 L. T. 141; 22 W. R. 929; 2 Asp. M. C. 338.

Usage at Lloyd's.]—Usage at Lloyd's is not binding upon assured unless he knows of it. Gabay v. Lloyd, 3 B. & C. 793; 5 D. & R. 641; 3 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 116; 27 R. R. 486.

Usage cannot Contradict the Policy.]—Evidence is not admissible to shew that by usage the risk on goods expires twenty-four hours after the ship is moored in safety, when by the terms of the policy it does not expire until the goods are "discharged and safely landed." Parkinson v. Collier, 1 Park. Ins. (8th ed.) 47.

Usage of Trade—Non-communication.]—Insurance on fish from Newfoundland to Portugal. The ship on arrival in Newfoundland proceeded to Sydney, N.B., and took in a cargo of coals, which she carried to Newfoundland, where she took in her fish, and was lost on her voyage to Portugal :—Held, that it being the usage of the trade to make such an intermediate voyage as that to Sydney, its non-communication to the underwriters was immaterial. Ougier v. Jennings, 1 Camp. 505 ; 10 R. R. 739, n.

—— Usage as to Attachment of Policies.]—See Maritime Marine Insurance Co. v. Fire Reinsurance Co., infra.

Reinsurance.] —See Chippendale v. Holt, supra, col. 1039.

"Ice-bound"—"Open Water."]—By the rules of a mutual insurance association, "If a ship insured shall be and remain wrecked, stranded or sunk for a period of four months . . . and during such period it shall have been found impracticable to save the ship . . . the ship shall be considered to have been lost. . . . Provided that a ship which is so situated, and ice-bound, shall not be considered as coming within this rule or to have been lost unless and until there shall have been four months . . . of open water after the disaster" :—Held (Lopes, L.J., diss.), that the period of four months in the above rule would run, notwithstanding that floating ice prevented salvage operations, "ice-bound" meaning that ice is so round the ship that she could not move away out of it. Per Lopes, L.J. : So long as floating ice prevents salvage operations, there is not "open water" within the rule. Sunderland Steamship Co. v. North of England Iron Steamship Insurance Assn., 14 R. 196—C. A.

"Premises."]—A fire insurance company, in making out a policy of insurance of a steamship, referring to conditions indorsed, so far as applicable, used one of their printed forms of conditions applicable to houses, the language being, "if more than twenty pounds of gunpowder be on the premises at the time of the loss, such loss will not be made good" :—Held, that the word "premises" equally applied to a ship, the word being in legal language often used to denote "the subject or thing previously expressed." Beacon Life Assurance Co. v. Gibb, 1 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 73 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 185 ; 7 L. T. 574 ; 11 W. R. 194.

Held, also, that parol evidence was not admissible to prove that the word "premises" was not intended to include the steamer. Ib.

Held, also, that one of the conditions having specified a limited quantity of gunpowder to be carried on board, it was quite immaterial whether the fire was or was not occasioned by more than the specified quantity of gunpowder being on board. Ib.

"In the Month of October."]—Warranty to sail in the month of October explained by evidence of merchants to mean not after October 25th. Chauraud v. Angerstein, Peake, 61.

Parol Evidence.]—Parol evidence admitted to explain the meaning of "at and from" a port. See Moxon v. Atkins, 3 Camp. 200 ; 13 R. R. 789.

"No St. Lawrence"—Construction.]— See Birrell v. Dryer, post, col. 1162.

Valued Policy—Value not Filled in.]—See Asfar v. Blundell, post, col. 1142.

Reinsurance against Fire—Usage—Declaration of Risks—Order of Attachment.]—The plaintiffs, a marine insurance company, agreed with the defendants, a fire insurance company, that the defendants should reinsure them against loss by fire of coal-laden ships insured by the plaintiffs between certain ports, during the continuance of the agreement. Policies to cover risks upon such ships as might be declared by the plaintiffs were issued and subscribed by the defendants. A usage was admitted as between merchants and underwriters that in case of open policies upon ships to be declared the policies attached upon and in order of the declarations ; and that in case of mistake the declaration was rectified sometimes after the loss :—Held, that the usage applied as between the plaintiffs and defendants. Maritime Marine Insurance Co. v. Fire Reinsurance Co., 40 L. T. 166 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 71.

East India Company's Policies.]—East India insurances include the chance of detention by the charterers in India and the risk of the country voyage there. The policy construed by reference to the East India Company's charterparty, which was well known. Salvador v. Hopkins, 3 Burr. 1707.

Action on policy of insurance on goods in ship chartered by East India Company. Defence that the loss was during a voyage not covered by the policy :—Held, that the custom of the East India Company as to ordering ships chartered by them on voyages such as that in question must be taken to have been in the knowledge of the insurers. Grant v. Delacour, 1 Taunt. 463, 467.

7. Ratification.

After Knowledge of Loss.]—A policy on freight, valued at a certain sum, was made by charterers on behalf of themselves and those interested, in the usual terms. It came to the knowledge of the shipowners, but not till after they had heard of the loss. They then claimed the benefit under it :—Held, that, there being satisfactory evidence of the policy having been made on the owners' account, it was open to them to ratify it, even after they had knowledge of the loss. Williams v. North China Insurance Co., 1 C. P. D. 757 ; 35 L. T. 884 ; 3 Asp. M. C. 342—C. A.

8. Property in Policy.

Property of the Assured.]—The policy when effected is the property of the insured. Harding v. Carter, 1 Park Ins. (8th ed.) 5.

II. INSURANCE BY AGENTS, PART OWNERS, OR TRUSTEES.

Insurance by Agent—Lien on Policy Moneys.]—Merchants in London, upon the instruction of shipping agents at Havannah, after receiving the shipping documents of a cargo of tobacco consigned to them, effected policies on the cargo for the benefit of all whom it might concern. The Havannah agents shipped the tobacco in their own name, but were in fact acting as commission agents for the Havannah owners of the tobacco. The London merchants before insuring had notice that the Havannah agent had an unnamed principal. A total loss occurred, and the London merchants received the policy moneys, after receiving notice that the moneys were claimed by the Havannah principals:—Held, that the latter were entitled to the moneys, and that the London merchants were not entitled to a lien upon the moneys for the balance of their general account with the Havannah agents; and that in an action by the Havannah principals against them for the moneys they could set off nothing but premiums, stamps and commission for insurance. Mildred v. Maspons, 53 L. J., Q. B. 33; 8 App. Cas. 874; 49 L. T. 685; 32 W. R. 125; 5 Asp. M. C. 182—H. L. (E.)

Authority to Insure—Ship's Husband.]—A ship's husband has no power to insure except by authority of all the owners. French v. Foulton, 5 Burr. 2727.

—— Clerk of Consignee.]—A clerk of a foreign consignee having effected a policy in England to cover the goods sent to his master, and the policy having been adopted by the latter:—Held, that the jury were justified in finding that the clerk had authority to insure. Barlow v. Leckie, 4 Moore, 8.

—— Part Owners.]—One of several part owners of a ship, without any express authority from the others, effected a joint insurance upon the entire ship, charging the premium and commission in the ship's accounts, which were open to the inspection of, and were actually inspected by, the other owners, and not objected to:—Held, that the jury was warranted in finding that the managing owner had a joint authority to effect an insurance for the whole; and that consequently all the owners were liable to the broker, notwithstanding the credit was in the first instance given to the managing owner alone—it appearing that the broker was ignorant of the names of the other owners. Robinson v. Gleadow, 2 Scott, 250; 2 Bing. (N.C.) 150; 1 Hodges, 245.

Although one part owner of a ship has no implied authority, as such, to order assurances to be effected on account of the other part owners, yet, if they are in partnership together, an order to insure the ship given by one will render all liable. Hooper v. Lusby, 4 Camp. 66.

One part owner cannot, by ordering an insurance of the ship without authority from another, charge the other with any part of the premium, unless the other afterwards assents to the insurance. Bell v. Humphries, 2 Stark. 354.

Where part owners of a vessel authorise co-owners to insure the whole vessel, and afterwards assign their interest in the freight, and the assignees do not give express notice of the assignment, the co-owners are entitled to insure the vessel, and deduct the costs of insurance from the freight. Lindsay v. Gibbs, 3 De G. & J. 690; 28 L. J., Ch. 692; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 376; 7 W. R. 320.

An action is maintainable by an assured part owner of a vessel against an insurance broker, who has received from the underwriters the full amount of the sums subscribed on a total loss, although there are several other persons interested as part owners, who have given the defendants notice of their interest, where the plaintiff insured on the whole ship generally, through the intervention of his captain, who gave the order for effecting the insurance. Roberts v. Ogilby, 9 Price, 269; 23 R. R. 671.

When an insurance is effected by a part owner of a ship generally, in his own name, but to an amount exceeding the value of his share, and it is understood that such insurance is intended to cover the interest of other persons, the other part owners are, upon a loss, entitled to their proportion of the insurance. Brack v. Douglas, 4 Myl. & Cr. 320.

Part Owners, Liability for.]—One part owner cannot by ordering an insurance without authority from another, charge the other with any part of the premium, unless the other afterwards assent to the insurance. Ogle v. Wrangham, Abbott on Shipping (13th Ed.) 96.

Insurance as Trustee—Receipt of Policy Moneys.]—A person shall not be allowed to detain to himself money due upon a policy of assurance wherein his name was only made use of as a trustee, under pretence that the cestui que trust was indebted to him. Fell v. Lutwidge, Barnard. Ch. 319.

1. On Goods.

a. What Goods.

Transhipping.]—Where the owners of goods insured shifted them from one ship to another:—Held, that they might still recover for an average loss arising from the capture of the other ship. Plantamour v. Staples, 1 Term Rep. 611, n.; 3 Dougl. 1.

By a policy, assurance was made "including risk of craft to and from the ship," on linseed-oil cakes, "free of particular average unless general, or the ship was stranded." The cakes were put on board a lighter at their destination, and the lighter stranded and sank, whereby a particular average loss was sustained:—Held, that the underwriters were not liable. Hofman v. Marshall, 2 Bing. (N.C.) 383; 2 Scott, 559; 1 Hodges, 330; 5 L. J., C. P. 70.

Several Vessels.]—Carriers on a canal effected an insurance for twelve months, upon goods on board of thirty boats, named, between London, Birmingham, &c., backwards and forwards, with leave to take in and discharge goods at all places on the line of navigation. The insurance was agreed to be 12,000*l.* on goods, as interest might appear thereafter; the claim on the policy warranted not to exceed 100*l.* per cent., and 3,000*l.* only were to be conveyed by the policy in any one boat on any one trip:—Held, that the policy was not exhausted when once goods to the value of 12,000*l.* had been carried by all the boats, or by each of them, but that it continued, throughout the year, to protect all the goods afloat at any one time, up to the amount insured. Crowley v. Cohen, 3 B. & Ad. 478; 1 L. J., K. B. 158.

Held, also, that, upon the loss of goods on board one of the boats, the assured was entitled to recover that proportion of such loss which 12,000*l.* bore to the whole value of the amount carried during the year. Ib.

Where two policies for different sums were effected on goods on board any ship or ships on a particular voyage, and the goods were put in different proportions on board two ships which sailed on the voyage, one of which was lost, but the other arrived in safety:—Held, that the insured might apply either policy to the ship which was lost. Henchman v. Offley, 2 H. Bl. 345, n.; 3 Dougl. 139; 3 R. R. 408, 413.

Sale at Sea.]—A ship being chartered with grain from Galatz to Emden, for orders to discharge in a port of the United Kingdom, the owners effected an insurance on the cargo from Galatz to Emden, and thence to a port of discharge in the United Kingdom, with leave to call for orders, and to naturalise the cargo, to return 20*s.* per cent. if risk should end at the port of naturalisation. The cargo was sold afloat, while on the voyage from Galatz to Emden, by bought-and-sold notes, for 60*s.* per quarter, including freight and insurance to Emden. The bill of lading (which was in conformity with the charterparty) and the policy of assurance were delivered to the purchaser:—Held, that the purchaser was only entitled to the assurance to Emden, and consequently that he could not recover from the underwriter for a loss between Emden and the port of discharge in the United Kingdom. Ionides v. Harford, 29 L. J., Ex. 36.

On Separate Packages.]—By a marine policy of insurance the insurance was described to be "on 1,711 packages teas, valued at one sum, on a voyage from New York to London," by a ship "warranted by the assured free from damage from dampness, change of flavour, or being spotted, or mouldy, except caused by actual contact of sea water with the articles damaged, occasioned by sea perils." In case of partial loss by sea damage to certain goods, not including tea, "the loss shall be ascertained by a separation and sale of the portion only of the contents of the packages so damaged, and not otherwise; and the same practice shall obtain as to all other merchandise, as far as practicable." The ship met with very bad weather during the voyage, and 449 of the 1,711 packages of the tea were seriously damaged by actual contact of sea water. The rest of the packages arrived soundly and in good condition, except by the injury to their reputation from having formed part of a shipment of which 449 packages had been damaged by sea water, and which was the cause, as was usual in such cases, of these packages, though sound and uninjured, not realising so high prices as they would have done if the 449 packages had not been damaged by sea water:—Held, that the packages insured by the policy were divisible, and that the assured was entitled to recover only in respect of the 449 packages which were actually damaged. Cater v. Great Western Insurance Co. of New York, 42 L. J., C. P. 266; L. R. 8 C. P. 552; 29 L. T. 136; 21 W. R. 850; 2 Asp. M. C. 90.

Goods Valued as at Time of Arrival.]—Held, also, that the loss in value of the goods depended on their value at the time of their arrival at the port of destination, and not at the time of sale, and the underwriters were therefore not liable for a fall in the market price between such arrival and the time of sale. Ib.

Open Policy—Declaration of Goods by Insured.]—Where an open policy was granted on goods shipped from Melbourne to London per one set of specified steamers to Sydney and thence to London per another set, covering risk while in a specified factory at Sydney, "declarations to be made within forty-eight hours after departure of steamer from Sydney":—Held, that according to the true construction of this contract two declarations must be made by the insured, one as incident to every contract of an open policy, for the purpose of identifying the shipments at Melbourne to which the policy was to attach and necessary by law to make the policy operative; the other, under the express terms of the above contract, giving particulars relating to such goods as had been already brought within the policy, by a previous declaration apt for that purpose, and had since been actually shipped for London. Davies v. National Marine Insurance Co., 60 L. J., P. C. 73; [1891] A. C. 485; 65 L. T. 560.

Insurance of Goods—Marks.]—Declaration in a policy on ship and goods at and from London to Emden "beginning the adventure on the said goods, &c., from the loading thereof on board the said ship." In the policy was a memorandum whereby the insurance was declared to be on fifteen hogsheads of tobacco marked, "B. S. No. 51 & 65." Special demurrer, first, because the goods were not averred to have been put on board at London; secondly, because the goods were not alleged to have been marked or numbered as in the memorandum, but thus: "15 hogsheads, the goods, &c., in the policy mentioned"; thirdly, because the plaintiff was stated to have been interested until and at the time of the loss, without shewing that he was interested at the time of the policy being made; fourthly, because no venue was laid to the alleged loss on the high seas. Semble, that the declaration was bad. De Symonds v. Shedden, 2 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 153.

Goods Stowed on Deck.]—Goods stowed on deck are not within a general policy on goods. Backhouse v. Ripley, 1 Park. (8th ed.) 24. S. P., Ross v. Thwaites, Ib.

b. On Loading or Landing Cargo.

"From the Loading"—Reference to Original Policy.]—A policy of insurance was underwritten for 1,000*l.*, which was declared to be a re-assurance, subject to all clauses and conditions of the original policy, on the ship "Daybreak," at and from any port or ports in any order on the West Coast of Africa to the vessel's port or ports of call and discharge in the United Kingdom, the insurance to commence "from the loading of the goods at as above." By the original policy the insurance was for 1,000*l.* upon the cargo of "Daybreak," at and from Liverpool to any ports in any order, backwards and forwards and forwards and backwards on the coast of Africa, and thence back to a port of discharge in the United Kingdom, with leave to increase the valuation of the cargo on the homeward voyage; "outward cargo to be considered homeward interest twenty-four hours after her arrival at her first port of discharge." Goods were shipped at Liverpool, and the vessel, with the same goods on board, departed from a port on the West Coast of Africa, and more than twenty-four hours after she had arrived at her first port of discharge, the goods were lost by perils insured against in the original policy:—Held, that the words "the insurance to commence from the loading of the goods as above" were qualified by the words in the original policy, by which outward cargo was to be considered homeward interest twenty-four hours after the vessel's arrival at her first port of discharge, and that the risk had consequently attached and the underwriters were liable. Joyce v. Realm Marine Insurance Co., 41 L. J., Q. B. 356; L. R. 7 Q. B. 580; 27 L. T. 144; 1 Asp. M. C. 194.

—— Loss of Lighters alongside.]—The plaintiffs, shipowners, by a policy of insurance underwritten by the defendants, caused "themselves to be insured, lost or not lost, at and from Liban to Bordeaux, upon freight (valued at interest), of and in the vessel 'Hawthorn,' beginning the adventure upon the said goods or freight from the loading thereof, on board the said ship at Liban, and to continue and endure during the said vessel's abode there, and until the said vessel shall have arrived at Bordeaux, and the said goods shall be safely delivered from the said ship." The plaintiffs' vessel commenced loading at Liban a cargo of oats for Bordeaux, and a portion of the cargo was in lighters alongside, and was about to be transferred to the vessel, when, by reason of the perils of the sea, the lighters and portions of cargo were wholly lost, and the plaintiffs were prevented from earning the freight insured:—Held, upon demurrer, that the plaintiffs could not recover. Hopper v. Wear Marine Insurance Co., 46 L. T. 107; 4 Asp. M. C. 482.

—— Time of.]—Where, by a policy, a ship and goods were insured "at and from all and every port, &c., on the coast of Brazil, and after the 17th of September to the Cape of Good Hope, beginning the adventure upon the goods from the loading aboard the same ship at all and every port, &c., on the coast of Brazil, and from the 17th of September, 1800, and upon the ship in the same manner," with liberty to sail to, &c., any places backwards or forwards under the Portuguese government, &c., at a premium of four guineas per cent., to return 3*l.* 10*s.* should the ship have arrived or the risk have otherwise ceased on or before the 17th September:—Held, that the policy only attached on the homeward-bound cargo laden on board at the coast of Brazil, and did not cover a cargo originally taken in at the Cape of Good Hope, and which continued on board after the 17th of September, while the ship was on the coast of Brazil, and after she left it on her return to the Cape. Neither did the policy cover the ship itself, which was insured in the same manner as the goods. Robertson v. French, 4 East, 130; 4 Esp. 246; 7 R. R. 535.

Commencement of Risk—Distinction between Insured Voyage and Risks Insured—Deviation Clause.]—In construing an open policy of marine insurance in order to ascertain what risks are covered by the policy, it must first be ascertained what the voyage insured is. If the goods lost never were upon the insured voyage, then the policy never attached; and the fact that the policy contains a deviation clause is immaterial. Simon v. Sedgwick, 62 L. J., Q. B. 163; [1893] 1 Q. B. 303; 4 R. 128; 67 L. T. 785; 41 W. R. 163; 7 Asp. M. C. 245—C. A.

Consignors, at Bradford, of the goods in question, effected, through their agents at Liverpool, a marine policy of insurance from the Mersey to any port in Portugal or Spain "this side Gibraltar, $\frac{\text{and}}{\text{or,}}$ at and from thence to any place in the interior, including all risks by any conveyance whatsoever from the time of leaving the warehouse in the United Kingdom until on board, . . . and all risks of every kind until safely delivered at the warehouse of the consignees." The policy contained the following marginal clause:—"Deviation $\frac{\text{and}}{\text{or}}$ change of voyage . . . not included in the policy, to be held covered at a premium to be arranged." The consignees were merchants at Madrid, and the consignors intended that the goods should be shipped at Liverpool for Seville, and carried thence by land to Madrid. By the blunder of the consignors' agent the goods were in fact declared and shipped at Liverpool on board a vessel bound only for Carril and Huelva, on the west coast of Spain, and for Carthagena and other ports on the east coast of Spain. The bills of lading of the goods in question were made out for Carthagena. The consignors only discovered the mistake after the vessel had sailed. The vessel was lost between Liverpool and Carril, a part of the voyage common to vessels bound either for the west or the east coast of Spain:—Held, that the goods in question never were upon the insured voyage; that, consequently, the policy never attached; and that the underwriters were not liable to pay the consignors the amount of the goods in question. Ib.

—— Loading.]—A policy was effected on guano on board the "D. H." "at and from port or ports in the river Plate to the United Kingdom, &c. . . . beginning the adventure from the loading thereof aboard the said ship as above." The guano had been loaded at Patagonia before the ship went to the Plate. When she arrived in the Plate part of the guano was unloaded to enable a leak to be stopped. This guano was reshipped, and the ship sailed from the Plate for England. Before the policy was effected the underwriter was informed that the guano had been loaded in Patagonia and taken to the Plate, and that the ship had sailed from the Plate for England. A loss occurred:—Held, that the policy attached, and that the plaintiff could recover upon it. Nonnen v. Kettlewell (16 East, 176) followed. Carr v. Montefiore, 5 B. & S. 408; 33 L. J., Q. B. 256; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1069; 11 L. T. 157; 12 W. R. 870—Ex. Ch.

—— Shipment of Portion.]—Where a contract of insurance related to wheat cargo then on board or to be shipped in the "D. of S.":—Held, that the risk commenced as soon as any portion thereof was on board. Colonial Insurance Co. of New Zealand v. Adelaide Marine Insurance Co., 56 L. J., P. C. 19; 12 App. Cas. 128; 56 L. T. 173; 35 W. R. 636; 6 Asp. M. C. 94—P. C.

—— Before Loading.]—Action upon a policy, at and from New York to Quebec, during the ship's stay there, and thence to Liverpool, on profit on cargo, beginning the adventure upon the goods from the loading aboard the ship. The ship was at the time of effecting the policy on the voyage from New York to Quebec, where the plaintiff had provided a cargo ready to be loaded, and was lost before she reached that port. The declaration set out a correspondence between the plaintiff and his brokers, which shewed that the plaintiff intended to insure the loss of his profit by the ship being lost before she reached Quebec, and alleged that the correspondence and the nature of the intended risk were explained to the defendant before he subscribed the policy, and that the rate of premium was higher than would have been charged for a similar risk commencing at Quebec, or for a risk on goods only for the said voyage:—Held, that as no goods ever were loaded aboard her by the insured, the adventure never began, and therefore the underwriters were not liable. Halhead v. Young, 6 El. & Bl. 312; 25 L. J., Q. B. 290; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 970; 4 W. R. 530.

—— Fire after Landing.]—A time policy was made on the "Grand Bonny," "on 15,000*l.* on cargo, valued at 15,000*l.*, with liberty to increase the value on the homeward voyage." The body of the policy was in the ordinary printed form, expressing the risk on the goods to be from the loading on board the ship, including risk of craft, and to endure until discharged and safely landed. On the margin was a memorandum, "with liberty to load, reload, exchange, sell, or barter, all or either, goods or property, on the coast of Africa and African islands, and with any vessels, boats, factories, canoes, and to transfer interest from the vessel to any other vessel, or from any other vessels to this vessel, in port and at sea, and in any ports or places she may call at or proceed to, without being deemed a deviation." The "Grand Bonny" sailed to Africa with a cargo, part of which was landed in a factory for the purpose of barter, and was lying at anchor loading from the factory native produce, when the factory with its contents was destroyed by fire:—Held, that the policy embraced only maritime risks, and did not protect either the goods which had been part of the cargo of the "Grand Bonny," but had been landed in the factory, nor the produce intended to be her cargo, but still on shore, whether that produce had been obtained by barter of the cargo or otherwise. Harrison v. Ellis, 7 El. & Bl. 465; 26 L. J., Q. B. 239; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 908; 5 W. R. 494.

—— Valued Policy on Freight—Breakdown of Machinery before Cargo Loaded.]—In an action to recover 2,000*l.* under a valued policy on freight the question was whether a risk against loss of freight through a breakdown of machinery had attached. The words printed in the policy were "The assurance shall commence upon freight and goods or merchandise on board (the vessel) from the loading of the said goods or merchandise at ." The words "Monte Video" in writing completed the sentence. The vessel arrived at Monte Video and discharged her outward cargo. A refrigerating engine was then started to reduce the temperature below 288 F. so that a cargo of meat could be shipped. The engine broke down, and the adventure was abandoned:—Held, that the words defining the commencement of the risk with regard to the loading of the goods being absolutely inapplicable under the circumstances must be rejected, and that the policy attached although no meat was ever loaded. Hydarnes SS. Co. v. Indemnity Mutual Marine Assurance Co., 64 L. J., Q. B. 353; [1895] 1 Q. B. 500; 14 R. 216; 72 L. T. 103; 7 Asp. M. C. 553—C. A.

Loss of Profits on Cargo bought—Ship Disabled at Port of Loading—Contract Inoperative.]—See McSwiney v. Royal Exchange Assurance Corporation, post, col. 1079.

c. Mode of Loading and Landing.

By Lighters.]—Insurance on goods from A. to B., "until they should be there discharged and safely landed." On their arrival at B., the merchant to whom the goods belonged employed and paid a public lighter to land them, and the goods being damaged in the lighter, without negligence, the underwriters were held liable for the loss. Hurry v. Royal Exchange Assurance Co., 2 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 430; 3 Esp. 289; 5 R. R. 639; 6 R. R. 804.

Goods put into a public lighter for the purpose of being landed, are protected by usage under a general policy; but if the merchant sends his own lighter, the underwriter is discharged. Rucker v. London Assurance Co., 2 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 432, n.; 3 Esp. 290; 5 R. R. 639, n.

Action on a policy on goods, "until the cargo should be discharged and safely landed." On the arrival of the ship, the goods insured were put on board a lighter hired in the usual way, and brought to the plaintiff's wharf in the evening; but not landed on account of the rough weather; the plaintiff then undertook to see to the landing himself, but in the night the lighter was by an unavoidable accident sunk and the goods lost:—Held, that the underwriters were discharged. Strong v. Natally, 1 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 16; 8 R. R. 741.

By a policy, assurance was made "including risk of craft to and from the ship," on linseed oil cakes, "free of particular average unless general, or the ship was stranded." The cakes were put on board a lighter at their destination, and the lighter stranded and sunk, whereby a particular average loss was sustained:—Held, that the underwriters were not liable. Hofman v. Marshall, 2 Bing. (N.C.) 383; 2 Scott, 559; 1 Hodges, 330; 5 L. J., C. P. 70. See also Hopper v. Wear Marine Insurance Co., 46 L. T. 107; 4 Asp. M. C. 482, ante, col. 1051.

Lost in Government Warehouses.]—Upon a common policy on goods the underwriters are discharged if the goods are landed at the port of destination by the officers of government there, and are lodged in the government warehouses, if this is the usual mode in which goods are landed at that port, although the goods insured are afterwards confiscated by the government, and are never in the possession of the consignees. Brown v. Carstairs, 3 Camp. 161.

Removal and Reloading.]—A ship, having landed a cargo of guano at Patagonia, sailed for England, but being sea-damaged, put into Monte Video, in the river Plate. She there underwent repairs, a portion of her cargo having been removed for the purpose; and after refitting and reloading, she was sold, together with the cargo, to D. & Co., who caused her to be insured "at and from port or ports in the river Plate to the United Kingdom, beginning the adventure upon the goods and merchandises from the loading thereof aboard the ship at as above":—Held, that the removal and reloading of a portion of the cargo at Monte Video amounted to a constructive loading at that port, so as to satisfy the terms of the policy, and that the underwriters were therefore liable. Carr v. Montefiore, 5 B. & S. 408; 33 L. J., Q. B. 256; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1069; 11 L. T. 157; 12 W. R. 870—Ex. Ch.

Loss in Lighter.]—Goods lost after the owner has taken them from the ship into a lighter are no charge to the insurer. Sparrow v. Caruthers, 2 Str. 1235.

Risk of Craft till Goods landed—Transhipment from Lighters into export Vessel.]—A policy of insurance on goods which includes "all risk of craft until the goods are discharged and safely landed" does not cover the risk to the goods while waiting on lighters at the port of delivery for transhipment into an export vessel. Houlder v. Merchants Marine Insurance Co., 55 L. J., Q. B. 420; 17 Q. B. D. 354; 55 L. T. 244; 34 W. R. 673; 6 Asp. M. C. 12—C. A.

d. What Port.

What is a Port.]—Policy on ship for four months, at and from a place to any port or ports whatsoever:—Held, that an open roadstead (being the usual place of loading and unloading) was a port within the meaning of this policy. Cockey v. Atkinson, 2 B. & Ald. 460; 21 R. R. 357.

Extent of Port.]—A policy "at and from Lyme to London" does not protect a cargo laden at Bridport within the port of Lyme, and eight miles nearer to London. Constable v. Noble, 2 Taunt. 403; 11 R. R. 617.

Port of Loading.]—If a policy is effected on goods on a voyage defined from A. to B., the risk to commence "at and from the loading thereof on board," not saying where, it must be intended a loading at the place from which the voyage commenced. Spitta v. Woodman, 2 Taunt. 416; 11 R. R. 628.

A policy on goods at and from G. to the ship's port of discharge, beginning the adventure on the goods from the loading aboard the ship, does not cover goods loaded at an anterior port, though they were in a loaded state and in good safety at G., just before effecting the insurance. Mellish v. Allnutt, 2 M. & S. 106; 14 R. R. 599.

An assured was entitled to recover a loss of goods insured at and from Landscrona to Wolgast, though they were shipped at Gottenburg before the ship arrived at Landscrona, and though the policy was declared to be at and from the loading of the goods on board the ship; it appearing that the underwriter was informed at the time when the goods were loaded on board at Gottenburg, and that part of them was landed and reloaded at Landscrona, so as to enable the custom-house officers there to ascertain the quality of the whole, and to adjust the duties, and the policy being free of average. Nonnen v. Reid, 16 East, 176. And see Carr v. Montefiore, supra.

Policy on goods at and from G. to any port in the Baltic, beginning the adventure from the loading on board the ship, and the policy was declared to be in continuation of a former policy; which was a policy from V. to her port of discharge in the United Kingdom, or any ports in the Baltic, with liberty to take in and discharge goods wheresoever, to return 12 per cent. if the voyage ended at G.:—Held, that the assured was entitled to recover, although the goods were not loaded on board at G. but at V., and although the defendant was not an underwriter on the former policy. Bell v. Hobson, 16 East, 240; 3 Camp. 272; 14 R. R. 337. And see Harrower v. Hutchinson, post, col. 1198.

Partial Discharge.]—If, on an insurance of goods only to a particular port, the ship touches at one port, and, after discharging part of her cargo proceeds with the residue to another, the insurance remains in force until her arrival at the latter port. Leigh v. Mather, 1 Esp. 411; 5 R. R. 740.

Secus, if the insurance is on ship and goods. Ib.

Goods on Board before Arrival at Port of Loading.]—A policy at and from G. on goods, beginning the adventure from the loading on board the ship, will not protect goods laden on board before the ship's arrival at G. Langhorn v. Hardy, 4 Taunt. 628; 13 R. R. 708.

Ship and goods insured at and from the coast of Brazil, and after September 17th to the Cape of Good Hope, beginning the adventure from the loading of the goods on the coast of Brazil, and from September 17th; with liberty to sail backwards and forwards to Portuguese ports; at four guineas per cent., to return 3*l.* 10*s.* should the ship have arrived or the risk determined on or before September 17th:—Held, that the policy did not cover cargo taken in at the Cape, and on board on September 17th, when the ship was on the Brazil coast; nor did it cover the ship. Robertson v. French, 4 East, 130; 4 Esp. 246; 17 R. R. 535.

Goods insured at and from L. to W. They were shipped to the knowledge of the underwriter at G. before the ship arrived at L. Nonnen v. Reid, 16 East, 176.

Previous Loading.]—Where a policy was on goods at and from Pernambuco to Maranham, and from thence to Liverpool, beginning the adventure on the goods from the loading thereof on board the ship wheresoever:—Held, that it would cover goods previously loaded at Liverpool, and which arrived at P., but were not unloaded there, and afterwards sustained a partial loss by wreck in the voyage from P. to M. Gladstone v. Clay, 1 M. & S. 418; 14 R. R. 479.

Under a policy upon a ship and cargo "at and from the coast of A. to her port and ports of discharge in the United Kingdom, beginning the adventure upon the goods and merchandise from the loading aboard the ship, twenty-four hours after her arrival on the coast":—Held, that no part of the outward cargo was covered by the policy, it not appearing on the face of the policy that the goods on board previously to the arrival on the coast of A. were intended to be insured. Rickman v. Carstairs, 2 N. & M. 562; 5 B. & Ad. 651; 3 L. J., K. B. 28.

Held, also, that a memorandum, valuing the cargo at a certain sum, did not operate to make the policy extend to cover a loss of portions of the outward cargo, which continued on board after the vessel had arrived on the coast. Ib.

"At and from" a Foreign Port.]—A policy upon a homeward voyage from India, upon goods at and from a foreign port of loading, until the ship's arrival in London, beginning the adventure upon the goods from the loading at the foreign port of loading, and so to continue upon the goods until the same should be discharged, attaches only on the particular cargo taken at the first port of loading. Grant v. Paxton, 1 Taunt. 463; 10 R. R. 583.

Where a vessel is insured "at and from" a foreign port at which she is expected to arrive, the risk attaches when she first arrives at the port in such a seaworthy condition as to be enabled to lie there in safety. Haughton v. Empire Marine Insurance Co., 4 H. & C. 41; 35 L. J., Ex. 117; L. R. 1 Ex. 206; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 376; 15 L. T. 80; 14 W. R. 645.

A ship was insured on a valued policy, lost or not lost, at and from Havana to Greenock. Upon arriving inside the harbour of Havana she proceeded up the harbour in charge of a pilot. When past the mass of the shipping lying off the city of Havana, and past the point where she was ultimately discharged, she began to stir up the mud, whereupon the pilot ordered her to be anchored. She sustained damage from settling down on the anchor of another ship:—Held, that the word "at" was to be construed in its ordinary and geographical sense, and that it was equivalent to "at her first arrival at"; and therefore the policy attached immediately on the ship entering the natural boundaries of the harbour of Havana. Ib.

A policy, at and from a foreign port, attaches when the ship has arrived there in good physical safety, although, from physical causes, she may be in great danger of condemnation. Bell v. Bell, 2 Camp. 475; 11 R. R. 769.

On a policy at and from Pernambuco, or any other port or ports in the Brazils, to London, "beginning the adventure from the loading the goods on board the ship on the termination of her cruise, and preparing for her voyage to London." The ship, on the termination of her cruise, touched at Pernambuco, but failing to procure a cargo there, she proceeded to St. Salvador, and was lost on her voyage thither:—Held, that the policy attached at Pernambuco. Lambert v. Liddard, 1 Marsh. 149; 5 Taunt. 480; 15 R. R. 557.

Last Port of Discharge.]—Last port of discharge held to mean not the original port of destination, but the port where the ship in fact discharged. Moffat v. Ward, 4 Dougl. 31.

Cargo taken in Outside Bar.]—Insurance at and from Oporto. A ship according to usage took in part of her cargo inside and part outside the river bar, and whilst loading outside was caught by bad weather and lost:—Held, that the indemniters were liable, being bound to know the usage. Kingston v. Knibbs, 1 Camp. 508; 10 R. R. 742.

Ship never going to Island named—Usual Mode of Loading.]—Policy on goods "at and from the ship's loading port or ports in Amelia Island to London." The ship never touched at Amelia Island, but went further up the St. Mary's river to Tiger Island, where she took in her cargo:—Held, that the policy attached, this being the usual mode of loading in the trade. Moxon v. Atkins, 3 Camp. 200; 13 R. R. 789.

"At and from Port."]—Where the plaintiffs proposed to insure a wheat cargo "at and from" port, and the defendants, "in accordance with your written request," granted an insurance "from" port:—Held, that there was a complete contract to insure "at and from" port. Colonial Insurance Co. of New Zealand v. Adelaide Marine Insurance Co., 56 L. J., P. C. 19; 12 App. Cas. 128; 56 L. T. 173; 35 W. R. 636; 6 Asp. M. C. 94.

Goods in Store Ship—Transhipment.]—Insurance on goods from Malaga to Gibraltar, and from thence to England and Holland, or either; with liberty to tranship the goods at Gibraltar into a British ship or British ships for England or Holland. There being no British ship at Gibraltar, the goods were, according to custom, put on board a store ship, and there lost:—Held, that the underwriters were liable. Tierney v. Etherington, cited 1 Burr. 348.

Delay at Intermediate Port.] — Goods and freight were insured at and from L. to M. V. and B. A., if open, or the ship's final port of discharge in the river P., with liberty to wait two months at M. V., if needful, at a premium of five guineas per cent., to return 2*l.* per cent. for risk ending at M. V. on arrival. The vessel arrived on the 2nd of August at M.V., which was then blockaded by an enemy's fleet, to prevent vessels passing to B. A. The blockade did not cease till the 4th of October. The vessel afterwards sailed for B. A., and was lost:—Held, that the risk was at an end as soon as the vessel had stayed two months at M. V., and the underwriters were therefore discharged. Doyle v. Powell, 4 B. & Ad. 267; 1 N. & M. 678.

2. On Ship.

a. Extent of Liability.

Preparing for Voyage — Undue Delay.] — Whilst a ship is preparing for the voyage upon which she is insured, the insurer is liable; but if the voyage is laid aside, and the ship lies by for five, six, or seven years, with the owner's privity, the insurer is not liable. Chitty v. Selwyn, 2 Atk. 359.

Description of Voyage.]—If parties describe in the usual terms the voyage they insure, both knowing that the adventure has deviated from that description, they are nevertheless bound by the description they have chosen, and the previous deviation is fatal. Redman v. Loudon or Lowden, 5 Taunt. 462; 1 Marsh. 136; 3 Camp. 503.

Time or Voyage Policy.]—A ship insured "at and from the port of Pomaron to Newcastle-on-Tyne, and for fifteen days whilst there after arrival," arrived safely at Newcastle on the 4th of December, and on the 13th completed the discharge of her inward cargo within the port of Newcastle. Having been chartered to load in the River Tyne a cargo of coals for delivery at Gibraltar, and having received on board two keels of the same as a stiffening, the ship was moved on the 15th of December to a loading place on the Tyne, within the port of Newcastle, there to complete her loading. Whilst moored there, she was, on the 16th, injured in a storm. The stamp on the policy was sufficient to cover both a voyage and a time policy. The policy did not contain the usual twenty-four hours' clause:—Held, that the policy must be construed as a voyage policy with a time policy engrafted upon it, and that, although the voyage was terminated and the inward cargo discharged, the underwriters were liable. Gamble v. Ocean Marine Insurance Co. of Bombay, 45 L. J., Ex. 366; 1 Ex. D. 141; 34 L. T. 189; 24 W. R. 384; 3 Asp. M. C. 180—C. A.

In such a policy the provision as to the further period after arrival is not a mere expansion of the period covered by the voyage policy so as to require that the ship up to the time of the loss should not be engaged in a matter unconnected with purposes of the voyage insured. That provision, though appended to a voyage policy, is to be administered upon the principles applicable to a time policy. Ib.

To a Port.]—The risk on a vessel under a policy to a place generally, without any provision as to her safety there, continues until she is anchored at her port of destination, in the usual place for discharge of her cargo. Stone v. Ocean Marine Insurance Co. of Gothenburg, 45 L. J., Ex. 361 ; 1 Ex. D. 81 ; 34 L. T. 490 ; 24 W. R. 55 ; 3 Asp. M. C. 152.

By a memorandum indorsed on a policy made by way of reinsurance on a vessel from Liverpool to Baltimore and United Kingdom, the vessel, in consideration of an additional premium, was to be at liberty to go to Antwerp. On leaving Baltimore, she went direct to Antwerp, where she arrived the day before the memorandum was made. Two days after, while in the outer dock, on her way into the inner dock, the usual place of discharge, she was ordered to Leith, on her way to which place she was lost. In an action on the policy or for a return of the additional premium :—Held, that the memorandum did not give liberty to touch or call at Antwerp, and so did not permit the vessel to go to Antwerp, and thence to England ; and that, as the vessel had not, when the memorandum was made, reached the usual place of discharge, the voyage was not then at an end, and the additional premium could not be recovered back. Ib.

"At and from a Port."]—In a voyage policy of insurance "at and from" a port, it is an implied understanding that the ship shall be at the port within such a time that the risk shall not be materially varied ; and if there is delay beyond such time, the policy does not attach. De Wolf v. Archangel Maritime Bank and Insurance Co., 43 L. J., Q. B. 147 ; L. R. 9 Q. B. 451 ; 39 L. T. 605 ; 22 W. R. 801 ; 2 Asp. M. C. 273.

Where the words of a policy are "at and from England to Bengal," the first arrival of the ship at Bengal is implied, and shall be so understood ; but if a ship is decayed, and goes to the nearest port for repair, it is the same as if she was repaired at the place from whence she came. Motteux v. London Assurance Co., 1 Atk. 545.

In a homeward policy the words "at and from" a named port, are to be construed in their natural geographical sense without reference to the expiration of an outward policy "to" the same place ; therefore the policy attaches as soon as the vessel arrives within the port.

A vessel insured "at and from" Havana was injured by striking an anchor whilst proceeding up the harbour to her place of discharge :—Held, that the policy attached. Haughton v. Empire Marine Insurance Co., 4 H. & C. 41 ; 35 L. J., Ex. 117 ; L. R. 1 Ex. 206 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 376 ; 15 L. T. 80 ; 14 W. R. 645.

What Ports.]—In an action on a policy on a voyage, "to any port in the Baltic," evidence was admitted to prove that the Gulf of Finland is considered in mercantile contracts as within the Baltic, although the two seas are treated as separate and distinct by geographers. Uhde v. Warlters, 3 Camp. 16 ; 13 R. R. 737.

A policy at and from Martinique and all and every West India Island, warrants a course from Martinique to islands not in the homeward voyage. Bragg v. Anderson, 4 Taunt. 229 ; 13 R. R. 584.

In an action on a policy on a voyage "at or from the port or ports of discharge and loading in India and the East India Islands," evidence was admitted to show that the Mauritius was considered in mercantile contracts as an East India Island, although treated by geographers as an African island. Robertson v. Money, Ry. & M. 75 ; 27 R. R. 732.

But the court afterwards decided that the Mauritius was not in the East Indies, nor was it an Indian Island. Robertson v. Clarke, 1 Bing. 445 ; 8 Moore, 622 ; 2 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 71 ; 25 R. R. 676.

Under an insurance from the port of loading a loading at one single place only is authorised. Brown v. Tayleur, 5 N. & M. 472 ; 1 Hurls. & Walms. 578 ; 4 A. & E. 241 ; 5 L. J., K. B. 57.

Under a policy at and from an island, a ship is protected in moving from port to port in the same island. Cruickshank v. Janson, 2 Taunt. 301 ; 11 R. R. 584.

If a policy describes a voyage at and from a place which is the head of a port, it will not cover a voyage at and from a distant place which is a member of the same port. Payne v. Hutchinson, 2 Taunt, 405, n. ; 11 R. R. 620.

Voyage Specified — Further Voyage not Covered.]—A policy covering a specific voyage cannot be extended by implication to cover a further voyage, although circumstances (of war) make the further voyage necessary. Parkin v. Tunno, 2 Camp. 59 ; 11 East, 22 ; 10 R. R. 422.

Intermediate Voyage.]—Policy on ship at and from Newfoundland to Portugal, upon goods, begining the adventure from the loading thereof. Before loading the fish she made an intermediate short voyage with coals, according to the usage of the Newfoundland trade :—Held, that the usage could be proved and that the policy attached. Ougier v. Jennings, 1 Camp. 505 ; 10 R. R. 739.

—— East India Company's Ship.]—A policy in common form upon goods to the East Indies, ceases when the ship has delivered the company's outward cargo in the East Indies, and will not protect the goods to a market in an intermediate voyage made by the ship before her return to Europe. Richardson v. London Assurance Co., 4 Camp. 94.

From L. to R.—Ship never reaching R.]—A ship insured from L. to R., on approaching R. ascertained that an embargo was laid upon all ships of her nation. She thereupon sailed home to L. and was lost :—Held, the assurers not liable. Blackenhagen v. London Assurance Co., 1 Camp. 454 ; 10 R. R. 729.

Until Ship Discharged.]—Policy to run until the ship shall have ended and be discharged of her voyage :—Held, arrival at port of discharge is not a discharge until she be unloaded. Anon., Skinner, 243.

"Last Port of Discharge."] — A ship was insured from London to any port or ports in the River Plate, until her arrival at her last port of discharge in that river; and the master, intending to discharge her cargo at Buenos Ayres, passed Maldonado, but hearing that Buenos Ayres was then in the hands of the enemy, he went to Monte Video, with intent to make a complete discharge there, if the market was favourable; but after discharging a part, and not finding the market there so favourable as he expected, he had not abandoned his original intention of going to Buenos Ayres, if it should afterwards be practicable; but while he was still discharging part of his cargo at Monte Video, a loss happened by a peril of the sea:—Held, that as Buenos Ayres, to which other port only in the Plate he had contemplated to go, was at the time of his arrival in the Plate (and in fact continued up to the time of the loss) in the hands of the enemy, so that he could not legally go there, Monte Video must be taken to be the ship's last port of discharge, and that on her arrival there the policy was discharged. Brown v. Vigne, 12 East, 283; 11 R. R. 375.

Upon an insurance from England to Barbadoes and all or any of the West India colonies, to continue until the ship shall be arrived at her final port of discharge, the risk terminates on the discharge of the outward cargo at any of the colonies. Moore v. Taylor, 3 N. & M. 406; 1 A. & E. 25; 3 L. J., K. B. 132.

"Whilst in Port"—Fairway of Navigable Channel.]—A ship insured for a voyage to any port of discharge in the United Kingdom, "and whilst in port during thirty days after arrival," arrived at Greenock, discharged her cargo, and was placed in a dock for repairs. Within thirty days after her arrival she left the dock in ballast for the port of Glasgow, in tow of a steam-tug, to proceed on a new voyage, and had reached the fairway of the channel of the Clyde, her stern being about 500 feet distant from the harbour works when she was capsized by a sudden gust of wind, and sustained damage:—Held, that the ship at the time of the accident was not "in port" within the meaning of the policy, and that the underwriters were not liable. "Garston" Sailing Ship Co. v. Hickie (15 Q. B. D. 580) discussed. Hunter v. Northern Marine Insurance Co., 13 App. Cas. 717—H. L. (Sc.)

What Ship.]—Plaintiff insured, interest or no interest, on any ship he should come in from Virginia to London, beginning the adventure on his embarking; the money to be paid though his person should escape or the ship be retaken. He embarked on the "S." but she springing a leak he went on board the "F." and arrived at London. The "S." was captured after he left her:—Held, the underwriter was liable. Dick v. Barrell, 2 Str. 1248.

Time of Sailing.]—On an assurance of a vessel at and from New York to Quebec, during her stay there, thence to the United Kingdom, the ship being warranted to sail from Quebec on or before the first of November, 1853:—Held, that the assurer was liable for a loss occurring on her voyage to Quebec after the 1st of November, 1853. Baines v. Holland, 10 Ex. 802; 3 C. L. R. 593; 24 L. J., Ex. 204.

Loss after Expiration of Time—Damage within.]—Where a ship, insured for 1,000*l.* under a time policy ending on the 23rd September, whilst attempting on the 16th September, to enter the harbour of Santa Cruz, took the ground and remained fast, on a rocky bottom, till the tide flowed, and was then got off and brought into harbour, where she remained with her crew on board, but kept afloat by pumping till the middle of October, when she was beached, and it was found that, by the accident of the 16th September, she had been so damaged that the necessary repairs could not be made at Santa Cruz, and that to take her to the nearest port, at Monte Video, was more than a prudent owner could be expected to do, and where the master, in consequence, sold her at Santa Cruz, for the benefit of all concerned, for 72*l.* 10*s.*:—Held, first, that there was no actual total loss within the time stipulated by the policy. Knight v. Faith, 15 Q. B. 649; 19 L. J., Q. B. 509; 14 Jur. 1114.

Held, secondly, that it was sufficiently proved that there was actually a partial loss within the time, although neither the nature nor the extent of that loss was ascertained by examination until after the expiration of the time. Ib.

Held, also, that although the ship was to be considered as totally lost after the expiration of the risk, in consequence of the injury of the 16th September, yet, since the insurers were not liable for the total loss they were not thereby exempted from their liability to pay the partial loss, arising from the same injury, which was suffered during the risk, and continued prejudicial to the assured even to the time of action brought. Ib.

"Coasting Trade."]—A ship whilst on a voyage from Sunderland to Bordeaux, lost off the coast of Norfolk, is not employed in the "coasting trade" at the time of loss, so as to escape the stipulated deduction from the insurance in respect of the extra risk incurred by a voyage "crossing the North Sea or the Bay of Biscay, or to any port south of Brest." Harvey v. Beckworth, 2 H. & M. 429; 4 N. R. 255; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 577; 10 L. T. 632; 12 W. R. 896—C. A.

Continuing Policy.]—A policy was made on a vessel for a year by an insurance association, by the rules of which the insurance was to be from year to year, unless notice to the contrary was given, and the managers, unless they received ten days' notice to the contrary, were to renew the policy on its expiration:—Held, that according to the term of such rules, and 30 & 31 Vict. c. 23, s. 8 (which makes null a policy exceeding twelve months) the policy was not a continuing one, but expired at the end of the year. Lishman v. Northern Maritime Insurance Co., 44 L. J., C. P. 185; L. R. 10 C. P. 179; 32 L. T. 170; 23 W. R. 733—Ex. Ch.

Freight was insured by a club policy from the 24th of January, 1852, to the 1st of March, 1852, subject to the rules of the association, one of which was as follows:—"That the committee, unless they receive ten days' notice to the contrary, shall renew each policy on its expiration, except in cases where it may be deemed expedient not to renew, when the committee shall cause similar notice to be given to the parties." No notice having been given:—Held, that this was a continuing policy, and not merely a policy to come till the 1st of March. Michael v. Gillespy, 2 C. B. (N.S.) 627; 26 L. J., C. P. 306; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1219.

Time of Execution of Policy.]—Where, by the rules of an insurance association, insurances were to commence on the day on which the ship was accepted by the committee, and to continue in force for twelve months, a ship accepted in February, and lost in June, was well insured by a policy executed 3rd October. Mead v. Davison, 4 N. & M. 701; 3 A. & E. 303; 1 H. & W. 156; 4 L. J., K. B. 193.

On and off Risk—Consideration.]—A declaration on a policy stated that the policy was made by the plaintiff and the defendants, whereby the latter insured the former's vessel for twelve months (setting out the terms of the policy containing certain warranties). The declaration stated that at the time of the making of the policy the defendants were used and accustomed to allow to all persons insuring ships with them for the period of twelve calendar months to take their vessels off risk for any one or more entire month or months for which such vessels were insured, and upon giving notice to the insured to consider such vessels as off risk, and not subject to any of the terms of such policies until such vessels were again taken upon risk and notice given to the defendants, and to make a return to the persons so insured of part of the premium during each of such entire month or months. The declaration averred that the plaintiff had notice of the custom, that the vessel was taken off risk for a month and that the plaintiff had claimed 3*l.* 12*s.* as a return of the premium, and that it was agreed between the plaintiff and defendants that the sum should be accepted in discharge of the claim, and that the vessel should be considered as again on risk for the residue of the twelve months, and that the policy should continue in full force for the unexpired residue of such period. The declaration contained an averment that the vessel was again on risk, and that during the residue of such period she was wholly lost. There were averments of compliance with the warranties by the plaintiff during the continuance of the policy, and after the vessel was again on risk:—Held, that the declaration was bad in substance for not alleging a compliance with the warranties during the whole period the vessel was on risk, for that either the vessel was on risk again under the original contract or upon a new agreement, in which latter case the agreement was void for want of a sufficient consideration. Hutchinson v. Read, 4 Ex. 761; 19 L. J., Ex. 222.

"Port or ports"—Risk Covered—Ports of Loading and of Discharge.]—In a policy of marine reinsurance the voyage covered by the policy was described as "at and from Newcastle (N.S.W.) to any port or ports, place or places, in any order, on West Coast of South America, and for thirty days after arrival in final port, however employed":—Held, that the policy covered risks at both ports of loading and ports of discharge on the West Coast of South America, and was not limited to risks at the port of final discharge of the cargo from Newcastle, and thirty days after. Crocker v. Sturge, 66 L. J., Q. B. 142; [1897] 1 Q. B. 330; 75 L. T. 549; 45 W. R. 271; 8 Asp. M. C. 208.

"In Port," Meaning of.]—In a policy for a voyage and "while in port thirty days after arrival":—Held, that "in port" as applied to Greenock did not include the fairway of the navigable channel of the Clyde off the harbour works. The Afton (Owners) v. Northern Marine Insurance Company, 14 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 544.

Fire in Dock—"Intended to Navigate."]—A policy against loss by fire described a steamboat as "now lying in Tait's Dock, Montreal, and intended to navigate the St. Lawrence and lakes from Hamilton to Quebec principally as a freight-boat, and to be laid up in winter in a place approved by the insurers, who will not be liable for explosion either by steam or gunpowder." The steam-boat never left Tait's Dock, and was burnt there:—Held, that the words in the policy implied no agreement to navigate the steamboat as described in the policy, and that consequently the insurers were liable, though the steamboat never left the dock. Grant v. Ætna Insurance Co., 15 Moore, P. C. 516; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 705; 6 L. T. 735; 10 W. R. 772.

Three Months' Cruise—Mutiny.]—Insurance on a cruise for three months, the sailors mutinied and brought the ship into port: the insurance is not due. Pole or Poole v. Fitzgerald, Ambl. 145; Willes, 641; 4 Bro. P. C. 439.

Insurance of Pumps—"While at Wreck."]—A policy of insurance stated the risk to be on four pumps "at and from Ardrossan to the 'Alexandra' steamer ashore in the neighbourhood of Drogheda, and while there engaged at the wreck and until again returned to Ardrossan by the 'Sea Mew' salvage steamer, beginning the risk from the loading on board the said ship and [or] wreck, including all risk of craft and for boats to and from the vessel and while at the wreck":—Held, that the words of the policy did not include the risks while the pumps were on board the wreck on a voyage to Belfast, a port of safety. Wingate v. Foster, 47 L. J., Q. B. 525; 3 Q. B. D. 582; 38 L. T. 737; 26 W. R. 650; 3 Asp. M. C. 598—C. A.

—— Pumps engaged "at the Wreck."]—A policy of insurance was effected on salvage pumps insured "from the 30th of December, 1882, to the 12th of January, 1883, . . . whilst engaged in salvage operations at the wreck of the 'C.,'" "including all risk whilst being conveyed from B. to $\frac{\text{and}}{\text{or}}$ on board the wreck." It was shewn that the "C." was floated by means of the pumps which were brought from B., and placed on board her, and that she was kept afloat by the pumps, and that she partly steamed and partly was towed by another vessel for a distance of nearly forty miles, until she had almost reached B., the nearest port of safety, when she sank in deep water, with the salvage pumps on board, on the 4th of January, 1883:—Held, that the loss was not covered by the policy. Difiori v. Adams, 53 L. J., Q. B. 437; 1 Cab. & E. 228.

Quarantine—Loss during.]—Ship insured from Leghorn to London, and till there moored twenty-four hours in safety. She arrived on the 8th July at Fresh Wharf, but the same day was ordered back to the Hope to perform quarantine. On the 12th her master applied to be excused, her seamen having deserted on the 9th; on the 30th she was finally ordered back to the Hope, and whilst there was burnt:—Held, that the insurers were liable. Waples v. Eames, 2 Str. 1243.

b. Termination on Mooring.

Lying in Dock for Repairs.]—A time policy against fire was effected on a steamship. The policy described it as then "lying in the Victoria Docks," but gave it liberty "to go into dry dock, and light the boiler fires once or twice during the currency of this policy." The only dry dock into which the ship could go was Lungley's Dock, at some distance up the river. To go there it was necessary to remove the paddle-wheels; they were removed in the Victoria Docks, and the ship was then towed up to Lungley's Dock. The necessary repairs there having been completed, the ship was brought out and moored in the river, preparatory to replacing the paddle-wheels. This operation could have been perfectly performed in the Victoria Docks, but it was found that in such case it was customary, as the more economical course, to replace the paddle-wheels while the ship lay in the river. Before the wheels had been replaced the ship was burnt:—Held, that the policy covered the ship while in the Victoria Docks, and while passing from them to the dry docks, and while directly returning from the dry docks to the Victoria Docks; but did not cover the vessel while moored in the river for a collateral purpose. Pearson v. Commercial Union Assurance Co., 45 L. J., C. P. 761; 1 App. Cas. 498; 35 L. T. 445; 24 W. R. 951—H. L. (E.) See also Gamble v. Ocean Marine Insurance Co., 1 Ex. D. 141; and Stone v. Ocean Marine Insurance Co. of Gothenburg, 1 Ex. D. 81, ante, col. 1059.

Twenty-four Hours in Safety.]—By a Lloyds' policy on ship, the risk was described in writing to be "at and from London to Calcutta, and for thirty days after arrival," and then followed the usual printed words, "upon the ship, &c., until she hath moored at anchor twenty-four hours in good safety."—After having sustained damage at sea to such an extent as to require constant pumping to keep her afloat, the vessel arrived at Calcutta, and was safely moored there on the 28th of October, 1866. Her cargo was unloaded in safety by the 8th of November. It was necessary to continue the pumping during the discharge of the cargo until she was much lightened. On the 12th she was taken from her moorings to a dry dock for survey and repair, and was there destroyed by an accidental fire on the 5th of December:—Held, that as the vessel remained at her moorings more than twenty-four hours as a ship, though damaged, and not as a mere wreck, she had been moored "twenty-four hours in good safety," and as her destruction did not take place until after thirty days from that time, that the risk had terminated at the time of the loss. Lidgett v. Secretan, 39 L. J., C. P. 196; L. R. 5 C. P. 190; 22 L. T. 272; 18 W. R. 692. S. C., on another point, infra, col. 1141.

The outward risk upon a ship ceases after she has been moored at anchor twenty-four hours in the first port of an island to which she is destined; but an outward policy upon goods continues until they are landed. Barras v. London Assurance Co., 1 Esp. 411.

An insurance on a ship to Jamaica is determined by the ship's mooring twenty-four hours in any port there, and does not continue till she comes to the last port of delivery. Camden v. Cowley, 1 W. Bl. 417.

A ship being insured for a voyage, the underwriter is not liable for any loss arising from seizure, after she has been twenty-four hours in port; though such seizure was in consequence of an act of smuggling committed by the master during the voyage. Lockyer v. Offley, 1 Term Rep. 252; 1 R. R. 194.

When, immediately upon the arrival of a ship at Riga, her papers were taken, and her hatches sealed down by the officers of government, and so kept till her papers were sent to St. Petersburg to be examined; and on such examination immediate orders were issued for the seizure of the ship and cargo, which were afterwards condemned for carrying simulated papers:—Held, that this was not a mooring twenty-four hours in safety after her arrival, within those words in the policy. Horneyer v. Lushington, 15 East, 46; 3 Camp. 85; 13 R. R. 759.

Policy at and from the island of St. Michael's. The ship arrived there in a very disabled state, and after lying at anchor twenty-four hours in great danger from a storm, was blown out to sea and wrecked:—Held, that the policy on the homeward voyage never attached. Parmeter v. Cousins, 2 Camp. 235; 11 R. R. 702.

—— Inability to enter Dock.]—A vessel insured from Sierra Leone to London, and upon which the insurance was to endure until she had been moored in good safety twenty-four hours, arrived in the evening of the 18th February, and the captain, having orders to take her into the King's Dock at Deptford, moored her near the dock gates. On the following morning he was informed at the dock that no order for his admittance had been received; but that, if it had, the vessel could not be then admitted, on account of the quantity of ice in the river. The order was sent by the navy board on the 21st, but on account of the ice the ship could not be moored until the 27th, and then, in warping her towards the docks, a rope broke, she grounded, and was totally lost. The jury found that the vessel remained at her moorings from the 18th to 27th of February, on account of the ice, and not for want of an order to enter the dock:—Held, that upon this finding, the plaintiff was entitled to recover, as the place where the ship was moored not being that of her ultimate destination, the policy did not expire when she had been there in safety twenty-four hours; and as the vessel remained at those moorings on account of the ice, and not waiting for the order, the underwriters were not discharged by the delay. Samuel v. Royal Exchange Assurance Co., 8 B. & C. 119; 6 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 315.

Arrival at Port — Question for Jury.] — Declaration on a policy of insurance on the barque "S." "from Swan river to Mauritius and for thirty days after arrival," averring a total loss; plea that the ship was unnecessarily delayed and abandoned, and deviated from her voyage. It was proved that ships bound for Mauritius loaded, usually go into the harbour of Port Louis. If in ballast or seeking, they usually anchor at the bell-buoy at sea, a few miles from the harbour. The "S." sailed in ballast from the Swan river to Mauritius, and on her arrival there anchored near the bell-buoy for fourteen days, awaiting the arrival of money to pay a bottomry bond, and at end of that period was wrecked:—Held, that it was a question of fact for the jury, whether she had arrived at Mauritius. Lindsay v. Janson, 4 H. & N. 699; 28 L. J., Ex. 315.

Policy ceases on Arrival of Ship in Absence of Provision to contrary.]—In the absence of any period being mentioned in the policy during which the ship is to be at the risk of underwriters after her arrival, the policy determines on the ship being moored at her port of arrival. Anon., Skinner, 243.

Until Moored.]—Policy on a vessel at and from Liverpool to Quebec, during her stay there, and from thence back to her discharging port, in the United Kingdom, and until she has moored at anchor twenty-four hours in good safety. The vessel was chartered to take on board a cargo at Quebec, and proceed therewith to Wallasey Pool, in the river Mersey, or as near thereto as she could safely get, and there discharge her cargo. She arrived from Quebec in the Mersey, on the 4th of September, and was towed up the next morning, and came abreast of Wallasey Pool, where, being unable to enter the pool by reason of her great draught of water, the captain anchored, and reported the vessel at Liverpool. He engaged lumpers to discharge the cargo, at a fixed rate of payment, and discharged the crew. The deck cargo, and also a considerable portion of the other cargo having been discharged, on the 14th of September the vessel fell over and sustained injury. The captain had always intended to take the vessel into Wallasey Pool, with as much of the cargo as she could safely carry:—Held, that the vessel had arrived at her port of discharge, was in the course of discharging her cargo, and had moored twenty-four hours in safety, and that the underwriters were not liable. Whitwell v. Harrison, 2 Ex. 127; 18 L. J., Ex. 465.

—— Printed and Written Conditions Dissimilar.]—By a policy effected by B. & Co. on a ship, they caused themselves "to be insured, lost or not lost, at and from L. to any port or ports, in any order, backwards and forwards, and during thirty days' stay in her last port of discharge." In another part of the policy there was the usual clause, whereby she was insured "until she has moored at anchor twenty-four hours in good safety." The clause as to the thirty days was in writing; that as to the twenty-four hours in print. The ship arrived at her last port of discharge at 7 p.m., on the 25th May, 1863, where she remained until 3.45 a.m. on the 24th June, 1863, when she was driven on shore and wrecked:—Held, that the thirty days had not expired, and that the loss was covered by the policy. Mercantile Marine Insurance Co. v. Titherington, 5 B. & S. 765; 34 L. J., Q. B. 11; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 62; 11 L. T. 340; 13 W. R. 141.

Moving in Harbour.]—Under a policy on a ship for a given time, while securely moored in a certain harbour, she is warranted in changing her moorings within the same harbour. Anon. v. Westmore, 6 Esp. 109.

c. Time Policy.

Time Policy—Chartered Freight.]—The plaintiffs were the owners of a vessel which they chartered on certain terms as regards payment of freight for six months from the 21st of March, 1881, with the option to the charterer of extending the time for a period of three or six months. A clause in the charterparty provided that, in the event of loss of time by collision, whereby the vessel was rendered incapable of proceeding for more than forty-eight hours, payment of hire was to cease until such time as she was again in an efficient state to resume her voyage. On the 4th of April, 1881, the plaintiffs insured against loss of freight with the defendant "at and from and for and during the space of six calendar months from the 15th of April to the 14th of October, 1881," the defendant to pay only loss of hire which might arise under the clause in the charterparty "for accidents occurring between the 15th of April and the 15th of October." On the 27th of June, 1881, the vessel, while on a voyage, struck something soft with her bottom, but was able to proceed on her voyage, and it was not until the 18th of November, when she arrived at Liverpool, that it was discovered that she required considerable repairs, owing to damage admittedly caused by the accident in June. The charterers, who had exercised their option of continuing the charter until the 21st of December, thereupon gave notice to the plaintiffs discontinuing the hire until the vessel was in a fit state to resume employment, which she never was until the end of December:—Held, that as the policy was a time policy, the loss insured against must happen during the period covered by the policy; and that the defendant's liability being confined to loss of chartered freight between the 15th of April and the 15th of October, could not be extended so as to include loss of hire which only occurred after the expiration of that time. Hough v. Head, 55 L. J., Q. B. 43; 53 L. T. 809; 34 W. R. 160; 5 Asp. M. C. 505—C. A.

Loss after Expiration of Policy—Death-wound received before.]—Where a ship received the injury which ultimately caused her loss during the period for which she was insured, and was kept afloat by pumping for some days and until after the expiration of that period, when she sank, it was held that the underwriter was not liable. Meretony v. Dunlope, cited, 1 Term Rep. 260; 1 R. R. 194.

d. On Freight.

When it Attaches.]—The risk on freight does not attach until goods are either actually shipped on board, or until there is an actual contract for shipping them. Flint v. Flemyng, 1 B. & Ad. 45; 8 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 350.

Where there is a valued policy on freight, and the ship is lost while taking in her cargo, the assured can only recover for the freight of the goods actually on board, unless a full cargo is then provided for her, or there is a contract either written or parol to supply one. Patrick v. Eames, 3 Camp. 441.

Printed and Written Clauses in Policy—Refrigerating Machinery.]—A policy of insurance upon freight of a cargo of frozen meat in a ship fitted with refrigerating machinery, provided (in writing), that the assurors should be liable "for any loss occasioned by breaking down of machinery until final sailing of vessel." The voyage was stated to be at and from "Monte Video to any ports in any order backwards and forwards in the river Plate, and thence to any port of the United Kingdom," these words being also in writing. The insurance was to commence "upon the freight and goods or merchandise on board thereof from the loading of the said goods or merchandise on board the said ship or vessel at Monte Video." This last clause was in print, except "Monte Video," which was written. The assured had contracted with the charterers that they would not receive meat on board until the temperature had been reduced to a specified degree by the refrigerating machinery. The charterers had contracted to pay freight on the arrival of the ship at the port of discharge on all meat which had been shipped. It was known to all parties that no meat ever was or could be shipped at Monte Video. The ship having discharged her outward cargo at Monte Video, proceeded to Buenos Ayres, both of them ports in the river Plate. After her refrigerating machinery, which was set at work at Monte Video, had been at work for two weeks, it broke down in such a way as to be useless before the requisite coldness had been attained. No meat was ever received on board, and notice of abandonment was given to the assurors. In an action on the policy by the assured to recover the amount of freight insured:—Held, that the liability under the policy for loss of freight occasioned by the breaking down of machinery attached at Monte Video, and was not only to attach upon the loading of the meat on board; the printed words, "from the loading of the said goods on board the said ship," being capable of being read as applying only to an insurance upon goods, and not to an insurance upon freight, and that being, under the circumstances, the proper construction. Hydarnes Steamship Co. v. Indemnity Mutual Marine Insurance Co., 64 L. J., Q. B. 353; [1895] 1 Q. B. 500; 14 R. 216; 72 L. T. 103; 7 Asp. M. C. 553—C. A.

Engagement of Goods—Loading Port.]—A policy on freight "at and from" Valparaiso does not attach if the ship be lost before arrival at Valparaiso, notwithstanding that a subsequent clause provides that the policy is "to cover freight from the time of the engagement of the goods," and that the goods were engaged before the ship was lost. The Copernicus, 65 L. J., Adm. 108; [1896] P. 237; 74 L. T. 757; 8 Asp. M. C. 166—C. A.

"From the Loading."]—The plaintiffs, shipowners, by a policy of insurance underwritten by the defendants, caused "themselves to be insured, lost or not lost, at and from Libau to Bordeaux, upon freight (valued at interest), of and in the vessel 'Hawthorn,' beginning the adventure upon the said goods or freight from the loading thereof, on board the said ship at Libau, and to continue and endure during the said vessel's abode there, and until the said vessel shall have arrived at Bordeaux, and the said goods shall be safely delivered from the said ship." The plaintiff's said vessel commenced loading at Libau a cargo of oats for Bordeaux, and a portion of the cargo was in lighters alongside, and was about to be transferred to the said vessel, when, by reason of the perils of the sea, the said lighters and portion of cargo were wholly lost, and the plaintiffs were prevented from earning the freight insured:—Held, upon demurrer, that the plaintiffs could not recover. Hopper v. Wear Marine Insurance Co., 46 L. T. 107; 4 Asp. M. C. 482.

A ship was chartered to carry a cargo from Liverpool to Lagos, on the west coast of Africa, there discharge, and reload another cargo for the United Kingdom, in consideration of a lump sum by way of freight, payable half before sailing from Liverpool, half on delivery of the homeward cargo. The shipowner effected an insurance on freight "at and from Lagos," and the policy contained a clause whereby the insurance company agreed that the insurance "shall commence upon freight and goods or merchandise aforesaid from the loading of the goods or merchandise on board the said ship or vessel at as above." The ship was lost before she had shipped any of her homeward cargo:—Held, that this clause precluded the assured from recovering against the underwriters, although the freight was chartered freight. Beckett v. West of England Marine Insurance Co., 25 L. T. 739; 1 Asp. M. C. 185.

Where the owner of a vessel entered into a contract with the East India Company at Madras, through the medium of a correspondence with their agents, for freight and the passage of invalids; and the ship had been surveyed by their officer and represented to be fit for the purpose, after certain alterations had been made, and goods had been shipped, water taken in for the invalids, and the projected alterations commenced, but the completion was prevented by the perils of the sea:—Held, that there was an inception of the risk; and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover for passage-money as well as freight. Truscott v. Christie, 5 Moore, 33; 2 Br. & B. 320.

The assured assigned a policy on chartered freight of the vessel "Napier," on a voyage to Baker's Island, and from Baker's Island to a port of destination in the United Kingdom. They then caused themselves to be reinsured, "lost or not lost, upon freight payable in respect to this present voyage to be performed by the vessel 'Napier' from Baker's Island to a port of discharge in the United Kingdom; the insurance on the freight beginning from the loading of the vessel." The "Napier" arrived at Baker's Island, and was wrecked after taking in about two-thirds of her homeward cargo:—Held, that the assured were not entitled to recover as for a total or partial loss of the freight—by Blackburn, J., on the ground that it was not intended that the risk should commence until the vessel sailed on her voyage from Baker's Island, and that the words "beginning from the loading of the vessel" did not extend the liability of the underwriters, but only added the further statement that they would not be liable for freight until the goods were actually loaded—by Mellor, J., and Lush, J., on the ground that these words did create a liability before the voyage commenced, but that the word "loading" must be taken to mean "complete loading," so that as the cargo was never fully loaded, the policy did not attach, and nothing could be recovered. Jones v. Neptune Marine Insurance Co., 41 L. J., Q. B. 370; L. R. 7 Q. B. 702; 27 L. T. 308; 1 Asp. M. C. 416.

Loss after loading Part.]—Policy upon the freight of the ship "Stranger" at and from London to Jamaica, with liberty to touch at Madeira, and discharge and take goods on board there; the plaintiffs had agreed by charterparty that the ship should take in goods at London, and proceed to Madeira, and there deliver such parts of the goods shipped at London as their agent should direct, and receive on board wine, and proceed to Jamaica, and there deliver; and the freighter agreed to pay 135*l.* in full for freight, during the whole voyage from London to Madeira, and from thence to Jamaica, such freight to be paid in Madeira, on delivery of the goods shipped at London for that place, by Madeira wine at 40*l.* per pipe, to be carried in the said ship to Jamaica free of freight. The ship arrived at Madeira, and delivered all her London cargo, except thirty-three casks of coals, which the captain kept on board to stiffen the ship; having received part of his cargo for Jamaica, but not the wine to be paid for freight, a gale of wind arising, the captain was obliged to cut his cables and run out to sea, where he was captured:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover for a total loss. Atty v. Lindo, 1 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 236; 8 R. R. 788.

Loss Before Loading.]—Policy at and from Sheerness in ballast, to Charente, and back to a port in the British Channel and London, from the date thereof, till the ship should be arrived at Charente, and back at a port in the Channel and London; on freight valued at the sum insured, to be deemed interest on the outward voyage. The ship was freighted for the voyage in question by a charterparty, whereby she was to proceed to Charente in ballast, and there the freighter was to provide her with a full cargo of brandy; on the arrival of the ship at Charente she was put under an embargo, and, after being kept for six months, she was seized and condemned by the French government:—Held, that the freight was protected by the policy while the ship lay at Charente, before any goods were put on board, and that the underwriters were liable for a loss so happening. Mackenzie v. Shedden, 2 Camp. 431; 11 R. R. 759.

Policy on freight valued at 500*l.* on a voyage at and from Demerara, Berbice, and the Windward and Leeward Islands to London: the ship being at Demerara, an agreement was entered into by the master with a house there for a freight from Berbice to London, the cargo to be put on board at Berbice, and the ship to take a cargo of bricks and planks there. While proceeding from Demerara to Berbice, with the bricks and planks on board, she met with an accident, and in consequence never earned her freight:—Held, that it was not a loss within the policy. Sellar v. M'Vicar, 1 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 23; 8 R. R. 744.

"At and from" Ports.]—A vessel when about to proceed on a voyage with cargo from Calcutta to Mauritius was chartered "to proceed with all convenient speed on her present voyage to Mauritius, and, having discharged her cargo there," to "sail and proceed to Akyab, &c., and book, from the charterers, a cargo of rice for a port in the United Kingdom." Subsequently the owner insured the freight to be earned under the charterparty by an insurance "at and from Mauritius to rice ports, and at and thence to a port of discharge in the United Kingdom, on chartered freight, valued at 1,150*l.*" The vessel was afterwards lost at Mauritius, by a peril insured against, before she had discharged the whole of her cargo there:—Held, that the risk on the policy attached upon the arrival of the vessel at Mauritius, and that the assured was therefore entitled to recover. Foley v. United Fire and Marine Insurance Co., 39 L. J., C. P. 206; L. R. 5 C. P. 155; 22 L. T. 108; 18 W. R. 437.—Ex. Ch.

A homeward policy on freight, at and from Algoa Bay, attaches when the ship is at Algoa Bay in a condition to begin to take in her homeward cargo. Williamson v. Innes, 8 Bing. 81; 1 M. & Rob. 88.

Where a ship was chartered on a voyage from London to Dominica, and back to London, at a certain rate of freight upon the outward cargo; and, after delivering her outward cargo at D., the charterers were to provide her a full cargo homewards, at the current freight, from D. to L.:—Held, that an insurance by the owner of the ship on the freight at and from D. to L. attached whilst the ship lay at D. delivering her outward cargo, and before any part of the homeward cargo was shipped, during which time she was captured by an enemy, the contract of affreightment by the charterparty being entire, and the risk on the policy having commenced. Horncastle v. Stuart, 7 East, 400; 8 R. R. 649.

Where a ship was chartered from L. to T., there to take on board a certain number of pipes of wine, and proceed to B., for which the owner was to receive freight at the rate of so much per pipe; a policy on such freight attached from the sailing of the ship from L. Thompson v. Taylor, 6 Term Rep. 478; 3 R. R. 233.

What Voyages.]—The stipulation in a charterparty may be varied by subsequent instructions which may amount to a new contract pro tanto; and an insurance of the freight upon the new voyage, though different from that described in the charterparty, may be good. Hall v. Brown, 2 Dow, 367.

Intermediate Cargoes.]—A policy on freight, at and from the ship's port of loading at J., to her port of discharge, with leave to call at intermediate ports, beginning the adventure on the goods from the loading as aforesaid, with leave to discharge, exchange and take on board goods at any port she may call at, without being deemed a deviation, covers the freight of goods loaded at an intermediate port; and, therefore, where the ship having sailed with a cargo loaded at J., was during the voyage cast on shore at an intermediate port, and lost a part of her cargo, and took on board other goods at that port to complete her cargo, and arrived at her port of discharge, and earned freight:—Held, that the assured, who had abandoned to the underwriter upon intelligence of the loss, and had adjusted with him as for a total loss, was liable to the underwriter for the freight of that part of the cargo loaded at the intermediate port, after deducting the expenses attendant upon procuring the freight. Barclay v. Stirling, 5 M. & S. 6; 17 R. R. 245.

Outward or Return.]—A policy at and from Riga to the United Kingdom, on ship and freight, was declared to be in continuation of two other policies, which were on ship and freight, on a voyage from the United Kingdom to the ship's port of discharge in the Baltic during her stay there, and from thence back to her port of discharge in the United Kingdom; the ship was seized and condemned at Riga before she had discharged her outward cargo:—Held, that the first policy could not be applied to the outward freight. Bell v. Bell, 2 Camp. 475; 11 R. R. 769.

Retardation of Adventure.]—Policy on freight valued, at and from R. and any ports in the Baltic to any ports in the United Kingdom, and the ship was chartered to sail with a cargo from L. to some port in the Baltic, not beyond R. and from thence to R., there to take in a homeward cargo, and sailed from L. and arrived at R., where she was detained five weeks, and prevented from loading by the government, and the freighter never loaded her; and a few days after the detention ceased the frost set in, which detained her till the spring, when she procured a freight from other persons, and returned with it to L., but the expenses of her detention exceeded such freight:—Held, that the policy attached at the time of the detention, but that freight having been afterwards earned, the underwriter was not liable. Everth v. Smith, 2 M. & S. 278; 15 R. R. 246.

Sending Home Portion of Cargo.]—An insurance on the freight of a ship destined for a fishing adventure in the South Sea, is not determined by the arrival of part of the cargo in another ship. Phillips v. Champion, 1 Marsh. 402; 6 Taunt. 3.

1. PERILS OF THE SEA.

a. Injury consequential on.

Negligence of Crew.]—Underwriters are liable for a loss arising immediately out of the perils of the sea, such as the winds and waves, although remotely from the mismanagement and negligence of the master and mariners. Walker v. Maitland, 5 B. & Ald. 171; 24 R. R. 320. S. P., Bishop v. Pentland, 7 B. & C. 214; 1 M. & Ry. 49; 6 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 6; 31 R. R. 177.

—— Throwing away Ballast.]—To a declaration on a time policy for six months, stating a loss by perils of the sea, the defendant pleaded, that, although the vessel was lost by perils of the sea, yet such loss was occasioned by the wrongful, negligent, and improper conduct (the same not being barratrous) of the master and mariners of the ship, by wilfully, wrongfully, negligently and improperly (but not barratrously) throwing overboard so much of the ballast that the vessel became unseaworthy, and was lost by perils of the sea, which otherwise she would have encountered and overcome:—Held, that the plea was bad, and that the underwriter was liable for the consequence of the wilful but not barratrous act of the master and crew, in rendering the vessel unseaworthy before the end of the voyage, by throwing overboard a part of the ballast. Sadler v. Dixon, 8 M. & W. 895; 11 L. J., Ex. 435—Ex. Ch.

To Animals.]—Policy on horses "warranted free from mortality." Special verdict, finding, that on the voyage, in consequence of a storm, the horses broke down the partitions between them, and by kicking, bruised each other so much, that they died: that a particular usage with respect to policies on live stock prevailed at Lloyd's coffee-house in London, and was adopted both by the underwriters subscribing, and the merchants effecting policies there, and that this policy was effected there:—Held, first, that this was a loss by perils of the sea for which assured might recover notwithstanding the warranty; and secondly, that, as it did not appear that the assured knew of the usage prevailing at Lloyd's, or was in the habit of effecting policies there, such usage did not bind him. Gabay v. Lloyd, 5 D. & R. 641: 3 B. & C. 793; 3 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 116; 27 R. R. 486.

Where a policy was effected on mules and other living animals, warranted "free from mortality and jettison"; and in the course of the voyage some of them were killed, in consequence of the agitation of the ship in a storm; and others died before the termination of the voyage insured, in consequence of the injuries they had received:—Held, that this was a loss by a peril of the sea, for which the underwriters were liable. Lawrence v. Aberdein, 5 B. & Ald. 107; 24 R. R. 299.

To Goods.]—A vessel laden with hides and tobacco, in the course of her voyage shipped large quantities of sea water. On the termination of the voyage it was discovered that the sea water had rendered the hides putrid, and that the putrefaction of the hides had imparted an ill flavour to the tobacco, and had thereby injured it:—Held, that the damage thus occasioned to the tobacco was a loss by the perils of the sea. Montoya v. London Assurance Co., 6 Ex. 451; 20 L. J., Ex. 254.

—— Negligent Loading.]—Where a ship, insured against the perils of the sea, was injured by the negligent loading of her cargo by the natives on the coast of Africa, and, in consequence, shortly afterwards became leaky, and, being pronounced unseaworthy, was run ashore, in order to prevent her from sinking and to save the cargo:—Held, that the insurers were liable for a constructive total loss, the immediate cause of the loss being the perils of the sea, although the cause of the unseaworthiness was the negligence in the loading. Redman v. Wilson, 14 M. & W. 476; 14 L. J., Ex. 333; 9 Jur. 714.

A. effected a policy against "perils of the seas and all other perils, losses and misfortunes that have or shall come to the hurt, detriment or damage of the goods," in the ordinary form, upon goods for a voyage by a steamer from K. to Y. While the steamer was loading in the harbour at K. her draught was increased by the weight of the cargo, until the discharge-pipe was brought below the surface of the water, which then flowed down the pipe under the valve and, some cocks or valves in the machinery having been negligently left open, flowed into the hold and injured A.'s goods:—Held, that the injury was caused by one of the perils insured against. Davidson v. Burnand, 38 L. J., C. P. 73; L. R. 4 C. P. 117; 19 L. T. 782; 17 W. R. 121.

Held, also, that the burden of proving that the vessel was unseaworthy was on the defendant. Ib.

—— Through Delay.]—Meat shipped at Hamburg for London was delayed on the voyage by tempestuous weather, and solely by reason of such delay became putrid, and was necessarily thrown overboard at sea:—Held not a loss by perils of the sea, or within the words "all other perils, losses and misfortunes," in the policy. Taylor v. Dunbar, 38 L. J., C. P. 178; L. R. 4 C. P. 206; 17 W. R. 382.

"Perils of the Seas and all other Perils," &c.—Donkey-engine, Injury to.]—A steamer was insured by a time policy in the ordinary form on the ship and her machinery, including the donkey-engine. For the purposes of navigation the donkey-engine was being used in pumping water into the main boilers, when owing to a valve being closed which ought to have been kept open water was forced into and split open the air-chamber of the donkey-pump. The closing of the valve was either accidental or due to the negligence of an engineer and was not due to ordinary wear and tear:—Held, that whether the injury occurred through negligence or accidentally without negligence, it was not covered by the policy, such a loss not falling under the words "perils of the seas," &c., nor under the general words "all other perils, losses, and misfortunes that have or shall come to the hurt, detriment or damage of the subject-matter of insurance." West India and Panama Telegraph Co. v. Home and Colonial Marine Insurance Co. (6 Q. B. D. 51; 50 L. J., Q. B. 41), disapproved. Thames and Mersey Marine Insurance Co. v. Hamilton, 56 L. J., Q. B. 626; 12 App. Cas. 484; 57 L. T. 695; 36 W. R. 337; 6 Asp. M. C. 200—H. L. (E.)

"Improper Navigation of Ship"—Negligence—Damage to Cargo—Insufficiently-closed Port.]—By the articles of a mutual assurance association the members agreed to indemnify each other against losses, damages, and expenses arising from or occasioned by any loss or damage of or to any goods or merchandise caused by improper navigation of the ship carrying the goods," for which any such member might be liable. A cargo of wheat was shipped on board a vessel belonging to the plaintiffs, who were members of the association. During the loading of the cargo an opening or port in the side of the vessel was by the negligence of persons employed by the plaintiffs insufficiently secured, so that during the voyage the water leaked in and damaged the wheat in the lower hold, and the plaintiffs became liable to pay and paid compensation to the owners of the cargo. The leak did not hinder or impede the navigation of the vessel in the course of her voyage:—Held, that this was a damage arising from "improper navigation of the ship," within the articles of association, for which the plaintiffs were entitled to recover. Carmichael v. Liverpool Sailing Ship Owners' Assn., 56 L. J., Q. B. 428; 19 Q. B. D. 242; 57 L. T. 550; 35 W. R. 793; 6 Asp. M. C. 184—C. A.

"Improper Navigation."]—An association of steamship owners agreed by deed to indemnify each other in respect of ships entered by them in the association against "loss or damage which by reason of the improper navigation of any such steamship as aforesaid may be caused to any goods, &c. on board such steamship." The steamship "Severn" was duly entered, and whilst on a voyage from Memel to Hull with a cargo of linseed and flax, having encountered heavy weather and being short of coals, she put back to Fredericksharen to coal and to trim her cargo, which had shifted. Going into the harbour she took the ground, but was got off within an hour. The pumps were put on to see whether she had made any water, and for this purpose the bilge-cock was opened, but through the negligence of the crew this cock was not closed when the attempt to pump ceased. Whilst the "Severn" was moored at Fredericksharen quay orders were given to put on the donkey-engine pumps to fill the boilers, and for this purpose the sea-cock was opened. The sea-cock communicated with the box or tank in which was the bilge-cock, and when the boilers were filled the sea-cock being through a like negligence left open the water entered in large quantities by means of the open bilge-cock into the hold of the vessel and damaged the linseed:—Held, that this was a damaging arising from "improper navigation" within the meaning of the deed. Good v. London Steamship Owners' Mutual Protecting Association, L. R. 6 C. P. 563; 20 W. R. 33.

"Improper Navigation"—"Improper Stowage."]—By the rules of the defendants, a shipowners' mutual insurance association, the plaintiffs were entitled to protection in respect of "damage to goods on board when caused by the improper navigation" of their ship, but were not entitled to claim in respect of "damage caused by improper stowage." A cargo of wheat while in the hold of the plaintiffs' ship was damaged owing to a taint communicated to the wheat though the ceiling and limber boards of the vessel having been saturated with a composition which had leaked from the previous cargo. The ceiling and limber boards had not been properly cleaned before the wheat was stowed:—Held, that the damage was not caused by "improper navigation." Quære, whether it was caused by "improper stowage." Carmichael v. Liverpool Sailing Shipowners' Mutual Indemnity Assn. (supra) distinguished. Canada Shipping Co. v. British Shipowners' Mutual Protection Assn., 58 L. J., Q. B. 462; 23 Q. B. D. 342; 61 L. T. 312; 38 W. R. 87; 6 Asp. M. C. 422—C. A.

Master part Owner—Loss through Master's Negligence.]—When a loss by perils of the sea occurs to an insured ship through the negligent navigation of the assured himself, the underwriters will be liable for such loss unless the assured's negligence was knowing and wilful. Trinder, Anderson & Co. v. North Queensland Insurance Co., 66 L. J., Q. B. 802; 77 L. T. 80. Affirmed, 67 L. J., Q. B. 666—C. A.

Leakage.]—In an action on a policy for a constructive total loss arising from a leak:—Held, that it was for the jury whether the leak arose from the ship being unseaworthy before the voyage, either from any injury arising before the insurance, or from ordinary wear and tear or whether it arose from the perils of the seas, in the course of the voyage insured, and whether the ship was abandoned in the exercise of an honest and reasonable discretion. Jardine v. Leathley, 3 F. & F. 80.

In a case where it is suggested on the one side, that the loss of a quantity of liquid was occasioned by the perils of the sea, and on the other side, that it was leakage, for which the underwriters were not answerable, witnesses cannot be called and asked "Whether, where the cargo has not been shifted, nor the casks damaged, the running out of the liquid is in practice considered as leakage, or as a loss by the perils of the sea." But this question may be put to persons skilled in navigation—"Suppose the casks have not been shifted nor damaged, but the liquid escapes, to what do you attribute it?" Crofts v. Marshall, 7 Car. & P. 597.

Piratical Act of Emigrants.]—To a declaration on a policy on advances for the transport of Chinese emigrants from China to Peru, for their outfit and provisions, to be paid on arrival of the emigrants at the port of destination, the perils insured against being pirates, rovers, thieves, barratry of the master and mariners, and all other perils, losses, and misfortunes, and alleging a total loss by the emigrants piratically and feloniously murdering the captain and part of the crew, and feloniously stealing and carrying away the ship, the defendant pleaded, first, that as soon as the emigrants obtained possession of the vessel, they steered to the nearest land for the purpose of being landed, and refused to and would not proceed upon the voyage, and the vessel was then fit and able to proceed safely on the voyage, and the remainder of the crew would have navigated her there, and was ready and willing to convey the emigrants there if they would have gone, but that they would not, and that by reason of such refusal, and for no other cause whatsoever, the transport was never completed; and, secondly, as to taking and carrying away the vessel, that the emigrants were unwilling to be carried on the voyage, and that they committed the murder and took possession of the vessel for the purpose of being landed, and of escaping from being carried on the voyage, and for no other purpose, which is the piratical carrying away of the vessel:—Held, that the murder of the captain and part of the crew, and the seizure of the vessel by the emigrants, was, if not a piratical act, one ejusdem generis, and therefore within the perils insured against, and that as the loss was complete at that moment, and never reduced, the unwillingness of the emigrants to proceed was not the cause of the loss, but was wholly immaterial, and consequently that the pleas were bad. Palmer v. Naylor, 10 Ex. 382; 2 C. L. R. 1202; 23 L. J., Ex. 323; 18 Jur. 961; 2 W. R. 621—Ex. Ch.

Perils of Sea incurred by Capture.]—A merchant ship was, by mistake, seized at sea and taken in tow by a British man-of-war; she was thereby exposed to bad weather, which injured goods on board her:—Held, that this is a loss by perils of the sea. Semble, it is also a loss by capture and detention. Hagedorn v. Whitmore, 1 Stark. 157.

Rats.]—A loss arising from rats eating holes in the ship's bottom is not within the perils insured against by the common form of policy. Hunter v. Potts. 4 Camp. 203; 16 R. R. 776. And see Laveroni v. Drury, Kay v. Wheeler, Pandorf v. Hamilton, ante, col. 275.

Unseaworthiness—Question for Jury.]—Action on a time policy alleging a loss by perils of the sea. Plea, that the plaintiff knowingly, wilfully, wrongfully, and improperly sent the ship to sea in an unseaworthy state, and wrongfully and improperly caused and permitted her to remain on the high seas, near to the seashore, for a great length of time, in the state and condition aforesaid, during which time the ship, by reason of the premises, was wrecked and lost. At the trial it appeared that the ship, having been loaded, was, by authority of the plaintiff, towed out of Sunderland Harbour, and over the bar, for the purpose of taking advantage of a spring tide. Some of her shrouds, which had been cast off for the purpose of loading her, were not replaced, and her rigging was incomplete. In consequence, the plaintiff, who was on board, ordered her to be brought up in the open roadstead, and lumpers were sent out to complete her equipment. After her equipment was completed, but before she had left the roadstead, a sudden storm came on, and owing to a defect, the cable broke, and she went on shore and was lost:—Held, that the insurers were liable for the loss, unless it was immediately occasioned by the wrongful act or default of the insured. Thompson v. Hopper, 6 El. Bl. & El. 1033; 27 L. J., Q. B. 441; 6 W. R. 857—Ex. Ch. See Dudgeon v. Pembroke, post, col. 1088.

Salvage Expenses.]—Where a steamship leaves port with an insufficient supply of bunker coal for her whole voyage, and lies helpless at sea till towed to her destination by a passing tug, her salvage expenses cannot be recovered from her underwriters as an average loss under a time policy. Ballantyne v. Mackinnon, 65 L. J., Q. B. 616; [1896] 2 Q. B. 455; 75 L. T. 95; 45 W. R. 70; 8 Asp. M. C. 173—C. A.

Injury to Electric Cable.]—Where an attempt to lay an electric cable resulted in failure owing to the imperfect insulation of the copper wire along which the electrical fluid passed, arising from defect in the outer covering by which it was protected from external contact; which defect was occasioned by accident prior to the shipment of the cable, and the commencement of the risk, aggravated by the action of the sea, and arose from the chemical action of the sea water on the interior of the cable, and not from any mischief done by the mechanical action of the sea:—Held, that this was not an injury caused by perils of the sea. Paterson v. Harris, 1 B. & S. 336: 30 L. J., Q. B. 354; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1276; 9 W. R. 743.

Loss by Weather—Time Policy.]—See Kenneth v. Moore, post, col. 1155.

Shaft broken—Voyage abandoned—Charterparty cancelled.]—See Bensaude v. Thames and Mersey Marine Insurance Co., post, col. 1118.

Charterparty thrown up.]—A shipowner, in November, 1871, entered into a charterparty, by which the ship was to proceed with all possible dispatch (dangers and accidents of navigation excepted) from Liverpool to Newport, and there load a cargo of iron rails for San Francisco. He effected an insurance on the chartered freight for the voyage. The ship sailed from Liverpool on the 2nd of January, 1872, and on the 3rd got aground in Carnarvon Bay. She was got off by the 18th of February and repaired, the time necessary for the completion of such repairs extending to the end of August. In the meantime on the 15th of February, the charterers had thrown up the charter and chartered another ship to carry the rails (which were wanted for the construction of a railway) to San Francisco. In an action by the shipowner on the policy of insurance on the chartered freight, the jury found that the time necessary for getting the ship off and repairing her was so long as to put an end, in a commercial sense, to the commercial speculation entered upon by the shipowner and the charterers:—Held, that the charterers were, by reason of the delay, not bound to load the ship, and that there was therefore a loss of the chartered freight by perils of the sea. Jackson v. Union Marine Insurance Co., 44 L. J., C. P. 27; L. R. 10 C. P. 125; 31 L. T. 789; 23 W. R. 169; 2 Asp. M. C. 435—Ex. Ch.

Ship disabled—Contract inoperative—Loss of Profits on Cargo bought.]—Plaintiff in London contracted to buy of D. 6,000 bags of rice to arrive by the ship "E." from Madras before the end of May, and he contracted to sell the same rice to another at an advanced price. He then insured "at and from Madras to London on profit on rice" loaden and not loaden, and on the ship "E.," beginning the adventure upon goods immediately after the loading thereof on board at Madras. The ordinary perils were insured against. When 1,200 bags of rice had been put on board the ship was disabled by perils of the sea; she could not perform the voyage; the 1,200 bags were spoiled; and the plaintiff's contracts were inoperative. The plaintiff sued upon the policy for a total loss of 4,800 bags, the 1,200 having been settled for:—Held, that the interest in profits was insurable; but, that except as to the 1,200 on board, the present policy did not cover it; also, that the rice ashore, assuming it to be covered by the policy, was not lost by peril of the sea. McSwiney v. Royal Exchange Assurance Corporation, 14 Q. B. 634; 18 L. J., Q. B. 193.

Cessation of Hire — Damage occasioned by Perils insured against—Causa proxima.]—By a charterparty it was provided that the vessel should be hired by the charterer at a stipulated sum per month, and that, in the event of loss of time from want of repairs, preventing the working of the vessel for more than twenty-four hours, the payment of hire should cease from the hour when detention began until the ship should be again in an efficient state to resume her service. The shipowners insured the chartered freight against fire. During the continuance of the policy the vessel was damaged by fire to such an extent as necessitated her being repaired. The hire of the vessel "ceased," and a loss of chartered freight thereby accrued to the shipowner:—Held, that there had been a loss of chartered freight by the immediate action of the perils assured against, and that the underwriters were liable to the shipowners therefor. The Alps, 62 L. J., Adm. 59; [1893] P. 109; 1 R. 587; 68 L. T. 624; 41 W. R. 527; 7 Asp. M. C. 337.

Loss of Freight—Proximate Cause—Concealment of Material Fact.]—A charterparty contained a clause for cesser of payment of freight in the event of the ship being delayed in consequence of the breakdown of machinery for more than twenty-four hours. The shipowners insured the freight for three months, the slip containing the words "freight chartered and [or] as if chartered, on board, or not on board, one third diminishing each month." The existence of the cesser clause was not expressly communicated to the underwriter. In consequence of a breakdown of machinery caused by a peril of the sea covered by the policy the ship was delayed, and payment of freight ceased. The owners having brought an action on the policy:—Held, that, as the cesser clause had been put into operation through the immediate action of a peril insured against, such peril was a sufficiently proximate cause of the loss to found an action on the policy. The Alps (supra) followed. The Bedouin, 63 L. J., Adm. 30; [1894] P. 1; 6 R. 693; 69 L. T. 782; 42 W. R. 292; 7 Asp. M. C. 391—C. A.

Held, also, that the underwriter could not rely on the non-disclosure of the existence of the cesser clause as a concealment of a material fact, for the words of the slip shewed that the freight proposed to be insured was freight under a time charter, and consequently gave the underwriter notice that the charter probably contained the cesser clause. Ib.

Option to Charterers to discharge Ship—Condition precedent.]—A ship was chartered for time on monthly hire; the charterers agreeing to pay the freight during employment and efficient performance of the service, and the owner covenanting that the ship should be seaworthy during the continuance of the charter; provided that if at any time it should appear to the charterers that the ship became inefficient it should be lawful for them to put her out of pay, or to make such abatement by way of mulct out of the hire or freight as they should adjudge fit. The owner effected a time policy of insurance "on freight outstanding." During the time the ship became inefficient through perils of the seas, and the charterers refused to pay freight after that date. The owner having brought an action on the policy:—Held, that on the true construction of the charterparty the efficiency of the ship was not a condition precedent to the earning of the freight; that the pecuniary loss was caused by the charterers availing themselves of the abatement clause, and not by the perils of the sea; and that the underwriters were not liable. Inman Steamship Co. v. Bischoff, 52 L. J., Q. B. 169; 7 App. Cas. 670; 47 L. T. 581; 31 W. R. 141; 5 Asp. M. C. 6—H. L. (E.)

The plaintiffs, on the 29th of July, 1875, chartered their ship "G." for a voyage from New York to Odessa. The freight was agreed "during the voyage aforesaid" at 5,500*l.* in cash at Hull, England, on the discharge of the cargo in Odessa, "if the vessel has not arrived at the port of New York on or before the 1st of September, 1875, charterers have option of cancelling this charterparty." The plaintiffs, on the 7th of August, 1875, effected an insurance with the defendant "at and from London to New York, while there, and thence to Odessa viâ Constantinople," on their chartered freight, including, besides the ordinary ones, all risks "incident to steam navigation." The clause in the charterparty giving the option to cancel was not mentioned to the defendant. The ship started from England on the 7th of August, but owing to the failure of her machinery in the British Channel was obliged to put back for repairs, which occupied so much time that she did not reach New York until after the 1st of September, whereupon the charterers cancelled the charter and the freight was lost:—Held, that the interest in the chartered freight had commenced at the time when the charter was cancelled, but that the defendant was not liable, for the freight was not lost by any of the perils insured against, but by the exercise of the option to cancel in the charterparty; and further that the withholding from the defendant information as to the power to cancel vitiated the policy. Mercantile Steamship Co. v. Tyser, 7 Q. B. D. 73; 29 W. R. 790; 5 Asp. M. C. 6, n.

Vessel Hogged.]—A vessel was chartered for a voyage, and the cargo was insured against total loss. In the course of the voyage the vessel went aground, became hogged, and sustained other injuries, and surveyors recommended her to be stripped with despatch, and steps taken to save the cargo, but no attempt was made to do so; and after several days the master fearing bad weather, sold the vessel and cargo for the benefit of all concerned. The vessel remained for some days in the same state, and the weather proving fine, the purchasers saved a large part of the cargo:—Held, that the charterers were not entitled to treat the cargo as having been totally lost. Currie v. Bombay Native Insurance Co., 6 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 302; 39 L. J., P. C. 1; L. R. 3 P. C. 72; 22 L. T. 317; 18 W. R. 296.

A vessel was, in the ordinary course of navigation, moored in harbour, and at each successive low tide took the ground. She became hogged or strained in consequence:—Held, that there was no casus fortuitus, and that therefore the insurers were not liable for the loss as a loss from the perils of the sea. Magnus v. Buttermere, 11 C. B. 876; 21 L. J., C. P. 119; 16 Jur. 480.

Injury to Hull.]—In the absence of any custom, underwriters are liable for injury to a ship's bottom, caused not by the ordinary action of the winds and waves, but by their violent action in a storm. Harrison v. Universal Marine Insurance Co., 3 F. & F. 190.

Where a ship's bottom has, during the voyage insured, been taken by the worm, in consequence of which she is incapable of proceeding on her voyage, and is condemned, that is not a loss by perils of the sea within the meaning of the policy. Rohl v. Parr, 1 Esp. 445; 5 R. R. 741.

Explosion of Boiler.]—Plaintiff's steamer was insured by a time policy against "adventures and perils . . . of the seas . . . fire, and of all other perils, losses and misfortunes that have or shall come to the hurt, detriment or damage of the aforesaid subject-matter of the insurance or any part thereof." The steamer was damaged while at sea by the bursting of the boiler, which took place in consequence of the plates being worn too thin to resist the pressure of the steam. This condition of the plates was due to the negligence of those who had charge of the boiler in omitting to clean and inspect it at proper intervals. In an action against the underwriters:—Held, that the damage caused by the bursting of the boiler was covered by the policy, and plaintiffs were entitled to recover. West India and Panama Telegraph Co. v. Home and Colonial Marine Insurance Co., 50 L. J., Q. B. 41; 6 Q. B. D. 51; 43 L. T. 420; 29 W. R. 92; 4 Asp. M. C. 341—C. A.

Barratry of Master or Crew.]—Semble, that if a declaration of a policy of insurance lay the loss by perils of the seas, the plaintiff may recover upon proof that the ship was wrecked, although this may have been occasioned by the barratry of the master or mariners. Heyman v. Parish, 2 Camp. 148; 11 R. R. 688. And see Small v. United Kingdom Marine and Mutual Insurance Association, post, col. 1136.

Fruit Rotted by Sea Water — Destroyed by Order of Port Authority.]—Policy on fruit from Cadiz to London with usual memorandum. During the voyage the fruit was damaged by sea water, rotted and stank, and on the ship's arrival at a port to which she was driven, by order of the port authority not allowed to be landed. The ship being too much damaged to proceed, was sold, and the cargo necessarily thrown overboard:—Held, that the assured could recover for a total loss. Dyson v. Rowcroft, 3 Bos. & P. 474; 7 R. R. 809.

Ship Stranded—Seizure by Enemy—Loss by Peril of Sea.] — Goods insured in a ship warranted free from capture and seizure. The ship was stranded, disabled and lost. Whilst ashore on the shoal she was seized by the enemy and the goods confiscated by him:—Held, a loss of the goods by peril of the sea. Hahn v. Corbett, 2 Bing. 205; 9 Moore, 390; 3 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 253; 27 R. R. 590.

b. Collision—Running down Clause.

By Gross Negligence.]—A loss occasioned by another ship running down the ship insured through gross negligence, is a loss by perils of the sea. Smith v. Scott, 4 Taunt. 126; 13 R. R. 568.

Accidental.]—Where there is an exception in a charterparty of perils of the sea, a loss from the ship's running foul of another by misfortune is within the exception, and is a loss by perils of the sea. Buller v. Fisher, 3 Esp. 67; Peake's, Add. Cas. 183; 4 R. R. 902.

Collision Clause—Legality.]—Whether insurance against damages that a shipowner may be liable to pay in consequence of his ship running down another be illegal, quære. Anon., 5 Taunt. 292. But see 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 54, 55.

Construction—Collision with Breakwater.]—Where a vessel was insured "against risk of loss or damage through collision with any other ship or vessel, or ice, or sunken or floating wreck, or any other floating substance, or harbours or wharves, or piers or stages, or similar structures," and was lost by being driven by the wind against the sloping bank or "toe" of a breakwater, such loss was caused by "collision," and not by "stranding," and was therefore within the words of and covered by the insurance policy. Union Marine Insurance Co. v. Borwick, 64 L. J., Q. B. 679; [1895] 2 Q. B. 279; 15 R. 546; 73 L. T. 156; 8 Asp. M. C. 71.

—— "Sunken Wreck."]—Part of the frame of a ship sunk beneath the surface of the sea, and partially embedded in the ground, and also a quantity of iron ore that had formed part of the cargo of a ship, are "sunken wreck" within the meaning of the collision clause in a policy of marine reinsurance. The Munroe, [1893] P. 248; 1 R. 642; 70 L. T. 246; 7 Asp. M. C. 407.

—— "Damage received in Collision."]—An injury to a ship may fairly be said to cause its loss if, before that injury is or can with reasonable diligence be repaired, the ship is lost by reason of the existence of that injury; i.e. under circumstances which, but for that injury, would not have affected her safety. Accordingly, if a policy is effected covering such an injury, it will in the supposed circumstances extend to the loss of the ship. Reischer v. Borwick, 63 L. J., Q. B. 753; [1894] 2 Q. B. 548; 9 R. 558; 71 L. T. 238; 7 Asp. M. C. 493—C. A.

—— "Damage Consequent on Collision"—Repairs—Damage to Cargo by Delay and Handling.]—Goods were insured by a marine policy against (among other things) damage consequent on collision. The ship in which they were shipped came into collision with another ship, and was thereby damaged so as to render it necessary for for her to go into a port for repairs. For the purpose of such repairs it was necessary to discharge a portion of the goods insured. When the repairs were completed such goods were re-shipped, and the ship proceeded to her destination. On arrival it was found that the goods, being of a perishable nature, had been damaged by the handling necessary for their discharge and re-shipment and by the delay. In an action by the insured upon the policy to recover the amount of the damage to the goods:—Held, that the collision was not the proximate cause of the loss, and therefore the plaintiffs could not recover. Pink v. Fleming, 59 L. J., Q. B. 559; 25 Q. B. D. 396; 63 L. T. 413; 6 Asp. M. C. 554—C. A.

Costs and Damages Payable to other Ship.]—A policy of 4,000*l.* for twelve months on the ship "Rouen" and her freight contained the following clause: "And we, the assurers, do covenant and agree that in case the vessel shall, by accident or negligence of the master or crew, run down or damage any other ship or vessel, and the assured shall thereby become liable to pay, and shall pay as damages any sum or sums not exceeding the value of the vessel and her freight, by or in pursuance of any judgment of any court of law or equity given in any suit or action defended with our previous consent in writing, or by or in pursuance of any award made upon reference entered into by the assured, with our previous consent in writing, we, the assurers, shall and will bear and pay such proportions of three-fourth parts of the sum so paid as aforesaid, as the sum of 4,000*l.* hereby assured bears to the value of the vessel and her freight." The ship having run down another ship, whereby some of her crew were drowned, and the owners of the "Rouen" having been condemned by the Court of admiralty to pay damages to the personal representatives of the deceased for the loss of those lives:—Held, that the clause did not apply. Taylor v. Dewar, 5 B. & S. 58; 33 L. J., Q. B. 141; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 361; 10 L. T. 267; 12 W. R. 579.

A Lloyds' policy on the owner's vessel was expressed to be made "subject to the running-down clause, as per slip attached." By that clause the assurers agreed that if the assured became liable to pay and paid as damages for running down any other ship any sum not exceeding the value of the vessel insured, they would repay to the owner a certain proportion of such sum. The vessel insured having run down another, and the owner assured having successfully defended an action brought against him in respect of the injury:—Held, that he was not entitled to recover any portion of the costs of the defence, either under the suing and labouring clause or the running down clause. Xenos v. Fox, 38 L. J., C. P. 351; L. R. 4 C. P. 665; 17 W. R. 893—Ex. Ch.

Both Ships to Blame.]—Where there is a collision between two vessels, by which one of them is more damaged than the other, and, both being to blame, they have to share the damage equally, there is not a cross liability on the part of each vessel to pay half of the damage sustained by the other, but one liability only, viz. the liability of the vessel less damaged to pay to the vessel more damaged one half of the amount by which the damage to the one exceeds the damage to the other. Therefore the owner of the more damaged vessel in such a case is not entitled to recover upon an insurance effected by him against liability for damage to another vessel by collision with his vessel. London Steamship Owners Insurance Co. v. Grampian Steamship Co. 59 L. J., Q. B. 549; 24 Q. B. D. 663; 62 L. T. 784; 38 W. R. 651; 6 Asp. M. C. 506—C. A.

Damages for Loss of Life.]—The collision clause held to include damages payable by the assured in respect of life lost in the collision. The Excelsior Co. v. Smith, 2 L. T. 90 (Scotch).

Collision clause in Lloyds' policy held to cover damages recovered against the owners of the ship insured by relatives of persons on board the other ship killed in the collision. Coey v. Smith, 22 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 955.

Tug and Tow—Indemnity to Tow-Owner.]—Contract by tug-owner to insure against damage done to or by other ships by or to tug or tow. See The Lord of the Isles, ante, col. 681.

Exemption of Underwriters from Liability for the Removal of Sunken Ship.]—A collision clause in a policy of insurance upon ship stipulated that "if the ship insured shall come into collision with any other ship, and the insured shall, in consequence thereof, become liable to pay, and shall pay, by way of damages . . . any sum not exceeding the value of the ship insured," the underwriters "will severally pay the assured such proportion of three-fourths of such sum so paid as" each underwriter's subscription "bears to the value of the ship insured; . . . provided that this clause shall in no case extend to any sum which the assured may become liable to pay for removal of obstructions, under statutory powers, . . . consequent on such collision":—Held, that the underwriters were exempted from liability for any sum which the assured was liable to pay, whether by way of damages or otherwise, for the removal of obstructions consequent on collision, and that the exemption of the underwriters was not restricted to any sum which the assured was liable to pay otherwise than by way of damages for the removal of obstructions consequent on collision. Taylor v. Dewar (supra), discussed. The North Britain, Roberts v. Ocean Marine Insurance Co., 63 L. J., Adm. 33; [1894] P. 77;

6 R. 673; 70 L. T. 210; 42 W. R. 243; 7 Asp. M. C. 413—C. A.

Vessels in Tow—Collision with Tug.]—By a policy of marine insurance the underwriters insured the ship "Niobe" from the Clyde (in tow) to Cardiff $\frac{\text{and}}{\text{or}}$ Penarth while there and thence to Singapore, and while in port for thirty days after arrival; and agreed "if the ship hereby insured shall come into collision with any other ship or vessel, and the insured shall in consequence thereof become liable to pay, and shall pay, to the persons interested in such other ship or vessel, any sum or sums of money," &c. to pay the assured a certain proportion of the sum so paid. While the "Niobe" was being towed to Cardiff, her tug came in collision with and sank another vessel, whose owners recovered damages both from the "Niobe" and the tug. In an action by the owners of the "Niobe" upon the policy against one of the underwriters for payment of his proportion of the sum paid by such owners on account of the collision, the underwriter pleaded that under the policy he was only liable for damage arising from collision with the "Niobe":—Held (Lord Bramwell dis.), that the collision of the tug with the damaged vessel must be taken to have been a collision of the "Niobe" with another vessel within the meaning of the policy, and that the underwriters were liable. McCowan v. Baine, [1891] App. Cas. 401; 65 L. T. 502; 7 Asp. M. C. 89—H. L. (Sc.)

c. Whilst under Repair.

On Beach.]—If a ship hove down on a beach within the tideway, to repair, is thereby bilged and damaged, it is not a loss occasioned by the perils of the sea. Thompson v. Whitmore, 3 Taunt. 227; 12 R. R. 642. Cf. Rowcroft v. Dunsmore, cited, 3 Taunt. 228; 12 R. R. 643.

In Harbour.]—A transport in government service was insured for twelve months, during which she was ordered into a dry harbour, the bed of which was hard and uneven, and, on the tide having left her, she received damage by taking the ground:—Held, that this was a loss by a peril of the sea. Fletcher v. Inglis, 2 B. & Ald. 315; 20 R. R. 448.

On a policy on a ship, for twelve months, at sea and in port the declaration averred a loss as follows:—That the ship having arrived at the harbour of St. John in the province of New Brunswick, and discharged her cargo there, it became necessary to place her, and she was accordingly placed, in a graving dock, there to be repaired, and near to a certain wharf in the graving dock; and that, whilst there, she was by the violence of the wind and weather, blown over on her side, whereby she struck the ground with great violence, and was bilged and greatly damaged:—Held, that this was a loss within the words "all other perils, losses and misfortunes that have or shall come to the hurt, detriment or damage of the ship," for which the underwriters were liable. Phillips v. Barber, 5 B. & Ald. 161; 24 R. R. 317.

In moving a ship from one part of a harbour to another, it became necessary to send two of the crew on shore to make fast a new line and cast off the rope by which the ship was made fast; those two men being immediately impressed and carried away, and not being allowed by the press-gang to cast off the rope, the ship in consequence went ashore and was lost:—Held, a loss by perils of the sea within the policy. Hodgson v. Malcolm, 2 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 336; 9 R. R. 656.

A time policy against fire was effected on a steamship. The policy described it as then "lying in the Victoria Docks," but gave it "liberty to go into dry dock, and light the boiler fires once or twice during the currency of this policy." The only dry dock into which the ship could go was Lungley's Dock, at some distance up the river. To go there it was necessary to remove the paddle wheels; they were removed in the Victoria Docks, and the ship was then towed up to Lungley's Dock. The necessary repairs there having been completed, the ship was brought out and moored in the river, preparatory to replacing the paddle-wheels. This operation could have been perfectly performed in the Victoria Docks, but it was found that in such case it was customary, as the more economical course, to replace the paddle-wheels while the ship lay in the river. Before the wheels had been replaced the ship was burnt:—Held, that the policy covered the ship while in the Victoria Docks, and while passing from them to the dry dock, and while directly returning from the dry dock to the Victoria Docks, but did not cover the vessel while moored in the river for a collateral purpose. Pearson v. Commercial Union Assurance Co., 45 L. J., C. P. 761; 1 App. Cas. 498; 35 L. T. 455; 24 W. R. 951; 3 Asp. M. C. 275—H. L. (E.)

d. Ship Missing.

Presumption.]—There is no fixed rule of law with regard to the time after which a missing ship will be reputed to be lost. It is in all cases a question of presumption, to be governed by the circumstances of the particular case. Houstman v. Thornton, Holt, 242; 17 R. R. 632. And see Marshall v. Parker, 2 Camp. 70; 11 R. R. 665.

Where a loss by the perils of the sea is to be inferred from the ship not being heard of after her sailing, the assured must prove that, when she left the port of outfit, she was bound upon the voyage insured. Cohen v. Hinckley, 2 Camp. 51; 1 Taunt. 249; 11 R. R. 660. S. P., Koster v. Innes, Ry. & M. 333; 27 R. R. 755.

In the absence of any express stipulation in the policy, a vessel which is not heard of for a reasonable time is presumed to have perished by a peril of the sea. What is such a reasonable time as to give rise to this presumption depends not upon any fixed rule of law, but upon the circumstances of any particular case. Green v. Brown, 2 Str. 1199.

Where, in an action on a policy of goods by a certain ship, it was proved that she sailed on the voyage insured with the goods on board, and never arrived at her port of destination; and that, a few days after her departure, a report was heard at the place whence she sailed, that the ship had foundered at sea, but that the crew were saved:—Held, that this was a sufficient primâ facie evidence of a loss by perils of the sea; and that the assured was not bound to call any of the crew, or to shew that he was unable to procure their attendance. Koster v. Reed, 6 B. & C. 19; 9 D. & R. 2; 30 R. R. 239.

In an action on a policy from an English to a foreign port, to found a presumption that a ship was lost on the voyage, it is not enough to prove that she was not heard of in this country after she sailed, without calling witnesses from her port of destination, to shew that she never arrived there. Twemlow v. Oswin, 2 Camp. 85; 11 R. R. 670.

Rights of Underwriters.]—If a ship, for which the underwriters (when a demand is made upon the policy) have paid as for a lost ship, should chance to turn up, she is to be considered as abandoned, and will belong to the underwriters. Houstman v. Thornton, Holt, 242; 17 R. R. 632.

e. Other Cases.

Plunder.]—Where a vessel is wrecked, part of the goods is lost, and part is got on shore, but (whilst on shore) is destroyed and plundered by the inhabitants of the coast, so that no portion of them comes again into the possession of the assured:—Held, that is a loss by the perils of the sea, and no abandonment was necessary. Bondrett v. Hentigg, Holt, 149; 17 R. R. 625.

Accidental Shot.]—A ship and goods were sunk at sea by another ship firing upon her, in consequence of mistaking her for an enemy:—Held, a loss within the general words of the policy, "all other perils, losses," &c. Cullen v. Butler, 5 M. & S. 461; 4 Camp. 289; 17 R. R. 400.

Death of Slaves—Failure of Provisions.]—A policy on slaves against perils of the sea does not cover a loss by deaths caused by failure of provisions in consequence of delay caused by bad weather. Tatham v. Hodgson, 6 Term Rep. 656.

Goods sold to Pay for Repairs — Causa proxima.]—The assurer is not liable for loss on goods sold by the master to defray expense of repairs made necessary by bad weather to which the ship and goods had been exposed; the bad weather not being the proximate cause of the loss. Sarquy v. Hobson, 4 Bing. 131; 3 D. & R. 192; 2 B. & C. 7; 12 Moore, 174; 26 R. R. 251; 1 Y. & J. 347; 1 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 222; 30 R. R. 794—Ex. Ch.

f. Evidence of Loss.

Absence of Evidence how Loss arose.]—A ship, whose cargo was insured by a policy, began suddenly to leak, and sank at her anchors in port during fine weather. In an action on the policy evidence was given on the part of the assured tending to shew that the ship was seaworthy, viz. that she had not long before been put in good repair; that surveys had been made of her just previously, and that she had behaved well on previous voyages, and on her voyage to the port where she was lost. No evidence was given of any actual facts shewing the cause of her loss, although possible explanations of it, by way of conjecture, were suggested by the witnesses:—Held, that there was evidence of a loss by the perils insured against. Anderson v. Morice, 46 L. J., Q. B. 11; 1 App. Cas. 713; 35 L. T. 506; 25 W. R. 14; 3 Asp. M. C. 290—H. L. (E.)

A time policy was effected on an iron steamer, the "Frances," of 705 tons burden, then lying in the yard of its owner, a shipwright. It had been put under repair, and it was stated that there had not been any stint placed upon the repairs, and that the marine engineer who superintended the repairs, and the workmen who executed them, believed them to be completely satisfactory. It was expressly found that if the ship was unseaworthy the assured was ignorant of the fact. The ship went with nothing but a deck cargo of iron machinery from London to Gothenburg, made more water on the voyage than could have been expected from the state of the weather, ceased to do so on getting into harbour, was examined, and its condition on the voyage could not be accounted for; and in a few days afterwards took on board a cargo of oats and 380 tons of iron, and a deck loading of timber, started from Gothenburg, encountered in the open sea very bad weather, which put out the fires, ran for the port of Hull, could not make the port, ran ashore, and after some time was broken up and became a total wreck:—Held, that these facts shewed a loss by perils insured against, the perils of the sea, and that the assured was entitled to recover as for a total loss. Dudgeon v. Pembroke, 46 L. J., Ex. 409; 2 App. Cas. 284; 36 L. T. 382; 25 W. R. 499; 3 Asp. M. C. 393—H. L. (E.)

—— Constructive Total Loss—Sale by Master—Necessity.]—A vessel struck upon a rock outside a harbour, and it was necessary to lighten her in order to get her off at the next high tide, and for that purpose her master entered into a contract with one G., who was the only person at the place who had a sufficient number of men to render effectual assistance, to find the labour required for that purpose. G. supplied only a small number of men, who worked very languidly in discharging the cargo for two or three hours, and at the end of that time G. persuaded the master to cancel this contract, and to call a survey of the vessel and sell her. G. and some men he brought accordingly made a survey and by it found the mainmast raised one inch, the main combings parted, the deck plank opening, and the vessel unseaworthy, and advised that the ship and cargo should be sold for the benefit of all concerned. The master then sold her to G. for a very small sum of money. When the vessel struck on the rock there was a strong breeze blowing, but it afterwards got calmer, and at the time of the sale the weather was good, and the vessel lying on her bilge, with no more danger than she had been in from the time she struck, but there was evidence that if the wind veered round to the south or west the sea would have heaved in, and the vessel would have broken up in a short time. As a fact, directly after the sale G. brought a number of hands to discharge the cargo, and so got the vessel off and floated her at the next high tide, and he afterwards repaired and made her seaworthy at a trifling expense. In an action against the underwriter on a policy of insurance on the vessel for constructive total loss, the judge ruled on the above facts appearing at the end of the plaintiff's case, that there was no evidence upon which the jury could reasonably find the urgent necessity for the sale of the vessel at the time she was sold, and he accordingly withdrew the case from the jury, and directed the verdict to be entered for the defendant:—Held, by Lord Coleridge, C. J., that such ruling was right. Hall v. Jupe, 49 L. J., C. P. 721; 43 L. T. 411; 4 Asp. M. C. 328.

Held, by Grove, J., that it was wrong, and that the case should not have been withdrawn from the jury. Ib.

Captain's Protest.]—The plaintiff's agent shewed to the defendant, an underwriter, the captain's protest, containing an account of the loss of the ship insured, demanding payment:—Held, that this did not entitle the defendant to read the protest in evidence in an action on the policy. Senat v. Porter, 7 Term Rep. 158; 4 R. R. 403.

As to Presumption arising when Ship Missing.]—See ante, col. 1086.

What is sufficient Evidence.]—On the 7th August, 1866, the agents of the owners of a ship, lying at Bombay, chartered her at Liverpool for a voyage from Howland's Island to a port in the United Kingdom for a cargo of guano, freight to be paid at port of discharge, the ship to be at Howland's Island on or before the 1st June, 1867, or the charterer to have the option of declaring the charter void. On the 7th September, 1866, an agent, on behalf of the owners of the vessel, effected an insurance with an underwriter at and from Bombay to Howland's Island while there, and thence to any port, &c., in the United Kingdom on freight chartered, or otherwise, valued at 3,600*l.* in the ship. It was lawful for the ship to sail to and touch and stay at any ports whatsoever without prejudice to the insurance, which was against the usual perils. On the 4th September she sailed in ballast under the charter from Bombay for Howland's Island. She got out of her course, and on the 25th December ran ashore on the coast of New Zealand. The owners declined to furnish the funds necessary for repairing her, and the captain was unable to borrow money on a bottomry bond except on condition that he would charter the ship to the lender for a cargo of timber from New Zealand to England. Ultimately she was abandoned to the holder of the bottomry bond; the repairs were completed, and a cargo of timber brought to England for the holder of the bottomry bond:—Held, that it was a question for the jury whether there was a total loss by the perils of the sea. But there was abundant evidence in the affirmative. Barber v. Fleming, 10 B. & S. 879; 39 L. J., Q. B. 25; L. R. 5 Q. B. 59; 18 W. R. 254.

Ship sinking from Unascertained Cause.]—Voyage policy on ship from M. to C., whilst at C., and thence to A. The ship arrived and loaded coals at Cardiff, sailed, anchored in Cardiff roads the same day, and during the night, in fine weather, filled and went down, probably from one of the coal ports having been left open. The jury having found that she was unseaworthy when she sailed, and that she was not lost from perils of the sea (which were explained by the judge to mean violent action of the elements from without):—Held, that the judge's direction was right, and a new trial refused. Merchants' Trading Co. v. Universal Marine Co., cited in Dudgeon v. Pembroke, L. R. 9 Q. B. 581, 596; 2 Asp. M. C. 431, n.

Presumption of Unseaworthiness—Ship sinking.]—If a ship becomes leaky and unable to proceed soon after the commencement of the risk, without any visible cause, the presumption is that she was not seaworthy when she sailed. Munro v. Vandam, 1 Park. Ins. (8th ed.) 469.

2. Restraint and Detention.

Land Transit.]—In a policy of insurance on goods the voyage was thus described: "At and from Japan and [or] Shanghai to Marseilles and [or] Leghorn and [or] London, viâ Marseilles and [or] Southampton, including all risks of craft to and from the steamers." The risks insured against were of the seas, fire, and thieves, arrests, restraints, and detainments of all kings, princes, and people. In the margin of the policy was the following memorandum:—It is hereby agreed that the silks insured by this policy shall be shipped by Peninsular and Oriental Company Messageries Impériales steamers, and [or] the steamers of the Mercantile Trading Company of Liverpool only." The goods insured were shipped from Shanghai for London by the Messageries Impériales; the practice of that company was to send such goods overland through France by the Lyons Railway, from Marseilles to Paris, and thence by the Northern Railway to Boulogne, and thence to London; and this course of business was well known among underwriters. The goods arrived in Paris on their way on the 13th of September, 1870. At this time the German armies were advancing on Paris, and had seized parts of the Northern Railway, so that the goods could not be forwarded to Boulogne, and by the 19th of September they completely surrounded and besieged Paris, preventing communication between it and all other places, by reason of which it was impossible to remove the goods from Paris. This state of things continued till after the 7th of October, on which day the assured gave notice of abandonment:—Held, that the policy covered the overland transit from Marseilles to Boulogne, and that there was a constructive total loss by restraint or detainment of princes within the meaning of the policy. Rodoconachi v. Elliott, 43 L. J., C. P. 255; L. R. 9 C. P. 518; 31 L. T. 239; 2 Asp. M. C. 399—Ex. Ch.

Total or Partial Loss.]—A cargo on board a ship bound from Liverpool to Matamoras was insured against the usual perils, including "takings at sea, arrests, restraints, and detainments of all kings, princes, and people." The ship sailed, and had nearly reached her destination, when she was captured by a United States cruiser and taken into New Orleans, where a suit was instituted in the prize court for her condemnation. The insurers contested the suit, electing to treat the loss as a partial one. They obtained the judgment of the court, whereupon the captors appealed. The insured gave a formal notice of abandonment, which the insurers refused to accept. Upon the application of the captors, the ship and cargo were ordered to be sold, unless bail were given by the insured. Upon receiving intelligence that this order had been made, they applied to the insurers for assistance in giving bail to prevent the sale. The insurers refused, and in the end the ship and cargo were sold by the order of the prize court. The insured brought an action to recover from the insurers as for a total loss:—Held, that they were entitled to recover the whole amount, inasmuch as the decree of the prize court, and the sale of the goods under it, was a deprivation of the ownership of the goods, and amounted to a total loss. Stringer v. English and Scottish Marine Insurance Co., 10 B. & S. 770; 39 L. J., Q. B. 214; L. R. 5 Q. B. 599; 22 L. T. 802; 18 W. R. 1201; —Ex. Ch.

Nature of Seizure.]—The clause in a policy on a ship and goods which insures against losses occasioned by "arrests, restraints and detainments of all kings, princes and people, of what nation, condition, or quality soever," applies to a seizure of the ship in consequence of an embargo laid on her by the sovereign of the country of the assured, for the purpose of carrying on a war with another power. Aubert v. Gray, 3 B. & S. 163, 169; 32 L. J., Q. B. 50; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 714; 7 L. T. 469; 11 W. R. 27—Ex. Ch.

There is a distinction in this respect between an embargo, in a time when there is peace between the countries of the insurer and the assured, laid on for a purpose wholly unconnected with hostility either existing or expected, and an embargo connected with such hostility. Ib.

A policy on a ship and stores, "at and from a port" in a foreign country, in the common form against arrests of princes, people, &c., extends to an embargo laid on by the government of that country in the loading port. Rotch v. Edie, 6 Term Rep. 413; 3 R. R. 222.

And if the embargo continues, the assured may abandon and recover as for a total loss. Ib.

If an armed force boards a ship and takes part of the cargo, the underwriters are not liable on a count stating the loss to be by a seizure by people to the plaintiffs unknown; for people, in the policy, means the governing power of the country. Nesbitt v. Lushington, 4 Term Rep. 783; 2 R. R. 519.

In an action on a policy of insurance upon a ship, in which the subject-matter was warranted "free from capture and seizure, and the consequences of any attempt thereat," it was proved that during the continuance of the risk some natives took forcible possession of the ship in the Brass River, plundered the cargo, and damaged her, so that she became a constructive total loss, and that their intention in so taking possession was only to plunder the cargo, and not to keep the ship:—Held, that the acts of the natives constituted a "seizure" within the meaning of the warranty, and therefore, that the underwriters were not liable. Johnston v. Hogg, 52 L. J., Q. B. 343; 10 Q. B. D. 432; 48 L. T. 435; 31 W. R. 768; 5 Asp. M. C. 51.

—— Permission to Leave.]—A policy was effected on a ship from London to her lading port in Virginia and back. On her arrival at that port in January, 1808, an embargo was laid on all shipping in American ports by an act of Congress, which contained a proviso that all foreign ships, either in ballast or with goods on board, might depart when notified of that act. The captain covenanted by charterparty to take in a cargo of timber at that port, and return therewith to London. It was proved that the embargo was taken off in March, 1809, and that the ship did not sail until the August following, and that she was lost on her way home:—Held, that the captain was justified in remaining in port, and that he was not bound to return with the cargo or sail in ballast; and that, consequently, the underwriters on the ship were liable at the time of the loss. Schroeder v. Thompson, 1 Moore, 163; 7 Taunt. 462; 18 R. R. 540.

Delay through Mistake.]—If, by some mistake of a ship's manifest, a suit is commenced in a foreign port against the captain for a supposed surreptitious landing of a part of his cargo, by which he is delayed in prosecuting his voyage, there being no suit against the ship, this is not a loss for which the underwriters on the ship are liable. Bradford v. Levy, 2 Car. & P. 137; Ry. & M. 331; 31 R. R. 657.

Restoration.]—Goods detained by a foreign power being afterwards restored, as between the assurer and assured, the yielding up quasi in integro is to be considered as a restoration, notwithstanding some spoliation during the detention. Jordaine v. Cornwall, 1 Stark. 6.

Evidence.]—The plaintiff declared on a policy from Jutland to Leith, and averred a loss by seizure. The captain stated that the ship was pursuing her course for Leith when she was captured by a Swedish frigate, five German miles off the coast of Norway; the defendant produced a Swedish sentence of condemnation for breaking the blockade of Norway:—Held, first, that this was conclusive evidence that the blockade had been violated; but secondly, that it was not sufficient evidence to fix the captain with barratry. Everth v. Hannam, 2 Marsh. 72; 6 Taunt. 375.

To support an averment in a declaration on a policy on goods, "that the ship, with the goods on board, when at A., was arrested by the persons exercising the powers of government there, and the goods were then and there, by the said persons seized, detained and confiscated," it is enough to shew that the goods were forcibly taken from on board the ship by the officers of government, and never delivered to the consignees, without putting in any sentence of condemnation. Carruthers v. Gray, 3 Camp. 142; 15 East, 35.

Detention by British Government.]—Where the assured is a British subject, he may recover against a British underwriter for a loss by detention of the British government. Page v. Thompson, 1 Park. Ins. (8th ed.) 175.

Sentence of Foreign Admiralty—Ship released on Appeal—Detention.]—If a ship warranted neutral be condemned as prize by a French admiralty court, and the sentence is afterwards reversed by a court of appeal, but on the appeal no damages or costs are given, because the muster-roll does not give the place of nationality of the crew according to the ordinance of France, and it is proved that the ship was otherwise properly documented as neutral, the assured may recover on the policy for the detention, notwithstanding the refusal of the court of appeal, to give damages and costs. Siffken v. Lee, 2 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 484; 9 R. R. 676. And see post, XI. ABANDONMENT, 5, EMBARGO AND CONFISCATION.

3. STRANDING.

a. Operation of Memorandum.

Stranding not cause of Loss.]—If an insurance is effected on fruit, and the policy contains the usual memorandum "corn, fruit, &c., warranted free from average, unless general, or the ship be stranded," and the ship is in fact stranded in the course of the voyage, the underwriters are liable for an average loss arising from the perils of the seas, though no part of the loss arises from the act of stranding. Burnett v. Kensington, 7 Term Rep. 210; 1 Esp. 416; Peake's Add. Cas. 71; 4 R. R. 424.

Effect of Stranding.]—The ship having been stranded the assured recovered an average loss of 80 per cent. being the whole loss. The words, "if the ship be stranded," are a condition upon the happening of which the assured is let in to prove his entire loss. Cantillon v. London Assurance Co., cited, 3 Burr. 1553.

Fraudulent Stranding.]—Insurance on fish with the usual memorandum. The ship having been fraudulently run ashore by her crew:—Held, that the underwriters were not liable. Browning v. Elmslie, cited, 7 Term Rep. 216; 4 Term Rep. 783.

Per Lord Kenyon, C.J.: If the stranding was not fraudulent the underwriters were liable for all damage to the fish whether caused by stranding or not. Ib.

b. What is.

Definition.]—Stranding is where a ship, by an accident and out of the ordinary course of her voyage, gets upon the strand, and receives injury in consequence. Bishop v. Pentland, 7 B. & C. 219; 1 M. & Ry. 49; 6 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 6; 31 R. R. 177.

Act of Mob.]—Where, after a seizure, the vessel stranded, and part of the cargo (consisting of corn) was taken by the mob at their own price, the loss could not be recovered as for general average; but, for such part as in consequence of the stranding was damaged and thrown overboard, the insured might recover on a count stating the loss to be by stranding. Nesbitt v. Lushington, 4 Term Rep. 783; 2 R. R. 519.

Confiscation.]—Where a vessel was stranded and afterwards confiscated for breach of an embargo:—Held, that as the vessel was warranted free from confiscation, the insured could not recover. Livie v. Jansen, 10 East, 648; 11 R. R. 513.

Time of.]—Hides were shipped on board a vessel at Valparaiso for Bordeaux. The ship sailed from Valparaiso on the 13th May, and on the 7th July put into Rio de Janeiro, in consequence of damage by stress of weather. It being found that the hides were so much damaged that it would be impossible to carry them in specie to the termination of the voyage, they being in such a state that they must either have been annihilated by putrefaction, or thrown overboard, they were sold at Rio de Janeiro for one-fourth of their value. On the 23rd July, the ship set sail from Rio on her voyage to Bordeaux, and was stranded on the 29th of September at the entrance of the Garonne. In an action on the policy, containing a memorandum declaring "cocoa and hides free of particular average unless the ship was stranded":—Held, that this was not a stranding of the ship within the meaning of the memorandum. Roux v. Salvador, 1 Bing (N.C.) 526; 1 Scott, 491; 4 L. J., C. P. 156; overruled, but not on this point, 4 Scott, 1; 3 Bing. (N.C.) 266; 2 Hodges, 209; 7 L. J., Ex. 328—Ex. Ch.

Salvage.]—A cargo of salt, of the value with prepaid freight of about 1,900*l.*, was insured from Liverpool to Calcutta, the policy containing the memorandum warranting "corn, fish, salt, &c., free from average unless general or the ship be stranded." Having encountered bad weather, lost both her anchors, and had her masts cut away, the ship was taken in tow by salvors and placed on a bank out of the ordinary course of the voyage, where she lay on her port side for several tides, and sustained considerable further injury. The salt was landed in a damaged state, and the ship repaired, though at an expense which exceeded her value when repaired. About one-fifth of the salt might have been made saleable, but would have realised no profit. Suits were instituted by the salvors in the admiralty court, and the salt sold under a decree, the entire proceeds being absorbed by the costs:—Held, that there was a partial loss of the salt, but not a total loss, the seizure and sale under the decree of the admiralty court not being a natural or necessary consequence of a peril insured against; and that there was a stranding within the meaning of the memorandum. De Mattos v. Saunders, L. R. 7 C. P. 570; 27 L. T. 120; 20 W. R. 801; 1 Asp. M. C. 377.

Negligence of Crew.]—Underwriters are liable for a stranding occasioned remotely by the negligence of the crew. Bishop v. Pentland, supra.

A vessel, moored in the usual way in a tidal harbour, was obliged also to be lashed to the side by a rope, which broke, and the vessel fell over on her side:—Held, to be a stranding, and that the underwriters were answerable, though it was remotely caused by the negligence of the crew. Ib.

Where no Pilot.]—A ship insured at and from London to Sierra Leone, arrived off the river Sierra Leone, where there was a regular establishment of pilots, about three o'clock in the evening. The captain hoisted a signal for a pilot, but no pilot came on board; about ten o'clock at night he attempted to enter the river without one, and in so doing the ship took the ground and was lost. The judge left it to the jury whether the captain, in entering without a pilot, did what a prudent man ought to have done under the circumstances. The jury was of that opinion, and found for the plaintiff. On motion for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was against evidence:—Held, that the underwriters were liable, and would have been so although the captain had been wrong in attempting to enter the port without a pilot, he being a person of competent skill, having used reasonable diligence to obtain a pilot, and having exercised his discretion bonâ fide under the circumstances. Phillips v. Headlam, 2 B. & Ad. 380; 9 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 238.

Order of Pilot—Mooring.]—A ship being under conduct of a pilot in her course up the river to Liverpool, was, against the advice of the master, fastened at the pier of the dock basin by a rope to the shore, and left there, and she took the ground, and when the tide left her fell over on her side and bilged; in consequence of which, when the tide rose, she filled with water, and the goods were wetted and damaged:—Held, that this was a stranding to entitle the assured to recover for an average loss upon the goods. Carruthers v. Sydebotham, 4 M. & S. 77; 16 R. R. 392.

Canal.]—During the course of a voyage on an inland canal, it became necessary, in order to repair the canal, to draw off the water, and the ship, in consequence, having been placed in the most secure situation that could be found, when the water was drawn off, took the ground by accident on some piles which were not previously known to be there:—Held, that this was a stranding, the accident not having happened in the ordinary course of the voyage. Rayner v. Godmond, 5 B. & Ald. 225; 24 R. R. 335.

Harbour—Condition of.]—A policy of marine insurance on cargo contained the usual warranty against average unless the ship were stranded. The place of discharge was in a tidal harbour, where vessels of the size of the ship in question can only get to the quay to unload during high spring tides. A ship arriving in the port is brought towards the quay as soon as in the pilot's judgment there will be water enough to float her there, and, if in the course of getting her to the quay the depth of water proves insufficient, she takes the ground to wait until the next tide admits of her being floated further. The ship in question was in the course of being brought to the quay, but it was found that she could not get within twenty feet of it, and consequently she was left where she was to await a higher tide. As the tide receded and she settled down. instead of resting on an even keel she pitched by the head into a hole, and remained in such a position as to cause her timbers to be strained, by reason whereof she made water and damage resulted to the cargo. It afterwards appeared that there was an elevation in the bottom of the harbour, a small bank having been formed parallel with the quay, and a hole beside it into which the vessel had pitched. This state of things had been caused by the paddles of steamers leaving the harbour at low tide, and its existence had not been found out previously to the accident:—Held, that the taking of the ground by the vessel was under circumstances of such an accidental and unforeseen character as not to be in the ordinary course of navigation and to amount to a "stranding." Letchford v. Oldham, 49 L. J., Q. B. 458; 5 Q. B. D. 538; 28 W. R. 789—C. A.

Upon the ebbing of the tide, a vessel took the ground in a tidal harbour, in the place where it was intended that she should; but in so doing, struck against some hard substance, by which two holes were made in her bottom, and the cargo damaged:—Held, not a stranding for which the underwriters were liable upon an insurance upon corn warranted free from average, unless general, or the ship to be stranded. Kingsford v. Marshal, 8 Bing. 458; 1 M. & Scott, 657; 1 L. J., C. P. 135.

A ship having on board goods which were insured on a voyage from London to Hull, but "warranted free from average, unless general, or the ship should be stranded," arrived in Hull harbour, which is a tidal harbour, and proceeded to discharge her cargo at a quay inside of it; this could be done at high water only, and could not be completed in one tide. At the first low tide the vessel grounded on the mud; on a subsequent ebb, the rope by which her head was moored to the opposite side of the harbour, stretched, and the wind blowing from the east at the same time, she did not ground on the mud, which it was intended she should do, but her forepart got on a bank of stones, rubbish and sand, near to the quay, and the vessel having strained, some damage was sustained by the cargo, but no lasting injury by the vessel:—Held, by Lord Tenterden, C.J., Littledale and Taunton, JJ., Parke, J., dissentiente, that this was a stranding within the meaning of that word in the policy. Wells v. Hopwood, 3 B. & Ad. 20.

Policy on goods, with a warranty against average, unless general, or the ship be stranded. On the voyage the ship was driven by stress of weather into a harbour at the mouth of which she struck upon an anchor, and was in danger of sinking; to prevent which she was warped higher up in the harbour, where she took the ground, and remained fast half an hour:—Held, that the ship was stranded. Barrow v. Bell, 4 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 47; 7 D. & R. 244; 4 B. & C. 736; 28 R. R. 468.

—— Driven into, by Stress of Weather.]—If a ship takes the ground at the ordinary time, in the ordinary place, in the ordinary manner, and from the ordinary causes, that is, so in all respects as it must have been contemplated she would in the course of an ordinary voyage, such a taking the ground is not a stranding; but if she takes the ground at an unusual time, or in an unusual place, or in an unusual manner, or from accidental and unusual though natural causes, she is to be considered as stranded. Corcoran v. Gurney, 1 El. & Bl. 456; 22 L. J., Q. B. 113; 17 Jur. 1152; 1 W. R. 129.

Where a ship was driven by stress of weather into a tidal harbour, where by reason of its being low water, she took the ground:—Held, that she was stranded. Ib.

—— Moored in.]—A vessel with a cargo on board took the ground on two successive days in going up Cork harbour, under the direction of a pilot, and being afterwards moored in the usual course, was thrown on her broadside by the receding of the tide, and received a considerable injury:—Held, that this was not a stranding. Hearne v. Edmunds, 1 Br. & B. 388; 4 Moore, 15; 21 R. R. 660.

Damage resulting from a ship's taking the ground on the falling of the tide, in a tidal harbour, in a spot where she is properly placed for the purpose of unloading, is not a stranding within the ordinary term of a policy. Magnus v. Buttermer, 11 C. B. 876; 21 L. J., C. P. 119; 16 Jur. 480.

On Rock.]—A vessel strikes upon a rock and remains fixed there for the space of fifteen or twenty minutes, in consequence of which she sustains a material injury. This constitutes a stranding. Baker v. Towry, 1 Stark. 436; 18 R. R. 803.

But the striking of a ship on a rock, where she remained a minute and a half, and was laid on her beam ends, was held not to constitute a stranding. M'Dougle v. Royal Exchange Assurance Co., 4 M. & S. 503; 4 Camp. 283; 16 R. R. 532.

Where there is a warranty in a policy against average, "unless general, or the ship be stranded"; if, during the voyage, the ship is forced ashore by the wind, or driven on a bank, and remains fast for any time, this is a sufficient stranding to do away with the effect of the warranty, although the ship is not proved to have thereby received any material damage. Harman v. Vaux, 3 Camp. 429; 14 R. R. 773.

A ship which had struck upon a sunken rock, and received damage, was run on shore by direction of the pilot, when she was repaired, and afterwards proceeded to her ports of delivery:—Held, not to be a stranding. Burnett v. Kensington, 7 Term Rep. 20; 1 Esp. 416; Peake's Add. Cas. 71; 4 R. R. 424.

Improper Mooring.]—Where a ship, being under the conduct of a pilot, in her course up the river to Liverpool, was, against the advice of the master, fastened at the pier of the dock basin, by a rope to the shore, and left there, and she took to the ground, and when the tide left her, fell over on her side and bilged, in consequence of which, when the tide rose she filled with water, and the goods were wetted and damaged :—Held, that this was a stranding, to entitle the assured to recover for an average loss upon the goods. Carruthers v. Sydebotham, 4 M. & S. 77 ; 16 R. R. 392.

The assured is not prevented from recovering against the underwriter because the ship was in charge of a compulsory pilot. Ib.

Grounding on Piles.]—A ship grounding on piles in the Wisbeach river, put there to keep up the banks and sitting on them until they were cut away :—Held, to be stranded within the meaning of the memorandum. Dobson v. Bolton, 1 Park. Ins. (8th ed.) 239.

4. Barratry.

a. What is.

Position of Owner.]—Barratry can only be committed against the owner of the ship, and without his consent. Nutt v. Bourdieu, 1 Term Rep. 323 ; 1 R. R. 211.

In an action by an assured against the underwriters for a loss by the barratry of the master, proof that the person who was described in the policy as master, and who was treated with and acted as such, carried the ship out of her course for fraudulent purposes of his own, primâ facie is sufficient to entitle the assured to recover, without shewing negatively that he was not the owner, or that any other person was. Ross v. Hunter, 4 Term Rep. 33 ; 2 R. R. 319.

Barratry is any fraudulent or criminal conduct against the owners of ships or goods by the master or mariners in breach of the trust reposed in them, and to the injury of the owners ; although it may not be done with intent to injure them, or to benefit, at their expense, the master or mariners. Vallejo v. Wheeler, Cowp. 143 ; Lofft, 631.

Deviation.]—A deviation of a vessel from the voyage insured, through the ignorance of the captain, or from any other motive not fraudulent, though it avoids the policy, does not constitute an act of barratry. Phyn v. Royal Exchange Assurance Co., 7 Term Rep. 505 ; 4 R. R. 508. But see Browning v. Elmslie, supra, col. 1093.

Scuttling Ship.]—Scuttling a ship with the knowledge of the shipowner, but without the knowledge of the freighter, is barratry, in respect of which the freighter may recover against the underwriters. Ionides v. Pender, 27 L. T. 244.

Kidnapping.]—The Kidnapping Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 19), having prohibited the carrying of Polynesian native labourers in ships without a licence, under penalty of forfeiture of the ship, a master who, without the authority of his owners, but with a knowledge of the prohibition, ships and carries native labourers, and so brings about the seizure and condemnation of his ship, commits an act of barratry in respect of which his owners may recover against their underwriters. Australian Insurance Co. v. Jackson, 33 L. T. 286 ; 3 Asp. M. C. 26—P. C.

Absence of Master.]—Where the captain, in the due course of his voyage, put into port for the purpose of repairing damage ; and whilst the repairs were proceeding was absent, and continued so for a much longer time than was necessary to finish such repairs ; and during his absence procured forged papers, and afterwards returned to the vessel ; and, instead of proceeding on the voyage, carried her to a foreign port ; and the jury found that an act of barratry was committed during the absence of the captain, and whilst the vessel was being repaired :—Held, that they were warranted in so doing. Roscow v. Corson, 8 Taunt. 684 ; 21 . R. 507.

Where the voyage insured was from Jamaica to New Orleans, which lies up the river Mississippi, and the captain proceeded on his voyage as far as the mouth of that river, and then dropped anchor, and went up the river in his boat for a fraudulent purpose of his own :—Held, that the dropping of his anchor with such fraudulent intention was an act of barratry, and not merely a deviation. Ross v. Hunter, 4 Term Rep. 33 ; 2 R. R. 319.

Collusive Capture—Barratry of Master.]—See Arcangelo v. Thompson, 2 Camp. 620 ; 12 R. R. 758 ; infra, col. 1107.

Cruising.]—If the captain, contrary to the instructions of his owner, cruises for and takes a prize, and the vessel is afterwards lost in consequence of it, it is an act of barratry, upon which the insured may recover against the underwriters ; although the captain libelled the prize as well for the benefit of his owner as for himself. Moss v. Byrom, 6 Term Rep. 379 ; 3 R. R. 208.

Trading with Enemy.]—A master had general instructions to make the best purchases with despatch :—Held, that it did not warrant him in going into an enemy's settlement to trade (which was permitted by the enemy), though his cargo could be more speedily and cheaply completed there ; but such act, in consequence of which the ship was seized and confiscated, is barratrous. Earle v. Rowcroft, 8 East, 126 ; 9 R. R. 385.

Negligence.]—A party shipped goods on board a vessel, the "Black Prince," under a bill of lading, which contained the exceptions of barratry and perils of the sea. The "Black Prince," with the goods on board, was lost in a collision with another vessel, the "Araxes." In an action on the bill of lading for the loss of the goods, there was evidence at the trial that the collision arose from the "Black Prince" starboarding instead of porting her helm, and a collision occasioned by non-observance of such rules is, by the Merchant Shipping Act of 1854, s. 299, to be deemed to have been occasioned by the wilful default of the person in charge of the offending ship :—Held, that the contravention of the rules of the Merchant Shipping Act by those in charge of the "Black Prince," in starboarding instead of porting the helm, did not amount to barratry within the exception in the bill of lading. Grill v. General Iron Screw Collier Co., 37 L. J., C. P. 205 ; L. R. 3 C. P. 476 ; 18 L. T. 485 ; 16 W. R. 796—Ex. Ch.

Must be a Wrongful Act.]—In order to constitute barratry the master must be proved to have acted against his better judgment. Mere want of judgment in seamanship or treatment of the vessel is not barratry. Todd v. Ritchie, 1 Stark. 240 ; 18 R. R. 768.

—— Not mere Error of Judgment.]—Where the master acts only for the benefit of his owners it is not barratry, though it may be a deviation or a breach of contract. Stamma v. Brown, 2 Str. 1173. And see S. C., cited 8 East, 136. See 9 R. R. 389.

Smuggling.]—In a time policy of marine insurance on ship the ordinary perils insured against (including "barratry of the master") were enumerated, and the ship was warranted "free from capture and seizure, and the consequences of any attempt thereat." In consequence of the barratrous act of the master in smuggling, the ship was seized by Spanish revenue officers, and proceedings were taken to procure her condemnation and confiscation. In an action on the policy to recover expenses incurred by the owner in obtaining her release:—Held, that the loss must be imputed to "capture and seizure," and not to the barratry of the master, and that the underwriter was not liable. Cory v. Burr, 52 L. J., Q. B. 657; 8 App. Cas. 393; 49 L. T. 78; 31 W. R. 894; 5 Asp. M. C. 109—H. L. (E.)

Where the ship was insured whilst engaged "in any lawful trade," and barratry of the master was a risk to be borne by the insurer; the underwriter was held liable for the loss by the master smuggling; the "lawful trade" mentioned being the trade of the owners and not of the master. Havelock v. Hancill, 3 Term Rep. 277; 1 R. R. 703.

Illegal Trade—Chartered Ship.]—If a chartered ship is lost through the captain engaging in illegal trade under the orders of the charterer, this is not a loss by barratry for which the shipowner can recover against underwriters. Hobbs v. Hannam, 3 Camp. 93.

Loss by Peril of Sea caused by Barratry of Master.]—See Heyman v. Parish, 2 Camp. 148; 11 R. R. 688, ante, col. 1082.

b. Who can Commit.

Master—Collusion with Owner.]—The owner of a vessel, fully laden by the freighters, colluded with the captain to run her on shore:—Held, that this amounted to barratry, although by the terms of a charterparty entered into between such owner and the freighters the former was entitled to put goods on board during a previous part of the voyage. Soares v. Thornton, 1 Moore, 373; 18 R. R. 615.

The master of a vessel, condemned for a breach of blockade, swore he was bound for another destination:—Held, that this did not so disaffirm his owner's privity and consent to the breach of blockade, so as to enable the assured to recover as for a loss by barratry. Everth v. Hannam, 6 Taunt. 375; 2 Marsh. 72.

—— Part Owner.]—Barratry may be committed by a master of a ship who is part owner. Jones v. Nicholson, 2 C. L. R. 1236; 10 Ex. 28; 23 L. J., Ex. 330.

The master, being part owner, fraudulently sold the ship and cargo and applied the proceeds to his own use:—Held, that this was a loss insured against by the words "barratry of the master," and, per Martin, B., also by the words "all other perils, losses and misfortunes." Ib.

By master, a part owner, who had mortgaged his share to his co-owner. See Small v. United Kingdom Marine Mutual Insurance Association, post, col. 1136.

—— With Privity of Freighter.]—See Bontflower v. Wilmer, infra, col. 1101.

c. Effect and Proof of.

Warranty free from Capture and Seizure.]—In a time policy of marine insurance on ship the ordinary perils insured against (including "barratry of the master") were enumerated, and the ship was warranted "free from capture and seizure, and the consequences of any attempts thereat." In consequence of the barratrous act of the master in smuggling, the ship was seized by Spanish revenue officers, and proceedings were taken to procure her condemnation and confiscation. In an action on the policy to recover expenses incurred by the owner in obtaining her release:—Held, that the loss must be imputed to "capture and seizure," and not to the barratry of the master, and that the underwriter was not liable. Cory v. Burr, 52 L. J., Q. B. 657; 8 App. Cas. 393; 49 L. T. 78; 31 W. R. 894; 5 Asp. M. C. 109—H. L. (E.)

Loss, whether caused by.]—If, through the negligence of the owner of a ship insured, the mariners barratrously carry smuggled goods on board, whereby the ship is seized as forfeited, the underwriters are not liable for the loss. Pipon v. Cope, 1 Camp. 434; 10 R. R. 720.

If a ship is insured by the terms of the policy in any lawful trade, and the barratry of the master is mentioned as one of the risks to be borne by the insurer, the underwriters will be liable for a loss which happens by the barratry of the master by smuggling. Havelock v. Hancill, 3 Term Rep. 277; 1 R. R. 703.

A loss by barratry is well alleged, though the proof is that it happened by the act of an enemy and by barratry conjointly. Toulmin v. Anderson, 1 Taunt. 227.

Where a ship and a cargo were carried barratrously by the master out of the course of the voyage, and the ship and a part of the cargo were sold, and the remainder sent home by a strange ship:—Held, that this was a total loss of the cargo from the time of committing the act of barratry; and that the underwriters were liable for such loss, with the benefit of salvage only. Dixon v. Reid, 1 D. & R. 207; 5 B. & Ald. 597; 24 R. R. 481.

The insurer of a ship is not liable for the expenses incurred by the delay of the vessel, for the purpose of recovering her cargo, when detained under process of a foreign country, if the ship itself is not detained by the process. And the circumstances causing the detainer must be positively shewn to have originated in the fraud of the master, in order to support an averment of loss by his barratry. Bradford v. Levy, Ry. & M. 331; 2 Car. & P. 137; 31 R. R. 657.

A vessel, with liberty to chase and capture prizes, had some Spanish prisoners on board; by means which did not appear they broke loose, rose upon and imprisoned the crew, with the exception of one sailor, who was heard upon the deck in conversation with them. The captain and crew, with the exception of the sailor, were put on shore, and the Spaniards ran away with the ship. Upon a loss alleged to be by barratry of the mariners, this was evidence to be left to the jury that such barratry was committed. Hucks v. Thornton, Holt, 30; 17 R. R. 594.

A sentence condemning as enemy's property a cargo which the master had barratrously carried into an enemy's blockaded port, although it may be conclusive evidence that the cargo was enemy's property at the time of capture and condemnation, does not disprove the allegation that the cargo was lost by the captain's barratrously carrying the cargo to places unknown, whereby the goods became liable to be, and were confiscated. Goldschmidt v. Whitmore, 3 Taunt. 508. See Exerth v. Hannam, ante, col. 1099.

Barratry with Privity of Freighter.]—Insurance by shipowner; barratry committed with privity of freighter; the underwriter is not discharged unless he can shew that the shipowner was privy to the barratry. Bontflower v. Wilmer, cited 2 Selw. N. P. (11th ed.), 969.

5. JETTISON.

To Save Capture.]—Where the captain of a ship, in order to prevent a quantity of dollars from falling into the hands of an enemy, by whom he was about to be attacked, threw them into the sea, and was immediately afterwards captured:—Held, first, that this was a loss by jettison, that term in a policy meaning any throwing overboard of the cargo for a justifiable cause; secondly, if not that it was a loss by enemies; and, thirdly, if it was not a loss by jettison, that it was ejusdem generis in the strictest sense, and came within the meaning of the words in the policy, "all other losses and misfortunes." Butler v. Wildman, 3 B. & Ald. 398; 22 R. R. 435.

Negligence—Ballast.]—To a declaration on a time policy for six months, stating a loss by perils of the sea, the defendant pleaded that though the vessel was lost by perils of the sea, yet, that such loss was occasioned wholly by the wrongful, negligent and improper conduct (the same not being barratrous) of the master and mariners of the ship, by wilfully, wrongfully, negligently and improperly, but not barratrously, throwing overboard so much of the ballast, that the vessel became unseaworthy, and was lost by perils of the sea, which, otherwise, she would have encountered and overcome:—Held, that the plea was bad, and that the underwriter was liable for the consequence of the wilful, but not barratrous act of the master and crew in rendering the vessel unseaworthy before the end of the voyage, by throwing overboard a part of the ballast. Dixon v. Sadler, 5 M. & W. 405; 9 L. J., Ex. 48. Affirmed, nom. Sadler v. Dixon, 8 M. & W. 895; 11 L. J., Ex. 435—Ex. Ch.

Deck Cargo Loose.]—A ship on a voyage from Quebec to London, laden with timber, was overtaken in a gale, and in order to enable the pumps to work—the working of them was impeded by the deck cargo getting adrift—the master threw such cargo overboard:—Held, that such jettison was made to avert a danger common to all the interests concerned, ship, freight and cargo; and that the timber so jettisoned, not being at the time wreck within the received meaning of that word, and the sacrifice of it being voluntary, the loss accruing on the same must be held to be general average, and that all interests must contribute to make it good. Johnson v. Chapman, 19 C. B. (N.S.) 563; 35 L. J., C. P. 23; 15 L. T. 70; 14 W. R. 264.

Goods stowed on Deck.]—Loss of, does not give occasion for general average contribution. Ross v. Thwaite, 1 Park. Ins. (8th ed.) 23; Backhouse v. Ripley, Ib. p. 24. See also X. LOSSES, post, col. 1246.

6. FIRE.

General Average Losses.]—See Cases sub tit. X. LOSSES, infra, col. 1240.

How Occasioned.]—In an action on a policy on ship, by which the underwriters insured against fire and barratry of the master and mariners, they are liable for a loss by fire occasioned by the negligence of the master and mariners. Busk v. Royal Exchange Assurance Co., 2 B. & Ald. 73; 20 R. R. 350. And see Bishop v. Pentland, 7 B. & C. 214; 1 M. & Ry. 49; 6 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 6; 31 R. R. 177.

If a captain of a ship insured burns her, to prevent her falling into the hands of the enemy, this is a loss by fire within the meaning of the policy. Gordon v. Rimmington, 1 Camp. 123.

If a fire arises on board a ship from the damaged quality of goods on board, which are insured, the underwriters are not liable; but if the loss is not occasioned by the damaged state of the goods on board, the policy is not vitiated by the fact not having been disclosed to the underwriters that the goods were damaged, though they might have a tendency to increase the risk. Boyd v. Dubois, 3 Camp. 133. And see Bufe v. Turner, 2 Marsh. 46; 6 Taunt. 338; 16 R. R. 626.

In Warehouse.]—At Canton, an East India ship stayed to clean and refit, for which purpose all the sails and furniture were taken out of the ship and put into a warehouse, built for them on a sand-bank in the river there, where they were accidentally burnt; this is a loss within the words and meaning of a policy of the ship, on its body, tackle, apparel and other furniture, against perils of the sea and fire (expressly), to any ports and places beyond the Cape of Good Hope, and back again to London. Pelly v. Royal Exchange Assurance Co., 1 Burr. 341.

Communication of other Policy when necessary.]—The plaintiffs effected a policy of insurance with the defendant as chairman of a fire insurance company for 3,000*l.*, "on wool in bales or fleeces greasy and washed, in all or any shed or store, on station or in transit to Sydney by land only, or in any shed or store, or any wharf in Sydney, until placed on ship." The policy contained a provision as follows: "No claim shall be recoverable if the property insured be previously or subsequently insured elsewhere, unless the particulars of such insurance be notified to the company in writing." The plaintiffs subsequently effected an insurance with a marine insurance company to cover 16,500*l.* upon wool, the risk being described as "at and from the river Hunter to Sydney per ships and steamers, and thence per ship or ships to London, including the risk of craft from the time that the wools are first waterborne and of transhipment or landing and reshipment at Sydney." The frequent practice at the port of Sydney is that wool arriving there for shipment is not delivered direct to the ship for which it is intended, but is conveyed to the stores belonging to the persons who are acting as the stevedores of the ship, and is there pressed for the purpose of reducing its bulk. By the practice and cause of business, the stevedores' receipt is regarded, as between the ship and the shippers, as equivalent to the mate's receipt, and bills of lading are given in exchange for it. Certain wool belonging to the plaintiffs was forwarded by several consignments by several steamers from the river Hunter to Sydney. The plaintiffs' agent at Sydney had the wool conveyed on its arrival to his own stores, for the purpose of being weighed, and entered into a contract for its conveyance to London on board a ship. The wool was then conveyed from his warehouses to the stores of the stevedores of the ship, who gave the usual receipts for the same. While in the stevedores' warehouses, a portion of the wool was destroyed or damaged by a fire, and the plaintiffs sought to recover such loss upon the policy effected with the defendant's company. The company resisted the claim, upon the ground that the policy of marine insurance above mentioned came within the terms of the provision in the fire policy, and ought to have been communicated to them:—Held, that the marine policy did not cover the wool in the stevedores' warehouses, and was not such an insurance as the plaintiffs were bound under the provisions in the fire policy to notify to the defendant's company, and that the plaintiffs were therefore entitled to recover. Australian Agricultural Co. v. Saunders, 44 L. J., C. P. 391; L. R. 10 C. P. 668; 33 L. T. 447; 3 Asp. M. C. 63—Ex. Ch.

Steamship.]—A general policy covers the risk of fire at sea in a steamboat, as in any other vessel. Pattison v. Mills, 1 Dow & Clark, 342; 2 Bligh (N.S.) 519; 31 R. R. 49.

A fire insurance company, in making out a policy on a steamship, referring to conditions indorsed, so far as applicable, used one of their printed forms of conditions applicable to houses, the language being, "if more than twenty pounds of gunpowder be on the premises at the time of the loss, such loss will not be made good":—Held, that the word premises equally applied to a ship, the word being in legal language often used to denote the subject or thing previously expressed. Beacon Life Assurance Co. v. Gibb, 1 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 73; 1 N. R. 110; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 185; 7 L. T. 574; 11 W. R. 194.

Held, also, that parol evidence was not admissible to prove that the word premises was not intended to include the steamer. Ib.

Held, also, that one of the conditions having specified a limited quantity of gunpowder to be carried on board, it was quite immaterial whether the fire was or was not occasioned by more than the specified quantity of gunpowder being on board. Ib.

In Dock.]—A ship was insured for three months against fire, and was described in the policy "as lying in the Victoria Docks, with liberty to go into a dry dock, and light her boiler fires once or twice during the currency of the policy":—Held, that the ship was covered while she was in the river passing from the Victoria Docks to a dry dock, and vice versâ, but not while she was in the river for any other purpose. Pearson v. Commercial Union Assurance Co., 45 L. J., C. P. 761; 1 App. Cas. 498; 35 L. T. 445; 24 W. R. 951; 3 Asp. M. C. 275—H. L. (E.)

A policy against loss by fire described a steamboat as "now lying in Tait's Dock, Montreal, and intended to navigate the St. Lawrence and lakes from Hamilton to Quebec principally as a freight-boat, and to be laid up in winter in a place approved by the insurers, who will not be liable for explosion either by steam or gunpowder." The steamboat never left Tait's Dock, and was burnt there:—Held, that the words in the policy implied no agreement to navigate the steamboat as described in the policy, and that consequently the insurers were liable, though the steamboat never left the dock. Grant v. Ætna Insurance Co., 15 Moore, P. C. 516; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 705; 6 L. T. 735; 10 W. R. 772.

Ship Stranded—Subsequent Loss by Fire—Time Policy.]—The ss. "Bawnmore" was insured under a time policy valued at 22,000*l.* against loss or damage by fire or explosion only. She was driven ashore by perils of the sea, and whilst stranded totally destroyed by fire. The underwriters denied their liability, on the ground that, at the time the fire occurred, the ship was already a constructive total loss:—Held, upon a preliminary point of law, argued on the assumption that the ship was still capable of being floated and repaired, though at an expense which would exceed her value when repaired, that the assured were entitled to judgment, and that the valuation in the policy was binding upon the underwriters. Woodside v. Globe Marine Insurance Co., 65 L. J., Q. B. 117; [1896] 1 Q. B. 105; 73 L. T. 626; 44 W. R. 187; 8 Asp. M. C. 118.

7. Capture and Seizure.

a. What amounts to.

Stress of Weather.]—If a ship is driven by stress of weather on an enemy's coast, and there captured, it is a loss by capture and not by the perils of the sea. Green v. Elmslie, Peake, 278; 3 R. R. 693.

Recapture.]—When a ship was insured for a voyage or a cruise of three months, and taken by the enemy within that time, but before she was carried infra praesidia hostis, was retaken by an Englishman, and was at the time of action a living ship:—Held, to be a total loss to the insured. Pond v. King, 1 Wils. 191. See Dean v. Hornby, 3 El. & Bl. 180; 2 C. L. R. 1519; 23 L. J., Q. B. 129; 18 Jur. 623; 2 W. R. 156, infra.

Arrival at Port—Embargo.]—If a policy is on a ship bound to a foreign port until she is twenty-four hours moored in safety there, and previously to such ship's arrival at her destined port, an embargo is laid on all English vessels in that port, and she on entering is also detained, and her crew made prisoners of war, the assured is entitled to recover. Minett v. Anderson, Peake, 211; 3 R. R. 692.

Release.]—Money having been expended in reclaiming a cargo on board a ship captured, insured by the owners, upon the event of the ship's arrival at Marseilles; the ship being captured, and restored upon appeal, relinquished her voyage, and was afterwards lost; pending the appeal, the goods were ordered to be sold, and the expenses of the appeal were afterwards defrayed therewith; yet an averment of a loss by capture is bad, because the ship might, notwithstanding the capture, have afterwards arrived at Marseilles. Kulen Kemp v. Vigne, 1 Term Rep. 304; 1 R. R. 205.

If a ship is justly seized as forfeited for smuggling, and afterwards restored, the underwriters are not liable for any damage happening to the ship by the perils of the sea in the interval between the seizure and the restoration. Pipon v. Cope, 1 Camp. 434; 10 R. R. 720.

A policy was effected on a Prussian ship against such risks only as were excluded by the clause, "warranted free from capture, seizure and detention, or the consequences of any attempt thereof," with a stipulation that the insurers should pay a total loss thirty days after the receipt of official news of capture or embargo, without waiting for condemnation. The ship was detained by an embargo in a Danish port, after the breaking out of hostilities between that power and Germany:—Held, that the right of the assured to claim for a total loss became vested on the expiration of the thirty days, notwithstanding that the vessel had never been actually taken out of the possession of the captain, and was afterwards (and after action) restored, and arrived safely in London. Fowler v. English and Scottish Marine Insurance Co., 18 C. B. (N.S.) 919; 34 L. J., C. P. 253; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 411; 12 L. T. 381; 13 W. R. 658.

Held, also, that the entry of the fact of the embargo in Lloyds' Loss Book, however the intelligence might have been received, was sufficient to satisfy the term "official news" in the policy. Ib.

Hostilities—Perils of Sea.]—A policy was effected on 6,500 bags of coffee, warranted "free from capture, seizure and detention, and all the consequences thereof, and free from all consequences of hostilities, riots and commotion." The coffee was shipped on board a vessel bound for New York. At the time of ship sailing a war had broken out between the Northern and Southern States of America; and, as an act of hostility, a light, which had usually indicated the position of Cape Hatteras, was extinguished. The war, and the extinction of the light, were unknown to the captain, and from ignorance of the latter, he fell out of his reckoning, and ran ashore. Certain persons on the coast had recovered 120 bags of the coffee, when they were interrupted by soldiers, who appropriated the 120 bags, and prevented others being saved. The captain and crew were taken prisoners. But for this interference, 1,000 more bags might have been saved before the breaking up of the ship:—Held, that the loss of the ship was by perils of the sea, and not "by the consequences of hostilities," within the meaning of the policy; that as the 1,120 bags were lost by reason of the interference of the soldiers, that loss was covered by the exception, and the insurers were not liable; but that for the remainder the insurers were liable, as for a loss by the perils of the sea. Ionides v. Universal Marine Insurance Co., 14 C. B. (N.S.) 259; 32 L. J., C. P. 170; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 18; 8 L. T. 705; 11 W. R. 858.

Capture by Pirates.]—A ship, being insured under a time policy, was captured by pirates. She was afterwards recaptured by an English ship of war, but kept by them as a prize, whereupon the owners gave notice of abandonment. The ship was afterwards sent to England under the care of a prize master, with orders to obtain an adjudication in the court of admiralty, but, meeting with bad weather, put into F., and was sold by the prize master. Afterwards the owners brought an action against the underwriters as for a total loss:—Held, that they were entitled to recover as for a total loss, for capture by pirates was a total loss in the first instance, and such total loss could not be reduced to a partial loss unless either the ship was restored to the possession of the owners before action brought, or they had the power of resuming possession of her before action brought, it being immaterial whether they had the right to immediate possession, and whether the recaptors had any right to detain. Dean v. Hornby, 3 El. & Bl. 180; 2 C. L. R. 1519; 23 L. J., Q. B. 129; 18 Jur. 623; 2 W. R. 156.

—— Intention to Keep the Ship.] — In an action on a policy of insurance upon a ship, in which the subject-matter was warranted "free from capture and seizure, and the consequences of any attempt thereat," it was proved that during the continuance of the risk some natives took forcible possession of the ship in the Brass river, plundered the cargo, and damaged her so that she became a constructive total loss, and that their intention in so taking possession was only to plunder the cargo, and not to keep the ship:—Held, that the acts of the natives constituted a "seizure" within the meaning of the warranty, and therefore that the underwriters were not liable. Johnston v. Hogg, 52 L. J., Q. B. 343; 10 Q. B. D. 432; 48 L. T. 435; 31 W. R. 768; 5 Asp. M. C. 51.

Illegal Acts by Belligerent.]—By a policy on goods on board the ship "B.," they were warranted "free from capture and seizure, and the consequences of any attempt thereof." The perils insured against were enumerated as usual, viz. "of the seas, men-of-war, fire, enemies, pirates, rovers, thieves, jettisons, letters of marque and counter-marque, reprisals, takings at sea, arrests, restraints, and detainments of all kinds, and of all other perils, losses and misfortunes":—Held, that the exceptions introduced by the warranty were not confined to legal capture and seizure, but that an illegal capture or seizure was within both the exceptions and the perils enumerated as insured against. Powell v. Hyde, 5 El. & Bl. 607; 25 L. J., Q. B. 65; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 87; 4 W. R. 51.

A British ship, in her passage down the Danube, passed within shot of a Russian fort, there being then war between Turkey and Russia, but not war between Great Britain and Russia. The Russian fort fired into her and sunk her, alleging that the vessel was mistaken for a Turk, but permitted her crew, after some detention, to depart. It appearing to the court, on the whole of the facts, that the object of the Russians was to detain the ship:—Held, that but for the warranty, the insurers would have been liable; but that the warranty protected them. Ib.

The owners of a vessel who, by performing the legal stipulations of a charterparty, provoke confiscation by the illegal and piratical act of a foreign state, do not thereby avoid their assurance. Sewell v. Royal Exchange Assurance Co., 4 Taunt. 856.

—— By Emigrants on Board.]—Action upon a policy on provisions and freight, on a voyage from Macao to Havannah with Chinese emigrants on board, which contained the words, "warranted free from capture and seizure, and the consequences of any attempt thereat." While the ship was proceeding on her voyage, the Chinese emigrants piratically carried away the ship, and the provisions and stores on board of her, whereby a total loss accrued to the insured:—Held, that this was a loss by seizure within the exception introduced by the warranty, and therefore the underwriter was not liable. Kleinwort v. Shepard, 1 El. & El. 447; 28 L. J., Q. B. 147; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 863; 7 W. R. 227.

Barratry — Proximate Cause.] — In a time policy of marine insurance on ship the ordinary perils insured against (including "barratry of the master") were enumerated, and the ship was warranted "free from capture and seizure and the consequences of any attempts thereat." In consequence of the barratrous act of the master in smuggling, the ship was seized by Spanish revenue officers, and proceedings were taken to procure her condemnation and confiscation. In an action on the policy to recover expenses incurred by the owner in obtaining her release:—Held, that the loss must be imputed to "capture and seizure," and not to the barratry of the master, and that the underwriter was not liable. Cory v. Burr, 52 L. J., Q. B. 657; 8 App. Cas. 393; 49 L. T. 78; 31 W. R. 894; 5 Asp. M. C. 109—H. L. (E.)

Collusive Capture—Barratry of Master.]—A count on a policy of insurance, laying the loss to be by capture, is sustained by evidence that the ship was captured by a privateer, although there was collusion between the master of the ship and the commander of the privateer; and although the plaintiff might have recovered under a count laying the loss by barratry of the master. Arcangelo v. Thompson, 2 Camp. 620; 12 R. R. 758.

Mutiny of Passengers.] — Advances for the transport of Chinese passengers payable on their arrival were insured. The Chinese mutinied, seized the ship and refused to go to their destination. The policy covered the piratical seizure of the ship:—Held, that the mutiny was the cause of the loss, and insurers held liable. Naylor v. Palmer, 10 Ex. 382; 23 L. J., Ex. 323—Ex. Ch.

Wrongful Seizure—Consequent Loss by Perils of Sea.] — A merchant ship was by mistake seized and taken in tow by a British man-of-war. She was thereby exposed to bad weather, by which goods on board were injured. Semble, this was a loss by capture and detention, as well as by perils of the sea. Hagedorn v. Whitmore, 1 Stark. 157.

Risk of British Capture.]—A policy on a foreign ship made during war, must be understood as containing an exception of all captures made by British ships. Kellner v. Le Mesurier, 4 East, 396; 1 Smith, 72; 7 R. R. 581.

An insurance effected in Great Britain on a French ship before hostilities commenced between England and France, does not cover a loss by British capture. Furtado v. Rogers, 3 Bos. & P. 191; 6 R. R. 752.

Insurance by a subject of this country upon foreign property does not cover a loss by capture, in a war afterwards taking place between this country and that of the assured. Proof in bankruptcy, therefore, under such a policy expunged. Lee, Ex parte, 13 Ves. 64.

Slaves thrown overboard—Want of Water.]—The captain being out of his reckoning, and the crew in distress for want of water, some of the slaves were thrown over:—Held, not to be a loss by perils of the sea. Gregson v. Gilbert, 1 Park. Ins. (8th ed.) 138.

By Queen's Ship—Total Loss.]—Merchants in London, as agents for F., a Brazilian subject residing at Loanda, chartered a British ship to carry goods on his behalf from London to Ambriz or Loanda, on the coast of Africa, and to reload there a homeward cargo of African produce for London. They afterwards, on F.'s behalf, insured the outward cargo at and from London to Ambriz or Loanda. The perils insured against were "takings at sea, arrests, restraints and detainments of all kings, princes and people of what nature, condition or quality soever." The ship sailed with this cargo, consigned to F. at Loanda. While on the voyage out she was seized, near Ambriz, by a queen's ship, under 5 Geo. 4, c. 113, s. 4, for being illegally engaged in the slave trade, and was sent to St. Helena for adjudication. Proceedings were instituted in the vice-admiralty court at St. Helena, which court, on 20th November, 1854, condemned the ship to be forfeited, and condemned the shippers of the cargo in penalties amounting to double the value of the goods and in costs, and ordered the goods to be held in deposit till payment of the penalties and costs. The ship and part of the goods were sold under order of the court. The residue of the goods was detained by the court. As soon as the proceedings at St. Helena were known in England, notice of abandonment was given to the underwriters. At that time the decree of the court at St. Helena was not known in England. An appeal to the privy council against this decree was lodged, and on 3rd February, 1858, the privy council reversed the decree of the court below, and ordered restitution of the ship to her owners, and of the goods unsold, and the proceeds of the goods sold, to F. On the 6th July, 1858, the shippers, on F.'s behalf, brought an action against the defendant on the policy, claiming as for a total loss of the cargo. At that time the goods remaining in specie and unsold at St. Helena had deteriorated in value, but could have been forwarded thence to Loanda at a price less than their value when delivered there:—Held, first, that the seizure by the queen's ship of the "Newport," with the goods insured on board, being wrongful, was a loss of the goods by a peril insured against. Lozano v. Janson, 2 El. & El. 160; 28 L. J., Q. B. 337; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1401; 7 W. R. 654.

Held, secondly, that the wrongful seizure and the notice of abandonment made the loss total, and that it was still total at the time of action brought; the court drawing the inference of fact that F., as a prudent man, could not then be reasonably expected to take possession of the unsold goods at St. Helena. Ib.

Capture—Abandonment—Restoration of Ship after Writ issued, but before Trial.]—The abandonment, as a total loss, of a ship insured against war risks, which has been captured, is not defeated by the restoration of the ship at a date subsequent to the commencement of an action for total loss on the policy by the shipowners against the underwriters. Ruys v. Royal Exchange Assurance Co., 66 L. J., Q. B. 534; [1897] 2 Q. B. 135; 77 L. T. 23; 8 Asp. M. C. 294. And see VI. WARRANTIES; 9, AGAINST CAPTURE.

b. Proof.

Condemnation.]—The sentence of a condemnation of a foreign court of admiralty cannot be received, without previous proof of the ship having been captured. Marshall v. Parker, 2 Camp. 69 ; 11 R. R. 665. S. P., Visger v. Prescott, 5 Esp. 184 ; 8 R. R. 846.

Lloyds' books are evidence of a capture, but not of notice of a loss to any person in particular, but may go, coupled with other evidence, to the jury. Abel v. Potts, 3 Esp. 242 ; 6 R. R. 826. See Fowler v. English and Scottish Marine Insurance Co., 18 C. B. (N.S.) 919 ; 34 L. J., C. P. 253 ; 12 L. T. 381 ; 13 W. R. 658 ; supra, col. 1105.

If an insured declares upon a total loss by capture, and, after proving a capture, shews a recapture, upon which proceedings were had in an admiralty court, he cannot recover without proving the proceedings in the admiralty court under seal, though he only claims the amount of the loss sustained by the salvage proceedings and sale. Thellusson v. Shedden, 2 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 228.

If a defendant on a policy would impugn the plaintiff's right to recover for a loss by capture, on the ground that the condemnation appears by the sentence of a foreign court to have proceeded on the want of certain documents not required by the law of nations, which the plaintiff ought to have provided, it is for the defendant to shew the foreign law or treaty which renders such documents necessary. Le Cheminant v. Pearson, 4 Taunt. 367 ; 13 R. R. 636.

A count on a policy, laying the loss by capture, is sustained by evidence that the ship was captured by a privateer ; although this happened from a collusion between the master of the ship and the commander of the privateer, and the plaintiff might have recovered under a count laying the loss by the barratry of the master. Arcangelo v. Thompson, 2 Camp. 620 ; 12 R. R. 758.

Condemnation by Enemy's Prize Court of Ship lying in Neutral Port.]—Condemnation in the court of the enemy on a prize ship lying in a neutral port—under special circumstances held valid. The Henrick and Maria, 4 C. Rob. 43.

8. Other Risks.

Desertion.]—A ship received considerable damage from tempestuous weather, and the crew, completely exhausted, deserted the ship on the high seas for the mere preservation of their lives ; and the ship was then taken possession of by a fresh crew, who succeeded in conducting her safely into port :—Held, that such desertion of the crew did not of itself amount to a total loss ; and, secondly, the ship having been sold under the decree of the admiralty court to pay the salvage, and it not appearing that the assured had taken any means to prevent such sale, that they had no right to abandon, and that there was no more than a partial loss. Thornely v. Hebson, 2 B. & Ald. 513 ; 21 R. R. 381.

A ship, deserted at sea by her crew, under a bonâ fide belief that she is sinking, is totally lost. The right of the assured to recover, as for a total loss, is not affected by her being afterwards repaired at an expense equal to her value ; nor is deserting the ship, under the circumstances, negligence in the crew. Holdsworth v. Wise, 6 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 134 ; 1 M. & Ry. 673 ; 7 B. & C. 794 ; 31 R. R. 299.

Mutiny.]—The insured cannot recover upon a policy, unless the loss is a direct and an immediate consequence of the peril insured ; a loss by any other means than by wounds or bruises received in the very act of quelling a mutiny, is not within that provision of an African policy which insures against loss by mutiny. Jones v. Schmoll, 1 Term Rep. 130, n. ; 1 R. R. 196, n.

By Carriers Delivering to Ship.]—A declaration on a policy on goods at and from L. by land carriage to H., and at and from thence by a packet to G., beginning the adventure on the goods from the loading on board the ship, averred that the goods were delivered at L. to carriers, to be carried from L. by land carriage to H. ; and by the fraud and the negligence of the servants and persons employed by the carriers were wholly lost :—Held, that this was a loss within the meaning of the usual form of marine policy. Boehm v. Combe, 2 M. & S. 172 ; 14 R. R. 611.

Loss by Enemies.]—A captain threw overboard a quantity of dollars to prevent them falling into the hands of an enemy and was immediately captured :—Held, if not jettisoned, a loss by enemies. Butler v. Wildman, 3 B. & Ald. 398 ; 22 R. R. 435. See also Dent v. Smith, post, col. 1150.

Policy against Losses under the Passengers Act Amendment Act, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 44—Expense of Forwarding Passengers.]—The plaintiffs, shipowners, effected with the defendants a policy "against all costs, charges and liabilities to which the owners or charterers of the ship 'M. P.' might be subject under clauses 46, 47, 48, 49 and 50 of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 44." The ship struck on a bank sixty miles from her port of destination, and the captain incurred expense in hiring steamships to which, after vain attempts to tow his own ship off the ground, the passengers were transferred, and in which they were taken to their destination :—Held, that assuming the expenses of carrying on the passengers to be covered by the policy, the expense of the attempts to get the ship off were not to be taken into account. Baines v. Royal Exchange Assurance Co., 6 W. R. 247.

1. Freight.

A shipowner, who has entered into contracts for freight, has an insurable interest in the freight, although such contracts are not in writing. Miller v. Warre, 7 D. & R. 1; 4 B. & C. 538; 1 Car. & P. 237; 4 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 8.

Ownership.]—Two partners purchased a ship under a bill of sale, conformably to 26 Geo. 3, c. 60; afterwards they took in two other partners, but there was no transfer of the ship to them jointly with the others:—Held, that the four partners had not any insurable interest in the freight of the ship. Camden v. Anderson, 5 Term Rep. 709. And see S. C., 6 Term Rep. 723; 1 Bos. & P. 272.

The right to freight results from the right of ownership; and these four partners had neither a legal nor an equitable title to the ship. Ib.

Freight when Earned.]—Upon a policy for freight the insurers cannot be held responsible where the freight has been actually earned. Scottish Marine Insurance Co. v. Turner, 1 Macq. H. L. 334; 17 Jur. 631; 1 W. R. 537.

Chartered Freight — Commencement of Interest.]—On the 7th August, 1866, the agents of the owners of a ship, lying at Bombay, chartered her at Liverpool for a voyage from Howland's Island to a port in the United Kingdom for a cargo of guano, freight to be paid at port of discharge, the ship to be at Howland's Island on or before the 1st June, 1867, or the charterer to have the option of declaring the charter void. On the 7th September, 1866, an agent, on behalf of the owners of the vessel, effected an insurance with an underwriter at and from Bombay to Howland's Island, while there, and thence to any port, &c., in the United Kingdom, on freight chartered or otherwise valued at 3,600*l.* in the ship. It was lawful for the ship to sail to and touch and stay at any ports whatsoever without prejudice to the insurance, which was against the usual perils. On the 4th September, she sailed in ballast under the charter from Bombay for Howland's Island. She got out of her course, and on the 25th December ran ashore on the coast of New Zealand. The owners declined to furnish the funds necessary for repairing her, and the captain was unable to borrow money on a bottomry bond except on condition that he would charter the ship to the lender for a cargo of timber from New Zealand to England. Ultimately she was abandoned to the holder of the bottomry bond: the repairs were completed and a cargo of timber brought to England for the holder of the bottomry bond:—Held, first, that when the ship sailed from Bombay the chartered freight had come into existence, and the owners had an insurable interest in it. Barber v. Fleming, 10 B. & S. 879; 39 L. J., Q. B. 25; L. R. 5 Q. B. 59; 18 W. R. 254.

Held, secondly, that the terms of the charterparty which allowed the ship to take in a cargo on the passage from Bombay to Howland's Island did not prevent the interest from attaching. Ib.

—— Risks "incident to Steam Navigation"—Option of Cancelling Charterparty.]—The plaintiffs, on the 29th of July, 1875, chartered their ship "G." for a voyage from New York to Odessa. The freight was agreed "during the voyage aforesaid" at 5,500*l.* in cash at Hull, England, on the discharge of the cargo in Odessa. "If the vessel has not arrived at the port of New York on or before the 1st of September, 1875, charterers have option of cancelling this charterparty." The plaintiffs, on the 7th of August, 1875, effected an insurance with the defendant "at and from London to New York, while there, and thence to Odessa, viâ Constantinople," on their chartered freight, including, besides the ordinary ones, all risks "incident to steam navigation." The clause in the charterparty giving the option to cancel was not mentioned to the defendant. The ship started from England on the 7th of August, but owing to the failure of her machinery in the British Channel was obliged to put back for repairs, which occupied so much time that she did not reach New York until after the 1st of September, whereupon the charterers cancelled the charter and the freight was lost:—Held, that the interest in the chartered freight had commenced at the time when the charter was cancelled, but that the defendant was not liable, for the freight was not lost by any of the perils insured against, but by the exercise of the option to cancel in the charterparty; and further that the withholding from the defendant information as to the power to cancel vitiated the policy. Mercantile Steamship Co. v. Tyser, 7 Q. B. D. 73; 29 W. R. 790; 5 Asp. M. C. 6, n.

Ship discharged from Charter by Admiralty, after Damage.]—The plaintiffs were the owners of a steamship named the "P.," which was chartered to the commissioners of the admiralty for transport service for three months certain at an agreed freight, which was not to be payable in the event of the steamship becoming unseaworthy or unfit to perform the service for which she was chartered. One month's freight was to be paid to the plaintiffs in advance. The plaintiffs effected with the defendants a policy of insurance in the ordinary form upon freight. The "P." sailed, under the charter to the admiralty, with troops for South Africa, and soon after the expiration of the first month of the period for which she was chartered she struck on a rock, and was so damaged as to become unseaworthy and unfit to perform the service for which she had been chartered. She was thereupon discharged from the service of the admiralty:—Held, that the plaintiffs could not recover from the defendants the residue of the freight, which the "P." would have earned during the time covered by the policy. Inman Steamship Co. v. Bischoff, 52 L. J., Q. B. 169; 7 App. Cas. 670; 47 L. T. 581; 31 W. R. 141; 5 Asp. M. C. 6—H. L. (E.)

Cargo not on Board.]—The owner of a ship effected a policy on freight at and from the Coromandel coast to Bourbon; the ship put into port on the Coromandel coast for repairs; he purchased a cargo, and had it ready to be sent on board, about seven miles from the port; the ship was lost by accident in going out of the dock; the policy covered perils of the seas, and all other perils, losses and misfortunes:—Held, that his interest in the profit of conveying the cargo was properly described as freight; that the cargo being ready when the ship was about to leave the dock, the risk attached, and that the loss was a loss within the terms of the policy. Devaux v. J'Anson, 5 Bing. (N.C.) 519; 7 Scott, 507; 2 Arn. 82; 8 L. J., C. P. 284; 3 Jur. 676.

Part Payment—Second Charterparty.]—By a charterparty it was agreed that a ship, then being at M. V., should proceed to F., and thence to S. C., where she was to load a complete cargo, and then proceed to E.; 250*l.* per month for freight, to be paid thus: 250*l.*, one month's freight, at F., and balance on delivery of the cargo at the port of discharge. The vessel sailed, and 250*l.* was paid at F. She arrived at S. C., but, instead of proceeding to E., returned to M. V. A policy was effected, by which 450*l.* freight advanced was insured on the voyage from M. V. to H. A second charterparty was entered into whilst the vessel was still at M. V., by which she was to proceed to H. with the cargo then on board, a part of which she brought from S. C.; freight 250*l.* per month, allowing a "deduction of 250*l.*, which the captain has already received on account of this charter." The first charterparty was not expressly cancelled or annulled. The ship sailed, and was lost:—Held, that the payment at F. was not for services already rendered, but a part payment of an entire sum which remained at risk, and was an insurable interest; and that it was competent for the parties to enter into the second charterparty, and to treat the 250*l.* as a part payment of the entire sum thereby secured. Ellis v. Lafone, 8 Ex. 546; 22 L. J., Ex. 124; 17 Jur. 213; 1 W. R. 200—Ex. Ch.

Advances on Account of Freight.]—C. & Co., the owners of a brig, wrote to the plaintiffs, merchants at New Orleans, to procure a freight for the vessel, stating that if the plaintiffs accepted a charter for Great Britain, they preferred the captain drawing against freight. In this letter was inclosed a letter from C. & Co. to the captain, in which they referred him to the plaintiffs to procure a charter for the vessel. The captain shewed his letter to the plaintiffs, and asked them if they would draw on account of freight, and they said they would. The vessel was loaded as a general ship for Liverpool, and was intended to be consigned to M. & Co.; the plaintiffs wrote to C. & Co., informing them that the vessel was being loaded as a general ship, and stating that they would draw upon the freight for the amount of disbursements. The captain accordingly drew on M. & Co., requesting them to charge the same to account of freight. M. & Co. refused to accept the draft, and it was indorsed to G. & Co., the plaintiffs' agents, who effected an insurance on freight. The vessel was lost by perils of the seas on her voyage from New Orleans to Liverpool:—Held, that the plaintiffs had insurable interest, and that it was correctly described as "advance on account of freight." Wilson v. Martin, 11 Ex. 684; 25 L. J., Ex. 217. See also Watson v. Shankland, XIII. FREIGHT, col. 412.

Count on a policy from Cardiff to Panama, in the ordinary form, and with the ordinary memorandum. The interest was declared to be "on money advanced on account of freight":—Held, that the interest was sufficiently described in the policy. Hall v. Janson, 4 El. & Bl. 500; 3 C. L. R. 737; 24 L. J., Q. B. 97; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 571; 3 W. R. 213.

Advances made by the charterer to the master at the port of loading, to be repaid by deductions out of freight, give the charterer an insurable interest in a policy on disbursements. Currie v. Bombay Native Insurance Co., 6 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 302; 39 L. J., P. C. 1; L. R. 3 P. C. 72; 22 L. T. 317; 18 W. R. 296.

A charterparty contained the following clause: "Sufficient cash, not exceeding 600*l.*, to be advanced against freight, if required, at ports of loading, subject to insurance and 2½ per cent. commission." The charterers submitted to the captain, as agent for the owners, and he accepted a disbursement account made up of three items: cash actually advanced; commission due to the charterers under the charterparty; premium on a policy of insurance on freight made on owners' behalf:—Held, that such sums, though not all representing actual advances, were nevertheless "freight advances" within the meaning of the charterparty, and were, therefore, rightly insured by the charterers on their own account. Williams v. North China Insurance Co., 1 C. P. D. 757; 35 L. T. 884; 3 Asp. M. C. 342—C. A.

Money supplied to the master under a contract in the charterparty to supply cash for the ship's use is not prepaid freight; and the freighter has no insurable interest therein. Manfield v. Maitland, 4 B. & Ald. 582; 23 R. R. 402.

Amount of Loss.]—When by the terms of a charterparty a part of the freight is made payable in advance, the charterer has a right to deduct the whole amount so paid by him from any freight which may actually be earned in case of the loss of part of the cargo, and not only a proportionate part of it. Allison v. Bristol Marine Insurance Co., 1 App. Cas. 209; 34 L. T. 809; 24 W. R. 1039; 3 Asp. M. C. 178—H. L. (E.)

A shipowner chartered his ship for a voyage to Bombay. The charterparty provided that freight was to be paid on unloading, and right delivery of the cargo at the rate of 42*s.* per ton on the quantity delivered, "such freight to be paid one-half in cash on signing bills of lading, the remainder on right delivery of the cargo." Half of the estimated amount of freight was paid in London, and the shipowner insured the unpaid freight. The ship was lost, but half the cargo was saved, and delivered without any additional payment by the charterer. The shipowner then claimed as for a total loss of the unpaid half of the freight:—Held, that on the proper construction of the charterparty and policies he was entitled to recover as for a total loss. Ib.

The valuation upon a freight policy is calculated upon all the goods the ship is intended to carry upon the voyage insured; and if, by a peril insured against, the ship is lost, when part only of the goods, the freight of which was intended to be covered, was on board, the valuation must be opened, and the assured can only recover as for that proportionable share. Forbes v. Aspinall, 13 East, 323; 12 R. R. 352. S. P., Forbes v Cowie, 1 Camp. 520.

But if there is a loss by a peril insured against of the whole subject-matter of the insurance to which the valuation applied, as of all the intended freight, where the insurance is on freight, the valuation in the policy will not be opened. Ib.

Where a ship was chartered from Liverpool to Jamaica, there to take on board a full cargo for Liverpool at the current rate of freight, to be paid at one month from the discharge of her cargo at Liverpool; and the shipowners effected a valued policy on the freight at and from Jamaica to her port of discharge in the United Kingdom; and the ship arrived at Jamaica, and after taking on board one-half of her cargo, was lost by a storm, the remainder of her cargo being on shore and ready to be shipped:—Held, that the assured was entitled to recover as for a total loss. Davidson v. Willasey, 1 M. & S. 313; 14 R. R. 438.

A policy was effected on freight on a voyage from A. to B., and a second insurance was effected on freight valued at 10,000*l.* on a like voyage, and thence to C., with a memorandum that if the ship should be lost at B. a settlement should be made as if she had on board an entire freight to C. The ship earned freight to the amount of 2,500*l.* on her voyage from A. to B., and was lost at the latter place:—Held, that the assured could only recover to the amount of 7,500*l.* Robertson v. Marjoribanks, 2 Stark. 573; 20 R. R. 740.

Valued Policy on Freight at Current Rate—Full Cargo shipped at Lower Rate—Total Loss—Basis of Valuation.]—The plaintiffs, owners of a steamship, effected an insurance on freight valued at 5,500*l.* in the vessel from New Orleans to Liverpool, 1,500*l.* of which amount the defendants underwrote. The insurance was to attach on the freight from the loading of the goods on board the vessel. When the policy was taken out, the vessel was sailing outwards from Hamburg to New Orleans, and the valuation of 5,500*l.* was a reasonable and proper one of the freight expected on a full cargo, having regard to the rates of freights then current at New Orleans. On the outward voyage the vessel met with an accident, in consequence of which she was delayed at New Orleans, and did not sail in due course. She eventually sailed for Liverpool with a full cargo which was shipped at lower rates of freight than those current when the policy was effected, the total actual freight being only 3,250*l.* 7*s.* In the course of the voyage the vessel was lost:—Held, that the policy covered the freight at risk on the voyage in question, and that the valuation of 5,500*l.* was binding upon the defendants with regard to what actually so came at risk under the policy. Forbes v. Aspinall (13 East, 325; 12 R. R. 352) explained. The Main, 63 L. J., Adm. 69; [1894] P. 320; 6 R. 775; 70 L. T. 247; 7 Asp. M. C. 424.

Freight—Salvage—Duty of Shipowner.]—A shipowner shipped goods of his own on his own ship for a particular voyage from Sunderland to Valparaiso, and effected a policy of insurance on "freight." The ship was run into and damaged at the port of loading with the goods on board after the policy had attached, whereby the cargo was so damaged that it had to be unloaded, and the particular adventure was frustrated. The ship was detained in port some six weeks, and all expenses of repairs and demurrage were paid by the owners of the colliding ship. When again in a sea-going condition she was offered a similar cargo to the same port by the owners of the colliding ship; this the shipowner refused, and sailed with another cargo elsewhere:—Held, that the shipowner could recover nothing on the policy, inasmuch as the salvage was, or might have been, equivalent to the freight insured. Gayner v. Sunderland Joint Stock Premium Assn., 1 Cab. & E. 293.

Legality of Voyage—Embargo.]—Freighters chartered a foreign ship to take a cargo from London to St. Petersburg, and to load a cargo there, and immediately return to London, paying freight per ton; if political or other circumstances should prevent the shipping a return cargo, or discharging the outward cargo, the freighters might detain the ship at St. P. for forty running days; and if that time elapsed without the outward cargo being delivered, and the return cargo being put on board, the master should be at liberty to return to London, and the freighters should pay him 2,500*l.* upon the arrival of the ship at London; the freighters then procured a policy, whereby the underwriters agreed to pay a total loss in case the ship was not allowed to load a cargo at St. P. The Russian government, when the ship arrived at St. P., presuming that the outward cargo was British, refused permission to unload her, and consequently she could not take in a Russian cargo; on which the master proceeded to Stockholm, whence, after disposing of the outward cargo to disadvantage, he brought home a Swedish cargo to London, and earned freight thereon:—Held, 1st, that the insurance was legal; 2ndly, that the refusal of the Russian government to permit the ship to unload her outward cargo was, in effect, a refusal to allow her to load a cargo at St. P., and that a total loss was incurred; 3rdly, that the proceeding directly from St. P. to London was not a condition precedent to the master's right to recover from the freighters the dead freight of 2,500*l.*, but that he was entitled to the same, notwithstanding the intermediate voyage to Stockholm, and that the freighters were entitled to recover the same from the underwriters; but, 4thly, that the freighters would be entitled to deduct from the sum payable to the master for dead freight the amount of the freight received by him on the cargo from Stockholm to London, though such intermediate voyage was not originally contemplated by the contracting parties. Puller v. Staniforth, 11 East, 232; 10 R. R. 486.

Where a ship was chartered to take a cargo of lead from London to St. Petersburg, and there receive a return cargo from the freighter's agent, and bring it to London; with a proviso that, if political circumstances should prevent a return cargo being loaded, the master, after waiting at St. P. forty running days without the outward cargo being unloaded, and, without the return cargo being loaded, should be at liberty to return to London, or any port in England; and the ship not having been permitted to unload at St. P. by the Russian government, the master, after waiting there forty days, loaded a return cargo for his own benefit upon the outward cargo, both of which he brought home, and earned new freight on the homeward cargo; which freight was adjudged to him in an action between him and the freighters, over and above the dead freight stipulated to be paid by the charterparty:—Held, that the freighters were entitled to recover the whole of such dead freight upon a policy, whereby the underwriter agreed to pay a loss in case the master should not be allowed to unload the outward cargo at St. P.; the vessel having sailed chartered by the freighters on a voyage from London to St. P. and back; and that the underwriters were not entitled to deduct such return freight earned by the master on his own account, they having agreed with the assured pending this action and pending the action as to the return freight, that in case the plaintiffs (to whom they had paid a percentage loss) should not be able to obtain so large an allowance as the full return freight by reason of any demurrages or expenses being allowed against the freight, the difference should be paid by the underwriters by a further percentage, whether the same were settled between the plaintiffs and the ship by arbitration or by legal decision. Puller v. Halliday, 12 East, 494; 11 R. R. 464.

When Liberty to Touch at Ports.]—A policy on freight, at and from the ship's port of loading at F. to her port of discharge, with leave to call at intermediate ports, beginning the adventure on the goods from the loading, with leave to discharge, exchange, and take on board goods at any port she might call at, without being deemed a deviation, covers the freight of the goods loaded at an intermediate port. Barclay v. Stirling, 5 M. & S. 6; 17 R. R. 245.

Insurance during Part of the Voyage of Freight for Whole Voyage.]—Freight may be insured from St. Ubes to Portsmouth upon a ship which sailed with a cargo from St. Ubes for Gothenburg, with intent to proceed first to Portsmouth, to take up convoy on her way to Gothenburg, and without notice to the underwriters that the ship was bound to Gothenburg. Taylor v. Wilson, 15 East, 324; 13 R. R. 488.

Time Policy on Freight—Exception of Claims "arising from the Cancelling of any Charter" Damage to Ship before Loading—No Consent to Cancel.]—A ship chartered for a voyage, stranded on her way to the port of loading, and sustained such damage as to necessitate repairs which made the voyage contemplated in the charterparty impossible. The shipowner had insured the freight from perils of the sea under a time policy:—Held, that a claim by the shipowner under the policy for the loss of freight so caused was not a claim arising from the "cancelling" of the charter, within an exception in the policy, the charter being at an end through sea perils, and not by consent. Jamieson and Newcastle Steamship Freight Insurance Assn., In re, 64 L. Freight Insurable apart from Ship.]—The property in the freight may be distinct from that in the ship, and is an insurable interest. Mestaer v. Gillespie, 11 Ves. 629; 8 R. R. 261.

Cargo not on Board.]—A ship, with part of her cargo on board, was lost at Jamaica, in passing from port to port to complete her cargo. The owner claimed for a loss of freight on cargo not on board, but which he shewed by letters from merchants and planters the ship was intended to take in:—Held that the underwriters were liable for the loss of freight on the whole cargo. Parke v. Hebson, cited, 2 Br. & B. 326, 329; 23 R. Policy free from "Claim consequent on Loss of Time, whether arising from a Peril of the Sea or otherwise"—Frustration of Adventure by Peril of Sea, involving Delay for Repair.]—A time policy of marine insurance on the freight of a ship against risks which included perils of the sea contained the clause "Warranted free from any claim consequent on loss of time, whether arising from a peril of the sea or otherwise." The ship in pursuance of a charterparty loaded a cargo and sailed, and on the following day her mainshaft broke by reason of perils of the sea. She was towed back to the port of loading, and it was there found that the delay necessary for the repair of the damage would frustrate the object of the adventure, and the charterers, as they were entitled, determined the charterparty, and the shipowners lost the freight:—Held, that the loss of freight was consequent on loss of time arising from a peril of the sea within the meaning of the clause, and that the underwriters were not liable under the policy. Bensaude v. Thames and Mersey Marine Insurance Co., 66 L. J., Q. B. 666; [1897] A. C. 609; 77 L. T. 282; 46 W. R. 78; 8 Asp. M. C. 315—H. L. (E.)

2. Goods and Cargo.

Shipowners.]—A shipowner who was in the habit of receiving shipments of cotton to be carried on deck, sometimes at the request and risk of the shippers, sometimes for his own convenience, and under a clean bill of lading, at his own risk—to protect himself as to jettison in the latter case, entered into open policies of insurance as to which the usage was that he was bound to declare all his risks in order of shipment, and rectify any mistake even after loss known. His agent, by negligence or by mistake, gave a clean bill of lading for a certain shipment and gave no notice to him, but such shipowner on discovering the omission altered his declarations by inserting this shipment though after loss known:—Held, that the shipowner had an insurable interest, as at law a written contract cannot be varied on the ground of negligence or mistake, and was entitled to alter the declarations both according to the usage, which could not be said to be unreasonable, and according to the doctrine to be deduced from decided cases, that by the usages of merchants and underwriters, recognised by the courts without formal proof, such declarations may be altered even after loss known, if the alterations are made innocently and without fraud. Stephens v. Australasian Insurance Co., 42 L. J., C. P. 12; L. R. 8 C. P. 18; 27 L. T. 585; 21 W. R. 228; 1 Asp. M. C. 450.

—— Amount Recoverable.]—J. & Son were lightermen and effected an insurance in the form of an ordinary Lloyd's policy at and from all wharves on the Thames, from Wandsworth to the Victoria Docks, which contained the following clause:—"To cover and include all losses, damages, and accidents amounting to 20*l.* or upwards in each craft, to goods carried by J. & Son as lightermen, or delivered to them to be waterborne, either in their own or other craft, and for which losses, damages, and accidents, J. & Son may be liable or responsible to the owners thereof, or others interested." The policy was subscribed by different underwriters for different sums amounting to 2,000*l.*, and one underwrote the policy for 100*l.* A loss happened to goods carried by J. & Son in a barge for which they became liable to those interested in the goods to the amount of 1,100*l.* The total value of the risks of J. & Son in this and other barges at the time of the loss, and covered by the policy, amounted to 20,000*l.*:—Held, that J. & Son were entitled to be indemnified for the loss actually sustained, viz. 1,100*l.* and to recover from the one underwriter 55*l.*, his proportion; and that the sum to be recovered was not merely such a proportion of their loss as the sum for which he had subscribed the policy, viz. 100*l.*, bore to the value of all the goods afloat and covered by the policy at the time of the loss, viz. 20,000*l.* Joyce v. Kennard, 41 L. J., Q. B. 17; L. R. 7 Q. B. 78; 25 L. T. 932; 20 W. R. 233; 1 Asp. M. C. 194.

Carriers.]—An insurance on goods is sufficient to cover the interest of carriers in the property under their charge; for, in general, if the subject-matter of insurance is rightly described, the particular interest in it need not be specified. Crowley v. Cohen, 3 B. & Ad. 478; 1 L. J., K. B. 158.

Foreign Consignor.] — The defendants, an English firm, traded with D., a Spanish shipping agent at Havannah. The plaintiffs who were Spanish merchants at Havannah, consigned a cargo of goods to the defendants through the agency of D. The defendants knew that D. was acting for a third party who was alluded to as the "interesado," but the name of the plaintiffs was not disclosed. The defendants effected an insurance in London on the ship in the name of themselves and for the benefit of all parties interested. The ship having been lost, the policy-money was paid to the defendants, and D. being insolvent, the plaintiffs claimed the whole of the money after deducting the premiums and expenses. The defendants claimed a lien for the balance of their general account due from D.:—Held, that an action lay by the Havannah principals against the London merchants for the policy moneys; that the London merchants were not entitled to a lien upon the moneys for the balance of their general account with the Havannah agents, and could not in that action set-off their claim to that balance, or set-off anything except the premiums, stamps and commission in respect of the insurance. Mildred v. Maspons, 53 L. J., Q. B. 33; 8 App. Cas. 874; 49 L. T. 685; 32 W. R. 125; 5 Asp. M. C. 182—H. L. (E.)

Agent of Consignor.]—A., having consigned a cargo to B., and drawn bills on him to the amount of it in favour of C., his general agent, sent these bills together with the bills of lading to C., desiring him to transmit them to B., that B. might have an opportunity of insuring; he also drew a bill for 300*l.* on C. which was accepted. B. refused to take the cargo or accept the bills drawn on him. C. then effected a policy in his own name and informed A. who approved of his conduct:—Held, that C. had an insurable interest to the amount of 300*l.* Woolf v. Horncastle, 1 Bos. & P. 316; 4 R. R. 808.

Indorser of Bill of Lading.]—The indorsement and delivery of a bill of lading to a creditor primâ facie convey the whole property in the goods from the time of its delivery; but if the intention of the parties appears to have been only to bind the net proceeds in case of the arrival of the goods, then an insurance made on account of the indorser after such indorsement is good. Hibbert v. Carter, 1 Term Rep. 745; 1 R. R. 388.

Consignees.] — The plaintiffs were cotton brokers and agents in London, who were accustomed to receive consignments of cotton from Bombay for sale on behalf of the shippers, who drew bills of exchange on them against the consignments; the bills of exchange were usually negotiated in India, sent to this country with the bills of lading attached as security, presented to and accepted by the plaintiffs against delivery of the shipping documents; and the plaintiffs were in the habit of effecting open floating policies of insurance with the defendants "as well in their own names as for and in the name or names of all and every person or persons to whom the same doth, may or shall appertain in part or in all." Cotton having been shipped, bills of exchange drawn on the plaintiffs against it, negotiated and sent with the bills of lading and accepted against delivery of the documents, they declared the cotton against two open floating policies previously made and not yet exhausted; and the cotton being lost, the bills of exchange paid by them, and the bills of lading obtained, brought an action on the policies, averring that they, or some or one of them, were interested to the full amount named, and that the insurances were made for the use and benefit and on account of the persons so interested:—Held, per Bovill, C.J., and Denman J., that they had an equitable interest in every part of the cotton, and that it was intended that not only their interests but those of the other parties interested should be covered, and that the plaintiffs having such an interest and a duty of selling and managing, were in law entitled so to insure and were the only persons to bring an action, and might aver, as they did in their declaration, and recover to the full extent, applying the proceeds to their own benefit to the extent of their own claims, and holding the residue for the other persons interested; but per Brett and Keating, JJ., the plaintiffs were consignees for sale of goods not arrived, who had made advances on goods, but had only a contract right as to them, and though interested in every part were not the legal owners, and therefore they were by law limited to the recovery of their own beneficial interest, which alone they could properly insure and recover. Ebsworth v. Alliance Marine Insurance Co., 42 L. J., C. P. 305; L. R. 8 C. P. 596; 29 L. T. 479; 2 Asp. M. C. 125.

Under Invalid Contract.]—H. & Co., being owners of two ships, called the "Antelope" and the "Maria," trading to the coast of Africa, and which were expected to arrive at Liverpool, with cargoes of palm oil, agreed verbally to sell to the plaintiff 200 tons of oil; 100 tons to arrive by the "Antelope," and 100 by the "Maria." The "Antelope" did afterwards arrive with 100 tons of oil on board, which were delivered by H. & Co. to the plaintiff. The "Maria," having 50 tons of palm oil on board, was lost by peril of the sea. The plaintiff having insured the oil on board the "Maria," together with the expected profits thereon :—Held, that he had no insurable interest, as the contract he had entered into with H. & Co., being verbal only, was incapable of being enforced. Stockdale v. Dunlop, 6 M. & W. 224; 4 Jur. 681; 9 L. J., Ex. 83.

Purchase of Cargo—When Property passes.]—A. & Co., in London, contracted with B. & Co., of Calcutta, for the purchase of a cargo of "new crop Rangoon rice, per 'Sunbeam,' 707 tons register, at 9*s.* 1½*d.* per cwt., cost and freight payment by sellers' draft on purchasers at six months' sight, with documents attached." B. & Co. chartered the "Sunbeam" to go to Rangoon and ship a cargo of rice, and A. & Co. effected a policy of insurance "at and from Rangoon, to any port of discharge in the United Kingdom or Continent by the 'Sunbeam,' on rice, as interest may appear, amount of invoice to be deemed the value." The "Sunbeam" went to Rangoon, and the loading commenced, but after 8,878 bags of rice were on board she sprang a leak and sank, and the ship and the rice were totally lost; 400 more bags would have completed the loading. The captain afterwards signed bills of lading for the 8,878 bags, and B. & Co. drew bills for the price upon A. & Co., who accepted and paid them with knowledge of the loss. In an action on the policy of insurance :—Held, that A. & Co. had no insurable interest in the rice that was shipped. Anderson v. Morice, 46 L. J., C. P. 11; 1 App. Cas. 713; 35 L. T. 566; 25 W. R. 14; 3 Asp. M. C. 290—H. L. (E.)

After Stoppage in transitu.]—After a stoppage in transitu, the vendee ceases to have an insurable interest in goods. Clay v. Harrison, 5 M. & Ry. 17; 10 B. & C. 99; 8 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 90.

And a policy effected before the stoppage becomes thereby void. Ib.

Double Sale — Interest of First Vendee.]—B. sold to the plaintiff, to be delivered at Portsmouth, from 500 to 700 barrels of oats, to be shipped by I. from Youghal. Four days afterwards B. advised the plaintiff that I. had engaged room in the packet to take about 600 barrels of oats on the plaintiff's account. On the following day the plaintiff insured 400*l.* on oats per the packet; the oats were shipped, but the packet being bound for Southampton, and refusing to touch at Portsmouth, B. sold the oats again, and delivered the bill of lading to O. at Southampton; the plaintiff insisting that he was entitled to the oats, and would assert his right by action. In the meantime the packet was lost, and after a long dispute, the plaintiff, in consideration of 60*l.*, by indorsement on the policy, vested the interest in the insurance in B. :—Held, that the plaintiff had a sufficient interest when the policy was effected, and that he was entitled to sue the underwriter on this policy. Sparkes v. Marshall, 3 Scott, 172; 2 Bing. (N.C.) 761; 2 Hodges, 44; 5 L. J., C. P. 286.

Purchase after Loss.]—A party may make an insurance on goods lost or not lost, though he has acquired his interest in them after a partial loss, unless he bought them with a knowledge of the damage. Sunderland or Sutherland v. Pratt, 11 M. & W. 296; 2 D. (N.S.) 813; 12 L. J., Ex. 235; 7 Jur. 261.

Price of Cargo objected to by Purchaser—Property passing nevertheless.]—A., who had been in the habit of buying largely guano from B. & Co., of Liverpool, at prices which were settled at the beginning of each year, wrote to them on the 14th of February, ordering a shipment of 100 tons, provided freight did not exceed 6*s.* 6*d.* On the 26th, B. & Co. wrote in answer, "We have suceeeded in fixing the schooner 'Anne and Isabella' to carry about 115 tons, at your limit of 6*s.* 6*d.* per ton. We presume we may value upon you at six months from the date of shipment, at 10*l.* per ton"; adding, in a postscript, "Please say if you purpose effecting insurance at your end." On the 3rd of March A. wrote objecting to the price, but concluding with a request that some flowering shrubs should be sent to him, in charge of the captain. On the same day A. effected an insurance on the guano, per "Anne and Isabella." The guano was shipped at Liverpool on the 4th of March, under a bill of lading, making it deliverable to B. & Co., or their assigns. The bill of lading (unindorsed) was sent from Liverpool to one of the members of the firm of B. & Co. (then in Belfast), who was about to pay A. a friendly visit at Londonderry. That gentleman arrived at A.'s house on the evening of Saturday, the 7th of March, when he told A. that he had received the bill of lading and invoice of the guano, and a draft for A.'s acceptance for the amount; and on the morning of the 9th they went together to A.'s office, and there the bill of lading was indorsed and handed over with the invoice to A., who thereupon accepted the bill. In the course of the same day they heard, for the first time, that the "Anne and Isabella," with the guano on board, had been wrecked on the coast, near Londonderry: —Held, that the property in the guano passed to A. by the contract from the time of its shipment, A.'s letter of the 3rd of March not being a repudiation, though expressing some dissatisfaction at the price; and that A. had an insurable interest in the cargo at the time of the loss. Joyce v. Swann, 17 C. B. (N.S.) 84. See Seagrave v. Union Marine Insurance Co., infra, col. 1125.

Captain's Goods, &c.]—A policy on "goods, specie, and effects" belonging to a captain, by usage of trade, extends to money expended by him in the course of the voyage for the use of the ship, and for which he charges respondentia interest. Gregory v. Christie, 3 Dougl. 419.

Possessory Interest.]—The plaintiff agreed with one W. for a sum of 10,000*l.* to transport the obelisk known as "Cleopatra's Needle" from Alexandria to London, and there to erect it upon some public site to be afterwards selected. To cover expenses (about 4,000*l.*) the plaintiff caused two policies to be effected with the respective defendants "upon the goods and merchandises in the good ship or vessel called 'The Cleopatra' iron vessel containing the obelisk . . . . . valued at 4,300*l.* . . . . . against the risk of total loss only"; the risks insured against being the ordinary sea risks, and the suing and labouring clause being in the ordinary form. In the course of the voyage "The Cleopatra" got adrift in a storm in the Bay of Biscay; and was ultimately picked up by another steamer and carried into Ferrol, where the salvors detained her under a claim for salvage. The Admiralty Division awarded them 2,000*l.* salvage and costs. In actions upon the policies :—Held, 1. That the plaintiff, being the owner of "The Cleopatra," and having possession of the obelisk, and (possibly) a lien upon it for his expenditure, had a sufficient insurable interest, at least to the extent of his outlay: 2. That the true effect of both policies was, an insurance, not on "cargo" or "freight" only, but on the vessel and her cargo: 3. That, under the suing and labouring clause, the assured was entitled to recover the 2,000*l.* awarded to the salvors, but not the costs of the proceedings in the Admiralty Court, nor the expenses incurred by him in refitting "The Cleopatra" at Ferrol and towing her to London. Dixon v. Whitworth, 48 L. J., C. P. 538; 4 C. P. D. 371; 40 L. T. 718; 28 W. R. 184; 4 Asp. M. C. 326.

Respondentia.]—Insurance on goods does not extend to respondentia interest. Glover v. Black, 3 Burr. 1394.

Goods at Purchasers' Risk—Sale of Goods "f. o. b."]—D. sold to B. 200 tons of German sugar, "f. o. b. Hamburg; payment by cash in London in exchange for bill of lading"; the price to be variable according to the percentage of saccharine matter, which was not to exceed or fall short of certain limits. B. resold to the respondent the same quantity at an increased price, but otherwise upon similar terms. D. also sold to the respondent 200 tons upon similar terms. To fulfil these contracts 390 tons (being ten tons short) were shipped in bags on one vessel at Hamburg for Bristol, no bags being set apart for one contract more than the other. Each bag was marked with its percentage of saccharine matter, and bills of lading with marks corresponding to the bags were sent to D. to be retained till payment in accordance with the contracts. The respondent was insured in floating policies "upon any kind of goods and merchandises" between Hamburg and Bristol, and duly declared in respect of this cargo. The ship sailed from Hamburg for Bristol and was lost. After receiving news of the loss, D. allocated 2,000 bags, or 200 tons, to B.'s contract, and 1,900 bags, or 190 tons, to the other contract. In an action upon the policies:—Held, that the sales being "f. o. b. Hamburg," the sugar was at the respondent's risk after shipment; that he had an insurable interest in it, and that the underwriters were liable. Inglis v. Stock, 54 L. J., Q. B. 582; 10 App. Cas. 263; 52 L. T. 821; 33 W. R. 877; 5 Asp. M. C. 422—H. L. (E.)

Full Cargo—Freight and Passage Money.]—A vessel had been chartered on a voyage from Sydney to Calcutta and London, but upon her arrival at Calcutta, the voyage to England was abandoned because of the charterers having stopped payment, and the ship took 360 coolies, and the necessary provision for their use, and 12,000 bags of rice for Mauritius. The passage-money of the coolies amounted to 1,994*l.*, and was payable on their arrival at Mauritius, and the bill of lading freight of the rice amounted to 1,412*l.* On hearing this the owner of the vessel, who wished to insure the freight on the rice only, caused a policy of insurance which had originally been effected for 1,000*l.* upon chartered freight valued at 7,000*l.* on the voyage from Sydney to Calcutta and London, to be altered by the underwriters inserting a declaration "that the within voyage is from Sydney to Calcutta, and thence to Mauritius, instead of as before stated," and that "the within interest is to be on freight valued at 2,000*l.*" The sum insured remained unaltered as 1,000*l.* The insurer was not informed that coolies were carried. Though there did not appear to exist a customary use of the word "freight" in insurance business, yet the most frequent course was to insure passage-money by some distinguishing term when it was intended to insure it, and the premium for insuring such upon a voyage from Calcutta to Mauritius was generally less than for insuring freight of goods upon the same voyage. The vessel was wrecked near Mauritius, and the rice and freight were wholly lost, but 348 of the coolies were saved, and their passage-money was paid:—Held, that the freight of the rice only was insured, but that as the rice was not a full cargo, and there was nothing to shew what the total freight would have been had the vessel been filled up with cargo, the policy was an open policy for half the loss of freight of the rice, not exceeding 1,000*l.*, and the underwriters were liable, therefore, for the amount of such half, namely, 706*l.* Dinoon or Denoon v. Home and Colonial Assurance Co., 41 L. J., C. P. 162; L. R. 7 C. P. 341; 26 L. T. 628; 20 W. R. 970; 1 Asp. M. C. 309.

Open Policies—Declaration of Shipments at less than real Value.]—The defendants effected with the plaintiff, a Lloyd's underwriter, a series of open policies for certain specified sums to cover shipments to be declared and valued as interest might appear. The policies were effected at different dates, and were to succeed each other in the order of date. The value of the shipments were declared at considerably less than their real value, so that when the later policies were effected the earlier policies were in fact more exhausted than they would appear to be from the declarations. The undervaluation of the shipments was systematically and fraudulently made by the defendants, and the fact that they had been so undervalued was concealed from the plaintiff when he underwrote the later policies:—Held, that, under these circumstances, a jury would be justified in finding that the concealment was of a fact of which it was material that the plaintiff should have been informed, in order to guide him in deciding whether he would underwrite these later policies or not, or at what rate; and that on the jury so finding the plaintiff was entitled to have such later policies set aside and cancelled. Rivaz v. Gerussi, 50 L. J., Q. B. 176; 6 Q. B. D. 222; 44 L. T. 79; 4 Asp. M. C. 377—C. A.

Purchasers of Goods also Charterers.]—Where the charterers of a vessel were also the purchasers of a cargo of wheat to be shipped on board, and the master of the vessel from time to time received delivery from the vendors:—Held, that such delivery from time to time was a delivery to the purchasers, that it vested in them a right of possession and property, and that, consequently, they had an insurable interest in such wheat as had been so delivered. Anderson v. Morice (supra, col. 1121) distinguished; Oxendale v. Wetherell (9 B. & C. 387) approved. Colonial Insurance Co. of New Zealand v. Adelaide Marine Insurance Co., 56 L. J., P. C. 19; 12 App. Cas. 128; 56 L. T. 173; 35 W. R. 636; 6 Asp. M. C. 94—P. C.

Profit on Charter—Destruction of Merchantable Character of Cargo—Loss of Freight.]—The plaintiffs, who had chartered a steamship at a lump sum freight of 3,900*l.*, insured her with the defendants, who were underwriters. The interest insured was described in the policy as "2,000*l.* on profit on charter . . . . warranted free from all average." The plaintiffs did not inform the defendants that the vessel was chartered for a lump sum freight, nor of the amount of their bills of lading freights. During the voyage the vessel came into collision with another ship, and was submerged for twenty-four hours. A large portion of the cargo, consisting of dates, was condemned by the sanitary authorities, and not allowed to be delivered to the consignees. The dates were, however, sold, transhipped and exported for distilling purposes. In an action brought by the plaintiffs upon the policy to recover for a total loss:—Held, that the dates being unmerchantable as such, no freight was payable in respect of them; that there was, therefore, no profit on the charter, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover. Asfar v. Blundell, 65 L. J., Q. B. 138; [1896] 1 Q. B. 123; 73 L. T. 648; 44 W. R. 130; 8 Asp. M. C. 106—C. A.

Policy on Goods—Capture—Freight paid in order to get Possession.]—Cargo owner who pays to the shipowners freight pro ratâ itineris in order to get the proceeds of the cargo, which had been captured by the enemy, sold, and afterwards the proceeds restored on appeal, cannot recover the freight so paid against the insurer of the goods. Baillie v. Moudigliani, 1 Park, Ins. (8th ed.) 116.

Goods consigned by Debtor to be held for Creditor.]—A. being indebted to B., without any order from him consigns goods to C., to be held for B., and indorses the bill of lading to C.:—Held, that B. had an insurable interest in the goods so consigned. Hill v. Secretan, 1 Bos. & P. 315; 4 R. R. 806.

Assignee of Cargo under void Indorsement of Bill of Lading.]—The defendant having as security for a debt taken an indorsement of the bills of lading of cargoes, which indorsement was void by reason of an act of bankruptcy committed by the indorsee before the indorsement, effected an insurance of the cargoes; and, a loss happening, he recovered against the underwriters on a count averring interest in the assignees of the bankrupt:—Held, that the assignees could not recover over this money as had and received by the defendant for their use. Grant v. Hill, 4 Taunt. 380.

Broker nominal Shipper and Consignee—Goods Purchased.]—A broker, who is nominal shipper and consignee of cargo, and a mere agent of the vendor or purchaser, and who has not possession or custody of the goods as carrier or bailee, nor any liability to account for their loss by the perils insured against, has no insurable interest. Seagrave v. Union Marine Insurance Co., 1 H. & R. 302; 35 L. J., C. P. 172; L. R. 1 C. P. 305; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 358; 14 L. T. 479; 14 W. R. 690. See also Joyce v. Swann, 17 C. B. (N.S.) 84, supra, col. 1122.

Insurance of Cargo by Shipowner in respect of his Liability as Carrier.]—See Hill v. Scott, ante, col. 74.

3. Passage-money.

Expenses of Forwarding.]—If any passengers for a passenger ship shall, without any neglect or default of their own (as by reason of the ship being lost), find themselves within any colonial or foreign port or place other than that at which they may have contracted to land, the master of the ship is bound under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 44, ss. 49, 50, 51, to forward them to their original destination, and the amount expended by him in forwarding them may be recovered from the underwriters of a policy on the passage-money against all costs, charges and liabilities to which the owner may be subjected under ss. 46, 47, 48, 50, 51. Gibson v. Bradford, 4 El. & Bl. 586; 24 L. J., Q. B. 159; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 520; 3 W. R. 183.

—— Of Maintenance.]—A policy was made at and from Liverpool to Boston on passage-money valued at 700*l.* The policy was in the usual printed form, with this memorandum: "On passage-money of emigrants, subject to pay a loss pro ratâ, and subject to the clauses and conditions made under ss. 47 to 51 of the Passengers Act, 1852, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 44, compensation clause excepted, and against these risks only." The ship, being a passenger ship within the act, sailed, and by a peril of the sea was driven into a foreign port, where she necessarily remained repairing damages for more than six weeks, after which she proceeded with the passengers to Boston, and arrived there. During the detention at the foreign port the passengers were maintained by the insured at a cost exceeding the passage-money:—Held, that this was not a loss incurred under the enumerated sections, and that the underwriters were not liable to make it good. Willis v. Cooke, 5 El. & Bl. 641; 25 L. J., Q. B. 16; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1164; 4 W. R. 54.

Policy on "Freight" held not to Cover Passage-money.]—See Dinoon or Denoon v. Home and Colonial Insurance Co., ante, col. 1124.

4. Seamen's Wages.

Not Insurable.]—A seaman cannot insure his wages—per Lord Stowell. The Neptune, 1 Hag. Adm. 227, 232. S. P., The Lady Durham, 3 Hag. Adm. 201.

—— Goods in lieu of Wages.]—Where a mate of a ship or a sailor is to receive something at the end of the voyage in lieu of wages (e.g., slaves), he cannot insure it. Webster v. De Tastet, 7 Term Rep. 157; 4 R. R. 402.

5. Expected Profits.

Validity.]—Expected profits on a cargo may be insured. Grant v. Parkinson, 6 Term Rep. 483; 3 Bos. & P. 85, n.; 3 Dougl. 16.

Description.]—An insurance may be effected on profits generally without more description, and engrafted upon a policy on ship and goods, in the common printed form for a certain voyage; with a return of premium for short interest, the assured proving an interest in the cargo. Eyre v. Glover, 16 East, 218; 3 Camp. 276; 13 R. R. 801.

An insurance on the imaginary profits of a cargo of indigo from Bordeaux to be sold at Hamburg is good. Henrickson v. Margetson, 2 East, 549, n.; 6 R. R. 509, n.

Possible Profits.]—The owner of a ship and D. shipped goods on a voyage from Hamburg to a port in Asiatic Russia. The adventure was expected to be enormously profitable. The whole cargo shipped was valued at 8,000*l.*, but the total insurances effected amounted to 20,000*l.*, the profits being variously estimated at from 80 to 125 per cent. To secure these profits the goods had been overvalued to the extent of 25 to 30 per cent., and there were heavy insurances of commissions. Amongst the cargo was a shipment of spirits costing 1,000*l.*, but valued at 2,800*l.* The ship went down in fine weather in mid-ocean without any known cause. D. brought an action to recover commission, profits on charter, and 1,800*l.* of the 2,800*l.* insured on spirits. It was pleaded that the loss was not the consequence of perils of the sea, that the concealment of the over-insurance was concealment of a material fact, and that the goods were shipped with the fraudulent design of sinking the ship:—Held, that an insurance on profits must be taken to mean possible profits. Ionides v. Pender, 27 L. T. 244; 1 Asp. M. C. 432.

Upon an insurance on profits valued at 400*l.*, where the plaintiff declared as for a total loss, and it appeared that after a shipwreck, by which many of the slaves, on the profits of whom the insurance was made, were lost, but the remainder reached the market and were there sold; and it did not appear what profit was made of them, or whether, if all had arrived, any profit would have been made; though it was found that the produce of those who were sold did not give a profit upon the whole adventure:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. Hodgson v. Glover, 6 East, 316; 8 R. R. 495.

Foreign Government Bounty.]—A French law provided that "the vessel which shall have fished, either in the Pacific by doubling Cape Horn, or by passing through the Straits of Magellan, or to the south of Cape Horn, at 62 degrees of latitude at the least, shall obtain on its return a supplemental bounty, if it brings back in the produce of its fishing one-half at least of its burthen, or if it can prove a navigation of sixteen months at least":—Held, that a vessel which had caught fish to the amount of half its burthen in the Atlantic, then doubled Cape Horn and fished without success, and was lost within sixteen months after setting sail, had not complied with the conditions of the law so as to be entitled to the bounty. Devaux v. Steele, 8 Scott, 637; 6 Bing. (N.C.) 358.

Held, also, that the practice of the French government to allow the bounty under such circumstances was a mere matter of expectation, and did not constitute a vested interest which could be the subject of insurance. Ib.

Position of Cargo.]—A declaration on a policy stated that M. agreed to buy 6,000 bags of rice, supposed to have been shipped at Madras on board the "E. B.," to arrive on or before the end of May, and guaranteed equal to samples, at 19*s.* per cwt.; that he agreed to sell the same 6,000 bags at 20*s.* 6*d.* per cwt. on the like terms; that he had just reason to expect by reason of the contracts and the arrival of the rice to make a profit of 675*l.*, and thereupon caused a policy to be effected "on profit on rice loaden or to be loaden on board the 'E. B.' at and from Madras, beginning the adventure on the goods and merchandises from and immediately following the loading thereof on board the ship at Madras." When the "E. B." was at Madras ready to receive the 6,000 bags of rice on board, which were lying ready to be shipped, and when 1,200 bags had been put on board, she was blown out to sea and so damaged that 1,200 bags of rice were spoiled, and she was disabled from taking on board the remaining 4,800 bags, which were sent to London in another ship, and arrived there in June. The "E. B." having been repaired, arrived at London in November. The assurance company paid M. for the loss of profit on the 1,200 bags of rice, but refused to pay anything for the loss of profit on the 4,800 bags:—Held, first, that M. had an insurable interest in the expected profit on the rice, and might, by a policy adapted to the case, have insured that special interest from the time that the rice was appropriated by the vendors and ready to be shipped at Madras against any of the events by which it might be defeated, viz., loss of the ship, or of the whole of the rice, or part of the rice, or the delay of the voyage. Royal Exchange Assurance Co. v. M'Swiney, 14 Q. B. 634; 19 L. J., Q. B. 222; 14 Jur. 998—Ex. Ch.

Held, secondly, that according to the meaning of the policy, M. insured the ordinary profit on rice, and only against losses by perils of the sea directly affecting the rice, and consequently the profits on the rice; and therefore the policy attached only on such rice as was actually put on board. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that if the policy attached to the profit of the rice on shore, there had been no loss of that profit by perils of the seas, but only a retardation of the voyage, which was not insured against by the policy. Ib.

Nature of Loss.]—Where profits are insured against perils of the sea, the liability of the underwriters does not attach unless the profits themselves are lost by a peril insured against. Chope v. Reynolds, 5 C. B. (N.S.) 642; 28 L. J., C. P. 194; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 822; 7 W. R. 208.

A. bought goods of B., to arrive at Bristol by the ship "James Daly" from the West Coast of Africa, and effected an insurance with C. against the ordinary perils, with a memorandum indorsed on the policy, declaring the insurance to be "on profit in palm oil, valued at the rate of three guineas per cent., per 'James Daly.'" "The James Daly," while on her voyage to Bristol with the oil on board, was lost by a peril insured against, but the oil was brought home undamaged by another vessel, and was sold by B. to a third person:—Held, that there had been no such loss of the subject-matter of insurance as was contemplated by the policy. Ib.

Where profits were insured by a policy on goods "beginning the adventure upon the said goods from the loading thereof on board the said ship," and the ship was lost before she reached the port at which the cargo was ready to be shipped, it was held that the policy never attached, and that the owner could not recover under it for the delay in the shipment of the cargo and consequent loss of profits. Halhead v. Young, 6 El. & Bl. 312; 25 L. J., Q. B. 290; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 970; 4 W. R. 530.

Interest in Profits on Cargo bought.]—See Royal Exchange Assurance Co. v. M'Swiney, supra.

Valued Policy]—Profits on cargo may be insured by a valued policy. Barclay v. Cousins, 2 East, 544; 6 R. R. 505.

6. Ship and Furniture.

Owners.]—When a ship is purchased in the name of two persons, A. and B., but the purchase-money is by arrangement between them paid by A. only; and B., in order to give some security to A. for the payment of his share, authorises A. to insure the ship in his, A.'s name alone, and in case of the loss of the ship to receive the whole insurance money, and so pay himself the amount due to him from B.; A. has an insurable interest in the whole ship, and may, in an action on a valued policy, recover in his own name the full amount insured. A statement by B. to a third person of this arrangement with A., being a declaration against his, B.'s interest, is evidence against the insurers to shew A.'s insurable interest. Provincial Insurance Co. of Canada v. Leduc, 43 L. J., P. C. 49; L. R. 6 P. C. 224; 31 L. T. 142; 22 W. R. 929; 2 Asp. M. C. 338—P. C.

A person who makes insurances as the owner of a ship must stand so registered at the custom-house at the time and the production of the register from the custom-house is conclusive evidence of ownership. Marsh v. Robinson, 4 Esp. 98; 3 R. R. 617.

Where it is stipulated by a charterparty, that, in case the ship is lost during the voyage, the charterer shall pay the owner a sum of money, which is estimated as the value of the ship, the owner has still an insurable interest in the ship during the voyage. Hobbs v. Hannam, 3 Camp. 93; 13 R. R. 764.

A. having insured his ship, afterwards transferred it, but without the policy, to B. The transfer on the register, though absolute in form, was, in fact, by way of mortgage. The ship having foundered:—Held, that A. being liable for the mortgage debt, had a sufficient interest in the ship to entitle him to recover the whole loss. Hutchinson v. Wright, 25 Beav. 444; 27 L. J., Ch. 834; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 749; 6 W. R. 475.

Held, also, that the policy of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, did not apply to such a case. Ib.

A shipowner whose ship is mortgaged may, if he remains in possession, insure his ship to the full amount of her value. Provincial Insurance Co. of Canada, v. Leduc, supra.

Tackle.]—A policy upon a ship employed in the Greenland trade, on "ship, tackle, apparel, and furniture," does not, by the usage of trade, cover the fishing-tackle. Hoskins v. Pickersgill, 3 Dougl. 222.

Provisions.]—Provisions in a ship for the use of the crew are protected by a policy on the ship and furniture. Brough v. Whitmore, 4 Term Rep. 206; 2 R. R. 361.

Wages.] — Seamen's wages and provisions during an embargo are not covered by an insurance on the body of the ship, Robertson v. Ewer, 1 Term Rep. 127; 1 R. R. 164. S. P., Eden v. Poole, 1 Term Rep. 132, n.

Ship Assigned to secure Debt.]—A. having insured 800*l.* upon his own ship, and being greatly indebted to B., deposits securities with B., and assigns the ship to him absolutely. The ship was afterwards lost. In an action on the policy the underwriters contended that the policy was void, for want of interest, under 19 Geo. 2, c. 37; A. having sold the ship before the loss:—Held, that, the assignment to B. being no more than a pledge or security for debt, A. had a sufficient interest in the ship at the time of her loss. Alston v. Campbell, 4 Bro. P. C. 476.

Hull and Machinery — Disbursements.]—An insurance upon hull and machinery of a steamship by a time policy does not cover items of expenditure for the voyage upon coals, stores, and provisions. Roddick v. Indemnity Mutual Marine Insurance Co., post, col. 1178.

Wages and Expenses in Port of Distress not covered by Policy on Ship.] — Extraordinary wages paid to seamen and provisions expended during the detention of a ship for repairs in a port of distress are not covered by a policy on ship. Fletcher v. Poole, 1 Park, Ins. (8th ed.) 115.

7. Deck Cargo, Jettison.

Insurable Interest.] — An insurance broker effected an open policy on a cargo of cotton on board the ship of his principal. It was intended to ship the cotton on board at the shipper's risk, which should have been expressed in the bill of lading, but by a mistake of the shipowners' agent in the foreign port at which the cotton was put on board, a clean bill of lading was given. On the voyage the vessel encountered heavy weather, and the cotton, owing to its being carried on deck was compelled to be jettisoned. The broker gave notice to the insurance company of the loss, but other open policies having been effected with the same insurance company by the same shipowners for cotton shipped subsequently, and declarations having been made on these policies by the broker, although no declaration had been made in respect of the cotton that had been lost, he, on discovering that a mistake had been made, and that, contrary to his instructions, a clean bill of lading had been given, instead of one expressing that the cotton was shipped at the shipper's risk, altered the declarations on the policies by substituting for certain cotton therein the cotton which had been jettisoned:—Held, that the shipowners being liable for the loss of the goods by jettison through their being carried on deck, had an insurable interest in respect of which they, and therefore their agent, were entitled to recover. Stephens v. Australasian Insurance Co., 42 L. J., C. P. 12; L. R. 8 C. P. 18; 27 L. T. 585; 21 W. R. 228; 1 Asp. M. C. 458.

8. Bills and Advances for Ship's Use.

Advances by Charterer.]—Advances made by the charterer to the master at the port of loading, to be paid by deductions out of freight; give the charterer an insurable interest in a policy on disbursements. Currie v. Bombay Native Insurance Co., 6 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 302; 39 L. J., P. C. 1; L. R. 3 P. C. 72; 22 L. T. 317; 18 W. R. 296. See also cases ante, col. 1113.

Money Lent to Captain.]—A policy on money lent to the captain, payable out of the freight, is illegal, and the premium cannot be recovered from the underwriter. Wilson v. Royal Exchange Assurance Co., 2 Camp. 626; 12 R. R. 760.

Bills for Expenses.]—A memorandum for a charter stated that one-half of the freight was to be paid in cash on unloading and right delivery of the cargo, and the remainder by bill on London, at four months' date, thirty running days to be allowed for loading and discharging, and ten days' demurrage at 4*l.* per day, the captain to be supplied with cash for the ship's use. In pursuance of this last stipulation the master drew a bill of exchange on the freighters which was duly accepted and paid:—Held, that the freighters had no insurable interest in such bill. Manfield v. Maitland, 4 B. & Ald. 582; 23 R. R. 402.

An East India captain, having borrowed money from A., in order to secure him, arranged with B. that C. should draw bills on D. (A.'s agent at Calcutta) in favour of the captain, payable thirty days after the arrival of the ship; which bills A. was to indorse to B., who was to negotiate them in Calcutta, upon the captain's consigning to D. goods to double the amount of the bills:—Held, that B. had no insurable interest in these bills; and that, even if he had, he was not entitled to recover upon a policy describing them as bills of exchange. Palmer v. Pratt, 9 Moore, 358; 2 Bing. 185; 3 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 250; 27 R. R. 583.

The master of a ship drew a bill on his owners for supplies for the ship, and wrote on the bill, "If this be not honoured, the holder will insure the amount, and place the premium to the drawer's account." The bill being dishonoured, the holder insured the ship for three months, and declared interest in the bill, which was to be sufficient proof of interest; the ship was lost after the three months:—Held, that the owner of the bill was authorised to insure for his own benefit, and was warranted in insuring for three months, and that he might recover the premium against the drawer. Tasker v. Scott, 1 Marsh. 556; 6 Taunt. 234; 16 R. R. 608.

—— Invalid Hypothecation.]—A ship having put into a foreign port in a damaged state, the master borrowed money of a merchant there, for necessary repairs and disbursements; to secure which he drew bills upon his owner, and also executed an instrument which purported to be an hypothecation of the ship, cargo, and freight. By this instrument the merchant who advanced the money forebore all instrument beyond the amount necessary to insure the ship to cover the advances, and the master took upon himself and his owner the risk of the voyage, making the money payable at all events, and subjecting the ship to seizure and sale by virtue of process, "out of the High Court of Admiralty of England, or any court of vice-admiralty possessing jurisdiction at the port at which the ship might at any time happen to be lying, or to be according to the maritime law and custom of England," in the event of the bills being refused acceptance or dishonoured:—Held, that this not being such an hypothecation as could be enforced in the Court of Admiralty, the payment of the money borrowed not being made to depend upon the arrival of the vessel, the merchant had no insurable interest in the ship. Stainbank v. Shepard, 13 C. B. 418; 1 C. L. R. 609; 22 L. J., Ex. 341; 17 Jur. 1032; 1 W. R. 505—Ex. Ch.

Expenses of Cargo.]—A shipowner who has paid money in order to release the ship and cargo from a claim for salvage, has a lien on the cargo for the proportion of those expenses payable to him by the owners of the goods, and an insurable interest in the cargo in respect of such lien. Briggs v. Merchant Traders' Ship Loan and Assurance Association, 13 Q. B. 167; 18 L. J., Q. B. 178; 13 Jur. 787.

The plaintiff agreed with one W. for a sum of 10,000*l.* to transport the obelisk known as "Cleopatra's Needle" from Alexandria to London, and there to erect it upon some public site to be afterwards selected. To cover the expenses (about 4,000*l.*) plaintiff caused two policies to be effected with the respective defendants "upon the goods and merchandises in the good ship or vessel called 'The Cleopatra' iron vessel containing the obelisk . . . valued at 4,000*l.* . . . . against the risk of total loss only"; the risks insured against being the ordinary sea risks, and the suing and labouring clause being in the ordinary form. In the course of the voyage the "Cleopatra" got adrift in a storm in the Bay of Biscay; and was ultimately picked up by another steamer and carried into Ferrol, where the salvors detained her under a claim for salvage. The Admiralty Division awarded them 2,000*l.* salvage and costs. In actions upon the policies:—Held, 1. That the plaintiff, being the owner of the "Cleopatra," and having possession of the obelisk, and (possibly) a lien upon it for his expenditure, had a sufficient insurable interest, at least to the extent of his outlay: 2. That the true effect of both policies was, an insurance, not on "cargo," or "freight" only, but on the vessel and her cargo: 3. That, under the suing and labouring clause, the assured was entitled to recover the 2,000*l.* awarded to the salvors, but not the costs of the proceedings in the Admiralty Court, nor the expenses incurred by him in refitting the "Cleopatra" at Ferrol and towing her to London. Dixon v. Whitworth, 48 L. J., C. P. 538; 4 C. P. D. 371; 40 L. T. 718; 28 W. R. 184; 4 Asp. M. C. 326.

Advances on Ship—"Full interest admitted."]—A policy insuring cash advances on a ship is within 19 Geo. 2, c. 37, s. 1. Such a policy containing the term "full interest admitted" is avoided by that statute. Smith v. Reynolds (1 H. & N. 221; 25 L. J., Ex. 337; 4 W. R. 644); and De Mattos v. North (37 L. J., Ex. 116; L. R. 3 Ex. 185; 18 L. T. 797), followed. Berridge v. Man On Insurance Co., 56 L. J., Q. B. 223; 18 Q. B. D. 346; 56 L. T. 375; 35 W. R. 343; 6 Asp. M. C. 104—C. A.

Advance by Agent — Bill Accepted.] — A., having consigned a cargo to B., and drawn bills on him for the price of it in favour of C., his general agent, sends these bills, together with the bills of lading, to C., desiring him to forward them to B., in order that he might insure. He also draws a bill for 300*l.* on C., which is accepted. B. refuses to take to the cargo, or to accept the bills. C. then insures in his own name, informing A., who approves. The goods are lost, and C. sues on the policy:—Held, that the policy was good within 28 Geo. 3, c. 56; and that C. had an insurable interest to the amount of 300*l.* Wolff v. Horncastle, 1 Bos. & P. 316; 4 R. R. 808.

Advances for Transport of Coolies payable on their Arrival—Loss by Mutiny of Coolies.]—See Naylor v. Palmer, ante, col. 1107.

9. BOTTOMRY, RESPONDENTIA, MORTGAGE.

Bottomry—Policy decreed to be delivered up.]—One having no interest in the ship lends 300*l.* on a bottomry bond, and insures 450*l.* on the ship; policy decreed to be delivered up. One having no interest in a ship insures it, the assurance is void, though the policy runs interest or no interest. But if he is interested in the ship, he may insure more than the value of his interest. Where one insures a ship, if he would have any benefit of the insurance, he must renounce his interest in the ship. Goddart v. Garrett, 2 Vern. 269.

Insurance held Valid.]—One lends 250*l.* on a bottomry bond, and afterwards insures on the same ship. The ship is lost. He shall have both the benefit of the insurance and the money due on the bond too. Harman v. Vanhatton, 2 Vern. 716; Eq. Ca. Abr. 371.

What is Insurable Bottomry Interest.]—An instrument executed in a foreign port by the master of a ship, reciting that his vessel, bound to London, had received considerable damage, and that he had borrowed 1,077*l.* to defray the expenses of repairing her, proceeded as follows: "I bind myself, my ship, her apparel, tackle, &c., as well as her freight and cargo, to pay the above sum, with 12*l.* per cent. bottomry premium; and I further bind myself, ship, her freight and cargo, to the payment of that sum with all charges thereon, in eight days after my arrival at the port of London; and I do hereby make liable the vessel, her freight and cargo, whether she do or do not arrive at the port of London, in preference to all other debts or claims, declaring that this pledge or bottomry has now, and must have, preference to all other claims and charges, until such principal, with 12*l.* per cent. bottomry premium, and all charges, are duly paid":—Held, that this was an instrument of bottomry, for an intention sufficiently appeared from the whole of it that the lender should take upon himself the peril of the whole voyage; that the words, "my arrival," must be understood to mean "My ship's arrival;" and that the words, "I make liable the vessel, her freight and cargo, whether she do or do not arrive at London," were intended only to give the lenders a claim on the ship, in preference to other claims, in case of the ship's arrival at some other than the destined port, and not to provide for the event of the loss of the ship. Simmonds (or Simonds) v. Hodgson, 3 B. & Ad. 50; 1 L. J., K. B. 51—Ex. Ch. Overruling 3 M. & P. 385; 6 Bing. 114; 7 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 239.

The master of a ship borrowed money of the plaintiffs for repairs, and gave them, by way of security, bills drawn by him upon the owner of the ship and upon the consignee of the cargo, and also an instrument of hypothecation, by which he took upon himself and his owner the risk of the voyage, made the money repayable at all events, and the ship subject to seizure, and to process of the Admiralty Courts at any place, should the bill be not accepted or paid, the plaintiffs forbearing all interest beyond the amount necessary to insure the ship to cover their advances:—Held, that a court of admiralty would not enforce this instrument; and therefore, that the plaintiffs took no interest in the ship. Stainbank v. Fenning, 11 C. B. 51; 13 C. B. 418; 20 L. J., C. P. 226; 15 Jur. 1082.

—— Respondentia.]—An insurance on goods does not extend to a respondentia interest. Glover v. Black, 1 W. Bl. 306, 399, 405, 422.

—— Joint-bond.]—An action cannot be maintained on a policy where the plaintiff's interest is founded on a bottomry bond made jointly to the plaintiff and another, although they are general partners in trade. Everth v. Blackburn, 6 M. & S. 152; 2 Stark. 66.

—— Damages.]—Where repairs are ordered by the underwriters, for the payment of which a bottomry bond is given, and they refuse to pay it on the arrival of the ship, in consequence of which the ship is sold, they are liable for all the damage which accrues to the owner in consequence of that refusal. Da Costa v. Newnham, 2 Term Rep. 407.

—— East India Trade.]—The 7 Geo. 1, c. 21, s. 2, prohibiting loans of bottomry by British subjects, upon foreign ships engaged in the East India trade, is repealed. The India, Br. & Lush. 221; 33 L. J., Adm. 193; 12 L. T. 316.

—— Total Loss.]—An assured on bottomry cannot recover against the underwriter, unless there has been an actual total loss of the ship; for if the ship exists in specie in the hands of the owners, though under circumstances that would entitle the assured on the ship to abandon, it will prevent its being an utter loss within the meaning of the bottomry bond. Thomson v. Royal Exchange Assurance Co., 1 M. & S. 30; 14 R. R. 388.

A lender on bottomry cannot recover if a loss happens by capture, if it is such as to occasion a total loss; but if the ship is taken and detained for a short time and yet arrives at the port of destination within the time limited (if time is mentioned in the condition), the bond is not forfeited, and the obligee may recover. Joyce v. Williamson, 3 Dougl. 164.

There is no average or salvage on a bottomry bond. Ib.

—— Constructive.] — The conditions of a bottomry bond provided for its defeasance on payment of the amount of the bond, "or, in case of the loss of the ship or vessel, such an average as by custom shall have become due on the salvage, or if on the voyage the ship or vessel should be utterly lost, cast away, or destroyed." The ship having become a constructive total loss, the bondholder, by a decree in the Admiralty Court, obtained payment to him of the proceeds of the ship, which had been paid into court, and which were insufficient; the court holding that a bottomry bond was only discharged by payment or by an absolute total loss, and that the condition providing for defeasance on payment of such average as by custom should have become due, did not refer to the case of a constructive total loss. In an action by the bondholder on a policy of insurance upon the bond:—Held, that the doctrine of constructive total loss was not applicable to a policy of insurance on bottomry, and that the condition of defeasance did not apply to the case of a constructive total loss. Broomfield v. Southern Insurance Co., 39 L. J., Ex. 186; L. R. 5 Ex. 192; 22 L. T. 371; 18 W. R. 810.

—— Foreign Law, how far Applicable to English Policy.]—A policy of marine insurance was effected with English underwriters by an English merchant upon goods shipped in a French ship, and it was thereby provided that general average was to be payable as per judicial foreign statement. The ship was damaged by a collision and put into port for repairs, the cargo, however, being uninjured. The master, not having funds to do the necessary repairs, gave a bottomry bond on ship, freight, and cargo. The ship and freight proving insufficient to satisfy the bond, the assured had to pay the deficiency in order to obtain possession of his goods :—Held, that the policy was not to be construed according to French law, except so far as the parties had expressly stipulated that it should be, and that there being no loss by perils of the sea according to English law, the assured could not recover from the underwriters the amount which he had paid as above mentioned. Greer v. Poole, 49 L. J., Q. B. 463 ; 5 Q. B. D. 272 ; 42 L. T. 687 ; 28 W. R. 582 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 300.

—— Freight Earned and Received.]—A ship with a cargo on board, left Pernambuco on a voyage to Liverpool on the 29th June, 1839 ; in proceeding out of the harbour at Pernambuco she struck on a rock, and was obliged to put back to be repaired. The master, after several surveys, and with the concurrence of the persons to whom he had been addressed by the owner to procure a cargo, proceeded to repair the ship, the repairs continuing from the 29th of June, 1839, till the 4th of January following. The expenses of the repairs amounted to 7,132*l.* 3*s.* 8*d.*, a sum much exceeding the value of the ship and freight, and which sum the master, not being able to procure it in any other manner, was compelled to borrow on bottomry, and accordingly executed a bottomry bond, charging the ship, freight and cargo. The cargo, which had been necessarily taken out during the repairs, was reshipped, and the ship sailed on the 6th January, 1840, and arrived with the cargo at Liverpool ; the obligees of the bottomry bond received the freight under a decree of the Court of Admiralty :—Held, in an action against the underwriters on freight claiming for a total loss, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, in respect either of a total or of a partial loss of freight, the freight having actually been earned, and its receipt by the obligees of the bottomry bond being in law a receipt by the plaintiff. Benson v. Chapman, 8 C. B. 950 ; 2 H. L. Cas. 696 ; 13 Jur. 969.

Lender on Respondentia not Liable for Average Losses—Aliter by Law of Denmark.]—Action on policy upon respondentia bond on ship and goods at and from B. to C. The ship was Danish, and an average loss was sustained on goods to the amount of 6*l.* 15*s.* per cent. The plaintiff by the Danish law was required to contribute, as holder of the respondentia bond, and having so contributed sued his English underwriters :—Held, that the underwriters were not liable, as by English law the lender on respondentia is not liable for average losses. Walpole v. Ewer, 2 Park, Ins. (8th ed.) 898.

Mortgage of Ship—Policy by Mortgagor on behalf of Mortgagee—Barratry by Mortgagor as Master.]—A mortgagee advanced the part owner of a ship a sum of money upon a mortgage of his shares in the ship, it being a part of the arrangement that the mortgagor should be the master of the ship, and that an insurance should be effected by the mortgagor to cover the interest of the mortgagee. In pursuance of the arrangement the mortgagor caused an insurance to be effected to cover the interest of the mortgagee and his own interest. The perils covered by the policy of insurance included perils of the sea and barratry of the master and mariners. The ship having been lost, as the underwriters of the policy alleged, by the barratry of the mortgagor as master :—Held, that, assuming the allegation to be true, then, if the mortgagor was master for the mortgagee, the mortgagee was entitled to recover against the underwriters for a loss by barratry ; and if the master was not master for the mortgagee, the mortgagee was entitled to recover for a loss by perils of the sea. Small v. United Kingdom Marine Mutual Insurance Assn., 66 L. J., Q. B. 736 ; [1897] 2 Q. B. 311 ; 76 L. T. 828 ; 46 W. R. 24 ; 8 Asp. M. C. 293—C. A.

—— Mortgagees—Insurance against Absolute Total Loss—Payment off.]—The mortgagees of a ship agreed with the mortgagors to effect an insurance on the ship at the mortgagors' expense, the policy to be held by them as part of their security. After the ship had sailed, the mortgagees effected an insurance against absolute total loss only. On the voyage the ship was driven ashore in a gale, and having become a constructive total loss, notice of abandonment was given by the mortgagees to the underwriters. The mortgagees immediately gave notice that they would look to the mortgagees as if they were their underwriters for a full insurance, and recovered from them the full value of the ship. The ship remained for two months exposed to the perils of the sea, when she became a complete wreck, and was then sold without prejudice to the rights of the parties. After the sale, but before this action, the mortgage was paid off :—Held, in an action by the mortgagees against the underwriters claiming for an absolute total loss, that the mortgagees, though their mortgage had been paid off, had an insurable interest in the ship, the mortgagors having ceded to them their rights under the policy when they were paid the full value of the ship. Levy v. Merchants Marine Insurance Co., 1 Cab. & E. 474 ; 52 L. T. 263 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 407.

10. Commission.

Nature of.]—A., residing in Dublin, having agreed with B. & C. at Jamaica to send out two ships annually, for which they were to provide cargoes, to be consigned to him, chartered a ship which was to proceed from Bristol to St. Thomas, where she was to deliver an outward cargo (the property of another person), and thence to Jamaica, where she was to take in a cargo from B. and C. for Dublin, and, by the terms of the charterparty, A., in consideration of guaranteeing the homeward cargo, was to receive a commission of 2½ per cent. upon the homeward freight. The ship was captured on her passage from St. Thomas to Jamaica :—Held, that A. had not then an insurable interest either in the commission on the freight or in the commission on the sale of the homeward cargo. Knox v. Wood, 1 Camp. 543 ; 10 R. R. 746.

Legality.]—An insurance on the "commission, privileges," &c., of the captain of a ship in the African trade, is legal. King v. Glover, 2 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 206 ; 9 R. R. 638.

11. Expected Losses.

On Collisions.]—Quære, whether an insurance against damages, that a shipowner may be liable to pay in consequence of his ship running down another, is not illegal. Delaney v. Robson, 5 Taunt. 605. See Taylor v. Dewar, 5 B. & S. 58 ; 33 L. J., Q. B. 141 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 361 ; 10 L. T. 267 ; 12 W. R. 579.

On Exchange.]—An underwriter does not insure against any loss that may arise from the difference of exchange. Thelluson v. Bewick, 1 Esp. 77.

12. Wagering Policies.

General Rule.]—A policy containing any of the words forbidden by 19 Geo. 2, c. 37, s. 1, is illegal, if the insurance relates simply to "ship {and/or} ships, steamer {and/or} steamers," and does not exclude British vessels. Allkins v. Jupe, 46 L. J., C. P. 824; 2 C. P. D. 375; 36 L. T. 851.

A policy was affected upon commission and profit upon "ship {and/or} ships, steamer {and/or} steamers"; and the following clause was inserted: "Warranted free from all average and without benefit of salvage, but to pay loss on such part as shall not arrive." The goods to which the commission and profit insured related were shipped on board a British vessel, which was lost by the perils of the sea. The assured having sued to recover the amount of the underwriter's subscription, or, if the policy were void, the premium paid by the assured:—Held, that the policy was rendered illegal by 19 Geo. 2, c. 37, s. 1, for the insurance was "without benefit of salvage," and the terms of the policy did not exclude British ships. Ib.

Held, also, that the illegality was so far the fault of the assured that he could not recover back the premium. Ib.

The insured is entitled to recover as for a total loss, upon a mixed policy of insurance of a peculiar sort, though a valued policy, if a fair one, and within the exception of 19 Geo. 2, c. 37, s. 2. Da Costa v. Firth, 4 Burr. 1966.

On Profits.]—A policy on profits made "free from average, but without benefit of salvage to the assurer," is void under 19 Geo. 2, c. 37, s. 1. De Mattos v. North, 37 L. J., Ex. 116; L. R. 3 Ex. 185; 18 L. T. 797. S. P., Mortimer v. Broadwood, 20 L. T. 398; 17 W. R. 653.

An insurance on profits on goods laden on board a ship is an insurance on goods within 19 Geo. 2, c. 37, s. 1. Smith v. Reynolds, 1 H. & N. 221; 25 L. J., Ex. 337; 4 W. R. 644.

Therefore a policy declared to be "on profit on cotton, say 150 bales, said profits valued at 350*l.*, and in case of loss or accident, the policy to be considered a sufficient proof of interest, and the policy warranted free from average, and without benefit of salvage, that is, should the vessel from any cause whatever be unable to bring on her cargo, then a total loss is to be paid," is a policy on goods within 19 Geo. 2, c. 37, s. 1, and is therefore void as containing terms prohibited by that statute. Ib.

No Property.]—An agreement to pay 20*l.* to the defendant at the next port a ship should reach, provided that, if she did not save her passage to China, he would pay to the plaintiff 1,000*l.* at the end of one month after she arrived in the river Thames, without reference to any property, though one of the parties had some goods on board liable to suffer by the loss of the season, is a wagering policy. Kent v. Bird, Cowp. 583.

An insurance "on the ship, at and from Bristol to St. Thomas and Jamaica, and thence back to Dublin, on commission valued at 1,000*l.*," which appeared to bear insurance upon the commissions expected to arise upon the sale and disposition by the plaintiff in Dublin, of produce expected to be shipped on board the ship at Jamaica, is a wagering policy. Knox v. Wood, 1 Camp. 543; 10 R. R. 746.

Proof of Interest.]—A memorandum as follows: "In consideration of forty guineas for 100*l.* received of ——, we, who have hereunto subscribed our names, do for ourselves, assume, engage and promise that we respectively will pay unto the —— the sum and sums of money which we have hereunto respectively subscribed, in case the Imperial Brazilian mining shares be done at or above 100*l.* per share, on or before the 31st December, 1829," is a policy of insurance within 14 Geo. 3, c. 48, and void, the assured not being interested in the subject-matter insured or his name mentioned in the body of the instrument. Paterson v. Powell, 2 M. & Scott, 399; 9 Bing. 320; 2 L. J., C. P. 13.

If a policy dispenses with all proof of interest, it is a wagering policy within 19 Geo. 2, c. 37, and void; but if the insurer must prove his interest, and the policy only saves him the trouble of shewing its amount, it is a valued policy and good. Murphy v. Bell, 4 Bing. 567; 1 M. & P. 493; 6 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 118; 29 R. R. 630.

Where a policy stipulated "that the goods insured were and should be valued at five tierces of coffee, valued at 27*l.* per tierce, say 135*l.*, that policy to be deemed sufficient proof of interest":—Held, that it was void under the statute. Ib.

Where an insurance is interest or no interest the plaintiff is not required to prove his interest, for the defendant cannot controvert that. Depaba v. Ludlow, 1 Comyns Rep. 360.

Abandonment.]—A wagering policy cannot be abandoned by the assured at any time. Kulen Kemp v. Vigne, 1 Term Rep. 304.

Interest or no Interest.]—Wager policies, interest or no interest, were formerly valid. Asseviedo v. Cambridge, 10 Mod. 77.

History of policies with these words; they have proved a great temptation to fraud. See Saddlers' Co. v. Badcock, 2 Atk. 556.

Policy, interest or no interest, without benefit of salvage. The ship was captured, but afterwards arrived safe at her port of delivery:—Held, that the underwriters were liable. Spencer v. France, cited, 2 Burr. 695.

Warranted free from all Average and without Benefit of Salvage—19 Geo. 2, c. 37—21 & 22 Geo. 3, c. 48—Ireland.]—A policy containing a provision that the property insured is warranted free from all average and without benefit of salvage, and that no further proof of interest than the policy shall be required is a wagering policy; but is not void at common law and is valid in Ireland. The statute 19 Geo. 2, c. 37, does not apply to Ireland by 21 & 22 Geo. 3, c. 48 (Ir.) Keith v. Protection Marine Insurance Co., 10 L. R., Ir. 365.

Recapture—Total Loss—Wager Policy.]—On a policy, interest or no interest, a recapture after being in an enemy's port will not avail the insurer. Dean v. Dicker, 2 Str. 1250.

13. Valued Policies.

Validity.]—A valued policy of insurance is not to be considered as a wagering policy. Lewis v. Rucker, 2 Burr. 1167.

A wagering policy, and a policy on interest, are contracts distinct in their nature and incidents. Cousins v. Nantes, 3 Taunt. 512; 13 R. R. 696.

It must appear on the face of the policy of which species the contract is. Ib.

If the policy is in the common form, it is a policy on interest. Ib.

If goods are fraudulently overvalued in a policy with intent to cheat the underwriters, the contract is entirely vitiated, and the assured cannot recover even for the value actually on board. Haigh v. De la Cour, 3 Camp. 319; 13 R. R. 813. And see Amery v. Rogers, 1 Esp. 207.

Value Conclusive.]—In a valued policy the agreed total value is conclusive. Irving v. Manning, 1 H. L. Cas. 287. S. P., Erasmus v. Banks, infra.

On a valued policy, the insured cannot recover more than the actual loss which happened, at the time when he chose to abandon. Hamilton v. Mendes or Mendez, 2 Burr. 1198; 1 W. Bl. 276.

The value of the ship insured stated in the valued policy is in the absence of fraud conclusive between the parties, however largely in excess of the true value. Barker v. Janson, 37 L. J., C. P. 105; L. R. 3 C. P. 303; 17 L. T. 473; 16 W. R. 399.

In a valued policy, unless there is a charge of fraud, in a bill filed in chancery for discovery, to the effect that the value of the cargo insured is below the amount insured, it is sufficient if the defendant swears to the value as stated in the invoice. Aubert v. Jacobs, Wightw. 118.

A valued policy amounts to an agreement that the particulars of value shall not be inquired into—per Wood, B. Ib.

A policy was effected for 6,000*l.* on a ship valued at 6,000*l.* She was run down and sunk by another ship, and the underwriters paid the owners the 6,000*l.* as for a total loss. Afterwards the sum of 5,000*l.* was recovered in the Court of Admiralty in respect of her against the owners of the other ship. Her real value was 9,000*l.*; and there was no other insurance upon her:—Held, that as between the underwriters and the assured, her value must be taken to be 6,000*l.* for all purposes. North of England Iron Steamship Insurance Co. v. Armstrong, 39 L. J., Q. B. 81; L. R. 5 Q. B. 244; 21 L. T. 822; 18 W. R. 520.

Opening in Case of Partial Loss.]—The word "valued" is an estoppel on both parties in case of a total loss, but not in case of a partial loss (agreed). Erasmus v. Banks, cited, 3 Dougl. 86.

An average loss opens a valued policy. Le Cras v. Hughes, 3 Dougl. 81.

A party insured by one policy for 1,700*l.* on the ship "S.," valued at 3,000*l.*, and by another for 2,000*l.* on the same ship, valued again at 3,000*l.*, cannot receive more than 3,000*l.* on the two policies. Irving v. Richardson, 1 M. & Rob. 153; 2 B. & Ad. 193; 9 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 225.

The amount of the valuation can only be disputed on the ground of fraud, but the insurer's interest may be contested. Williams v. North China Insurance Co. 1 C. P. D. 757; 35 L. T. 884; 3 Asp. M. C. 342—C. A. S. P. Lidgett v. Secretan, infra.

What Included.]—Under a valued policy it may be shewn what it was that was intended to be valued, with a view to disputing interest in the whole subject of valuation. Williams v. North China Insurance Co., supra.

The assured upon a valued policy on freight is entitled to recover the whole amount, though part of the goods only was on board at the time the ship was lost; the rest being ready to be shipped. Montgomery v. Eggington, 3 Term Rep. 362; 1 R. R. 718.

By a time policy the ship, valued at 2,000*l.*, and goods, valued at 8,000*l.*, were insured in a barter voyage to the coast of Africa, and it was stipulated that the outward cargo should be considered homeward interest twenty-four hours after arrival at first port or place of trade, with liberty to extend the valuation of the homeward cargo. The vessel, with the outward cargo on board, arrived at Kinsembo, the first place of trade on the coast of Africa, and there landed a portion of her cargo; and after remaining at Kinsembo more than twenty-four hours, she sailed thence with the remainder, without having received any other goods there, and was totally lost:—Held, that the assured was only entitled to recover upon this policy the value of that portion of the cargo which was actually on board at the time of the loss. Tobin v. Harford, 17 C. B. (N.S.) 528; 34 L. J., C. P. 37; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 859; 10 L. T. 817; 12 W. R. 1062—Ex. Ch.

In an action against an underwriter upon a valued policy, evidence of the value of the goods on board having been gone into at the trial, and parts of the cargo not covered by the policy having been included in the calculation, the court sent the case back for a new trial. Richman v. Carstairs, 2 N. & M. 562; 5 B. & Ad. 651; 3 L. J., K. B. 28.

What are.]—A policy on "goods valued at 1,400*l.*" is a valued policy, without stating the particulars of goods valued. Franco v. Natusch, 1 Tyr. & G. 401.

A policy was effected upon freight, to "be valued at as under." The policy was in the usual form, containing the common memorandum, which was immediately followed by the words, "on freight, warranted free of capture, seizure, piracy, detention or the consequences of any attempt thereat." In the margin, nearly opposite but a little above these words, the sum of 1,300*l.* was written in figures:—Held, that this was not a valued policy. Wilson v. Nelson, 5 B. & S. 354; 33 L. J., Q. B. 220; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1044; 10 L. T. 523; 12 W. R. 795.

—— Declaration of Interest.]—Where there is a policy on goods as may be thereafter declared and valued, the declaration of interest, to be available, must be communicated to the underwriters, or some one on their behalf, before intelligence is received of the loss; but the declaration of interest is not a condition precedent, and, if none is made, the policy is then open instead of being valued, and, upon proof of interest at the trial, the assured will be entitled to recover. Harman v. Kingston, 3 Camp. 150; 13 R. R. 775.

Capture.]—Goods protected by a valued policy, being captured, were condemned as lawful prize, the captors paying the freight:—Held, that the assured might nevertheless recover as for a total loss. Marshall v. Parker, 2 Camp. 69; 11 R. R. 665.

Repairs.]—The owner of a vessel effected two policies of insurance upon her, one for the outward voyage, in which the risk was "at and from London to Calcutta, and for thirty days after arrival," and the other for the homeward voyage, in which the risk was "at and from Calcutta to London." In each policy the vessel was valued at a specific sum. The vessel arrived at Calcutta damaged from an injury received during the outward voyage by striking on a reef, and after the expiration of the outward policy, and when the risk under the homeward policy had attached, she was totally destroyed by fire. At that time her repairs rendered necessary by the damage sustained on her outward voyage had been begun, but were not finished. The underwriter admitted a liability to a partial loss under the outward policy, and a total loss under the homeward policy:—Held, that such losses were to be assessed under each policy as if the other policy had never been made, and that the loss under the outward policy was to be assessed on the principle of the assured being entitled to be paid the diminution in value of the vessel at the end of her voyage from the damage which she had received by striking on the reef, although all the expense of repairing such damage had not been actually incurred; and that in assessing the total loss under the homeward policy the underwriter was not entitled to any deduction from the valuation of the vessel in the policy in respect of the expense of such repairs which had not been incurred, as the valuation of a vessel in a valued policy is, in the absence of fraud or wagering, the conventional sum to be paid if the vessel is lost, whatever may then be her actual value. Lidgett v. Secretan, 40 L. J., C. P. 257; L. R. 6 C. P. 616; 24 L. T. 942; 19 W. R. 1088; 1 Asp. M. C. 95.

Rights of Underwriters to Damages from Vessel causing Loss.]—When a vessel insured by a valued policy is destroyed by collision, the underwriters, after paying the amount insured, are entitled to the damages recovered from the colliding vessel, although the amount insured by the policy is less than the actual value of the vessel insured. North of England Iron Steamship Insurance Co. v. Armstrong, 39 L. J., Q. B. 81; L. R. 5 Q. B. 244; 21 L. T. 822; 18 W. R. 520. See Simpson v. Thomson, 3 App. Cas. 279; 38 L. T. 1; 3 Asp. M. C. 567—H. L. (Sc.)

Right to Compensation paid by Sovereign State.]—The respondents effected with underwriters valued policies of insurance (including war risks) on a cargo, which was afterwards destroyed by the "Alabama," a Confederate cruiser, and the underwriters paid to the respondents as on an actual total loss the valued amounts, which were less than the real value. The United States, out of a compensation fund created after the loss and distributed under an act of congress passed subsequently to the loss, paid to the respondents the difference between their real total loss and the sum received from the underwriters. Under the act of congress no claim was allowed for any loss for which the party injured should have received compensation from any insurer, but if such compensation should not have been equal to the loss actually suffered, allowance might be made for the difference; and no claim was allowed by or on behalf of any insurer either in his own right or in that of the party insured:—Held, that the underwriters were not entitled to recover the compensation from the respondents. Burnand v. Rodocanachi, 51 L. J., Q. B. 548; 7 App. Cas. 333; 47 L. T. 277; 31 W. R. 65; 4 Asp. M. C. 576—H. L. (E.)

Whole Sum Recoverable.]—In the case of a valued policy on ship and cargo, the assured must recover the whole sum underwritten, because he could not have any return of premium for short interest, if the ship had arrived safe. MacNair v. Coulter, 4 Bro. P. C. 450.

Profits on Cargo.]—See Barclay v. Cousins, ante, col. 1128.

Value not Stated.]—Where the valuation clause in a policy is not filled up, but at the foot of the policy the amount of the insurance is inserted, such statement cannot be treated as the valuation, if without difficulty the value intended to be protected can be ascertained. Asfar v. Blundell, 65 L. J., Q. B. 138; [1896] 1 Q. B. 123; 15 R. 481; 73 L. T. 648; 44 W. R. 130; 8 Asp. M. C. 106—C. A.

Excess of Value beyond Amount insured warranted uninsured—Further Insurance to cover Risk of Underwriter's Insolvency.]—See General Insurance Co. of Trieste v. Cory, post, col. 1178.

14. Neutral or Hostile Property.

Whether Insurable.]—Neutral property taken by a king's ship, but ordered to be restored by the Court of Admiralty, though it pronounced the cause of seizure good, is a lawful object of insurance. Visger v. Prescott, 5 Esp. 184; 8 R. R. 846.

An insurance cannot be effected on neutral property, though bound to an enemy's port. Esposito v. Bowden, 7 El. & Bl. 763; 27 L. J., Q. B. 17; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1209; 5 W. R. 732—Ex. Ch.

And where an embargo had been laid on provisions in Ireland, an insurance on provisions on board a vessel to an enemy's port was void. Delmada v. Motteux, 1 Term Rep. 85, n.

An insurance by a subject of this country upon foreign property does not cover a loss by capture, on a war afterwards taking place between this country and that of the assured. Lee, Ex parte, 13 Ves. 64.

Where goods, the produce of Holland, purchased in that country during hostilities between Holland and Great Britain, by a British agent resident there and shipped for British subjects, were insured by them in this country:—Held, that this was a legal insurance. Bell v. Gilson, 1 Bos. & P. 345; 4 R. R. 823.

Every insurance on alien property by a British subject must be understood within this implied exception, that it shall not extend to cover any loss happening during the existence of hostilities between the respective countries of the assured and the assurer. Brandon v. Curling, 4 East, 410; 1 Smith, 85; 7 R. R. 592. S. P., Kellner v. Le Mesurier, 4 East, 396; 1 Smith, 72; 7 R. R. 581.

Legality—Insurance of Enemy's Property.]—Insurance of enemy's property is illegal, and no action can be maintained thereon. Bristow v. Towers, 6 Term Rep. 35; 3 R. R. 113, n.

Enemy's Property.]—An underwriter on French property in time of peace is not liable for a loss occasioned by capture by a king's ship during hostilities between France and England, which commenced after the policy was effected, and terminated before action brought. Gamba v. De Mesurier, 4 East, 407 ; 7 R. R. 590.

15. PRIZE.

Whether Insurable.]—Captors of a ship seized as a prize may insure their interest therein, and are not entitled to a return of premium, although afterwards adjudged to be no prize, and restitution is awarded to the owner by the Court of Admiralty. Boehm v. Bell, 8 Term Rep. 154 ; 4 R. R. 620.

After an order by the king in council, gazetted on the 5th September, 1807, to detain and bring into port all Danish vessels ; a hired armed ship of his majesty took off Lisbon, on the 10th, and carried in thither, a Danish vessel ; and without instituting any proceedings in the Admiralty Court there (though Portugal was an ally with England in the war), sold her cargo to defray the expense of repairs and took in a loading on freight for London, with which she sailed on 3rd November, on which day hostilities were declared against Denmark, by another order of council ; and on 12th November, an insurance was made by order of the prize agent appointed by the captors, in consequence of a letter written by him in October, before the declaration of hostilities, directing the plaintiff to insure "for my account the Danish vessel, 'Knud Terkelson,' which has been detained by his majesty's armed ship 'Duchess of Bedford,' and for which I am authorised to act as agent" ; and concluding with expressing the agent's confidence that the plaintiff would do the best for the interest of the concerned ; and after such insurance was effected, the king, by another order of council, reciting the circumstances, adopted the insurance :—Held, that his majesty, having a lawful possession of the captured vessel through the aid of his officers and servants, whose possession was legalised by the previous order to detain Danish vessels, whether known to them or not at the time of the capture, had an insurable interest therein, and that it was competent for him to adopt the insurance made by order of the agent appointed by the captors. Routh v. Thompson, 13 East, 274 ; 11 East, 428 ; 10 R. R. 539.

Upon a joint capture by the army and navy, the officers and crews of the ships before condemnation have an insurable interest by virtue of the Prize Act, which usually passes at the commencement of a war. Le Cras v. Hughes, 3 Dougl. 81 ; 2 Park, Ins. (8th ed.) 568.

A prize taken by the navy and army conjointly was insurable, on account of the interest of the captors, under 45 Geo. 3, c. 72, s. 3, which granted a prize so taken to the joint captors after condemnation, subject only to the apportionment of the Crown as to the respective shares. Stirling v. Vaughan, 11 East, 619 ; 2 Camp. 225.

The expectation arising from the habit of the Crown as to restoring a prize taken without letters of marque is an insurable interest. Nichol v. Goodall, 10 Ves. 157.

Preliminary Claim.]—If a ship or a cargo insured is taken and condemned as prize, it is not necessary for the insured to make any claim or appeal before they call on the underwriters. Tyson v. Gurney, 3 Term Rep. 477.

Restitution—Hotchpot.]—The ship "Ross," belonging to the plaintiffs, and the ship "Atlantic" to Fisher & Co., and the cargoes to other persons, were insured on a former voyage, and captured by the Spaniards and carried into Spain ; and the underwriters upon the "Atlantic," of whom the defendant was one, paid as for a total loss. But while proceedings for condemnation were pending in the prize court in Spain, Cowan (residing there) having been severally empowered by the different owners to claim restitution, and to enter into compromise with the captors for giving up part of the cargoes on the restitution of the remainder and of the ships, and to defray all costs and charges thereon, and to forward the ships and goods restored to London, and to pay all demands on the ships and goods, agreed with the captors, subsequent to the cessation of hostilities, that upon giving up to them part of each cargo, the rest and the ships should be restored for the common benefit of the original owners of both ships and cargoes, in the lump. On which Cowan advised the plaintiffs that he should consign the "Atlantic" to them, with their own ship the "Ross," and draw bills on them for the general expenses of effecting the arrangement with the captors, and for the outfit of both ships, and referred to this information to guide them with respect to insurance, on which the plaintiffs insured the "Atlantic" by a policy, "on ships or on salvage charges, or on any interest as may be hereafter declared by the assured" ; and, after a subsequent capture of her by the French, brought an action against the defendant (who had also underwritten this second policy), and averred the interest to be first in themselves ; and, secondly, in Fisher & Co., the original owners of the ship "Atlantic" :—Held, that the plaintiffs had an insurable interest, as well on account of the whole property captured (of which they owned the other ship "Ross") having been restored at the sacrifice of part of the cargoes, for the common benefit of all, which created in them a hotchpot interest in the ship "Atlantic" ; and also as representing Cowan, who was empowered to act as an attorney for all the original owners, and to whom such restitution in hotchpot was made for their common benefit, and who had incurred charges and drawn bills on the plaintiffs on account of the common concern, which had been accepted and paid by them ; and Cowan having had authority to insure from Fisher & Co., the original owners, under their order, on obtaining restitution, to forward the ship to London, and to pay all claims and demands on her. Robertson v. Hamilton, 14 East, 522 ; 13 R. R. 303.

Commissioners for Sale of Prizes—Insurable Interest.] — Commissioners appointed by the Crown for the care, management and sale of Dutch ships brought to this country held to have an insurable interest in Dutch ships captured by a British man-of-war and on their way to England, under instructions to capture, with a view to their provisional detention. Held, also, that they might recover upon a loss of such ships by perils of the sea, though the loss happened after a proclamation for general reprisals against the Dutch. Lucena v. Crawfurd, 3 Bos. & P. 101 ; 2 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 269 ; 6 R. R. 623—Ex. Ch.

Commissioners appointed under an act of parliament to take possession of Dutch ships brought into ports of Great Britain, may insure in their own names such ships seized abroad, and whilst on their voyage to Great Britain. Crawfurd v. Hunter, 8 Term Rep. 13 ; 4 R. R. 576.

16. Legal or Equitable.

Trustee.] — Insurable interest exists in a trustee in respect of the legal interest in a ship, as in the cestui que trust in respect of the equitable. Yallop, Ex parte, 15 Ves. 67; 10 R. R. 24.

Cestui que trust.]—An equitable interest is insurable; and both the trustee and the cestui que trust have an insurable interest, the former in respect of his legal interest, and the latter in respect of the equitable interest. Houghton or Howton, Ex parte, 17 Ves. 251; 1 Rose, 177; 11 R. R. 73.

Foreigner Trustee.] — An American, who is owner of a ship only as trustee, and would not thereby be entitled to the privileges of the American flag under the laws of his own country, has a sufficient interest to maintain an action on a policy. Rhind v. Wilkinson, 2 Taunt. 237; 11 R. R. 551.

17. Averment and Proof of Interest.

Averment.] — A defendant must plead the plaintiff's want of interest specially. Mills v. Campbell, 2 Y. & C. 389.

It is necessary in a declaration on a policy truly to describe the interest on which the policy is effected. Cohen v. Hannam, 5 Taunt. 101; 14 R. R. 702.

So, the declaration must aver in whom the interest is vested, if it is a policy on interest. Cousins v. Nantes, 3 Taunt. 513; 12 R. R. 696.

A declaration on a policy on a foreign ship need not aver any interest in the assured; though there are no such words as "interest or no interest" in the policy. Nantes v. Thompson, 2 East, 385; 6 R. R. 458.

If a British subject has an interest in any part of a cargo on a valued policy, he may recover to the extent of the policy on a count averring interest in himself, if he proves some interest, although alien enemies may be interested in other parts of the cargo. Feise v. Aguilar, 3 Taunt. 506; 12 R. R. 695.

An averment of interest at the time of effecting the policy is immaterial, and need not be proved; it is sufficient if the plaintiff is interested at the commencement of the risk. Rhind v. Wilkinson, 2 Taunt. 237; 11 R. R. 551.

In a declaration on a policy, the plaintiff averred that Messrs. H., at the time of effecting the policy, and at the time of the loss, were interested in the cargo, which was the subject of the insurance, "to a large amount, to wit, to the amount of all the money ever insured thereon"; at the trial it appeared, that, previously to effecting the policy, Messrs. H. had admitted another mercantile house to a joint concern in the cargo insured:—Held, that the averment was supported by the evidence. Page v. Fry, 2 Bos. & P. 240; 5 R. R. 583.

A. & B., trading under the firm of A. & Co., engaged in an adventure, and afterwards received C. & D. as sharers therein; a policy was effected on account of A. & Co., and a loss having happened, the interest was averred in the declaration to be in A. & B. It was left to the jury to say whether all the adventurers were intended to be included, which they found in the affirmative:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover accordingly. Carruthers v. Shedden, 1 Marsh. 416; 6 Taunt. 14.

Joint owners of property insured for their joint use and on their joint account cannot recover upon a count on the policy, averring the interest to be in one of them only. Bell v. Ansley, 16 East, 141; 14 R. R. 322. And see Hiscox v. Barrett, 16 East, 145, c.

Where the plaintiffs averred that they were the persons residing in Great Britain who received the order for and effected the insurance; this was considered as a material averment, and not sustained by evidence of a letter received by them after the policy was effected, directing them to make assurance; although the policy was originally on goods on board the ship called the "Ann," or ships, or by whatsoever other name the ship should be named; and the plaintiffs, upon the receipt of the letter, procured a memorandum to be made on the policy, signed by the defendant, declaring the interest to be on board the "Herald," the ship mentioned in the letter. Bell v. Janson, 1 M. & S. 201.

Where the plaintiff effected an insurance on a ship, as well in his own name, as for and in the name of all and every other person, in the usual form, for the benefit of S., an alien enemy, and procured a licence to legalise the voyage, and a loss happened; and two years afterwards S., by letter to the plaintiff, adopted the insurance:—Held, that the plaintiff might recover against the underwriter, averring the interest in S. Hagedorn v. Oliverson, 2 M. & S. 485; 15 R. R. 317.

Property in Ship—Proof.]—In an action on a policy, the property in the ship may be proved by parol evidence of the possession of the assured, unless disproved by the production of the written documents of the ship under the register acts. Robertson v. French, 4 East, 130; 4 Esp. 246; 7 R. R. 535.

The production of the register from the custom-house is conclusive evidence of the ownership. Marsh v. Robinson, 4 Esp. 98; 2 Anstr. 479; 3 R. R. 617.

Freight.]—A shipowner who has entered into contracts for freight, has an insurable interest in the freight, though the contract for freight is not in writing. Miller v. Warre, 7 D. & R. 1; 4 B. & C. 538; 1 Car. & P. 237; 4 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 8.

Goods.]—In an action on a policy on goods the bill of lading signed by the captain is not evidence to prove the plaintiff's interest in the goods. Dickson v. Lodge, 1 Stark. 226; 18 R. R. 764.

A bill of lading signed by a master of a vessel since deceased, for goods to be delivered to a consignee or his assigns, he paying freight, is admissible as evidence of the consignee having an insurable interest in the goods. Haddow v. Parry, 3 Taunt. 303; 12 R. R. 666.

But if the master guards his acknowledgment by saying, "contents unknown," so that he does not charge himself with the receipt of any goods in particular, the bill of lading alone is not evidence, either of the quantity of the goods or of property in the consignee. Ib.

To prove an interest in the insured, the production of the bill of lading, and the evidence of the captain of the ship that he had the goods mentioned in it on board, are sufficient. M'Andrew v. Bell, 1 Esp. 373.

A shipowner, who was in the habit of receiving shipments of cotton to be carried on deck under a clean bill of lading, at his own risk, entered into open policies of insurance as to which he was bound, according to usage, to declare all his risks in order of shipment, and rectify any mistake even after loss known. His agent, by negligence or mistake, gave a clean bill of lading for a certain shipment and gave no notice to him, but such shipowner, on discovering the omission, altered his declaration by inserting this shipment, though after loss known: —Held, that the shipowner had an insurable interest, as at law a written contract cannot be varied on the ground of negligence or mistake, and that he was entitled to alter the declaration. Stephens v. Australian Insurance Co., 42 L. J., C. P. 12; L. R. 8 C. P. 18; 27 L. T. 585; 21 W. R. 228; 1 Asp. M. C. 458.

The mere fact of a person's name appearing in a bill of lading as the shipper and consignee of the goods is only primâ facie, and not conclusive evidence that such person has an insurable interest in such goods. Seagrave v. Union Marine Insurance Co., 1 H. & R. 302; 35 L. J., C. P. 172; L. R. 1 C. P. 305; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 358; 14 L. T. 479; 14 W. R. 690.

S., who was a broker, sold for his principals on commission a cargo of goods, which were shipped under a bill of lading, which made the goods deliverable to the order of S. or his assigns, and he retained the possession of such bill of lading until the purchaser had accepted a bill for the amount of the goods. S. was not a factor, but a mere agent, who had not possession of the goods, or any lien on them for advances, commission, or otherwise. The goods were lost on the voyage; and in an action upon a policy which S. had effected upon the cargo, the jury found that there was no sale of the goods until after their loss; and the judge ruled that S. had an insurable interest, as the bill of lading made the goods deliverable to him or his assigns:—Held, that such ruling was wrong as a matter of law, and that S., having in fact nothing to suffer, and incurring no liability by the loss, had no insurable interest. Ib.

Subscription to Policy.]—In an action on a policy on a foreign ship, where there is a stipulation that the policy shall be sufficient proof of interest, if there is judgment by default, the plaintiff, on the writ of inquiry, need only prove the defendant's subscription to the policy, without giving any evidence of interest. Thelluson v. Fletcher, 1 Dougl. 315; 1 Esp. 73.

Searcher's Report.]—A copy from the custom-house of the searcher's report of the cargo kept there is evidence. Johnson v. Ward, 6 Esp. 48.

Inclination of the Courts to favour Interest.]—It is the duty of the court always to lean in favour of an insurable interest, if possible, for it seems to me that after underwriters have received the premium, the objection that there was no insurable interest is often, as nearly as possible, a technical objection, and one which has no real merit, certainly not as between the assured and the insurer—per Brett, M.R. Stock v. Inglis, 53 L. J., Q. B. 356; 12 Q. B. D. 564; 51 L. T. 449; 5 Asp. M. C. 294—C. A. See S. C., on app. ante, col. 1123.

1. CONSTRUCTION GENERALLY.

Warranty or Representation.]—A representation is a statement or an assertion made by one party to the other, before or at the time of the contract, of some matter or circumstance relating to it. It is not an integral part of the contract, and the contract is not broken, although the representation proves to be untrue, unless it was made fraudulently, and except in the cases of marine policies of insurance. Behn v. Burness, 3 B. & S. 751; 32 L. J., Q. B. 204; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 620; 8 L. T. 207; 11 W. R. 496—Ex. Ch.

Whether a descriptive statement in a written instrument is a mere representation, or whether it is a substantive part of the contract, is a question of construction for the court to determine. Ib.

A statement in a contract descriptive of the subject-matter of it, or of some material incident thereof, when intended to be a substantive part of the contract, is generally regarded as a warranty or a condition on the failure or non-performance of which the other party may, provided the condition has not been partially executed in his favour, repudiate the contract in toto. Ib.

In policies and charterparties the word "warranty" is synonymous with condition. Ib.

Whatever is written in the margin of a policy of insurance is a warranty, and must be literally complied with. De Hahn v. Hartley, 1 Term Rep. 343; 2 Term Rep. 186; 1 R. R. 221.

If a stipulation is written on a separate paper, though pinned or wafered to the policy, it is not a warranty, but only a representation. Pawson v. Barnevelt, 1 Dougl. 12, n.

A warranty inserted in a policy must be literally and strictly complied with: a representation to the underwriter need only be substantially performed; but, if false in a material point, it will avoid the policy. Pawson v. Watson, Cowp. 785; 1 Dougl. 11, n.

A warranty does not include any thing not necessarily implied in it; therefore a warranty that a ship should have twenty guns was held not to mean also that she should have the necessary complement of men to work all the guns. Hyde v. Bruce, 3 Dougl. 213. And see per Lord Eldon, Rees v. Berrington, 2 Ves. 541.

A false warranty in a policy will vitiate it, though the loss happens in a mode not affected by the falsity. Woomer or Woolmer v. Muilman, 1 W. Bl. 427; 3 Burr. 1419.

The statements as to the state of the ship and as to the voyage contained in a slip of paper attached to the policy by a wafer, held not to be a warranty but representations only. Bize v. Fletcher, 1 Dougl. 12, n. (4).

Extent of.]—A representation made to the first underwriters extends to all the others. Barber v. Fletcher, 1 Dougl. 305.

But in another case it was doubted how far a representation made to one underwriter should be taken to extend to the rest, and what should be evidence of it. Marsden v. Reid, 3 East, 572; 7 R. R. 516. And see Bell v. Carstairs, 14 East, 374; 2 Camp. 544; 12 R. R. 557; 11 R. R. 593.

The rule that a representation made to the first underwriter is made to the other underwriter questioned by Lord Ellenborough. Forester v. Pigon, 1 M. & S. 13; 3 Camp. 380.

No evidence can be received of representations made by the insurance broker to other underwriters than the defendant, subsequently to the first underwriter; and evidence of representations to the first underwriter is received more on precedent than on reason. Brine v. Featherstone, 4 Taunt. 869; 14 R. R. 689. See also Provincial Insurance Co. v. Leduc, post, col. 1162.

By Broker.]—A representation made by an insurance broker when the names of the underwriters are put upon a slip, is binding on the assured, unless qualified or withdrawn by some communication upon the subject between that time and the execution of the policy. Edwards v. Footner, 1 Camp. 530.

The broker who insured shewed to the underwriters a paper detached from the policy stating that the ship was to sail with twelve guns and twenty men. There were no men or guns on board when the policy was subscribed and only ten guns and six swords and sixteen men when she sailed:—Held, that the statement was a representation and not a warranty, and that the policy was in force. Pawson v. Ewer, 1 Dougl. 12, n.

2. Nationality.

And see 7, Neutrality.

Insuring a ship by an English name does not amount to a warranty or a representation that she is an English ship. Clapham v. Cologan, 3 Camp. 382.

Where a policy described the insurance to be on goods on board the ship called "The American ship President," this was taken to be all the name of the ship, and not a warranty of her being an American ship called the "President." And where the policy, after such name, had the words "or by whatever other name the ship should be called," it was holden to be no variance that the real name of the ship was the "President"; the indentity of the ship meant to be insured with that name being proved. Le Mesurier v. Vaughan, 6 East, 382; 2 Smith, 492; 8 R. R. 500. S. P., Hall v. Molineux, 6 East, 385, n.; 8 R. R. 503.

A warranty of a ship being American does not mean that she is American built, but that she is the property of an American subject. Wilson v. Backhouse, Peake's Add. Cas. 119.

A policy was effected by the shippers on gold, portion of the cargo of a ship to sail from London to Constantinople. At the time of the insurance the vessel was English, but subsequently, and before sailing, she was sold to a Russian company and received a certificate as a Russian ship, her British certificate of registry being cancelled. On the voyage she was wrecked in Turkish waters and within the jurisdiction of the port of Constantinople, where by convention all shipping disputes were determined by the law of the country whose flag the ship bears, in the consular court of such country. The gold was taken on shore before any expense was incurred about the remainder of the cargo or the ship, and was deposited with the Russian authorities. The ship having become a total wreck, and legal proceedings having been taken in the court of the Russian consulate, the owners of the gold were compelled, in order to obtain possession of it, to pay a sum of money for salvage claims and legal expenses incurred in respect of the ship and the rest of the cargo, and adjudged to be chargeable on the gold. Some of these charges would not have been incurred had the vessel remained under the English flag and subject to the English law, and had the salvage claims been adjusted according to that law:—Held, first, that there being no express warranty in the policy against change of nationality, none could be implied, and the insurers could not take advantage of the change to escape from or to limit their liability. Dent v. Smith, 38 L. J., Q. B. 144; L. R. 4 Q. B. 414; 20 L. T. 868; 17 W. R. 646.

Held, also, that these payments were a loss, the direct consequence of the wreck which enabled the Russian authorities to enforce them, and as such were within the perils insured against, and must be borne by the insurers. Ib.

A representation that cargo insured was Swedish, which was true in fact, though contradicted by sentence of a French admiralty court:—Held, not to prevent the assured recovering. Nonnen v. Reid, 16 East, 176.

Absence of documents required by French ordinances:—Held, not to prevent assured from recovering. Ib.

Policy on a ship warranted American. Sentence of Frence prize court at St. Domingo, condemning the ship to captor either as not being American, or as not being properly documented as American, is conclusive evidence that she was not American. Baring v. Claggett, or Christie, 3 Bos. & P. 201; 5 East, 398; 4 R. R. 520; 6 R. R. 759; 7 R. R. 719.

A ship warranted to belong to a particular state must be properly documented as such. Rich v. Parker, 7 Term Rep. 705; 4 R. R. 552. S. P., Barzillay v. Lewis, 3 Dougl. 126.

3. Seaworthiness.

a. Sufficiency Generally.

Implied Warranty of.]—There is an implied agreement on the part of the assured that the ship insured shall be in a proper state and condition to perform the voyage. Mills v. Roebuck, 1 Park, Ins. (8th ed.) 460.

Disclosure of Defects.]—As an assured impliedly warrants the ship insured to be seaworthy, whatever forms an ingredient in seaworthiness is not necessary to be disclosed by the assured to the underwriter in the first instance, unless information upon the subject is particularly called for, and then the assured must disclose truly what he knows in the respect required. Haywood v. Rogers, 4 East, 590 ; 1 Smith, 289 ; 7 R. R. 638.

At what Period.]—A ship may be seaworthy in harbour, in a state which would not be sufficient for a voyage ; therefore, on a policy at and from the port at which the ship was undergoing repairs at the time of insurance :—Held, that although not seaworthy for a voyage, she was sufficiently so in harbour, and there was no breach of the implied warranty. Hibbert v. Martin, 1 Camp. 538. S. P., Forbes v. Wilson, 1 Park on Ins. (8th ed.) 472.

A ship is seaworthy if she is sufficiently furnished for the service in which she is for the present time engaged. Annen v. Woodman, 3 Taunt. 299 ; 12 R. R. 663.

Therefore, a ship much out of repair is seaworthy in harbour, and is protected under the word "at." Ib.

The implied warranty of seaworthiness, in a policy on a ship, does not extend to her being seaworthy at every port which she leaves in the course of her voyage. Holdsworth v. Wise, 1 M. & Ry. 673 ; 7 B. & C. 794 ; 6 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 134 ; 31 R. R. 299.

The implied warranty of seaworthiness refers to the commencement of the risk ; the only exception is where pilots are, or a particular description of crew is, necessary in certain parts of the voyage. Hollingworth or Hollingsworth v. Brodrick, 7 A. & E. 40 ; 2 N. & P. 608 ; 8 L. J., Q. B. 80 ; 1 Jur. 430.

—— Different Stages of Voyage.]—A ship insured at and from New Orleans to Liverpool. She was lying on the mud in the Mississippi and was seaworthy for that position ; but her bottom was worm-eaten, so that she was unfit for a sea voyage. She sailed, and before reaching the sea her bottom was put into good repair :—Held, that the policy attached. Oliverson v. Loughman, 4 M. & S. 346.

Action for loss of ship insured by a time policy. Demurrer to a plea, that during the time for which the ship was insured, and before the loss, the ship was unseaworthy and might and ought to have been repaired and kept seaworthy by the assurer, the plea not alleging that the assurer knew of the unseaworthiness or that the non-repair caused the loss, upheld. Hollingworth v. Brodrick, supra.

Effect of sending to Sea in unseaworthy Condition.]—If a shipowner knowingly and wilfully sends his ship to sea in an unseaworthy condition, the knowledge and wilfulness are essential elements in the consideration of his claim to recover on an insurance policy. But there is no implied warranty of seaworthiness in a time policy. Dudgeon v. Pembroke, 46 L. J., Ex. 409 ; 2 App. Cas. 284 ; 36 L. T. 382 ; 25 W. R. 499 ; 3 Asp. M. C. 393—H. L.

Ship sinking in fine weather—Facts raising Presumption of Unseaworthiness.]—See Dudgeon v. Pembroke, supra, and cases supra, col. 1088.

Insurance of Goods — Unseaworthiness of Ship.]—Where the ship was unseaworthy at the commencement of the voyage and was obliged to put into a port, and some goods were spoilt and obliged to be sold :—Held, that the shipper of the goods could not recover against his insurer, although he knew nothing as to the seaworthiness or otherwise of the ship. Oliver v. Cowley, 1 Park, Ins. (8th ed.) 470.

Insurer not aware of Unseaworthiness.]—A ship sailed from the Thames repaired and seaworthy, as the owner and shipwright thought, but before reaching Portsmouth was leaky and was condemned as unfit to proceed :—Held, that the underwriters were discharged. Lee v. Beech, 1 Park, Ins. (8th ed.) 468.

From Capture.]—A ship, to be seaworthy, must be provided with storm-sails, and rendered as secure as possible from capture, as well as from the perils of the sea. Wedderburn v. Bell, 1 Camp. 1 ; 10 R. R. 615.

Neutrality.]—A neutral vessel is not seaworthy unless she is provided with documents to prove her neutrality. Steel v. Lacy, 3 Taunt. 285 ; 12 R. R. 658.

What Voyage.]—By the law of marine insurance there is an implied warranty in every insurance of a ship that the vessel shall be seaworthy, by which is meant that she shall be in a fit state as to repairs, equipment and crew, and in all other respects to perform the voyage insured, and to encounter the ordinary perils at the time of sailing upon it. If the assurance attaches before the voyage, it is enough that the state of the ship is commensurate to the risk ; and if the voyage is such as to require a different complement of men, or state of equipment in different parts of it, as if it was a voyage down a canal or a river, and thence to and on the open sea, it is enough if the vessel is, at each stage of the navigation in which the loss happened, properly manned and equipped for it. But the assured makes no warranty to the underwriters that the vessel shall continue seaworthy, or that the master or crew shall do their duty during their voyage, and their negligence or misconduct is no defence to an action on the policy when the loss has been immediately occasioned by the perils insured against. Biccard v. Shepherd or Commercial Marine Insurance Co. v. Namaqua Mining Co., 14 Moore, P. C. 471 ; 5 L. T. 504 ; 10 W. R. 136—P. C.

The seaworthiness, of which, in the absence of express stipulation, there is an implied warranty in every voyage policy, is a relative term depending on the nature of the ship as well as of the voyage insured. Clapham v. Langton, 34 L. J., Q. B. 46 ; 10 L. T. 875 ; 12 W. R. 1011—Ex. Ch. S. P., Burgess v. Wickham, 3 B. & S. 669 ; 33 L. J., Q. B. 17 ; 8 L. T. 47 ; 11 W. R. 992.

Therefore, on a policy "on a voyage from the Tyne to Odessa," it being shewn that the vessel was an iron steamer of very light draught of water, constructed for river navigation only, that this was disclosed to the underwriters before the policy was effected, and the dimensions of the vessel then stated to them, and that (though it was impossible to make her fit to encounter the ordinary perils of ocean navigation) the ship had been made as seaworthy as her size and construction would admit ; the underwriters were held liable on her being lost by the perils insured against. Ib.

Three vessels, insured on a voyage from L. to G., were warranted to sail from L. on or before the 15th of August. L. was on a river, and bridges crossed the river below L., so that the vessels could not insert their masts, and the depth of water would not allow of the heavier anchors and other apparel of the vessels being put on board. They all left L. before the 15th, and arrived at A., at the mouth of the river, where they were supplied with necessaries for a short coasting voyage to M., to which they proceeded, and were there fully provided for their long sea voyage to G. By a local law, vessels were required to go to M. for certificates to entitle them to sail, but they might have been fully equipped for sea at A. if the materials had been sent there from M.; but this would have caused expense and possibly delay. One of the vessels was ready to leave M. some days before the others, but was detained in order to have their company, on the alleged ground of safety. They all left M. on the 23rd, which was as soon as was practicable after their certificates had been granted; and they were subsequently lost at sea:—Held, that as the nature of the voyage required different preparations for different portions of it, and the vessels had been properly equipped for each portion, the warranties of seaworthiness had been complied with, and the vessels had "sailed on their voyage" before the 15th of August. Bouillon v. Lupton, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 113; 33 L. J., C. P. 37; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 422; 8 L. T. 575; 11 W. R. 966.

Held, also, that the delay of the third vessel was reasonable. Ib.

Though there are different degrees of seaworthiness, according to the nature of the voyage, yet, where there are several stages in a voyage, which involve different equipments, a vessel must be seaworthy for each stage at the commencement of each stage. Quebec Marine Insurance Co. v. Commercial Bank of Canada, infra.

—— Rules of Association.]—The rules of an insurance association provided that, "should any vessel entering the association proceed on an American voyage, her insurance should cease." Another rule was, that the managing underwriters should survey each ship insured, in hull and materials, once a year, without distinction, and order such stores and repairs as they might deem necessary, which stores must be got and repairs done on due notice being given, otherwise the ship should not be insured. The policies were all to be time policies for one year:—Held, that the effect of not complying with an order of the managing underwriters was, that the ship must be considered unseaworthy, and the policy which had before been effected on her void. Stewart v. Wilson, 12 M. & W. 11; 13 L. J., Ex. 27; 7 Jur. 1020.

—— Inland Policy.]—A policy headed "Inland Hull policy" insured the ship "West" against perils of lakes, rivers, canals, fires, jettisons, except damage from rottenness, inherent defects, and other unseaworthiness," "at and from Montreal to Nova Scotia." At the commencement of the voyage the boiler was defective, and after leaving Quebec, and on getting into salt water, the "West" met with bad weather and was lost:—Held, that the warranty of seaworthiness at the commencement of the voyage applied, although the policy was an inland policy, the voyage being expressed by the policy to be from Montreal to Halifax. Quebec Marine Insurance Co. v. Commercial Bank of Canada, 39 L. J., P. C. 53; L. R. 3 P. C. 234; 22 L. T. 559; 18 W. R. 769.

—— Express Warranty.]—The express provision as to seaworthiness in the policy did not exclude the implied warranty. Ib.

—— Inland Vessel used for Ocean.]—When a vessel built for inland navigation is insured for an ocean voyage, there is an implied warranty that she shall be made as seaworthy for the voyage as such a vessel can be made by ordinary available means. Turnbull v. Janson, 36 L. T. 635; 3 Asp. M. C. 433—C. A.

A steamer of light construction, built for inland navigation in Trinidad, was insured for the voyage out. On the voyage she broke in two at sea, and went down. In an action on the policy, the jury found that the vessel was not seaworthy as an ocean-going vessel, and was not made as seaworthy as she might have been by ordinary available means:—Held, that on these findings the defendant was entitled to judgment. Ib.

Policy on Salvage.]—In a voyage policy on salvage there is an implied condition or warranty of seaworthiness. Knill v. Hooper, 2 H. & N. 277; 26 L. J., Ex. 377; 5 W. R. 791.

It being now well established as a rule of law that in an insurance for a voyage, either on ship or on goods, or on freight, a warrant of seaworthiness, for the voyage of the ship insured, or of the ship in which the goods are carried, is to be implied, but seaworthiness being a relative term, and the question of what it involves in each case being one of fact, there is no exception to the rule in the case of an insurance on salvage, that is, on ship and cargo, in respect of the lien of the insured for salvage service rendered, there being no exclusion of such a warranty; and words in the policy, reciting that the ship and cargo must have been abandoned by the original crew and taken into port by the salvor, the insured, in whose interest the insurance is effected, do not amount to an implied exclusion of it, being merely explanatory of the interest insured. Ib.

The question to what extent the vessel, under such circumstances, is to be seaworthy, is for the jury, who will say whether the ship was, at the commencement of the voyage, in such a state as to be reasonably capable of performing it. Ib.

b. On Time Policy.

No Implied Condition.]—By the law of England, in a time policy effected on a ship then at sea, there is no implied condition that the ship shall be seaworthy on the day when the policy is intended to attach. Gibson v. Small, 4 H. L. Cas. 353; 1 C. L. R. 363; 17 Jur. 1131.

In a time policy, there is not an implied warranty that the ship is seaworthy wherever she may be, or however situated, at the commencement of the risk; but only that she is seaworthy so far as the assured could provide for her being so when the risk commenced; e.g. if she was in a port at the time that she was in a proper condition for such a port: if at sea, that she was seaworthy when the particular voyage commenced; the term "seaworthy" in a policy for time, as in a voyage policy, implying not necessarily fitness to go to sea, but fitness to encounter the hazards of the situation in which she is placed when the risk attaches. S. C., in the exchequer chamber, 16 Q. B. 128; 20 L. J., Q. B. 152; 15 Jur. 325.

A time policy contains no implied warranty of seaworthiness, either at the commencement of the risk or at any other time. Per Willes, J., in Thompson v. Hopper, El. Bl. & El. 1049; 27 L. J., Q. B. 441; 6 W. R. 857.

To a declaration on a policy alleged to have been made on the 1st of May, 1852, "at and from the meridian of the day of sailing from Suez, to the meridian of the 20th of March, 1853," averring that afterwards the ship set sail and departed from Suez, and that the day of her so sailing from Suez was after the 20th of March, 1852, and before the 20th of March, 1853, and that after the meridian of the day of sailing from Suez, and before the meridian of the 20th of March, 1853, the ship was by the perils of the sea wholly lost, the defendant pleaded that the ship was not at the time of sailing from Suez, or at any time on the day of sailing from Suez, or at any time afterwards during the continuance of the risk in the insurance mentioned, seaworthy: —Held, that the plea was no answer to the action, the policy being in substance a time policy; and, consequently, there being no implied warranty that the vessel was seaworthy on the day when the policy was intended to attach. Michael v. Tredwin, 17 C. B. 551; 25 L. J., C. P. 83.

In a time policy the law, in the absence of special stipulations in the contract, does not imply any warranty that the vessel should be seaworthy. Dudgeon v. Pembroke, 46 L. J., Q. B. 409; 2 App. Cas. 284; 36 L. T. 382; 25 W. R. 499; 3 Asp. M. C. 393—H. L. (E.)

Continuing Obligation.]—In an action brought for a total loss, by stranding, within the time of the running of a time policy, after leaving an intermediate port, the defence was that at the time of the loss the vessel was unseaworthy by reason of an insufficient crew, she having sailed from the intermediate port without sufficient hands to work the vessel, although she had sufficient crew at the time she started for the voyage:—Held, that the warranty of seaworthiness in a time policy, at the commencement of the risk, is not a continuing obligation cast upon the assured while the risk is running. Jenkins v. Heycock, 8 Moore, P. C. 351; 1 C. L. R. 406; 5 Moore Ind. App. 361.

Weather proximate cause of Loss—Constructive Total Loss.]—A wooden barque, over twenty years old, just past her half-time survey, was insured for twelve months from December 2nd. She sailed on December 3rd, reached Rio, and sailed again for Astoria. She met with heavy weather off the Horn, and had to run for Barbados, in consequence of straining and leaking. She was found to be not worth repairing, her timbers for the first time being found to be rotten, and it was found that the leakage was due to her defective state and the weather: —Held, that the proximate cause of the loss being weather, the underwriters were liable for a constructive total loss; no finding as to whether she was seaworthy when the risk began. Kenneth v. Moore, 10 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 547.

c. Carrying Goods.

Implied Condition.]—To an action by a shipowner against a shipper of goods to recover his proportion of average loss, he pleaded that his promise was subject to a condition, viz. that the ship was seaworthy at the commencement of the voyage, and that she was not seaworthy:—Held, a bad plea. Schloss v. Heriot, 14 C. B. (N.S.) 59; 32 L. J., C. P. 211; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 76; 8 L. T. 246; 11 W. R. 596.

He also pleaded, that there never was any express promise to the effect in the declaration mentioned; that the ship was unseaworthy at the commencement of the voyage, and that the average loss was occasioned and arose from and in consequence of such unseaworthiness:—Held, a good plea, inasmuch as it shewed that the shipowner's actionable negligence and misconduct produced the very damage for which he sought to recover contribution from the shipper. Ib.

Ship and Cargo.]—A policy was made "on wine in casks, on or under deck," in a named ship. The wine was stowed wholly on deck, and so loaded the ship was unable to stand the rough weather which she encountered, except by jettison of the wine; she was, however, in respect of herself and the underdeck cargo, at no time in very real danger, on account of the facility with which the deck cargo could be got rid of, which was effected by staving in the casks of wine. The weather was of the rough character to be expected at the time of the year. In an action against the underwriters for the loss of the wine: —Held, that the warranty of seaworthiness implied on voyage policies extends to the ship including the cargo, and is not fulfilled if the ship only can be made safe on an ordinary voyage by the destruction of the insured cargo. Daniells or Daniels v. Harris, 44 L. J., C. P. 1; L. R. 10 C. P. 1; 31 L. T. 408; 23 W. R. 86; 2 Asp. M. C. 413.

Deck Cargo.]—A ship sailing from British North America for a port in the United Kingdom, with part of the cargo on deck, in violation of 16 & 17 Vict. c. 107, ss. 170, 171, 172, is not a statutory unseaworthiness. Wilson v. Rankin, 35 L. J., Q. B. 87; L. R. 1 Q. B. 162; 13 L. T. 564; 14 W. R. 198—Ex. Ch. See, post, col. 1207.

Warranted no Iron—Steel.]—A policy of insurance on a ship contained a clause, "Warranted no iron, or ore, or phosphate cargo, exceeding the net registered tonnage." In an action on the policy against the underwriters:—Held, that the warranty was broken by shipping a quantity of steel in excess of the net registered tonnage. Hart v. Standard Marine Insurance Co., 58 L. J., Q. B. 284; 22 Q. B. D. 499; 60 L. T. 649; 37 W. R. 366; 6 Asp. M. C. 368—C. A.

Condition as to Goods.]—It is not a condition precedent to the attaching of a policy on goods against sea risks, that the subject of insurance should, at the commencement of the voyage, be fit to encounter the ordinary vicissitudes of a voyage. Koebel v. Saunders, 17 C. B. (N.S.) 71; 33 L. J., C. P. 310; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 920; 10 L. T. 695; 12 W. R. 1106.

Ship Overloaded—Discharge.]—A ship insured at and from a port, sailed on her voyage in an unseaworthy state, in consequence of having a greater cargo than she could safely carry. The defect was discovered before any loss accrued, and part of the cargo was discharged, and a loss subsequently accrued, in no degree attributable to her having been overladen in the early part of the voyage:—Held, that the underwriters were liable for such loss. Weir v. Aberdeen, 2 B. & Ald. 320; 20 R. R. 450.

Negligence of.]—Underwriters are responsible for the misconduct or negligence of the captain and crew, but the owner, as a condition precedent, is bound to provide a crew of competent skill. Shore v. Bentall, 7 B. & C. 798, n.; 1 M. & Ry. 111; 31 R. R. 302, n.

Where, in a policy on a voyage up the Mediterranean, on the coast of Spain, the underwriters stipulated that they would not be liable higher up the Mediterranean than Tarragona, the assured could not recover, where the captain of the ship, through entire ignorance of the coast, which the occasion and the terms of the policy required him to distinguish, went into Barcelona, an enemy's port, which is higher up than Tarragona; for this was either a deviation without any just cause, or there was a failure of an implied warranty on the part of the assured, that a captain and crew of competent skill and knowledge for the declared purpose of the voyage should be provided. Tait v. Levi, 14 East, 481; 13 R. R. 289.

Insufficiency.]—The underwriters were not liable where the crew was insufficient, in not having a person on board able to take the captain's place on his being dangerously ill, and the ship was consequently obliged to deviate from her course to find a person to direct her. Clifford v. Hunter, M. & M. 103; 3 Car. & P. 16.

The question, whether a ship, on a voyage from Madras to London, is not seaworthy if she has no person on board her, besides the captain, who is capable of navigating her, is a question of fact for the jury, and not a question of law to be determined by the judge. Ib.

As a full complement of men is not necessary in harbour, a ship does not seem to be seaworthy for want of a crew till she sails on the voyage without a crew. Annen v. Woodman, 3 Taunt. 299; 12 R. R. 663.

Where a ship sailed on her outward voyage from Liverpool to Cuba, with a crew of thirteen men, and, on her arrival at the latter place, three had died and two deserted there, and the captain could only procure eight men for the whole of the homeward voyage, and two for Montego Bay in Jamaica (ten men being a competent crew to navigate the vessel); and he accordingly touched at Montego Bay for the sole purpose of landing those two men and procuring others in their stead, which he did; and the vessel was lost by the perils of the sea in proceeding from thence on the voyage to Liverpool:—Held, that on a policy from Cuba to Liverpool, the ship was not seaworthy as to her crew for the whole of her homeward voyage when she sailed from Cuba; or that, even if she then had a sufficient crew, the touching at Montego Bay was a deviation; and that the circumstances of her having become seaworthy by having a sufficient crew at the time of the loss did not entitle the assured to recover against an underwriter on the policy. Forshaw v. Chabert, 6 Moore, 369; 3 Br. & B. 158; 23 R. R. 596. See also Graham v. Barras, post, col. 1163.

Absence.]—Where the assured have once provided a sufficient crew, the negligent absence of all the crew at the time of the loss is no breach of the implied warranty that the ship should be properly manned. Busk v. Royal Exchange Assurance Co., 2 B. & Ald. 73; 20 R. R. 350. And see Bishop v. Pentland, 7 B. & C. 214; 1 M. & Ry. 49; 6 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 6; 31 R. R. 177.

Where no Contract.]—A plea to an action on a policy that the master of the vessel on which the policy was effected had not entered into an agreement in writing with the seamen, pursuant to 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 19, s. 2, wherefore the voyage was illegal, is ill, as the non-compliance with the statute by the master did not make the voyage itself illegal or the vessel unseaworthy. Redmond v. Smith, 2 D. & L. 280; 8 Scott (N.R.) 250; 13 L. J., C. P. 159; 8 Jur. 711.

Number of.]—A warranty on the margin of a policy, "thirty seamen besides passengers," means thirty persons belonging to the ship's company, including cook, surgeon, boys, &c. Bean v. Stupart, 1 Dougl. 11.

e. Pilot.

Absence of.]—A ship, homeward bound to the port of London, received a pilot at Orfordness, as directed by 5 Geo. 2, c. 20, and dropped him before she reached her moorings in the river Thames, after which, before she was safely moored, an accident happened and the vessel was sunk; the underwriter on the ship and cargo was held discharged from his liability, there not being a pilot on board at that time, though it did not appear that the loss was directly imputable to want of skill in those who navigated the vessel. Law v. Hollingsworth, 7 Term Rep. 160. See Dixon v. Sadler, 5 M. & W. 415; 9 L. J., Ex. 48; and 8 M. & W. 895—Ex. Ch., supra, col. 1101.

A captain neglecting to employ a pilot where necessary, discharges the insurers. Hollingworth or Hollingsworth v. Brodrick, 7 A. & E. 40; 2 N. & P. 608; 8 L. J., Q. B. 80; 1 Jur. 430.

f. Repairs.

Insufficient.] — Where a vessel had been lengthened, and insured for a foreign voyage, but the new parts were not fastened with hanging knees:—Held, that she was not seaworthy for such a voyage at the commencement of the risk. Watt v. Morris, 1 Dow, 32.

To a declaration upon a policy for twelve months, which stated that the vessel was lost by the perils of the sea, a plea that, after the policy, the ship became unseaworthy, that she could have been rendered seaworthy, that the plaintiff neglected to repair her, and that by reason of the premises, she remained in an unseaworthy state until the time of the loss, is bad, as it should, at all events, have stated that the plaintiff knew of the unseaworthiness, and that he had an opportunity of repairing her. Hollingsworth v. Brodrick, supra.

Where a vessel is sent to sea in a state not fit for the particular voyage, and without encountering any more than ordinary risk is obliged, owing to the defective state in which she sailed, to put into a port for repair, the shipowner, though the defects were not known to him, and he has acted without fraud, cannot recover against the insurer the expenses of such repairs as were rendered necessary in consequence of the unseaworthy state of the vessel, though there is no warranty of seaworthiness. Fawcus v. Sarsfield, 6 El. & Bl. 192; 25 L. J., Q. B. 249; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 665.

g. Tackle and Furniture.

Cables.]—Under the implied warranty as to seaworthiness, it is necessary not only that the hull of the vessel should be tight, staunch, and strong, but that she should be also furnished with ground-tackling sufficient to encounter the ordinary perils of the sea; and therefore, where it appeared that the best bower-anchor and the cable of the small bower-anchor were defective, the vessel was not seaworthy. Wilkie v. Geddes, 3 Dow, 57; 15 R. R. 17.

In a policy by a member of a mutual insurance club, there was a memorandum that "all ships were to be inspected and approved by a committee of the club, and that all chain-cables were to be properly tested":—Held, in an action for a loss, that it was not a condition precedent which made it necessary for the insured to prove that a chain-cable had been tested previously to the voyage. Harrison v. Douglas, 6 N. & M. 180; 3 A. & E. 396; 1 H. & W. 380.

Medicines.]—When the sickness of the master or crew is set up as an excuse for deviation, it is incumbent on the assured to shew that proper medicines and necessaries for the voyage were on board, in a case where the nature of the voyage requires that there should be a surgeon on board. Woolf v. Claggett, 3 Esp. 257; 6 R. R. 830.

Warranted to have twenty Guns—Insufficient Men to man them.]—Warranty that a ship had twenty guns. It is no breach of warranty that she has twenty-five men only, sixty being required to man the guns. Hide v. Bruce, 3 Dougl. 213.

h. Lighters.

On an insurance of goods on a voyage policy, until the same are safely landed at the port of discharge, "including all risks to and from the ship," there is no implied warranty that the lighter used at the end of the voyage to convey the goods from the ship to the shore shall be seaworthy for that purpose. Lane v. Nixon, 35 L. J., C. P. 243; L. R. 1 C. P. 412; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 392; 14 W. R. 641.

Where there is a warranty that a ship shall set out upon a voyage seaworthy, the insurer is to be liable for the ordinary incidents in the usual course of the voyage. If the hiring of lighters at the end of the voyage is one of the usual incidents, the insurer must take the consequence of the local lighters being unfit to put the goods on shore. Ib.

i. Proof.

Opinion.]—Upon a question concerning the seaworthiness of a ship, after the evidence of persons who have been examined as to her condition, experienced shipwrights, who never saw her, may be called to say, whether, upon the facts sworn to, she was, in their opinion, seaworthy or not. Beckwith v. Sydebotham, 1 Camp. 117; 10 R. R. 652. S. P., Thornton v. Royal Exchange Co., Peake, 25.

Onus of Proof.]—In an action on a policy of insurance it was proved at the trial that the vessel put back from inability to proceed eleven days after she started on her voyage: the judge directed the jury that the time which elapsed between setting sail and putting back was sufficiently short to shift the onus of proof from the underwriters, and make it incumbent on the assured to prove that the unseaworthiness arose from causes occurring subsequently to setting sail:—Held, a misdirection. Pickup v. Thames Marine Insurance Co., 47 L. J., Q. B. 749; 3 Q. B. D. 594; 39 L. T. 341; 26 W. R. 689; 4 Asp. M. C. 43—C. A.

It is a clear and established principle, that if a ship is seaworthy at the commencement of the risk, though she becomes otherwise in one hour afterwards, the warranty is complied with, and the underwriter is liable. Watson v. Clark, 1 Dow, 344; 14 R. R. 73.

But where the inability of a ship to perform the voyage insured appears in a short time from the period of her setting sail, the presumption is, that the inability arose from causes existing previously to the commencement of the voyage, and that she was not then seaworthy. Ib.

The age of a ship is not of itself any proof of unseaworthiness, but is of weight in evidence. Ib.

Where a ship sailed, and soon afterwards encountered a storm, became leaky, put back, and was found, on survey, to be materially decayed, and a damage was discovered which could not fairly be considered as the effect of the storm:—Held, that she was not seaworthy when she sailed on the voyage insured; and that, on a question as to seaworthiness, honesty of intention is no answer, but the fact of seaworthiness must appear, or otherwise the underwriter is discharged; and though a vessel, after sailing, encounters a storm, yet, unless the damage which renders her unfit for the voyage can be fairly considered as the effect of such storm, the implied warranty is not complied with. Douglas v. Scougall, 4 Dow, 269; 16 R. R. 69.

A ship, soon after her sailing on a voyage insured, was found to be unfit for sea; the question whether she was seaworthy at the commencement of the risk or the voyage (when not otherwise ascertained) must be decided by rational inference from the circumstances. And a ship is primâ facie to be deemed seaworthy; but if it is found, soon after her sailing, that she is not sound, without probable and adequate cause, by stress of weather or otherwise, to account for it, the rational inference is, that, notwithstanding appearances, she was not seaworthy. Parker v. Potts, 3 Dow, 23; 15 R. R. 1.

Estoppel by Agreement.]—In an action against the underwriters of a policy for a total loss, the declaration stated that they agreed that the ship should be considered, and was thereby allowed to be, seaworthy in her hull, tackle and materials for the voyage, the insured declaring, that, to the best of their belief, and according to their knowledge and information, the ship, at the time of the insurance, was, in all respects, seaworthy for the voyage; that the vessel, during her voyage, by stormy winds and tempestuous weather, and by the force and violence of the winds and waves, became leaky, strained, riven and damaged, insomuch that by means thereof it became necessary for her preservation for her to sail to the nearest port of safety; that she accordingly sailed to the nearest port of safety; that on her arrival there, she was unfit to prosecute her voyage without being repaired and refitted; that she was found to be unseaworthy and unfit to prosecute her voyage, unless great repairs were done upon her; that such repairs could not be done; that it was not possible to obtain any repairs sufficient to enable her to proceed on her voyage, or to proceed to any other port to be repaired; that it became expedient and necessary to abandon the voyage and to sell the ship, and that the ship was sold; by means of which premises the voyage was not performed, and the vessel was wholly lost to the assured:—Held, that, whether the loss of the vessel was occasioned by unseaworthiness or by perils of the sea, the underwriters were bound by their admission, and could not dispute the seaworthiness. Parfitt v. Thompson, 13 M. & W. 392; 14 L. J., Ex. 73.

Held, also, on motion in arrest of judgment, that it sufficiently appeared that the loss of the vessel was occasioned by the perils insured against. Ib.

Verdict against Evidence—Second new Trial refused.]—In an action on a policy of insurance, the jury having found a verdict for the plaintiff on a question of seaworthiness, the court granted a new trial on the ground that the verdict was against the weight of the evidence. A second jury having found a verdict for the plaintiff on the same evidence, the court refused to grant a second new trial (Vaughan, J., and Coltman, J., dissentientibus). Foster v. Steele, 3 Bing. (N.C.) 892; 5 Scott, 25; 6 L. J., C. P. 265.

Consolidation—Refusal to open.]—The court having granted a new trial on the ground that the verdict was against the evidence in a question of seaworthiness, and having refused a second new trial upon a verdict the same way, upon the same evidence; refused also to open the consolidation rule and re-try the question in another action against another underwriter on the same policy. Foster v. Alvez, 3 Bing. (N.C.) 896; 4 Scott, 535.

4. Position of Ship.

Safety on a given Day.]—A policy on a ship at and from H. to V., with a warranty that the ship was "in port" on a previous day, means the port of H., and it is not sufficient that she was safe in some other port on that day. Colby v. Hunter, M. & M. 81; 3 Car. & P. 7.

In a representation that a ship was seen safe on such a day, and had performed two-thirds of her voyage, if it turns out that she had got as far as was represented, but was lost two days before the day mentioned, the mistake is material, and makes the policy void. Macdowall v. Fraser, 1 Dougl. 260.

—— Time of Day.]—Goods were insured from the lading of them on board the ship, lost or not lost, and warranted well on a particular day; the ship was lost on that day, before the policy was underwritten; and it was holden that the underwriter was liable, for the warranty is complied with if the ship was safe at any time of that day. Blackhurst v. Cockell, 3 Term Rep. 360; 1 R. R. 717.

Not to enter St. Lawrence after certain Date.]—When a ship is insured on a time policy at and from Montreal, to trade between the Island of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Cuba, and Quebec and Montreal, and the policy contains a stipulation in the following words: "Not allowed under this policy to enter the Gulf of St. Lawrence before the 25th April, nor to be in the Gulf after the 15th November; nor to proceed to Newfoundland after the 1st December, or before the 15th March, without payment of additional premium, and leave first obtained, war, risk, and sealing voyages excepted"; the policy is not to be construed as declaring that the vessel may proceed from any of the ports named in the policy to Newfoundland on or before the 1st December, notwithstanding it might have to pass through the Gulf after the 15th November; but under that clause the vessel is neither to be in the Gulf after the 15th November, nor to proceed to Newfoundland from any port after the 1st December; and if the ship enters the Gulf after the 15th November she commits a breach of warranty within the words of the policy, and the underwriters are not liable for any loss occurring in consequence of that breach, unless they accept abandonment with a knowledge of the breach. Provincial Insurance Co. of Canada v. Leduc, 43 L. J., P. C. 49; L. R. 6 P. C. 224; 31 L. T. 141; 22 W. R. 929; 2 Asp. M. C. 338—P. C.

A time policy of marine insurance on A.'s ship, from the 29th of May, 1878, to the 28th of May, 1879, contained the words "warranted no St. Lawrence between the 1st of October and the 1st of April." The vessel was lost on the voyage home. The underwriters refused A.'s claim for a total loss on the ground of breach of warranty, inasmuch as the vessel had navigated in the Gulf of St. Lawrence during the prescribed period. A. contended that the above words referred exclusively to the river St. Lawrence. Admittedly no general custom of merchants could be proved; but the facts established that the great river which discharges the waters of the North American lakes, and the gulf into which it flows, both bear the name of "St. Lawrence"; that the navigation of both, though of the gulf in a less degree than of the river, was within the prohibited period dangerous:—Held, that the evidence disclosed no ambiguity or uncertainty sufficient to prevent the application of the ordinary rules of construction; and according to those rules the whole St. Lawrence navigation, both gulf and river, is within the fair and natural meaning of these negative words, and therefore prohibited during the months in question. Birrell v. Dryer, 9 App. Cas. 345; 51 L. T. 130; 5 Asp. M. C. 267—H. L. (Sc.)

Evidence as to.]—If an insurance broker states by way of inference and computation that a ship is at a certain place at the time of effecting a policy, it is not a ground of avoiding the policy, though the broker was utterly mistaken; the underwriter not taking the pains to inquire what were the facts on which the broker formed his conclusion. Brine v. Featherstone, 4 Taunt. 869; 14 R. R. 689.

In Dock — Liberty to go into dry Dock.]—A time policy against fire was effected on a steamship. The policy described it as then "lying in the Victoria Docks," but gave it "liberty to go into dry dock, and light the boiler fires once or twice during the currency of this policy." The only dry dock into which the ship could go was Lungley's Dock, at some distance up the river. To go there it was necessary to remove the paddle-wheels; they were removed in the Victoria Docks, and the ship was then towed up to Lungley's Dock. The necessary repairs there having been completed, the ship was brought out and moored in the river, preparatory to replacing the paddle-wheels. This operation could have been perfectly performed in the Victoria Docks, but it was found that in such case it was customary, as the more economical course, to replace the paddle-wheels while the ship lay in the river. Before the wheels had been replaced the ship was burnt:—Held, that the policy covered the ship while in the Victoria Docks, and while passing from them to the dry docks, and while directly returning from the dry dock to the Victoria Docks; but did not cover the vessel while moored in the river for a collateral purpose. Pearson v. Commercial Union Assurance Co., 45 L. J., C. P. 761; 1 App. Cas. 498; 35 L. T. 445; 24 W. R. 951; 3 Asp. M. C. 275—H. L. (E.)

Question for Jury.]—Whether a vessel warranted free from capture in port was in port or not at her capture is for the jury. Reyner v. Pearson, 4 Taunt. 662; 13 R. R. 723.

Warranted safe in Port—What Port.]—A policy on ship contained the words "lost or not lost at Cardiff to Ballyshannon beginning the adventure from loading thereof at Cardiff"; and subsequently "that the said vessel was warranted safe in port":—Held, that "port" meant the port of departure; and that the vessel being in another port the warranty was broken. Kernahan v. National Assurance Co., 10 L. R., Ir. 319.

Safely moored in Harbour—Change of Moorings.]—Action on policy of insurance against fire on the ship "H." for one month on the terms that the ship should be safely moored in Portsmouth harbour during the month. The ship was burned within the month. She had been shifted about in the harbour for cleaning her bottom, taking in cargo, and other purposes; but had been in the harbour all the time:—Held, that the plaintiff could recover. Clarke v. Westmore; cited, Selw. Nisi Pr. (11th ed.) 1003.

5. To Sail on a given Day.

Departure—What is.]—A warranty to sail on or before a particular day is not fulfilled if the ship does not completely unmoor on that day, though she then has her cargo and passengers on board, and is quite ready to sail, and is only prevented doing so by stress of weather. Nelson v. Salvador, M. & M. 309; 31 R. R. 733.

The warranty to "depart" before a certain day, which is used by the Royal Exchange Assurance Company in their policies, does not mean merely to break ground, but fairly to set forward upon the voyage; therefore, where a ship in complete sea-readiness weighed anchor with some little prospect of more favourable weather, but in half an hour was beaten back, and came to anchor within the bar, half a mile nearer to the sea than the place of loading:—Held, that this was not a departure within the warranty. Moir v. Royal Exchange Assurance Co., 6 Taunt. 241; 1 Marsh. 570; 3 M. & S. 461; 4 Camp. 84; 16 R. R. 330.

—— Insufficient Crew.]—A warranty to sail on or before a particular day is not complied with by leaving the harbour on that day, without having a sufficient crew on board, although the remainder of the crew is engaged and ready to sail. Graham v. Barras, 3 N. & M. 125; 5 B. & Ad. 1011

Nature of Port—Loading.]—Policy on goods by ship or ships, from Demerara to London, warranted to sail from Demerara on or before the 1st of August, 1823; usage found for small vessels to load and unload all their cargo in the river of Demerara, and for large vessels to load and unload part of their cargo on the outside of a shoal off Demerara, about ten miles at sea. The insured goods were loaded on board a small vessel, which completed her cargo in the river, the captain of which, having obtained his clearance, set sail on the 1st of August, proceeded down the river, and about two miles out to sea, and there anchored at low water, by the advice of his pilot. On the 3rd of August he crossed the shoal, and proceeded on his voyage, in the course of which the vessel was lost by perils of the sea:—Held, that the vessel sailed from Demerara on the 1st of August within the meaning and in satisfaction of the terms of the policy. Lang v. Anderton, 5 D. & R. 393; 3 B. & C. 495; 1 Car. & P. 171; 3 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 62; 27 R. R. 412.

—— Dropping down River.]—A policy contained a warranty "not to sail for B. N. A. after the 15th of August." The vessel on the morning of the 15th of August, was cleared at the custom-house of D., and ready for sea. She was then lying in the Custom-house Dock, which opens into the river L., which forms part of D. harbour. She was afterwards, on the same day, hauled out of dock and warped down the river L. about half a mile, towards the mouth of the harbour, which was some miles distant, for the purpose of proceeding on her voyage to Q. in B. N. A. At the time of so moving the vessel, the master and crew knew it to be impossible to get to sea that day. The next day she was warped a little farther down the river, and on the 17th, when the wind changed she got to sea. The jury having found that the master and crew fully intended to sail for Q. on the 15th of August, if it had been possible, and did all they could, and used every means and exertion so to do, and that they intended by so doing to put themselves in a better situation for the prosecution of the voyage, and not merely and solely to fulfil the warranty:—Held, that the vessel was in the prosecution of her voyage on the 15th of August, and that the warranty not to sail to B. N. A. after that day had been complied with. Cockrane v. Fisher, 1 C. M. & R. 809; 5 Tyr. 496; 4 L. J., Ex. 328—Ex. Ch.

A policy on freight and goods, per ship named at and from Portneuf to London, warranted to sail on or before the 28th October; and on the 26th the ship dropped down from Portneuf with an incomplete crew for the voyage, and on the 28th reached Quebec, which was the nearest place where she could obtain a clearance, and there completed her crew, and on the 29th obtained her clearance, and sailed the next day:—Held, that the dropping down from Portneuf to Quebec on the 26th was not a compliance with the warranty. Ridsdale v. Newnham, 3 M. & S. 456; 4 Camp. 111; 15 R. R. 327.

A plaintiff effected an insurance on freight by a ship, subject to certain regulations, which provided that the vessel should not sail from ports in Ireland after the 1st September; and that the time of clearing at the custom-house should be deemed the time of sailing, provided the ship was then ready for sea. The plaintiff's ship being in the port of Sligo, dropped down the river before the 1st of September, in readiness for sea, except that she had not her full quantity of ballast, there being a bar at the mouth of the river, which the ship could not have crossed with that quantity on board. Boats were in waiting on the outside on the 1st September to ship the remainder of the ballast, and the vessel crossed the bar on that day, but struck in doing so, and the master, to ascertain what damage she had received, put into an adjacent port without taking the rest of his ballast, which was not done till the 4th, and the vessel proceeded upon her voyage on the 8th :—Held, that the ship's dropping down the river, and crossing the bar without her full ballast, was not a sailing ; and that, until her ballast was completed, she was not ready for sea, within the rule referred to by the policy. Pettigrew v. Pringle, 3 B. & Ad. 514.

Embargo.]—If a ship, warranted to sail on or before a particular day, is prevented from sailing on the day by an embargo, the warranty is not complied with. Hore v. Whitmore, Cowp. 784.

On a warranty to sail from Jamaica, on or before a day certain, if the ship departs from her port on that day, with all her cargo and clearances on board and proceeds to the place of rendezvous in the island, expecting to find convoy and proceed immediately, but is detained there by an embargo till after the day, the departure is a compliance with the warranty, although the captain knew of the embargo when he sailed, the embargo being only till convoy should be ready. Earle v. Harris, 1 Dougl. 357.

Even though the place of rendezvous is out of the direct course of the voyage, it is no deviation. Bond v. Nutt, Cowp. 601 ; 1 Dougl. 367, n.

Delay for Convoy.]—A ship being insured at and from Surinam, and all or any of the West India islands to London, a warranty to sail on or before the 1st of August is satisfied by the ship sailing from Surinam, her last port of landing, before the 1st of August, and going into Tortola on the 4th to seek convoy, though she did not sail from Tortola, which is one of the West India islands, direct for London till afterwards. Wright v. Shiffner, 11 East, 515 ; 2 Camp. 247 ; 11 R. R. 263.

A French ship being warranted to sail from Guadaloupe on or before the 31st December, if she takes in all her loading and papers, and leaves her port of loading before that day, and sails to another port of the island in the direct course of her voyage, and merely in the hopes of joining convoy, and to take the governor's dispatches for France, the warranty is complied with, though the governor there should detain her beyond the day, it being a condition inserted in one of her clearances, that she should pass that way to take the orders of government. Thellusson v. Fergusson, 1 Dougl. 361. And see Thellusson v. Pigou, 1 Dougl. 366, n. ; Thellusson v. Staples, ibid.

Nature of Representation as to Time of Sailing.]—A representation that the ship is expected to sail from the coast of Africa on such a day is not material, so as to vitiate the policy, although it should turn out that she actually sailed six months before. Barber v. Fletcher, 1 Dougl. 305.

A., a merchant in London, having an order in 1810, from B., a merchant in Perth, for goods, to be shipped from London for Dundee, sent the goods to the wharf on Saturday, 24th February, the vessel then taking in goods being the "K." (unarmed), which had been substituted by the shipping company for the "D." (armed), the company announcing on the 23rd and 24th February to all that inquired that the "K." and not the "D." was to sail on the 25th (Sundays and Thursdays being the regular sailing days). A. despatched the invoice on the 27th February, dated on that day, with advice that the goods had been sent by the "D." not naming the 24th as the day when the goods were sent to the wharf, and leaving it to be inferred from the date of the invoice that the furnishing was made on the 27th, and that the sea risk did not commence till the 1st March. The "K." sailed with the goods on the 25th February, and was captured on the 2nd March by a privateer. In an action by A. against B. for the price of the goods :—Held, that he could not recover, the Lord Chancellor being of opinion, that if B. had insured upon the representation sent him, he could not have recovered from the underwriters. Arnot v. Stewart, 5 Dow, 274 ; 16 R. R. 123.

The agents to the owners of a ship instructed their correspondents by a letter, stating "that the "Brilliant" will sail from Nassau for Clyde on the 1st May, a running ship," to effect an insurance, which they accordingly did, at the same time showing the letter to the underwriters. The ship in fact sailed on the 23rd April, on account of a favourable opportunity of convoy, and was captured on the 11th May :—Held, that the expression in the letter was positive, and not a mere statement of expectation ; and that being a material representation, the fact of its being untrue vitiated the policy. Dennistoun v. Lillie, 3 Bligh, 202 ; 22 R. R. 13.

A representation to the underwriters at the time of effecting a policy by the owner of goods on board a ship as to the time of her sailing being made, bonâ fide, upon probable expectation, does not conclude him. Bowden v. Vaughan, 10 East, 415 ; 10 R. R. 340.

In effecting a policy from Russia to this country, while the ship was on the outward voyage, the broker represented to the underwriters that a cargo was ready for her, and she was sure to be an early ship :—Held, that this amounted only to a representation of what was expected on the part of the insured, and that the underwriters were liable, although from the delay in beginning to load the cargo, the voyage home was changed from a summer to a winter risk. Hubbard v. Glover, 3 Camp. 313. See Brine v. Featherstone, 4 Taunt. 869 ; 14 R. R. 689.

Construction of Rules.]—A plaintiff effected a policy, subject to certain rules, one of which was, that ships were not to sail from any port on the east coast of Great Britain to any port in the Belts, between the 20th December and the 15th February. The plaintiff's vessel sailed from Newcastle-upon-Tyne on the 8th February for a port in the Belts, and was lost in the Baltic on the 14th February :—Held, that the rule in question was a warranty, and not an exception ; and that the word "to" in the rule meant "towards" and not "arriving at," and consequently that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover in respect of the loss. Colledge v. Harty, 6 Ex. 205 ; 20 L. J., Ex. 146.

Order of Voyages.]—Insurance on a voyage from C. to D., on a representation that the ship was first to sail from A. to B., and from B. to C.; the voyage from A. to B. was performed, but that from B. to C. being unavoidably prevented, the ship returned to A., and thence proceeded immediately to C., and in performing the voyage from C. to D. was lost: this was held a good commencement of the voyage insured. Driscol v. Passmore, 1 Bos. & P. 200; 4 R. R. 782.

Words in Margin—Date of Sailing.] — On the policy was written in the margin "In port 20th July, 1776":—Held, to be a warranty. Kenyon v. Berthon, 1 Dougl. 12, n.

In the Month of October — Meaning.] — The meaning of a statement that a ship insured would sail "in the month of October" from the West Indies explained by evidence of merchants to mean after October 25th. Chaurand v. Angerstein, Peake. 61.

Warranty to Sail after a Day named—Sailing before the Day.]—Policy on goods "at and from Martinico to Havre de Grace with liberty to touch at Guadaloupe, warranted to sail after 12th January, and on or before 1st August, 1778." The ship having performed her outward voyage, sailed from Martinico on the 6th November, 1877, for Guadaloupe, where she took in all her cargo without returning to Martinico. She sailed from Guadaloupe on 26th June, 1778, and was captured:—Held, that the warranty was not complied with as she sailed from Martinico before 12th January, 1778. Vezian v. Grant, 2 Park, Ins. (8th ed.) 671.

6. To Sail with Convoy.

What Convoy.] — The term "convoy" in a policy means such convoy as shall be appointed by government. D'Eguino v. Bewicke, 2 H. Bl. 551; 3 R. R. 503.

A policy was effected on a ship, on a voyage from A. to C., warranted to depart with convoy for the voyage. The convoy appointed was to B., a port in the course, and near to C. This was a compliance with the warranty, and the underwriters were liable, the ship being captured in the passage from B. to C. Ib.

Where there is a warranty in a policy that the ship shall sail with convoy, she may sail without convoy from her loading port to the place of rendezvous for convoy for the voyage, although there be convoy for ships on other destinations between the loading port and place of rendezvous. Warwick v. Scott, 4 Camp. 62.

Sailing Orders.]—Sailing orders are necessary to the performance of a warranty to depart with convoy unless particular circumstances exempt the insured from the general rule. Webb v. Thompson, 1 Bos. & P. 5; 4 R. R. 757.

A warranty to depart with convoy is not complied with unless sailing instructions are obtained before the ship leaves the place of rendezvous, if by due diligence of the master they can be then obtained. Anderson v. Pitcher, 2 Br. & B. 164; 3 Esp. 134; Stark. 262; 5 R. R. 565.

Performance.]—It is not sufficient to sail with a convoy appointed for another voyage, though it may be bound upon the same course for a great part of the way. Cohen v. Hinckley, 1 Taunt. 249; 11 R. R. 660.

If a convoy has sailed, a ship cannot legally endeavour to overtake it. Ib.

Where there are no convoys appointed at the port from which a ship commences her homeward passage, she is not bound to call for convoy at a port in the course of the voyage, from which convoys are appointed. Park v. Hammond, 4 Camp. 344; 2 Marsh. 189; 6 Taunt. 495; Holt, 80; 16 R. R. 658.

A ship cannot legally proceed without convoy from port to port to join convoy, unless she has obtained a licence to sail without convoy. Hinckley v. Walton, 3 Taunt. 131.

A bill of lading signed by the captain, stating the ship to be bound to the port of destination with convoy, amounts to an undertaking, binding on the owner, that the ship shall sail with convoy. Sanderson v. Busher, 4 Camp. 54, n.

On a representation that a ship will sail with convoy, whereby the plaintiff was induced to put his goods on board, the promise is complied with if she follows the convoy and joins it, so as to prevent the plaintiff from maintaining an action against the owner for a loss from another cause after she had joined. Aliter, if, by reason of this representation, the owner of the goods in an insurance made thereon was induced to warrant that she would sail with convoy. Christin v. Ditchell, Peake's Add. Cas. 141; 4 R. R. 898.

A vessel which sails with convoy, and is driven back by weather into her port of clearance, may lawfully sail thence again with her cargo on the voyage, without waiting for the next convoy from the same port, or joining convoy from any other port. Laing v. Glover, 5 Taunt. 49.

She must keep with the convoy unless separated by necessity. Waltham v. Thompson, Marsh. Ins. (4th ed.) 294.

Convoy Dispersed by Weather.] — Policy on the "Ceres" at and from Oporto to Lynn, with liberty to touch at any port on the coast of Portugal, to join convoy particularly at Lisbon, at twelve guineas, to return 6*l.* if she sail with convoy from the coast of Portugal and arrive. The "Ceres" sailed from Oporto with a sloop and cutter appointed to protect the trade to Lisbon, from which place she was to sail with a larger convoy to England. Between Oporto and Lisbon the fleet was dispersed by weather, and the "Ceres" ran for England and arrived:—Held, that the assured was entitled to a return of premium. Audley v. Duff, 2 Bos. & P. 111; 5 R. R. 549.

Customary Rendezvous—The Downs.]—Warranted to depart with convoy means from the customary place where convoys are to be had, as the Downs. The general usages of merchants are taken notice of by the courts in construing policies. Lethulier's Case, 2 Salk. 443.

During Passage to Join Convoy.]—A ship warranted to depart with convoy is at the insurers' risk during her passage to join the rendezvous for convoy. Gordon v. Morley, 2 Str. 1265.

A ship warranted to depart with convoy was captured on her way from the Downs to join the convoy at Spithead:—Held, the assurers were liable. Campbell v. Bordieu, 2 Str. 1265; Gordon v. Morley, supra.

Ship and goods insured from Gothenburg to London warranted to depart with convoy from Flechery. The ship sailed from Gothenburg, and after waiting at Flechery for two months, joined the convoy off the port in bad weather, and was captured before she could get her sailing orders :—Held, that the warranty was complied with. Victoria v. Cleeve, 2 Str. 1250.

A ship warranted to sail with convoy was captured after sailing from Tortola with a vessel sent by the admiral to bring up merchant ships to join convoy at St. Kitts ; she fell to leeward, and was captured whilst on her passage to England by herself :—Held, that the warranty was complied with. Manning v. Gist, 3 Dougl. 84. And see Thellusson v. Fergusson, and Cases, supra, col. 1165.

No Sailing Orders.]—A ship held to have sailed with convoy though she arrived so late at the rendezvous that she had no sailing orders, she having in fact sailed with the convoy. Verdon v. Wilmot, 2 Park, Ins. (8th ed.) 696, n.

The Convoy may be one or different Ships.]—A warranty to sail with convoy means such a convoy as the government pleases to appoint ; whether of one or different ships for different parts of the voyage is immaterial. Smith v. Readshaw, 2 Park, Ins. (8th ed.) 708.

Convoy for the Voyage.]—A ship warranted to depart with convoy must sail with convoy the whole voyage. Lilly v. Ewer, 1 Dougl. 72 ; Jefferyes v. Legendra, 1 Show. 320 ; 3 Lev. 320 ; 2 Salk. 443 ; 4 Mod. 48.

Breach of Warranty—Policy never Attaches.]—If the ship insured is warranted to sail with convoy, and does not, the policy never attaches, and the premium must be returned. Long v. Allan, 4 Dougl. 276.

Void Licence to Sail without Convoy.]—An admiralty licence for a ship to sail without convoy, describing her as on a voyage to Gibraltar, when, in fact, she sailed with instructions to make for Palermo without touching at Gibraltar unless ordered into the bay by cruisers—is fraudulent and void ; and an insurance on such ship and goods on board from hence to Palermo, without convoy, is void, and will not cover a loss during the last part of the voyage, though the ship did, in fact, put into Gibraltar, being driven in by stress of weather. Ingham v. Agnew, 15 East, 517 ; 13 R. R. 516.

Protection of Armed Ship not Appointed by Government.]—Sailing under the protection of an armed ship not appointed by the government as convoy is not a compliance with a warranty to sail with convoy. As a general rule, sailing orders must be obtained to comply with such warranty. Hibbert v. Pigon, 3 Dougl. 224.

Action by Goods Owner for Losing Benefit of Policy.]—The charterer of a ship put her up as a general ship with notice that she would sail with convoy. The plaintiff shipped goods by her, and insured them with warranty that the ship would sail with convoy. Peace having been made, and no convoy appointed, the ship sailed without convoy, and was lost by collision. The policy being void, the plaintiff sued the charterer for breach of contract, whereby the plaintiff lost the benefit of his policy and recovered. Phillips v. Baillie, 3 Dougl. 374.

Change of Convoys.]—Ship insured at and from Cadiz to Amsterdam warranted to sail with convoy for the voyage. The ships sailed from Cadiz with British convoy, and were lost before reaching the Downs, where they were to have fresh convoy for Amsterdam. Underwriters held liable, this being the usage. De Garray v. Clagget, 2 Park, Ins. (8th ed.) 708.

Separated from Convoy—Weather.]—A ship warranted to sail with convoy was separated from her convoy by a gale, and whilst she was endeavouring to reach her destination, and to fall in with her convoy, she was captured. The underwriters were held liable. Harrington v. Halkeld, 2 Park, Ins. (8th ed.) 639.

Delay by Plaintiff's Fault.]—The ship was delayed in taking on board the plaintiff's goods, and afterwards made all possible effort, but failed to join the convoy with which she ought to have sailed :—Held, that the assured could recover on the policy. Magalhaens v. Busher, 4 Camp. 54.

Fault of Assured—No Convoy.]—Where by the neglect of the insured the ship failed to sail with convoy the insurers are discharged. Taylor v. Woodnen, 2 Park, Ins. (8th ed.) 707.

7. Neutrality.

And see 2, Nationality.

At what Time.]—Under a warranty in a policy that the ship and cargo are neutral property, it is sufficient that they are neutral when the risk commences. Eden v. Parkinson, 2 Dougl. 732.

If goods are insured from A. to B. in a neutral ship, it is sufficient to charge the underwriters that the ship was neutral when she sailed. Tyson v. Gurney, 3 Term Rep. 477.

Any forfeiture of neutrality by the wilful act of the assured, or of the master, after the commencement of the voyage insured, is a breach of warranty. Garrels v. Kensington, 8 Term Rep. 230 ; 4 R. R. 635.

Ownership.]—A ship having American papers, and belonging to a person born in America, but resident in England, was not a neutral sufficient to satisfy a warranty of her being American, and protected by the American flag, during the American war. Tabbs v. Bendelack, 3 Bos. & P. 207, n. ; 4 Esp. 108.

To prove a warranty, that a ship insured was of a particular nation, it is primâ facie evidence that she carried the flag of that nation at times when she was free from all danger of capture, and that the captain addressed himself to the consul of that nation in a foreign port. Arcangelo v. Thompson, 2 Camp. 620 ; 12 R. R. 758.

The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, s. 107, makes the register primâ facie proof of disputed nationality, but such inference may be overborne by circumstantial evidence to the contrary. The Princess Charlotte, Br. & Lush. 75.

Insuring a ship by an English name does not amount to a warranty or a representation that she is English. Clapham v. Colegan, 3 Camp. 382. See Cases, cols. 1149, 1150.

Documents.]—An assured upon an American ship and cargo, provided with such a passport as was required by the treaty between America and France, and with all other usual American papers and documents, was entitled to recover against an underwriter of a policy on such ship and goods, in case of a capture by a French privateer, notwithstanding a sentence of condemnation of the same as lawful prize by a French court of admiralty. Price v. Bell, 1 East, 663.

Goods insured on board a ship generally by her name, without any addition of country, and not represented to be of any particular country at the time of the policy subscribed, though the broker had said she was an American when the ship was subscribed, and though she was in fact an American, need not be documented as such. Dawson v. Atty, 7 East, 367.

If an insured vessel was warranted to carry a French licence, it was not sufficient to shew that the captain of the vessel in 1813, before the vessel sailed from Dantzic, received a document which purported to be a French licence, without shewing that he received it from some officer or person in authority under the French government; but proof that, after the arrival of the vessel at Bordeaux, she was allowed to remain there for upwards of a month after an inspection of the French licence and other documents by the officer of the French government, was primâ facie evidence that the document was genuine. Everth v. Tunno, 1 Stark. 508; 1 B. & Ald. 142.

A neutral vessel is not seaworthy unless she is provided with documents to prove her neutrality. Steel v. Lacy, 3 Taunt. 285; 12 R. R. 658.

Sentence of Foreign Court—Effect of Condemnation.]—The sentence of a foreign admiralty court is evidence only of what it expressly affirms in its adjudicative part, not of what may be gathered from it by way of inference. Fisher v. Ogle, 1 Camp. 418 (overruled by Baring v. Royal Exchange Assurance Co., infra.)

Where a foreign court of prize professes to condemn a ship and cargo on the ground of an infraction of treaty in not being properly documented, as required by the treaty between the captors and captured; such sentence is conclusive in our courts against a warranty of neutrality of such ship and cargo in an action upon a policy against the underwriter; although inferences were drawn in such sentence from ex parte ordinances in aid of the conclusion of such infraction of treaty. Baring v. Royal Exchange Assurance Co., 5 East, 99; 7 R. R. 657. See Price v. Bell, supra.

On a policy of insurance, a condemnation by a foreign court of admiralty is not conclusive evidence that the ship was not neutral, unless it appears that the condemnation went upon that ground. Bernardi v. Motteux, 2 Dougl. 575. S. P., Saloucci v. Johnson, 4 Dougl. 224, infra.

A warranty of Danish property (Denmark being then a neutral power), in a policy on ship and goods, was holden to be conclusively disproved by a sentence of the court of admiralty, condemning the ship and cargo, because the master and crew had broken their neutrality in the course of the voyage insured, by forcibly rescuing the ship, which had been seized and carried into port by a belligerent power for the purpose of search. Garrels v. Kensington, 8 Term Rep. 230; 4 R. R. 635.

If a ship insured is merely represented as neutral, a sentence of a foreign court of admiralty, condemning her for a violation of the laws of neutrality, is not evidence to falsify the representation. Von Tungeln v. Dubois, 2 Camp. 151.

The protest is of itself evidence only to contradict the captain's evidence, not to shew a variance between it and the condemnation. Christian v. Coombe, 2 Esp. 490.

A sentence of condemnation of a neutral by a British vice-admiralty court abroad is sufficient evidence from which to presume that the ship condemned had been engaged in some illegal transaction, though the ground of condemnation does not appear in the sentence. Gibson v. Mair, 1 Marsh. 39; 15 R. R. 668.

A sentence of condemnation in a French court of admiralty is admissible in an action here between the assured and underwriters of a policy containing a warranty of neutrality. Lothian v. Henderson, 3 Bos. & P. 499; 7 R. R. 829.

A warranty of neutrality in a policy is not falsified by a sentence of a foreign court of admiralty, condemning a ship for navigating contrary to the ordinances of that belligerent state, to which the neutral country had not assented. Pollard v. Bell, 8 Term Rep. 434; 5 R. R. 404. S. P., Bird v. Appleton, 8 Term Rep. 562; 5 R. R. 468.

Goods were insured, warranted neutral, on board the "Thetis," "a Tuscan ship." The ship and goods were captured by Spaniards and condemned:—Held, that the sentence was conclusive that the goods were not neutral. Saloucci v. Woodman, 3 Dougl. 345.

By sentence of a French admiralty court, it appeared that the ship warranted American had been condemned as enemy's property, because she had not on board a rôle d'equipage, in accordance with a treaty between France and America:—Held, that the sentence was conclusive evidence against the warranty of neutrality, though the ship was in fact American. Geyer v. Aguilar, 7 Term Rep. 681; 4 R. R. 543.

The sentence of a foreign admiralty court, that a ship warranted Dutch was English, is conclusive against the assured. Barzillai v. Lewis, 3 Dougl. 126.

If it can be discovered, upon the face of a sentence of a foreign prize court, that the condemnation was on the ground that the property was enemy's property, the sentence is conclusive evidence in this country that the property was not neutral. Bolton v. Gladstone, 5 East, 155; 7 R. R. 674. On appeal, 2 Taunt. 85; 11 R. R. 532.

In an action upon a policy in which the goods were warranted American, the sentence of a foreign prize court condemning goods as English, is not conclusive evidence of their ownership, if the grounds assigned in the sentence do not warrant the conclusion drawn from them. Calvert v. Bovill, 7 Term Rep. 523; 4 R. R. 517.

A ship was warranted Portuguese. She was captured by a French privateer and condemned for having an English supercargo on board, contrary to a French ordinance:—Held, that the warranty was not broken. Meyne or Mayne v. Walter, 1 Park, Ins. (8th ed.) 730.

Sentence of Belligerent Admiralty Court sitting in Neutral Country.]—The sentence of an admiralty court sitting under a commission from a belligerent in a neutral country is not recognised in this country. Donaldson v. Thompson, 1 Camp. 429 ; 10 R. R. 717.

A sentence of condemnation given by the consul of the captor's country in the port of an ally and an enemy of this country, where the prize lay, is valid and conclusive as to the property being British. Oddy v. Bovill, 2 East, 473 ; 6 R. R. 482.

Neutral Goods in Enemy's Armed Ship.]—Neutral goods on board enemy's armed ship are liable to capture. The Fanny, 1 Dods. 441.

Neutral carrying on Enemy's Colonial Trade.]—It is a breach of neutrality for the neutral to carry on, during war, trade between the mother country and her colonies from which the neutral is excluded in time of peace. The Immanuel, 2 C. Rob. 186.

Neutral Ship carrying Despatches.] — A neutral ship does not violate her neutrality by carrying despatches from an ambassador of a belligerent from the neutral country to the belligerent sovereign. The Caroline, Lush. 334 ; 5 L. T. 89.

Contraband Goods.]—See The Jonge Margaretha, 1 C. Rob. 189 ; The Jonge Tobias, 1 C. Rob. 329.

Breaking Blockade.]—See The Juffrow Maria Schroeder, 3 C. Rob. 147.

8. Against Confiscation.

Seizure with Permission of Government.]—A warranty from loss by confiscation of the government in the ship's port of discharge, does not apply to a case where, upon the arrival of the ship in the roads of Pillau within the Prussian dominions, she was boarded by two different parties, one of Prussian soldiers, and the other the crew of a French privateer, who disputed the possession of her, but agreed to take her into Pillau, in order to settle their claims ; upon which the Prussian government referred the matter to the French government at Paris, where the ship was condemned as prize to the French captors, and afterwards given up to them. For the terms of the warranty import something more to be done on behalf of the local government at the port of discharge, than the mere act of seizure by or with the permission of such local government. Levi v. Allnutt, 15 East, 267.

"In Port of Discharge."]—A policy contained a warranty by the assured against confiscation by the government in the ship's port of discharge. A vessel destined to discharge at Pillau anchored two German miles from Pillau, three English miles without the roadstead, where vessels unload, in order to come over the bar into the inner harbour ; and was captured at her moorings by soldiers coming off in a boat from Pillau :—Held, that this loss was not within the warranty. Levy v. Vaughan, 4 Taunt. 387 ; 13 R. R. 643.

Where goods insured were warranted free from seizure in the port of discharge, the captain, having arrived within about two miles and a half from the harbour of the place to which he was destined, cast anchor and made a signal for a pilot ; a pilot-boat, in consequence, came out with douaniers on board, who carried him into the harbour, where the cargo was seized and condemned :—Held, that this was a seizure in her port of discharge, within the meaning of the warranty. Oom v. Taylor, 3 Camp. 204.

Though a policy on goods contains a clause of warranty freeing the underwriter from seizure in the ship's port of discharge ; yet the assured having declared generally as for a loss by hostile seizure without negativing that it was in the ship's port of discharge, is no cause for arresting the judgment after verdict. Rucker v. Green, 15 East, 288.

Under a policy on goods from London to any ports or places in the Baltic, backwards and forwards, with leave to touch, stay and trade at all places for all purposes, and to take in and discharge goods wheresoever the ship might touch at ; and in case it should be found dangerous to enter such ports and places, or the captain was not allowed to discharge the cargo, with leave to return, until he found a port which he could enter with safety : the insurance to continue until the ship and goods arrived at as above ; upon the ship until moored at anchor twenty-four hours in safety, and upon the goods until the same should be there discharged and safely landed ; at a premium of fourteen guineas, to return 7*l.* per cent. for arrival ; with warranty of the goods free from capture or seizure in the ship's port or ports of discharge :—Held, that the ship having arrived in the outer road of Pillau, which is a bar harbour, where large ships like this are obliged to discharge part of their cargoes into lighters, to enable them to go over the bar into the inner harbour, where they discharge the remainder ; and the captain having anchored two miles and a quarter farther out than ships usually lie for this purpose and having gone on shore to report his ship and cargo, and to obtain permission to discharge his cargo, and to give directions for it ; and having returned in five or six days, when he was accompanied by Prussian soldiers and a pilot, who took possession of the ship and cargo, and discharged part of it into a lighter in the place where the ship remained at anchor, and afterwards carried her over the bar into the inner harbour, where the goods were finally confiscated ; this was an arrival in the captain's elected port of discharge, so as to discharge the underwriters from the loss by seizure there, within the meaning of the policy. Dalgleish v. Brooke, 15 East, 295 ; 13 R. R. 476.

British goods on board a neutral ship, being insured from London to any ports or places of discharge on the continent, with liberty to carry simulated papers, &c., free of capture or seizure in her port or ports of discharge ; and the ship, having received instructions to proceed to the river Jahde with a supercargo, who, when arrived there, was to go to Varel, which lies thirty-nine miles up the river, and there give notice to a correspondent of the ship's arrival, and receive directions where the goods might most safely be landed, Varel and the whole adjacent country being then occupied by the enemy : —Held, that a seizure by the enemy in boats from the shore, while the ship was lying on and off in the middle of the river, fifteen miles up, where it is two miles wide, waiting for directions from the supercargo, who had gone up to Varel to get instructions where to land the cargo, was a seizure in a port of discharge within the exemption in the policy. Jarman v. Coape, 13 East, 394 ; 2 Camp. 615 ; 12 R. R. 374.

Free from Capture and Seizure — Barratry.]—In a time policy of marine insurance on ship the ordinary perils insured against (including "barratry of the master") were enumerated, and the ship was warranted "free from capture and seizure, and the consequences of any attempts thereat." In consequence of the barratrous act of the master in smuggling, the ship was seized by Spanish revenue officers, and proceedings were taken to procure her condemnation and confiscation. In an action on the policy to recover expenses incurred by the owner in obtaining her release :—Held, that the loss must be imputed to "capture and seizure," and not to the barratry of the master, and that the underwriter was not liable. Cory v. Burr, 52 L. J., Q. B. 657 ; 8 App. Cas. 393 ; 49 L. T. 78 ; 31 W. R. 894 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 109—H. L. (E.)

Where previous Stranding.]—An American ship, insured from New York to London, warranted free from American condemnation, having for the purpose of eluding her national embargo, slipt away in the night, was by force of the ice, wind and tide, driven on shore, where she sustained only partial damage, but was seized the next day, and afterwards, with great difficulty and expense, got off, and finally condemned by the American government for breach of the embargo :—Held, that as there was ultimately a total loss by a peril excepted out of the policy, the assured could neither recover for a total loss, nor for any previous partial loss arising from the stranding, which in the event became wholly immaterial to the assured. Aliter, in case of actual disbursements made for repair of damage occasioned by sea perils before the total loss, which appeared to be governed by the general authority given to the assured to "labour and travail," &c. for the defence, safeguard and recovery of the property insured. Livie v. Janson, 12 East, 648 ; 11 R. R. 513.

Stranding—Seizure by Enemy.]—Where, on a policy on goods warranted free from capture and seizure, the ship when within eight or nine miles of port was obliged to come to an anchor for want of a pilot, and afterwards drifted on to a sand, and was totally wrecked ; and whilst she remained on the sand, she was seized by persons acting under the authority of the Spanish government, and the goods were taken on shore by them in a damaged state, and confiscated ; and no portion of them ever came into the possession of the assured :—Held, that this was a loss by the perils of the seas, and not by capture or seizure, the proxima causa being the loss of the ship. Hahn v. Corbett, 9 Moore, 390 ; 2 Bing. 205 ; 3 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 253 ; 27 R. R. 590.

Warranted to have Passes—Passes granted to Ship under another Name.]—Warranty that the ship should have four passes, English, French, Polish and Dutch ; the goods to be of a Polish subject on board the "City of Warsaw." The passes were dated in April or May and the ship did not receive the name of "City of Warsaw" until August :—Held, that the underwriters were not liable. Anon., Skinner, 404.

9. Against Capture.

Generally.]—A ship to be seaworthy must be rendered as secure as possible from capture as well as from perils of the sea. Wedderburn v. Bell, 1 Camp. 1 ; 10 R. R. 615.

By whom.]—A policy on a foreign ship must be understood as containing an exception of all captures made by the authority of our own government. Kellner v. Le Mesurier, 4 East, 396 ; 1 Smith, 72 ; 7 R. R. 581.

—— Emigrants on Board.]—Action on a voyage policy from Macao to Havana "warranted free from capture and seizure and the consequences of any attempt thereat." The clause stating the perils insured against included enemies, pirates, rovers, thieves, surprisals, takings at sea, and barratry of the masters and mariners. The insurance was declared to be on 7,300*l.* expended in provisions for emigrants, and advances on freight. While the ship was on her voyage the emigrants piratically seized and carried away the ship :—Held, that such taking possession of the vessel was a seizure within the meaning of the warranty, and that the assurers were not liable. Kleinwort v. Shepard, 1 El. & El. 447 ; 28 L. J., Q. B. 147 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 863 ; 7 W. R. 227. See also Cases ante, cols. 1104, seq.

Whether in Port.] — Whether a vessel, warranted free of capture in port, is in a port or not at the time of her capture, is purely a question of fact for a jury. Reyner v. Pearson, 4 Taunt. 662 ; 13 R. R. 723.

Whether the place where a vessel casts anchor is within her port of discharge, is a fact for the jury, not a question of law. Levin v. Newnham, 4 Taunt, 722 ; 14 R. R. 648.

A warranty in a policy against capture in port does not protect the underwriters from a loss happening from capture in a place which is not within the limits of any port, although it may be within the headlands at the mouth of a river. Baring v. Vaux, 2 Camp. 541 ; 11 R. R. 791.

If a vessel is taken at her moorings, being neither within the caput portûs, nor within that part of a haven where ships unload, the underwriter is not discharged by a warranty against capture in the ship's port of destination. Keyser v. Scott, 4 Taunt. 660 ; 13 R. R. 721.

If a ship is warranted free of capture or of seizure in port or ports, a capture by an enemy's ship, while the vessel insured is lying in an open road, outside a harbour, is not within the warranty. Brown v. Tierney, 1 Taunt. 517 ; 10 R. R. 599.

A warranty against capture in the ship's port of discharge, does not include capture in the open sea on the outside of the port, by a force issuing from the port of discharge. Mellish v. Staniforth, 3 Taunt. 499.

Ship warranted free from capture in port. A letter announcing her capture in port was received by the assured and the premium was returned. The capture was in fact not in port : —Held, that the return of the premium did not prevent the assured recovering on the policy. Reyner v. Hall, 4 Taunt. 725 ; 14 R. R. 650.

Goods warranted free from capture or seizure in the port of discharge were seized whilst the ship was lying in Pillau roads outside the river bar, about three miles from Pillau, the port of discharge :—Held, that the warranty was broken. Maydhew v. Scott, 3 Camp. 205.

Deviation to avoid Capture.]—Where a policy contains no warranty against seizure in port, if the ship, to avoid such seizure, runs to sea before she is properly loaded, and is in consequence obliged to go to a port out of the direct course of the voyage insured, the underwriters are liable for a subsequent loss. O'Reilly v. Gonne, 4 Camp. 249 ; 16 R. R. 788.

Otherwise where the policy contains a warranty against seizure in port. O'Reilly v. Royal Exchange Assurance Co., 4 Camp. 246 ; 16 R. R. 786.

10. As to Cargo.

Misrepresentation.] — Where an agent of a shipowner, effecting a policy on a ship, misrepresented the nature of the cargo which she was to carry, but this was not inserted in the policy, and it did not appear that the underwriter was induced by the misrepresentation to accept the risk :—Held, that the jury was warranted in finding that the misrepresentation was not material, and that it did not vitiate the policy. Flinn v. Headlam or Tobin, 9 B. & C. 693. S. C., M. & M. 367 ; 31 R. R. 739.

Meaning of "The Cargo."]—An insurance declared to be on "the cargo," being 1,031 hhds. wine, does not amount to a warranty that the wine constitutes the whole cargo, and that no other goods will be taken on board. Muller v. Thompson, 2 Camp. 610 ; 12 R. R. 753.

Contraband.]—Whilst war was existing between the United States of America and the Confederate States, goods were insured on a voyage from London to Matamoras by a policy which contained a warranty against contraband of war. Matamoras was a neutral port belonging to Mexico, but the intention of the insured from the beginning was to send the goods on to the Confederate States by transhipping them at Matamoras, and conveying them across the river which divided Mexico from the territory then in the possession of the Confederate States. Some of the goods which were so insured consisted of artillery harness :—Held, that such goods were contraband of war, and that there was therefore a breach of the warranty, which avoided the whole insurance. Seymour v. London and Provincial Marine Insurance Co., 41 L. J., C. P. 193 ; 27 L. T. 417 ; 1 Asp. M. C. 423.

Condition of Goods.] — It is not a condition precedent to the attaching of a policy on goods against sea risks that the subject of insurance should, at the commencement of the voyage, be fit to encounter the ordinary vicissitudes of a voyage. Koebel v. Saunders, 17 C. B. (N.S.) 71 ; 33 L. J., C. P. 310 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 920 ; 12 W. R. 1106.

11. Uninsured.

"Hull and Machinery"—"Warranted Uninsured"—"Honour" Policy.]—A time policy of marine insurance effected upon the "hull and machinery" of a steamship does not, in the absence of proof that in marine insurance the words "hull and machinery" have acquired a special meaning, cover disbursements :—Quære, whether the effecting of a p. p. i. or "honour" policy, which is null and void under 19 Geo. 2, c. 37, is a breach of a warranty to stand uninsured. Roddick v. Indemnity Mutual Marine Insurance Co., 64 L. J., Q. B. 733 ; [1895] 2 Q. B. 380 ; 14 R. 516 ; 72 L. T. 860 ; 44 W. R. 27 ; 8 Asp. M. C. 24—C. A.

Valued Policy—Warranty that Part of Ship's Value remain Uninsured.]—A shipowner, whose ship is valued at 12,000*l.*, who insures her for 9,600*l.*, and warrants that as to 2,400*l.* he will be his own insurer, commits no breach of his warranty by taking out a further insurance to cover such portion of the original sum insured as he has notice is likely to become ineffective by reason of the insolvency of underwriters. General Insurance Co. of Trieste v. Cory, 66 L. J., Q. B. 313 ; [1897] 1 Q. B. 335.

1. When Material Generally.

Fraud.]—The suppression or concealment of material intelligence respecting a matter of insurance, whether by principal or agent, and whether fraudulent or not, vitiates the policy. Thompson v. Buchanan, 4 Bro. P. C. 482.

Correction.]—Where parties are contracting, either of them, unless he is under a duty to the other, may keep silence even as to facts which he believes would be operative on the mind of the other ; if, however, one of them has made a statement which he believes to be true, but which in the course of the negotiation he discovers to be false, he is bound to correct his erroneous statement. Davies v. London and Provincial Marine Insurance Co., 47 L. J., Ch. 511 ; 8 Ch. D. 469 ; 38 L. T. 478 ; 26 W. R. 794.

All due Information.]—In marine insurance the basis of the contract between the underwriter and the assured is that the latter will communicate to the former information of every material fact of which the assured has or in the ordinary course of business ought to have knowledge ; and that the latter will take the necessary measures by the employment of competent and honest agents to obtain through the ordinary channels of intelligence in use in the mercantile world all due information as to the subject-matter of the insurance. Proudfoot v. Montefiore, 8 B. & S. 510 ; 36 L. J., Q. B. 225 ; L. R. 2 Q. B. 511 ; 16 L. T. 585 ; 15 W. R. 920.

A person at Sunderland effected a policy of insurance, and said no accounts had been received of the ship. His counting-house was at Belfast, and at the time of saying this accounts had been received there, though this was unknown to him:—Held, that his statement was not false or fraudulent. Greenwell v. Nicholson, 1 Jur. 285.

Upon effecting a policy of marine insurance, the assured is bound to disclose everything which would affect the judgment of a rational underwriter governing himself by the principles and calculations on which underwriters in practice act. Ionides v. Pender, 43 L. J., Q. B. 227; L. R. 9 Q. B. 531; 30 L. T. 547; 22 W. R. 884; 2 Asp. M. C. 266.

The concealment by the assured at the time of effecting a marine policy of insurance of a fact which is material to enable a rational underwriter, governing himself by the principles on which underwriters in practice act, to judge whether he shall accept the risk at all, or at what rate, will vitiate the policy, although the fact may not be material with regard to the risk insured. Rivaz v. Gerussi, 50 L. J., Q. B. 176; 6 Q. B. D. 222; 44 L. T. 79; 4 Asp. M. C. 377.

Rumours.]—It is the duty of the assured not only to communicate to the underwriter articles of intelligence, which may affect his choice, whether he will insure at all, and at what premium he will insure, but likewise all rumours and reports which may tend to enhance the magnitude of the risk. Lynch v. Hamilton, 3 Taunt. 37; 12 R. R. 591.

Knowledge of Underwriter.]—A person proposing a marine insurance is bound to communicate every fact within his knowledge that is material; though, if a particular fact is known to the underwriter at the time, he cannot afterwards set up as a defence to an action on the policy that the fact was not communicated; but if a material fact is not communicated, which, though known to the underwriter once, was not present to his mind at the time of affecting the insurance, the non-communication affords a good defence to the underwriter; and it is not enough for the assured to shew that the particulars supplied by the assured, coupled with the underwriter's previous knowledge, would, if the underwriter had given sufficient consideration to the subject, have brought to his mind the material fact not communicated. Bates v. Hewitt, 36 L. J., Q. B. 282; L. R. 2 Q. B. 595; 15 W. R. 1172.

Knowledge of, or concealment from the particular underwriter may be material, but not the knowledge or ignorance of subsequent underwriters of a different policy. Foley v. Tabor, 2 F. & F. 663.

On a condition in a policy, that it should be void if the assured should omit to communicate any matter material to be made known to the insurer:—Held, that this meant some matter, not only material, but also unknown to the insurer; and that it did not apply to something which it might well be presumed was well known to the insurer or his agents. Pimm v. Lewis, 2 F. & F. 778.

Letter leading to Inquiry.]—A material concealment is a concealment of facts, which, if communicated to the underwriter, would induce him either to refuse the insurance altogether, or not to effect it except at a greater premium than the ordinary premium; and a letter containing facts, which, if communicated, would lead to an inquiry, which would produce important information, ought to be shewn by the assured to the underwriter. Elton v. Larkins, 8 Bing. 198; 1 M. & Scott, 323; 5 Car. & P. 86, 385.

Facts coming to Knowledge of Assured after Slip.]—When underwriters have (as by initialling a slip) made a contract of assurance, which, although invalid at law and in equity for want of statutory requisites, is nevertheless, in practice, and according to the usage of those engaged in marine insurance, a complete and final contract binding upon them in honour and good faith whatever events may subsequently happen, the assured need not communicate to the underwriters facts which afterwards come to his knowledge material to the risk insured against; and the non-disclosure of such facts will not vitiate the policy of insurance afterwards executed. Cory v. Patton, 41 L. J., Q. B. 195, n.; L. R. 7 Q. B. 304; 26 L. T. 161; 20 W. R. 364; 2 Asp. M. C. 302. See S.C., 43 L. J., Q. B. 181; L. R. 9 Q. B. 577; 30 L. T. 758; 23 W. R. 46; 1 Asp. M. C. 225.

At the time of signing a slip the assured was aware of but did not communicate a material fact. The underwriter afterwards became acquainted with this fact, and signed a policy in conformity with the slip under protest:—Held, that the policy was vitiated by the concealment. Nicholson v. Power, 20 L. T. 580.

A proposal for insurance on freight was made and accepted on the 11th of March. On the 16th the ship was lost. On the 17th, the assured, with knowledge of the loss, but without communicating it to the insurers, demanded a stamped policy. The insurers then, for the first time, required to be informed as to the amount of the insurance upon the hull, and inserted in the policy (which the assured accepted), the following warranty: "Hull warranted not insured for more than 2,700*l.* after the 20th of March." The vessel was then insured for an additional 500*l.* in an insurance club, by the rules of which all ships belonging to members were insured from the 20th of March in one year to the 20th of March in the following year, "and so on from year to year unless ten days' notice to the contrary be given"; and in the absence of notice the managers of the club were to renew each policy on its expiration:—Held, that the risk having been accepted by the insurers on the 11th of March, the addition on the 17th of a term for their benefit, and not affecting the risk, did not prevent the policy from being one drawn up in respect of the risk accepted on the 11th, and, therefore, the concealment of the loss was not a concealment of a material fact so as to avoid the policy. Lishman v. Northern Maritime Insurance Co., 44 L. J., C. P. 185; L. R. 10 C. P. 179; 32 L. T. 170; 23 W. R. 733; 2 Asp. M. C. 504—Ex. Ch.

Underwriter, Estoppel by Conduct.]—Where the assurer discovers the concealment of a material fact between the initialling of the slip and the issuing of the stamped policy, but issues the policy without protest, he is not estopped from disputing his liability, nor is the burden of proof thrown on him to shew that the assured was not misled into treating the contract as still subsisting. Morrison v. Universal Marine Insurance Co., 42 L. J., Ex. 115; L. R. 8 Ex 197; 21 W. R. 774—Ex. Ch.

Underwriters having agreed upon the terms for a marine insurance with the broker of the assured, initialled the slip and debited the broker with the premium, in ignorance of facts material to be communicated to them, and known to the broker. Shortly afterwards the underwriters discovered the concealment, and mentioned it to the broker, but raised no objection, and afterwards, at the usual time, executed and delivered to the broker in silence a stamped policy in accordance with the slip. News of a total loss having arrived, they repudiated their liability on the ground of the concealment, and the assured sued them on the policy. It is the usage to issue a stamped policy in accordance with the slip, no matter what might happen after the slip was initialled:—Held, that since the assured had not been induced to alter his position by a belief that the underwriters had elected to treat the contract as binding, the delivery of the stamped policy was not an act of estoppel, nor even primâ facie evidence of an election, so as to make it incumbent on the underwriters to shew that the assured did not understand, or had no right to understand, the conduct of the underwriters as an election. Ib.

Materiality a Question for Jury.]—If facts not disclosed by the broker for the insured, in a representation of the state of the ship, appear material to the jury, though they did not to the broker, who merely on that account abstained from mentioning them, the insurance is void. Shirley v. Wilkinson, 1 Dougl. 306, n.; 3 Dougl. 41.

Non-disclosure—Seaworthiness.]—As an assured impliedly warrants the ship insured to be seaworthy, whatever forms an ingredient in seaworthiness is not necessary to be disclosed by the assured to the underwriter, in the first instance, unless information on the subject be particularly called for, and then the assured must disclose truly what he knows. Therefore, where the assured of a ship had received a letter from his captain informing him that he had been obliged to have a survey on the ship at Trinidad, on account of her bad character, but the survey which accompanied the letter gave her a good character:—Held, that the non-disclosure of the letter and survey did not avoid the policy, although, if disclosed, the premium would have been higher. Haywood v. Rodgers, 4 East, 590; 7 R. R. 638.

Insurance after Loss.]—Action for deceit, shipowner obtaining increase of policy after ship lost. New trial. Anon., Lofft, 212.

Goods of Enemy insured as Goods of Friend.]—If goods are insured as the goods of a Hamburgher who is an ally, and the goods are the goods of a Frenchman, an enemy, the policy is void for fraud. Anon., Skinner, 327.

Fact material under Foreign Law.]—The insured is not bound to disclose a fact made material by a foreign ordinance of which he is ignorant. Meyne or Mayne v. Walter, 1 Park, Ins. 431 (8th ed.) 730.

Change of Nationality.]—A ship was transferred by fictitious sale from the British to the Belgian flag, in order to escape board of trade inspection. She was afterwards insured, and the fact of her change of flag was not communicated to the insurers:—Held, that the concealment was of a material fact, although the ship was not suggested to be unseaworthy. Hutchinson, v. Aberdeen Sea Insurance Co., 3 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th. ser.) 682.

Enemies' Cruisers in Neighbourhood.]—If the assured has heard that privateers are cruising in the neighbourhood of his ship it is his duty to communicate the fact to his underwriters. Beckwaite v. Nalgrave, cited, 3 Taunt. 1.

The assured had information that there were enemies' cruisers in the neighbourhood of his ship, and did not communicate the fact to his underwriters:—Held, that he could not recover on the policy. Durrell v. Bederley, Holt, 283; 8 R. R. 739. And see 17 R. R. 639.

Ship in Danger.]—A merchant having heard that his ship was in great danger, if not lost, insured her without communicating his information to his underwriters. Upon bill in chancery to be relieved against the insurance as fraudulent, a decree was made that the policy be delivered up and the premium returned. De Costa v. Scandret, 2 P. Wms. 170.

The assurer concealed the fact that from a ship in company with the ship insured he had heard that she was leaky and had been lost sight of in a hard gale; she was afterwards captured by Spaniards:—Held, that the concealment vitiated the policy. Seaman v. Fonereau, 2 Str. 1183.

If a person insure a ship when on a voyage, knowing her to be in extraordinary peril, or to have suffered damage, and does not communicate it to the insurer, it is a fraud. Pole v. Fitzgerald, Ambl. 214; 4 Bro., P. C. 439. Willes, 461.

Time Policy—Voyage—Cargo.]—When effecting a time policy the insurance broker represented to the underwriter that the ship was to sail for Pernambuco with coals and home with sugar. She was in fact chartered for Imbituba with iron; but it was not proved that the broker knew this:—Held, that there had been no misrepresentation of material facts. Harvey v. Seligman, 10 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th. ser.) 680.

The ship was lost by shipwreck at her port of discharge, which was an open roadstead:—Held, that, the port not being notoriously dangerous, and the shipowner not knowing that it was so, and iron not being an exceptionally dangerous cargo, there had been no concealment of material facts. Ib.

Direction to Jury.]—By the rules of Lloyds', a vessel classed for seven years is bound to undergo a "half-time survey" in her fourth year, and upon the report of such survey, the committee of Lloyds' determine whether she is to retain her classification or not. If she has satisfactorily undergone the survey and retains her classification, the letters "H. T." are placed opposite to her name in the book, with the date of the survey. If the report is not satisfactory, she is degraded, and if a survey is not had, or is declined, she is struck out of the register. Each subscriber to Lloyds' is furnished with a copy of this book, which is corrected from time to time, and he can get further information from the secretary of Lloyds'. Notice was given to an owner of a ship classed A 1, and built in 1865, by the surveyor, on the 22nd of October 1869, that she was due for half-time survey, and he was asked when she would be ready for survey. He replied on the 23rd of October, that he had decided not to continue her in Lloyds' book. On the 28th of October, his agent inquired of an underwriter at what rate an insurance could be effected upon the ship, and the book being looked at in which she stood A 1, seven years from 1865, a quotation was given to him. On the 15th of November she was initialled for insurance, and the policy was issued, dated the 1st of December, 1869. On the 16th of November she had been struck out of the book, and the owner was so informed on the 17th. The ship was wrecked, and became a total loss on the 31st of December. An action having been brought upon the policy, it was pleaded that there had been concealment of material facts by the owner and his agents. The judge, at the trial, asked the jury, first, was the ship on the 15th of November, in the ordinary business sense degraded from her class? To this question the jury answered "No." Secondly, was the fact that the owner had resolved not to continue the ship on the list, and had so stated to the surveyor, a material fact? To this question the jury answered "No." Thirdly, ought the underwriter to have known on the 15th November that the continuance of the class must depend on whether the ship had been then lately surveyed and passed, or would within a few days be surveyed and passed or repaired, and if "Yes," ought the knowledge to have put the underwriter to ask whether the ship had been surveyed, or was about to be surveyed? To this question the jury answered "Yes," and a verdict was entered for the plaintiff:—Held, by Mellor, J., Lush, J., and Hannen, J., first, that the judge was not bound to direct the jury as matter of law, that the verdict must be found for the underwriter; and secondly, that there was no misdirection. By Cockburn, C.J., that there was no misdirection, but that there was proof of the concealment of a material fact, which ought to have been communicated to the underwriter, there being positive knowledge on the part of the owner that he had refused to have the ship surveyed, while there was only a possible inference on the part of the underwriter that there had been such refusal. Gandy v. Adelaide Marine Insurance Co., 40 L. J., Q. B. 239; L. R. 6 Q. B. 746; 25 L. T. 742; 1 Asp. M. C. 188.

On effecting an insurance on freight from Belize to Rendez-vous Point on the Honduras coast (the exact locality of which was not known to either party) and thence to London, the agent of the assured read to the agent of the assurers a letter which the owner of the vessel had received from the captain from Belize, in which Rendez-vous Point was thus described: "It is considered by the pilot here as a good and safe anchorage, and well sheltered. I have been out and seen the place, and consider it quite safe." It was admitted that this statement of the captain was made bonâ fide; but there was evidence that Rendez-vous Point was not at the particular season a safe anchorage. In an action upon the policy, for a total loss, the judge told the jury that in his opinion the letter did not amount to a statement of a fact, but merely of an opinion; and he left two questions to them: First, was the letter read to the agent of the assured? Secondly, did the captain and the pilot consider that Rendez-vous Point was a safe anchorage? The jury answered both questions in the affirmative, and a verdict was entered for the plaintiff:—Held, no misdirection, and that the verdict was warranted by the evidence. Anderson v. Pacific Fire and Marine Insurance Co., L. R. 7 C. P. 65; 26 L. T. 130; 20 W. R. 280; 1 Asp. M. C. 220.

The question for the jury in such a case is whether the facts connected with the captain's letter, its date and contents, the time of its receipt and so forth, were such facts as would have properly influenced the judgment of a reasonable underwriter in determining whether to accept the risk. Stribley v. Imperial Marine Insurance Co. 45 L. J., Q. B. 396; 1 Q. B. D. 507; 34 L. T. 281; 24 W. R. 701; 3 Asp. M. C. 134. See Rickards v. Murdock, and Mackintosh v. Marshall, post, col. 1199.

Misrepresentation—Onus Probandi.]—Where payment of a risk is resisted by insurers on the ground of misrepresentation, the onus is on them to prove very clearly that such misrepresentation has been made. Davies v. National Fire and Marine Insurance Co. of New Zealand, 60 L. J., P. C. 73; [1891] A. C. 485; 65 L. T. 560—P. C.

Ship entitled to sail without Convoy—Materiality.]—The fact that a ship being foreign built, was entitled to sail without convoy:—Held, not to be material to be communicated to underwriters. Long v. Duff, 2 Bos. & P. 209.

Reinsurance—Appropriation.]—The plaintiffs were the London agents of an insurance company, who had also an agent at Calcutta. The company issued policies on cargoes proceeding from Calcutta to the United Kingdom, reinsuring the excess above 5,000*l.* on any one ship, through their agents, the plaintiffs, with the defendants, lost or not lost, in any one ship as might be declared. From time to time the plaintiffs received advices from the agent at Calcutta, stating the names of the ships, and particulars of the excess of 5,000*l.* upon each, whereupon they declared the ships to the defendants, together with the amount of the excess, indorsments of which were made upon the back of the policy which was thereby appropriated to the particular risk. By a letter of the 15th February, 1860, the Calcutta agent informed the plaintiffs of an excess insured by the company on the ship "R." on the 16th March; both the plaintiffs and defendants had information, as the fact was, that the "R." had been destroyed by fire. On the 17th March, the plaintiffs appropriated the whole of the amount remaining on the then current policy to other ships. On the 19th March, the plaintiffs effected a fresh policy with the defendants in continuance of the former one; and on the 21st the plaintiffs received the letter of the Calcutta agent of the 15th of February; whereupon they immediately declared to the defendants that the policy of the 19th would be appropriated to the excess of 5,000*l.* on board the "R."; and on the 26th March made an indorsement thereof upon the policy, the defendants disputing their right to do so:—Held, that the fact of the loss of the "R." being known to both plaintiffs and defendants at the time of the issuing of the policy was immaterial, as it was not at that time known to either party that the company had undertaken any risk with respect to the ship; and that the declaration and appropriation were sufficient. Gledstanes v. Royal Exchange Insurance Corporation, 5 B. & S. 797; 34 L. J., Q. B. 30; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 108; 11 L. T. 805; 13 W. R. 71.

Craft Risk—Employment of Lightermen with Restricted Liability—Notice.]—On policies of marine insurance on goods, which included risks on crafts and lighters, underwriters to the knowledge of the plaintiffs charged a higher rate of premium where the insurance was with no recourse against lightermen (which meant where the lighterage was done on the terms that the liability of the lightermen was to be less than that of common carriers, namely, for negligence only), than they charged where there was such recourse, and the liability of the lightermen was to be that of common carriers. The plaintiffs effected with the defendant, a Lloyd's underwriter, a policy of marine insurance on goods which included risk on craft and lighters, and was not with no recourse against lightermen. At the time of effecting such policy the plaintiffs had an arrangement with one H., by which he was to do all the plaintiff's lighterage on the terms that he was only to be liable for negligence:—Held, that if the plaintiffs intended that the goods so insured should be landed under such arrangement with H., it was a fact which a prudent and experienced underwriter would take into consideration in estimating the premium, and that therefore a jury would be justified in finding that the non-communication of it to the defendant was the concealment of a material fact which vitiated the policy. A mere disclosure of the existence of such arrangement to the defendants' solicitor is not notice of it to the defendant. Tate v. Hyslop, 54 L. J., Q. B. 592; 15 Q. B. D. 368; 53 L. T. 581; 5 Asp. M. C. 487—C. A.

Policy "on Profit on Charter"—Destruction of Merchantable Character of Cargo—Loss of Freight—Total Loss—Concealment by Assured.]—The plaintiffs, who had chartered a steamship at a lump-sum freight of 3,900*l.*, insured her with the defendants, who were underwriters. The interest insured was described in the policy as "2,000*l.* on profit on charter . . . warranted free from all average." The plaintiffs did not inform the defendants that the vessel was chartered for a lump-sum freight, nor of the amount of their bills of lading freights. During the voyage the vessel came into collision with another ship, and was submerged for twenty-four hours. A large portion of the cargo, consisting of dates, was condemned by the sanitary authorities, and not allowed to be delivered to the consignees. The dates were, however, sold, transhipped, and exported for distilling purposes. In an action brought by the plaintiffs upon the policy to recover for a total loss:—Held, that the dates being unmerchantable as such, no freight was payable in respect of them; that there was, therefore, no profit on the charter, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover. Held, also, that there had been no concealment by the plaintiffs. Asfar v. Blundell, 65 L. J., Q. B. 138; [1896] 1 Q. B. 123; 73 L. T. 648; 44 W. R. 130; 8 Asp. M. C. 106—C. A.

2. Knowledge of Agents.

Duty to Disclose—To Underwriters.]—Any person acting by the orders of the insured, and who is anywise instrumental in procuring the insurance, is bound to disclose all he knows to the underwriter, before the policy is effected. Fitzherbert v. Mather, 1 Term Rep. 12; 1 R. R. 134.

—— To Principal.]—An agent, whose duty it is in the ordinary course of business to communicate information to his principal as to the state of a ship and cargo, ought to do so by electric telegraph, where that mode of communication is in general use; and if the agent omits to discharge this duty, and the principal, being thus left in ignorance of a fact material to be communicated to the underwriter, effects an insurance, the insurance is void, on the ground of concealment or misrepresentation. Proudfoot v. Montefiore, 8 B. & S. 510; 36 L. J., Q. B. 225; L. R. 2 Q. B. 511; 16 L. T. 585; 15 W. R. 920. S. P., Holland v. Russell, post, col. 1263.

The plaintiff, in Liverpool, employed an agent at Smyrna to buy madder on his account, and to ship and consign the cargoes to him; the agent purchased and shipped a cargo of madder, and advised the plaintiff on the 12th of January, and sent the shipping documents on the 19th of January. The ship sailed on the 23rd of January, but was stranded in the course of that day, and the cargo became a total loss. Intelligence of the loss was communicated to the agent on the 24th of January, and on the 26th, the next post day, he wrote to the plaintiff announcing the loss, but purposely abstained from telegraphing, in order that the plaintiff might not be prevented from insuring. The plaintiff, on the 21st of January, after the receipt of the letters of the 12th and 12th, but before the receipt of the letter of the 26th, and without any knowledge of the loss—which, however, had been telegraphed and posted in Lloyd's lists—effected an insurance:—Held, that the plaintiff could not recover against the underwriter. Ib.

Where the plaintiffs, on 25th October, 1811, effected an insurance on a ship, at and from her port of lading to her port of discharge, and on the 25th of July preceding, the ship, whilst in her port of lading, was driven on a rock by a storm, but got off without appearing to have suffered material damage, and the captain afterwards wrote a letter to the plaintiffs, without communicating the accident, which letter reached them on the 5th October; and the ship afterwards arrived at her port of discharge, where the captain made a protest, detailing the accident, and stating that the planks of her bottom must have been chafed, and her bottom otherwise injured, by striking on the rock:—Held, that the plaintiffs could not recover as for an average loss arising from the accident; for the captain was bound to communicate the accident, and, for want of such communication, the antecedent damage was an implied exception out of the policy. Gladstone v. King, 1 M. & S. 35; 14 R. R. 392.

Action by shipowner on two policies of insurance on the "Jessie" and her freight, lost or not lost, at and from Mazagan to the United Kingdom. The "Jessie" had arrived at Mazagan after a seventeen days' voyage on the 27th of December. Shortly afterwards she lost an anchor in a storm, as to which loss the captain made a protest. On the 9th of January he wrote to the assured, to the effect that he had commenced loading, did not know when he would finish, but would write again. He made no mention of the loss of the anchor. This letter was received on the 24th of January. No subsequent letter was received by the assured. The "Jessie" sailed on the 15th of January, and was never heard of again. On the 24th of February the assured wrote to his agents to insure the ship and freight, saying, "I do not know when he was ready to sail. I have not had the sailing letter yet." No mention was made of the letter of the 9th of January, or of its contents. The agents on the 26th of February effected the policies which were sued on:—Held, first, that the mere fact that when the policy was effected there was an antecedent average loss, which the captain had omitted to communicate to the owner, and the owner, therefore, could not communicate to the underwriter, was not enough to avoid the policy altogether. Stribley v. Imperial Marine Insurance Co., 45 L. J., Q. B. 396; 1 Q. B. D. 507; 34 L. T. 281; 24 W. R. 701; 3 Asp. M. C. 134.

Held, secondly, that the question which ought to have been left to the jury was not whether the "Jessie" was at the time when the policy was effected an overdue or missing ship, but whether the facts connected with the letter of the 9th of January, its date and contents, the time of its receipt, and so forth, were such facts as would have properly influenced the judgment of a reasonable underwriter in determining whether to accept the risk. Ib.

A merchant resident at Sydney shipped goods for England on board the ship "C.," and, by another ship that sailed after her, wrote to an agent in England, and desired him if he received that letter before "C." arrived to wait for thirty days, in order to give every chance for her arrival, and then effect an insurance on the goods. The letter was received, and the agent having waited more than thirty days, employed a broker to effect an insurance, and handed the letter to him. The broker told the underwriters when the "C." sailed, and when the letter ordering the insurance was written, but he did not state when it was received, nor the order to wait thirty days after the receipt of it before the insurance was effected. The "C." never arrived. In an action on the policy, no fraud was imputed to the plaintiff; but several underwriters were called for the defendant, who stated that in their opinion the matters not communicated were material; and the jury being of opinion that a material part of letter had been concealed, found a verdict for the defendant:—Held, that the jury was bound to find that the part of the letter not communicated to the underwriters was material, and, consequently, the policy was void. Rickards v. Murdock, 10 B. & C. 527; 8 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 210.

A ship on an African voyage, the common duration of which is several months, and sometimes extends to twelve months or more, arrived on the coast in August, 1799; and in February, 1800, her then commander wrote a letter to his owners, mentioning an attack on her at another place on the coast by the natives, who killed the captain and several of the crew, and wounded others; by means of which and of a fever, the crew were reduced to five, and all those sickly, and not a man to be procured at hand; that they had been plundered of their clothes, &c., their cabin stores were exhausted, and they did not know what to do. A second letter, dated 21st April, 1800, from Gaboon river, mentioned their arrival there on the 24th March; that the natives, finding them weakly handed, and their goods taken from them, did as they pleased; that they had then nine men on board, but their provisions run very low; that he had mentioned certain parts of the cargo in his last letter, and expected to ship the rest, and to sail at the end of the next month. An insurance was effected in September, 1800, on the production of the last letter only, "at and from the ship's arrival at her first place of trade on the coast of Africa," &c.:—Held, sufficient, that the last letter truly stated the then condition and circumstances of the ship; which, though better than when the first letter was written, was yet no fraudulent concealment of former circumstances; the second letter, both in its terms and contents, referring to a former letter, which it was the fault of the underwriters not to have called for, if they thought that a particular knowledge of former difficulties, in part subdued, and to the extent truly stated in the second letter, would have varied the risk. Freeland v. Glover, 7 East, 457; 3 Smith, 426; 6 Esp. 14; 9 R. R. 803.

Concealment by Agent through whom Policy not effected.]—The plaintiffs instructed a broker to reinsure an overdue ship. Whilst acting for the plaintiff the broker received information material to the risk, but did not communicate it to them, and the plaintiffs effected a reinsurance for 800*l.* through the broker's London agents. Afterwards the plaintiffs effected a reinsurance for 700*l.*, lost or not lost, through another broker. The ship had in fact been lost some days before the plaintiffs tried to reinsure, but neither the plaintiffs nor the last-named broker knew it, and both he and the plaintiffs acted throughout in good faith:—Held, that the knowledge of the first broker was not the knowledge of the plaintiffs, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover upon the policy for 700*l.* Fitzherbert v. Mather (supra, col. 1185), Gladstone v. King (supra, col. 1186), Stribley v. Imperial Marine Insurance Co. (supra), and Proudfoot v. Montefiore (supra, col. 1186) commented on. Blackburn v. Vigors, 57 L. J., Q. B. 114; 12 App. Cas. 531; 57 L. T. 730; 36 W. R. 449; 6 Asp. M. C. 216—H. L. (E.)

Concealment of Facts by Agent through whom Policy not effected.]—The plaintiffs, underwriters in Glasgow, employed there a firm of insurance brokers to reinsure a ship which was overdue. The brokers received information tending to shew that the ship, as was the fact, was lost. Without communicating this information to the plaintiffs, they telegraphed in the plaintiffs' name to their own London agents, stating the rate of insurance premium which the plaintiffs were prepared to pay. Communications followed between the plaintiffs and the London agents, and the London agents, through a firm of London insurance brokers, effected a policy of reinsurance at a higher rate of premium, which policy was underwritten by the defendant:—Held, that the policy was void on the ground of concealment of material facts by the agents of the assured. Blackburn v. Vigors (supra) considered. Blackburn v. Hasam, 57 L. J., Q. B. 479; 21 Q. B. D. 144; 59 L. T. 407; 36 W. R. 855; 6 Asp. M. C. 326.

Capture Known to Clerk of Insured.]—An insurance was effected in consequence of intelligence that the ship had been captured, communicated to the clerk of the insured, but not proved to have been communicated to the insured:—Held, that the policy was void. Stewart v. Dunlop, 4 Bro. P. C. 482.

3. Known Course of Proceeding.

Public or Private Facts.]—The concealment of private facts, not of public facts, or conclusions from facts, will vacate a policy. Carter v. Boehm, 1 W. Bl. 593; 3 Burr. 1905.

Nature of Trade.]—An underwriter is bound to know the nature and peculiar circumstances of the branches of trade to which the policy relates. Noble v. Kennaway, 2 Dougl. 510.

Underwriters are not entitled to notice of the part of a ship where goods are stowed, whether on deck or otherwise. Dacosta v. Edmund, 2 Chit. 227; 4 Camp. 142; 16 R. R. 763.

Policy on forty carboys of vitriol; they were carefully stowed on deck, but caught fire, and were necessarily thrown overboard during the voyage. Carboys of vitriol are sometimes stowed on the deck, and sometimes bedded in sand in the hold, where they are considered safer:—Held, that the underwriters were liable, although there was no communication to them that the carboys were to be stowed on deck. Ib.

Where, on an insurance on goods from London to Jamaica generally, the goods insured were destined to a particular plantation in that island; and the usual course in such a case was for the ship to proceed to an adjoining port, and there tranship her cargo into shallops; but no communication of this fact was given to the underwriters:—Held, that they were still liable for a loss which occurred after such transhipment on board the shallops. Stewart v. Bell, 5 B. & Ald. 238; 24 R. R. 342.

According to the usage of the Newfoundland trade, when ships arrive on the coast, they are either employed for some time in fishing (called banking), or they make an intermediate voyage in the American seas, before beginning to take in their homeward cargo, during which they are protected by a separate policy; therefore, in effecting a policy, "lost or not lost, at and from Newfoundland to a port in Europe," although the ship is to be employed in banking, it is not necessary to disclose the fact to the underwriters, as their risk only commences from the time when the banking or intermediate voyage ends, and they are bound to know the nature and circumstances of the branch of trade to which the policy relates. Vallance v. Dewar, 1 Camp. 503; 10 R. R. 738.

An insurance on a vessel engaged in the African wood and ivory trade, without stating to the underwriters the fact of her intended mutual or combined trading with another ship on the African coast; such mutual trading was proved to have occasionally prevailed in such African voyages, but the usage was not so general or well known as to render it unnecessary to communicate the fact expressly to the underwriters, and the omission to do so was held to be fatal to the policies, on the ground that the mutual trading varied the risk and altered the nature of the voyage. Tennant v. Henderson, 1 Dow, 324.

4. Intelligence at Lloyd's.

Necessity of Communicating.]—In effecting a policy, a circumstance of intelligence in Lloyd's lists need not be communicated to the underwriters, however important it may be to the computation of the risk; for it is to be presumed within their knowledge, and to be taken into account. Friere v. Woodhouse, Holt, 572; 17 R. R. 639, 679. And see M'Andrew v. Bell, 1 Esp. 373; Proudfoot v. Montefiore, ante, col. 1186.

In an action on a policy, Lloyd's shipping list is admissible against the underwriter, without proof of his having seen it, and is primâ facie evidence of the time of sailing. But where there was a concealment by the insurer of material facts, and an allegation of facts which were untrue, viz. as to the time of sailing, and the underwriter had acted thereon, without, in fact, seeing the list at Lloyd's:—Held, that the underwriter was not bound thereby, and that the judge ought to point out to the jury, as material, such concealment and misrepresentation. Mackintosh v. Marshall, 11 M. & W. 116; 12 L. J., Ex. 337.

Where it was known at Lloyd's that the "Sophia" of Bristol was at sea without convoy, and the broker inquired of the plaintiff at Bristol, whether that was the ship insured, and was informed it was, and that the plaintiff supposed she had been prevented by adverse winds from joining convoy at Falmouth, but the broker got the policy altered without disclosing this answer to the underwriters:—Held, that this concealment vacated the policy. Sawtell v. Lowdon, 5 Taunt. 359; 1 Marsh. 99.

—— Private Intelligence.]—The announcement in the foreign lists filed at Lloyd's of the sailing of a ship out of the port from which she is insured, does not, where such communication is material, dispense with the assured's disclosing a letter received from his captain before the policy is effected, announcing the day of his intended departure. Elton v. Larkins, 8 Bing. 198; 1 M. & Scott, 323; 5 Car. & P. 86, 385.

Two prizes being carried into Liverpool, the captor gave orders to effect an insurance on them in London. One of the prizes arriving on Sunday, the owner sent a despatch to his agent in London, stating that fact, and expressing fears as to the other ship. The express reached the broker on Tuesday, and on that day an entry was made at Lloyd's of the arrival of the vessel at Liverpool. On Wednesday the captor's agent effected an insurance on the other vessel, at a premium of fifty guineas per cent., without communicating to the underwriters the fact of the express:—Held, that this was not a concealment which vitiated the policy. Court v. Martineau, 3 Dougl. 161.

L. was accustomed to insure at Lloyd's upon floating policies quantities of cochineal shipped for him from the Canaries; he declared the name of the ship upon receipt of each bill of lading. He received information that a large quantity would be shipped in the "Candida," and by the same mail an anonymous letter reached Lloyd's containing a statement that the owners intended to lose that ship on her next voyage, in order to make the underwriters pay. A notice of this letter was openly affixed to a board at Lloyd's; and L. was aware of the contents of the letter, but considered them unworthy of credit. At this time L. reasonably expected that the bills of lading by the "Candida" would be the next to be declared by him, and in that case they would be covered by policies previously made. He entered into the policy sued upon without communicating to the underwriter his intelligence of a cargo to be shipped by the "Candida," or the contents of the anonymous letter. By accident the bills of lading of the "Candida" came to L. after those of later shipments, and this policy was declared upon the "Candida":—Held, in an action to recover for a total loss of part of the cochineal which had been jettisoned from the "Candida," that he had been guilty of a concealment which invalidated the policy. Leigh v. Adams, 25 L. T. 566; 1 Asp. M. C. 147.

5. State and Condition of Ship and Cargo.

Grounding of Ship.]—A plaintiff, as agent for the owners, who were foreigners, of a steamer, insured her for twelve months, beginning from the 21st of January, 1857, through H., an insurance broker. On the 15th January, 1857, H. applied to the defendant to become the insurer. On the same day the plaintiff received a letter from the master, stating that she had been aground, had received some heavy blows, and had made her way in a sinking state into the port of C. This letter the plaintiff communicated to H. the same day, but H. did not communicate it to the defendant. On the 22nd January the defendant wrote to H. saying, having heard that the ship had been on shore, he considered his risk did not commence until she had been surveyed and repaired. To this letter no reply was made by H.; but H., having been debited for the whole premium in the books of the defendant, remained so debited till after the loss, which took place on the 9th October, 1857:—Held, first that the concealment of the fact of the ship having been aground was the concealment of a material fact, and vitiated the policy. Russell v. Thornton, 6 H. & N. 140; 30 L. J., Ex. 69; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1080; 2 L. T. 574; 8 W. R. 615—Ex. Ch.

Held, secondly, that there was no waiver, by the defendant, of this, nor any evidence of the parties having entered into a new contract of insurance, commencing from the date of the 22nd January. Ib.

Age of Ship.]—If a representation is made by the assured to an underwriter, however honestly or innocently, that a ship is new when in fact she is old, a policy on goods on board of her made by him will be vitiated, for the age of the vessel must be material in considering the premium. Ionides v. Pacific Fire and Marine Insurance Co., 41 L. J., Q. B. 190; L. R. 7 Q. B. 517; 26 L. T. 738; 21 W. R. 22; 1 Asp. M. C. 330—Ex. Ch.

Seaworthiness.]—Whatever forms an ingredient in seaworthiness need not be disclosed by the assured to the underwriter unless information upon the subject is particularly called for, and then the assured must fully disclose what he knows. Haywood v. Rogers, 1 East, 590; 1 Smith, 289; 7 R. R. 638.

New Metalling.]—A shipowner stated in a proposal for insurance that his ship had been last metalled in 1867. The bottom was then overhauled, and new metal put where required:—Held, that he had not made a material misstatement so as to vitiate the policy. Alexander v. Campbell, 41 L. J., Ch. 478; 27 L. T. 25. S. C., 27 L. T. 462; 1 Asp. M. C. 447, post, col. 1357. Reversed by L.JJ., on another point.

Delay for Repairs.]—If the owner of a ship receives a letter from the captain, written on her arrival at a foreign port, giving such an account of her as to render it probable that she must remain there for the purpose of being repaired, beyond the time that would be necessary for her to take in her cargo; this letter need not be communicated to the underwriters, in effecting a policy of insurance upon her, at and from the foreign port to a port in England, unless information on the subject is particularly called for. Beckwith v. Sydebotham, 1 Camp. 116; 10 R. R. 652.

Overloading—Discharge.]—A ship insured at and from a port sailed on her voyage in an unseaworthy state, in consequence of having a greater cargo than she could safely carry; the defect was discovered before any loss accrued; and part of the cargo was discharged, and a loss subsequently accrued in no degree attributable to her having been overladen in the early part of her voyage:—Held, that the underwriters were liable for such loss. Weir v. Aberdeen, 2 B. & Ald. 320; 20 R. R. 450.

The vessel having sailed and put back to the Downs, and then sailed again, and laboured and strained much from being overloaded, and then put back a second time; and upon an application to the underwriters for liberty for the ship to go into port to discharge part of her cargo, it was only communicated to them that the ship was too deep in the water:—Held, that as the subsequent loss had not in any degree arisen from her having so strained and laboured, the communication of that fact was immaterial, and that the communication made was quite sufficient. Ib.

Nature of Cargo—Bad Stowage.]—As a policy on a ship may be avoided, by unseaworthiness, caused either by overloading or bad stowage, tending to increase the danger or difficulty of navigation, and so to enhance the rate of premium, the not mentioning the nature of the cargo, if the proportion of dead weight in it must lead to bad stowage, may be such a concealment as will vitiate the policy. But it will not be so if the underwriter knew, or had reason to believe, that the cargo would include some proportion of dead weight, and the agent of the assured, when he effected the insurance, did not know what proportion. Foley v. Tabor, 2 F. & F. 663.

—— Declaration of Name of Ship.]—The contract of an underwriter who subscribes a policy on goods by ship or ships to be declared is, that he will insure any goods of the description specified which may be shipped on any vessel answering the description in the policy to which the assured elects to apply the policy; the object of the declaration of the vessel's name is to identify the particular adventure, and the assent of the underwriter is not required to the declaration, for he has no option to reject any vessel which the assured may select. Ionides v. Pacific Fire and Marine Insurance Co., 41 L. J., Q. B. 190; L. R. 7 Q. B. 517; 26 L. T. 738; 21 W. R. 22; 1 Asp. M. C. 330. See ante, col. 1034.

If the description in the policy designates the subject with sufficient certainty, or suggests the means of doing it, a mistake as to the name of the ship or as to other particulars, will not annul the contract, and a mistake in the name of the vessel, which does not prejudice the underwriter, does not defeat the policy. Ib.

—— Name of Ship uncertain — Usage at Lloyd's.]—When an assured expects, but is not certain, that goods will come by a particular ship, the name of such ship is not a material fact the non-disclosure of which prevents the policy from attaching; nor in such a case is there any usage of underwriters at Lloyd's compelling the assured to disclose it. Knight v. Cotesworth, 1 Cab. & E. 48.

—— Materiality of Misstatement.]—Where an agent of a shipowner effecting a policy on a ship misrepresented the nature of the cargo she was to carry, but this was not inserted in the policy, and it did not appear that the underwriter was induced by the misrepresentation to accept the risk:—Held, that the jury was warranted in finding that the misrepresentation was not material, and that it did not vitiate the policy. Flinn v. Headlam or Tobin, 9 B. & C. 693; M. & M. 367; 31 R. R. 739.

Contraband.]—A policy contained a warranty against contraband. Part of the goods consisted of artillery harness, and were shipped during the war between the United States of America and the Confederate States, with the intention of sending them on from a neutral port to the Confederate States:—Held, that such goods were contraband of war, and the whole insurance void. Seymour v. London and Provincial Marine Insurance Co., 41 L. J., C. P. 193; 27 L. T. 417; 1 Asp. M. C. 423.

An insurance was effected on goods at a premium of ten guineas per cent., to return 5 per cent. for convoy and arrival. The assured concealed from the underwriter that the vessel was to be a running ship, although he was aware of it:—Held, that this was a concealment of a fact material to the risk, and avoided the policy. Reid v. Harvey, 4 Dow, 97; 16 R. R. 38.

Cargo to be Shipped—Anonymous Letter.]—L. was accustomed to insure at Lloyd's upon floating policies quantities of cochineal shipped for him from the Canaries; he declared the name of the ship upon receipt of each bill of lading. He received information that a large quantity would be shipped in the "Candida," and by the same mail an anonymous letter reached Lloyd's, containing a statement that the owners intended to lose that ship on her next voyage in order to make the underwriters pay. A notice of this letter was openly affixed to a board at Lloyd's; and L. was aware of the contents of the letter, but considered them unworthy of credit. At this time L. reasonably expected that the bills of lading by the "Candida" would be the next to be declared by him, and in that case they would be covered by policies previously made. He entered into the policy sued upon without communicating to the underwriter his intelligence of a cargo to be shipped by the "Candida," or the contents of the anonymous letter. By accident the bills of lading of the "Candida" came to L. after those of later shipments, and this policy was declared upon the "Candida":—Held, in an action to recover for a total loss of part of the cochineal which had been jettisoned from the "Candida," that he had been guilty of a concealment which invalidated the policy. Leigh v. Adams, 25 L. T. 566; 1 Asp. M. C. 147.

Deck Cargo.]—In an action upon a policy the defendant pleaded that the fact that the ship insured was to carry a deck cargo was not disclosed, and it was contended that such concealment avoided the policy:—Held, that it did not avoid the policy entirely, but only as regarded the cargo carried on deck. Clarkson v. Young, 22 L. T. 41.

Over-valuation of Goods.]—Upon effecting a policy of marine insurance the assured is bound to disclose everything which would affect the judgment of a rational underwriter governing himself by the principles and calculations on which underwriters in practice act. When, therefore, in an action on a policy of marine insurance, it appeared that goods had been insured at a value very greatly over their real value, without disclosing the over-valuation to the underwriter; and it was proved that underwriters do, in practice, act on the principle that it is material to take into consideration whether the over-valuation is so great as to make the risk speculative:—Held, that this practice is rational; and that it was proper to leave to the jury, whether the valuation was so excessive, and whether it was material to the underwriter to know of such over-valuation. Ionides v. Pender, 43 L. J., Q. B. 227; L. R. 9 Q. B. 531; 30 L. T. 547; 22 W. R. 884; 2 Asp. M. C. 266.

Goods Shipped after Clearance.]—It is no objection to the assured on goods recovering for a loss by a peril within the policy, that after the captain had obtained his manifest and custom-house clearances, as required by 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 11, s. 3, goods of the assured were put on board by the packer, who had previously made all the necessary entries at the custom-house. Carruthers v. Gray, 15 East, 35; 3 Camp. 142.

Cotton on Deck—Damaged Cotton—Concealment.]—The plaintiffs, who had insured a cargo of damaged cotton, re-insured the same with the defendant, but did not inform him that it was damaged cotton. The slip contained the terms, "cotton on deck, f. p. a. &c., including jettison and washing overboard." When the policy of re-insurance was tendered to the defendant for signature it differed from the slip, for, instead of the words "f. p. a. and c.," &c., it was "f. p. a. &c., as in original policy," and in that policy the risk was described as "f. p. a., but including risk of jettison and washing overboard"; but he signed it without inquiry or objection. The quantity of cotton insured "on deck" amounted to 7,500*l.*:—Held, that the instructions being to insure such a quantity "on deck" clearly shewed that it was damaged cotton, and that, under the circumstances, there was no concealment; also, that, although an attempt had been made to establish that the course of business was to say that cotton was damaged, no such course of business was established. British and Foreign Marine Insurance Co. v. Sturge, 77 L. T. 208; 8 Asp. M. C. 303.

6. Time of Sailing.

Duty to Disclose.]—The time of a ship's sailing is not, in general, a circumstance necessary to be communicated to the underwriters, except in the case of a missing ship. Foley v. Moline, 1 Marsh. 117; 5 Taunt. 430; 15 R. R. 541.

It is not necessary to disclose to the underwriters on a policy at and from London, whether the ship has sailed or not. Fort v. Lee, 3 Taunt. 381; 12 R. R. 670.

Where a vessel has been a long time at sea, it is a fraudulent concealment if that circumstance is not communicated to the underwriter. Webster v. Foster, 1 Esp. 407.

So, if it is not communicated to the broker employed, whereby he could not answer the inquiries of the underwriters on that point. Ib.

Knowledge as to other Ships.]—The assured is not bound to communicate any knowledge he may have of the time of sailing of another ship from the same place, either before or at the same time as his own, unless he knows of something particular having happened to such other vessel, which might affect the insurance of his own. Elton v. Larkins, 8 Bing. 198 ; 1 M. & Scott, 323 ; 5 Car. & P. 86, 385.

Where a ship had sailed from Elsineur on her voyage home six hours before the owner, who followed in another vessel on the same day, and having met with rough weather in his passage, arrived first, and then caused an insurance to be effected on his own ship :—Held, that the circumstances were material to be communicated to the underwriter, and that it was not sufficient to state merely that the ship insured "was all well at Elsineur on the 26th July," the day of her sailing. Kirby v. Smith, 1 B. & Ald. 672 ; 19 R. R. 412.

In effecting a policy on the 8th of January at Whitehaven, on a ship at and from Barbados to Liverpool, a broker's letter was produced, stating that the ship insured was not coppered, but a slow sailer ; was expected to have sailed on the 28th November ; and that the "Barton," a coppered vessel and very fleet, which had sailed on the 24th from Barbados, had arrived on the 5th January ; but no notice was taken of the "Agreeable," another coppered and fleet vessel, which sailed 29th November, having also arrived on the same day as the "Barton." After verdict for the plaintiff, the court refused to grant a new trial on the ground of concealment. Littledale v. Dixon, 1 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 151 ; 8 R. R. 774.

Two prizes being carried into Liverpool, the captor gave orders to effect an insurance on them in London. One of the prizes arriving on Sunday, the owner sent a despatch to his agent in London, stating that fact and expressing fears as to the other ship. The express reached the broker on Tuesday, and on that day an entry was made at Lloyds' of the arrival of the vessel at Liverpool. On Wednesday the captor's agent effected an insurance on the other vessel at a premium of fifty guineas per cent., without communicating to the underwriters the fact of the express :—Held, that this was not a concealment which vitiated the policy. Court v. Martineau, 3 Dougl. 161.

A policy on a ship called the "King George," at and from Malaga to London, warranted to sail on the 10th of October, was effected on the 3rd of November following. The insurer communicated to the underwriters that the "King George" and another vessel called the "Fruiter," both sailed for Malaga on the 10th of October, and the underwriters knew that the "Fruiter" had arrived at London some days before ; but the insurer knew also that the captain of the "Fruiter" had seen the "King George" off Oporto on the 21st October, when they had parted company by reason of a gale coming on ; and this fact he did not communicate to the underwriters. The "King George" was lost in a storm at the entrance of the Channel on the 25th October. In an action on the policy, the jury having found for the plaintiff, and that the fact not communicated was not a material one, the court granted a new trial. Westbury v. Aberdein, 2 M. & W. 267 ; M. & H. 49 ; 6 L. J., Ex. 83 ; 1 Jur. 201.

If it appears that a plaintiff did not intend to insure until he believed her to be missing, and then not until another ship which had sailed at the same time had arrived in safety, the concealment of this fact is fatal. M'Andrews v. Bell, 1 Esp. 373. And see Friere v. Woodhouse, Holt, 572 ; 17 R. R. 679.

Communications as to.]—A policy was effected on goods from Berderygge to London, by the consignees on the 13th December, without communicating a letter received by them the day before, but dated the 30th November, informing them that the captain would sail the next day, and directing them, if he should not be arrived, to effect the insurance as low as possible :—Held, a material concealment, though the ship did not in fact set sail until the 24th December. Willes v. Glover, 1 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 14 ; 8 R. R. 739.

The concealment of letters, stating that the vessel is about to sail next month, is a material concealment, and avoids the policy. Shirley v. Wilkinson, 3 Dougl. 41 ; 1 Dougl. 306, n.

When the plaintiffs effected a policy on wines, from Oporto to London, on the 12th November, at which time they were in possession of two letters from their correspondents at Oporto ; the first of which, dated 11th October, stated thus, "we are loading the wines on the "Stag," Captain Wheatley, who intends to sail after to-morrow" ; the other, dated the 13th October, enclosed the bills of lading which were filled up "with convoy" ; which letter the plaintiffs did not communicate to the underwriters :—Held, that it was a material concealment. Bridges v. Hunter, 1 M. & S. 15 ; 14 R. R. 380.

In effecting an insurance the shipowner's correspondent shewed the underwriter a letter written by the shipowner's agent abroad, stating that the ship would sail from Nassau for the Clyde on May 1st. The ship in fact sailed on April 23rd. On May 11th she was captured :—Held, that the statement in the letter was material to the risk and positive, and that, not being true, it vitiated the policy. Dennistoun v. Lillie, 3 Bligh, 202.

Ready to Sail—Ship had Sailed.]—The broker's instructions stated the ship to be ready to sail on December 24th. The broker represented the ship to be in port, when in fact she sailed on December 23rd :—Held, to be a material misrepresentation. Fillis v. Brutter, 1 Park, Ins. (8th ed.) 414.

Wrong Statement as to Sailing.]—A letter received stated that the ship sailed from Jamaica on the 24th November. The agent afterwards insured the ship, stating that she sailed in December :—Held, fraudulent ; verdict for underwriter. Roberts v. Fonnereau, 1 Park, Ins. (8th ed.) 405.

The assured, knowing that his ship had sailed from the coast of Africa on a certain day, stated that she was on the coast on that day, and nothing as to her sailing :—Held, that this was a material concealment and avoided the policy. Ratcliffe v. Shoolbred, 1 Park, Ins. (8th ed.) 413.

7. Ship's Name, when in Danger.

Not stating.]—If a ship is advertised to be in danger, and the insurer effects a policy on ship or ships, knowing that the ship in danger is one of them, without stating the ships' names, this is a concealment which avoids the policy, although the rumour was false. Lynch v. Hamilton, 3 Taunt. 37 ; 12 R. R. 591.

An insurance was effected on goods on board ship or ships from the Canary Islands to London, and at the time the assured's agent, who effected the policy, knew that one of the ship or ships was named the "President"; and at the same time there was a paper of communication stuck up at Lloyd's, that "the 'Howard,' Marsh, arrived off Dover from Teneriffe; sailed 24th ult.; on the 27th off the Salvages, fell in with the 'President,' Owens, from Lanzarette, deep and leaky"; but the agent did not communicate his knowledge of the ship's name to the underwriters:—Held, that the policy was thereby avoided, though the intelligence afterwards turned out to be false. Lynch v. Dunsford, 14 East, 494; 13 R. R. 295.

—— Underwriter's Means of Identifying.]—During the American war of 1863-4, the "Georgia" screw steamer obtained notoriety as a cruiser in the service of the Confederate States; in May, 1864, she put into Liverpool, where she was dismantled, and this was also a subject of public notoriety, and, as such, known to the defendant, an underwriter at Lloyd's; at Liverpool she was bought by the plaintiff at public auction, and converted by him into a merchant vessel. In August, 1864, the plaintiff, through his broker in London, effected with the defendant an insurance of the vessel for six months. The particulars furnished by the plaintiff were, "Georgia," s.s., chartered on a voyage from Liverpool to Lisbon and the Portuguese settlements on the west coast of Africa and back. The vessel sailed from Liverpool, and was immediately captured by a frigate of the United States. In an action on the policy to recover for the loss, the defendant set up as a defence the concealment of the fact that the "Georgia" proposed for insurance was the late Confederate war steamer, and therefore liable to capture by the United States. The jury found that the defendant was not aware that the "Georgia" which he was insuring was the Confederate steamer, but that he had, at the time of underwriting, abundant means of identifying the ship from his previous knowledge coupled with the particulars given by the plaintiff:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to the verdict. Bates v. Hewitt, 36 L. J., Q. B. 282; L. R. 2 Q. B. 595; 15 W. R. 1172.

8. Port or Place of Sailing or Loading.

The concealment of the true port of loading will vitiate a policy. Hodgson v. Richardson, 1 W. Bl. 463.

If a ship is insured at and from a certain place, where in fact she is not at the time, but arrives there after some interval (but the fact is not communicated to the underwriters, who do not call for information on the subject), it is a question for the jury, whether the delay which intervened materially varied the risk. Hull v. Cooper, 14 East, 479; 13 R. R. 287.

The owners, in 1861, effected with an underwriter a policy on bone and bone ash on board a vessel, at and from Buenos Ayres and port or ports of loading in the province of Buenos Ayres, to port or ports of call and discharge in the United Kingdom. The assured knew, at that time, that the vessel was going from Buenos Ayres to L., a port in the province, to complete her cargo; but this fact was not communicated to the underwriter, and he did not know that L. was a port in the province. L. was a place where a trade in hides, bone and bone ashes was carried on between that place and Buenos Ayres; but vessels could not clear from L. to Europe, but had to return to Buenos Ayres to obtain a clearance. There was no artificial port, but only a roadstead protected by natural headlands forming a kind of bay. L. was unknown in 1861 to underwriters as a place of loading; and if underwriters, on a policy as above, had been informed that the vessel was going to load there they would have required a higher premium than the sum charged. The vessel went from Buenos Ayres to L., but being unable to get cargo, she left that place to return to Buenos Ayres, and was lost on her way thither:—Held, that the non-communication of the fact that the vessel was going to L. to complete her cargo was a concealment of a material fact, which vitiated the policy:—Held, also, that L. was a port of loading within the policy. Harrower v. Hutchinson, 10 B. & S. 469; 39 L. J., Q. B. 229; L. R. 5 Q. B. 584; 22 L. T. 684—Ex. Ch. Reversing 17 W. R. 731.

By a charterparty it was agreed that a ship then being at M. V., should proceed to F., and thence to S. C., where she was to load a complete cargo, and then proceed to E.; 250*l.* per month for freight, to be paid thus: 250*l.*, one month's freight, at F., and balance on delivery of the cargo at port of discharge. The vessel sailed, and 250*l.* was paid. She arrived at S. C., but, instead of proceeding to E., returned to M. V. A policy was effected, by which 450*l.*, freight advanced, was insured on the voyage from M. V. to H. A second charterparty was entered into whilst the vessel was still at M. V., by which she was to proceed to H. with the cargo then on board, a part of which she brought from S. C.; freight 250*l.* per month, allowing a "deduction of 250*l.*, which the captain has already received on account of the charter." The first charterparty was not expressly cancelled or annulled. The ship sailed and was lost. At the time of effecting the policy, nothing was said as to the vessel having been to S. C.:—Held, that it was competent for the parties to enter into the second charterparty, and that there was no misrepresentation or concealment. Ellis v. Lafone, 8 Ex. 546; 22 L. J., Ex. 124; 17 Jur. 213; 1 W. R. 200—Ex. Ch.

9. Commencement of Hostilities.

Common Knowledge.]—If an insurance is made before the commencement of hostilities, but when everybody expects a war immediately, the insured is not bound to give the underwriters notice, though the ship does not sail till after the war takes place, and the underwriter is liable in case of a capture. Planche or Planchée v. Fletcher, 1 Dougl. 251; 1 Park, Ins. (8th ed.) 360.

Nationality of Assured.]—On a policy effected after a declaration of war by America, but before it was known in this country, where it was not stated in the policy, nor communicated to the underwriter, that the assured was an American subject, and the loss happened in consequence of a seizure by that government, for a forfeiture for a breach of their non-importation act:—Held, that the underwriters were not liable, and that no action could be maintained, even after the termination of the war. Campbell v. Innes, 4 B. & Ald. 423; 23 R. R. 238.

Special Information.]—The assured, on a policy at and from Riga, were in the possession of a letter from their correspondent there, stating that an order for sending the papers of all ships arriving at that port to Petersburgh had produced a great sensation, intimating that the papers of the ship insured had been sent to Petersburgh accordingly, and expressing considerable apprehensions for her safety. This letter was not communicated to the underwriters; but the broker informed them of the fact of the ship's papers having been sent to Petersburgh:—Held, that the policy was not vitiated on the ground of concealment, by the non-communication of the letter. Bell v. Bell, 2 Camp. 479; 11 R. R. 769.

10. Terms of Insurance.

A London merchant, insuring at Leith, represented (contrary to the fact) that he had done some insurances at Lloyd's upon the same voyage, at the same premium given to the Leith underwriters, who (not being well acquainted with the nature of the risk themselves) subscribed the policy from their confidence in the skill and judgment of the London underwriters:—Held, that this was a fraud which vitiated the policy, though the misrepresentation was not such as affected the nature of the risk. Sibbald v. Hill, 2 Dow, 263; 14 R. R. 160.

11. Proof.

List at Lloyd's.]—The shipping list at Lloyd's, stating the time of a vessel's sailing, is primâ facie evidence against an underwriter as to what it contains, as the underwriter must be presumed to have a knowledge of its contents, from having access to it in the course of his business; but where the insurer, in a letter written for the purpose of effecting the insurance, made a false statement and concealment as to the time of the vessel's sailing, and the underwriter, relying upon that representation, did not in fact look at the list, but acted upon the representation in making the insurance:—Held, that the underwriter was not bound by the contents of the list, so as to render the misrepresentation and concealment by which he was misled immaterial; and that it was the duty of the judge to have pointed out to the jury that misrepresentation and concealment. Mackintosh v. Marshall, 11 M. & W. 116; 12 L. J., Ex. 337.

Evidence as to Materiality—Opinion.]—Evidence of underwriters' opinion as to the materiality of information received by the assured and not communicated to his underwriters not admitted. Durrell v. Bederley, Holt, 283; 8 R. R. 739; 17 R. R. 639. S. P., Carter v. Boehm, 3 Burr. 1909; 1 W. Bl. 593. But see, aliter, Chaurand v. Angerstein, Peake (N.P.) 43; Rickards v. Murdock, 10 B. & C. 527; 8 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 210; Elton v. Larkins, 5 Car. & P. 592; Chapman v. Walton, 10 Bing. 57; 3 M. & Scott, 389; 2 L. J., C. P. 210; Littledale v. Dixon, 1 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 151; 8 R. R. 774; Haywood v. Rodgers, 4 East, 590; 7 R. R. 638.

A merchant abroad shipped goods for England on board the ship "C." and by another ship that sailed after her wrote to an agent in England desiring him if he received the letter before the "C." arrived to wait thirty days in order to give her every chance to arrive, and then to insure the goods. The agent did as instructed; the broker he employed to insure did not tell the underwriters of the order to wait thirty days before insuring. The "C." never arrived. The assured sued the underwriters on the policy, but failed on account of the suppression of fact by the broker. In an action by the assured against the broker for negligence in effecting the policy:—Held, that the evidence of underwriters and brokers as to the materiality of the suppressed facts was not admissible. Campbell v. Rickards, 5 B. & Ad. 840; 2 N. & M. 542; 2 L. J., K. B. 204.

The opinion of one conversant with insurance business as to the materiality of facts not communicated to underwriter with regard to the amount of the premium is admissible in evidence. Berthon v. Loughman, 2 Stark. 258.

Question for Jury.]—The materiality of the intelligence or rumours, which the assured is charged with having suppressed, is a question for the jury, under the circumstances of the case. Rickards v. Murdock, supra.

Onus.]—In an action on a policy on a ship, where the defendant pleads, that, at the time of making the policy, the plaintiff wrongfully concealed material facts and information, the defendant is bound to prove all the allegations in the plea. Elkin v. Janson, 13 M. & W. 655; 14 L. J., Ex. 201; 9 Jur. 353.

On proof that the facts were material, and known to the assured, slight evidence of non-communication to the underwriter will shift the burden of proof. Ib.

12. Chancery Jurisdiction.

Fraud—Cancellation of Policy—Jurisdiction of Court of Equity.]—If a policy is liable to be completely avoided, as on the ground of fraud or misrepresentation, a court of equity has jurisdiction to direct its delivery up and cancellation, but it has no jurisdiction to direct the cancellation of a policy to any claim on which there is a good legal defence, or to declare that there is no liability upon it. If there is danger of the evidence for the defence being lost, the remedy is, not an action for cancellation, but an action to perpetuate testimony. Brooking v. Maudslay, 57 L. J., Ch. 1001; 38 Ch. D. 636; 58 L. T. 852; 36 W. R. 664; 6 Asp. M. C. 296.

Where four of many actions against the various underwriters on policies on several ships (individually) had been tried, and verdict passed for plaintiffs at law, the court granted an injunction to restrain them (the plaintiffs at law) from proceeding further in a case where there was a strong suspicion of fraud in the assured, on the money being paid into court; on the ground of answer of one of defendants not having come in. Kensington v. White, 3 Price, 164.

A merchant having a doubtful account of his ship insures the ship without acquainting the insurers what danger the ship was in:—Held, to be a fraudulent insurance, and the court relieved against the policy. De Costa v. Scandret, 2 P. Wms. 170.

Bill by underwriter of a policy of marine insurance, the ship insured having been lost, to restrain an action brought by the insured for the amount of the policy, and to have the policy itself delivered up to be cancelled, on the ground of deviation and delay in the voyage and the unseaworthiness of the ship. A verdict was given for the defendant in the suit (plaintiff at law), on the ground of deviation. He then brought the suit to a hearing, insisting that the policy ought to be delivered up:—Held, that the whole case turning upon a mere question of fact, and there being no fraud, there was no equity, and the bill was dismissed, with costs. Thornton v. Knight, 16 Sim. 509; 13 Jur. 180.

VIII. VOYAGE.

1. General Legality, 1201.
2. Simulated Papers, 1205.
3. Clearance, 1206.
4. Deck Cargo, 1207.
5. Hostile Ports, 1208.
6. Ports under Embargo, 1209.
7. Neutral Trading, 1209.
8. Abandonment of Voyage, 1211.

1. General Legality.

Part of Voyage.]—If there is any illegality in the commencement of an integral voyage, and an insurance is effected on the latter part of the voyage, which, taken by itself, would be legal, still the assured cannot recover on the policy. Marryatt v. Wilson, 8 Term Rep. 31 ; 1 Bos. & P. 430 ; Bird v. Pigou, 2 Selw. N. P. (11th ed.) 966, n.

If a master sails under a charterparty, stipulating for a voyage of which a part is illegal. Semble, that this does not prevent his insuring on, not subject him to forfeiture for, the part antecedent to the illegal act ; for as he cannot be compelled to perform, nor enforce the payment of freight on the illegal part of the adventure, it may be presumed that he will abandon it. Sewell v. Royal Exchange Co., 4 Taunt. 856.

If a ship is insured "at and from A. to B.," and there is an illegality in the traffic during her stay at A., the assured cannot recover on the policy for a loss happening between A. and B. Bird v. Appleton, 8 Term Rep. 562 ; 5 R. R. 468.

Yet an insurance on a ship for a particular voyage is legal, though she may have done some act in a former voyage for which she was liable to seizure ; and the goods may be insured though purchased with the proceeds of a former illegal cargo. Ib.

Letters of Marque.]—After an assurance on a ship on a trading voyage, the assured applied to the underwriters for leave to take in guns and a letter of marque, the latter of which was positively refused ; notwithstanding which, the ship sailed with the general letter of marque ; this vacated the policy, although the assured did not in fact make use of the letter of marque for the purpose of cruising, or intend so to do, but merely took it on board for the purpose of cruising on the voyage home. Denison v. Modigliani, 5 Term Rep. 580.

The assured upon a trading voyage, taking out a letter of marque (but without a certificate, which was necessary to its validity), unknown to the underwriters, solely with a view to encourage seamen to enter, and without any intention of using it for the purpose of cruising, though the vessel was armed for self-defence, is not such an alteration of circumstances as will avoid the policy. Moss v. Byrom, 6 Term Rep. 379 ; 3 R. R. 208.

Voyage primâ facie Legal.]—Where a policy does not appear on the face of it to be legal, the court will not grant a new trial in order to let the defendant into proof that it was so. Quære, whether trading with an enemy and insurance of an enemy's goods are illegal. Gist v. Mason, 1 Term Rep. 88 ; 1 R. R. 154.

In an action upon a policy it will be presumed that the ship complied with the law, as to sailing with convoy, until the contrary is proved. Thornton v. Lance, 4 Camp. 231.

Sailing Contrary to Embargo.]—Policy on neutral ship engaged, contrary to embargo, in supplying provisions West Indies, held invalid. Dalmady v. Motteux, 1 Term Rep. 89, n. ; 1 R. R. 155, n.

Navigation Laws — Illegality.]—A Swedish ship insured at and from a loading port in the West Indies to Gottenburg, took in part of her cargo at a British West Indian port :—Held, that the assured could not recover, the voyage being illegal under the navigation laws. Chalmers v. Bell, 3 Bos. & P. 604.

Policy on a ship engaged in trade to the west coast of America without South Sea licence held void, notwithstanding 45 Geo. 3, c. 34, repealing the navigation act as to foreign-built ships. Dunlop v. Gill, 1 B. & Ald. 334.

Where a British subject, purchasing by the king's licence a hostile-built vessel, which was not entitled or required to have a British register, chartered her on a voyage out to the Azores and home, and sent her to sea with a crew in which there was not the proportion of British mariners required by 12 Car. 2, c. 18, s. 14, this did not avoid a policy on the outward part of the voyage. Nor was it an objection to the same policy, that she was foreign built ; for the 49 Geo. 3, c. 60, s. 1, authorised the ships of any country in amity, by the king's licence, to bring foreign produce to England, though not English built or registered, contrary to the 12 Car. 2, c. 18, ss. 3 & 10, and that a ship purchased by a British subject from an enemy with licence, was the ship of a country in amity. Sewell v. Royal Exchange Assurance Co., 4 Taunt. 856.

It was illegal to export manufactures, the produce of Europe, from the Cape of Good Hope to any port to the eastward in his majesty's possessions under 15 Car. 2, c. 7, s. 6. Gray v. Lloyd, 4 Taunt. 136.

The 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 54, did not prohibit the importation for home consumption (except in British vessels) of any goods the produce of Europe, excepting those specifically enumerated in s. 2. Thomson v. Irving, 7 M. & W. 367 ; 10 L. J., Ex. 98 ; 5 Jur. 103.

The navigation laws were not binding on the crown so as to prevent transportation of public stores from one colony to another. The Swift, 1 Dods. 320.

Illegality as to Part of Goods.]—Where a party insured to a certain amount, in one policy, goods to be thereafter specified, and in the specifications afterwards made by him were included some goods, the exportation of which was prohibited under pain of forfeiting the goods themselves and treble their value, and which also induced the forfeiture of the ship—the policy was avoided in toto. Parkin v. Dick, 11 East, 502 ; 2 Camp. 221 ; 11 R. R. 258.

Crew not British.]—The assured can recover upon a ship policy although the ship had not on board the number of British seamen required by 6 Geo. 4, c. 109, and although no certificate of inability to procure them was obtained. Suart v. Powell, 1 B. & Ad. 266 ; 8 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 391.

Voyage Contrary to Statutes.]—An assurance of a voyage expressly prohibited by the laws of this country is void. Johnston v. Sutton, 1 Dougl. 254.

Non-certificated Master — Slave Trade.]—Action on policy. Defence that the master of the ship, a slave ship, was not certificated in accordance with 31 Geo, 3, c. 54, s. 7. Nonsuit upon proof of want of certificate. Farmer v. Legg, 7 Term Rep. 186.

Voyage legal by Licence — Expiration of Licence before Voyage ended.]—Insurance on voyage made legal by licence:—Held, valid, although the time specified in the licence had expired. Schroeder v. Vaux, 15 East, 52; 13 R. R. 758, n.

Licence to G. F. & Co. of London, merchants, on behalf of themselves and others to export on board a ship named, bearing any flag except the French, to a hostile port and to import from thence specified goods, notwithstanding all the documents may represent the ship to be destined to a neutral or hostile port, and to whomsoever such property may appear to belong authorises an enemy, subject of the hostile country to which the ship is licensed legally to export from London, and insurance on such a voyage by his agent here is lawful, and recovery may be had on the policy for a loss occasioned by the act of the trader's own state. Flindt v. Scott, Flindt v. Crokatt, 5 Taunt. 674; 15 R. R. 615.

Licence to export to Baltic though not legalising exportation of goods of Russian enemies afterwards seized by the Russian government, enables plaintiff to recover on policy in respect of goods exported by himself and neutrals. Hagedorn v. Bazett, 2 M. & S. 100.

Licence to export, a certain proportion of the goods to be British:—Held, that exportation of a majority of Spanish goods was in fraud of the licence. Gordon v. Vaughan, 12 East, 302, note.

Licence applied to ship and voyage sufficient proof of legality without connecting it with plaintiff. Butler v. Allnutt, 1 Stark. 223.

Where a ship, bound to Cagliari, with liberty to touch, unload, and load at Gibraltar, sailed with a licence to Gibraltar only, arrived there, and departed without obtaining an extension of the licence from the person authorised to grant licences at Gibraltar:—Held, that an insurance on goods from London to Cagliari was void. Darby v. Newton, 2 Marsh. 252; 6 Taunt. 544.

A ship was permitted by a licence to proceed from D. to L., and thence to B., there to load to the port of destination from which she departed. The vessel proceeded on her voyage from D. to L., and from L. to B.:—Held, that she was not protected by the licence on a further voyage from B. to L. Everth v. Tunno, 1 B. & Ald. 142; 1 Stark. 508.

Action on policy on gunpowder at and from London to Pernambuco. A licence to export gunpowder had been granted to A. B., the manufacturer, upon condition that the exporter should give certain security. A. B. sold the gunpowder to C. D., and contracted to deliver it on board ship:—Held, that the licence was not complied with by A. B. giving the security mentioned, and that the plaintiff could not recover on the policy. Camelo v. Britten, 4 B. & Ald. 184.

Licence to Trade — Wrong Description of Grantee.]—A wrong description of the person to whom a licence to trade with the enemy is granted avoids it; and a policy on his goods is void. Klingender v. Bond, 14 East, 484; 13 R. R. 292.

Duration of Licence.]—A licence was granted to the plaintiff to take a cargo from London to Archangel, and to return thence with grain or other lawful goods, and the licence was limited to 29th September, and afterwards extended to 1st January, 1811. The ship took in a cargo of pitch at Archangel, and started for home, but was driven back by weather to Archangel, where the pitch was sold and the ship laid up for the winter. In August, 1811, she took on board a cargo of wheat and sailed for home:—Held, that the licence covered the voyage with the wheat cargo and that the underwriters were liable for a loss on that voyage. Siffken v. Allnutt, 1 M. & S. 39.

Voyage legal in Commencement may be legal after Licence Expired.]—A voyage legal in its commencement by a licence for four months which expire during the voyage may be legal throughout, if by special circumstances the voyage is protracted; but the assured must prove the special circumstances. Leevin v. Cormac, 4 Taunt. 483, n.

Licence obtained by Fraud.]—An admiralty licence obtained for a ship to sail without convoy, describing her as bound on a voyage to Gibraltar, when in fact she sailed hence with instructions to make the best of her way direct to Palermo, without touching at Gibraltar, unless ordered into the bay by any cruisers which she might meet in passing by it, is fraudulent and void, and will not legalise an insurance by the charterer of such ship sailing without convoy, upon goods put on board and insured from hence to Palermo, with liberty to proceed to any ports to seek convoy. Ingham v. Agnew, 15 East, 517; 13 R. R. 516.

Plaintiff an Alien Enemy.]—Action on ship policy; plea that plaintiff is an alien enemy; replication that plaintiff is resident in the country by the king's licence. The replication is not supported by proof of a licence during peace to trade to a foreign country and back to England, war having broken out before the end of the voyage, and the plaintiff went about in this country without molestation. Boulton v. Dobree, 2 Camp. 162.

Trading with Enemy.]—The plaintiff, a British born subject, domiciled in America, effected a policy on ship freight and goods from Virginia to any Baltic port. The ship was captured on her voyage to Elsinore, in Denmark, then in amity with America, but at war with England:—Held, that the plaintiff could recover. Bell v. Reid, Bell v. Butler, 1 M. & S. 726; 14 R. R. 557.

Trading to ports in Hayti, a French colony partly emancipated from France, then at war with England, the ports in question not being under the dominion of France:—Held, legal, and recovery had upon a policy on cargo. Blackburn v. Thompson, 3 Camp. 61; 13 R. R. 382.

Trade with Enemy — Insurance of Enemy's Ship.]—Semble, all trading with enemies is not unlawful; nor is insurance of enemies' ships during war. Henkle v. Royal Exchange Assurance Co., 1 Ves. Sen. 317.

Recovery on Policy by one who became Enemy after the Loss.]—The British agent effecting a policy on behalf of alien enemies, who became enemies after the loss but before action brought, is entitled to recover against the underwriter, who had only pleaded the general issue. Flindt v. Waters, 15 East, 260 ; 3 R. R. 457.

Convoy Act.] — To vacate a policy for an infraction of the Convoy Act, 43 Geo. 3, c. 57, it was not enough to shew that the ship sailed without convoy by the instrumentality of agent of the assured, unless it appeared that the agent had authority from his principal for this purpose. Carstairs v. Alnutt, 3 Camp. 497.

And it was necessary to prove that it happened with the privity of the owner. Metcalf v. Parry, 4 Camp. 125 ; 15 R. R. 734.

Every person who shipped goods on board a vessel which sailed without convoy, did it at his own peril of her having a sufficient licence for the whole of the voyage, without which all insurances on his goods were void, by 43 Geo. 3, c. 57. Wainhouse v. Cowie, 4 Taunt, 178.

In order to shew that a voyage without convoy from a foreign port was illegal, it was incumbent on the underwriter to prove that there was convoy occasionally appointed from that port, or some one resident there authorised to grant licences to sail without convoy. Wake v. Atty, 4 Taunt. 493 ; 13 R. R. 660.

Omission to Sign Manifest.]—Omission to sign manifest in accordance with 26 Geo. 3, c. 40, s. 1, held to make the whole voyage illegal. Freard v. Dawson, Marsh. Ins. (4th ed.) 136.

Breach of Revenue Laws of Foreign Country.] —A voyage is not illegal because it infringes the revenue laws of the foreign country. Per Mansfield, C.J. Lever v. Fletcher, 1 Park, Ins. (8th ed.) 506.

And see XIII. PREMIUMS, 1. RETURN OF, post, cols. 1303, seq.

2. SIMULATED PAPERS.

Leave to Carry.]—A ship not having leave to carry simulated papers, although without such she would certainly have been seized and condemned as coming from an enemy's country, the underwriters were not liable for a loss which ensued from the act of the assured himself. Horneyer v. Lushington, 15 East, 46 ; 3 Camp. 85 ; 13 R. R. 759.

An assured upon a policy on ship, not having leave to carry simulated papers, cannot recover for a loss by capture ; if it appears by the sentence of the foreign prize court that one of the causes stated for the condemnation was the carrying of simulated papers. Oswell v. Vigney, 15 East, 70 ; 13 R. R. 375.

American goods in an American ship having been insured on a voyage from America to the Baltic, with liberty to carry simulated papers, and the ship having been captured and condemned by a Danish sentence, which, after suggesting a doubt as to the English character of the owner, stated that the documents rendered it impossible to acknowledge the ship and cargo as neutral ; and the court of appeal, afterwards alleging as grounds of confirmation, first, that the documents were not in due order ; that the sea-letter was informal, and no credit could be given to it as a public document ; secondly, that the ship had false documents ; thirdly, that the documents disagreed with regard to their contents ; fourthly, that a person on board who seemed to be interested in the ship and cargo, had been set on shore in England ; fifthly, that false French certificates d'origine were found on board :—Held, that, taking the whole together, the ground of condemnation was the having on board simulated papers, which, with other circumstances, led to the conclusion that the ship and cargo were hostile British and not neutral American property ; and the not having a sea-passport on board, verified in the manner stated in the sentence, was only a circumstance to shew that the ship carried simulated papers ; even if such a passport was required by any treaty between the United States and Denmark, which did not appear ; and consequently, that the loss was attributable to a cause which the underwriter had sanctioned by the leave to carry simulated papers ; and not from the ship's not being properly documented, as an American ship, for which the assured, as owner of the ship, as well as of the goods insured, would have been answerable ; neither was the condemnation bad, on the ground that the papers had not been properly simulated, so as to attribute the loss to the mere negligence of the assured in the mode of exercising the liberty reserved to them, supposing that would have varied the case. Bell v. Bromfield, 15 East, 364.

Policy on ships and goods at and from London to any ports in the Baltic, with liberty to carry simulated papers and clearances, and until safely warehoused in the warehouses of the consignees, at the port of discharge, at forty guineas per cent. premium :—Held, that the underwriter was liable for a loss arising from confiscation by the Prussian government, notwithstanding the persons in whom the interest was averred were Prussian subjects, Prussia not being at war with this country ; it being found that, at the time of effecting the policy, all direct commerce between this country and the ports in the Baltic was prohibited by the powers possessing ports there ; but that, notwithstanding, an extensive course of commerce was carried on between this country and those parts by means of simulated papers and clearances, which was well known to all descriptions of persons, such as plaintiffs and defendants. Simeon v. Bazett, 2 M. & S. 94.

Negligence of Insurance Brokers.]—Insurance brokers are not liable to an action for neglecting to insert in a policy a liberty to carry simulated papers, if the written instructions given them contain no direction for that purpose, although it may have been verbally communicated to them that simulated papers were to be used in the voyage. Fomin v. Oswell, 3 Camp. 357.

Condemnation of Ship.]—False papers for the purpose of protecting contraband goods by a false destination are cause of condemnation of the ship. The Edward, 4 C. Rob. 68.

3. CLEARANCE.

Goods Shipped after.]—It is no objection to the assured on goods recovering for a loss by a peril within the policy, that, after the captain had obtained his manifest and custom-house clearances, as required by 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 11, s. 3, goods of the assured were put on board by the packer, who had previously made all the necessary entries at the custom-house. Carruthers v. Gray, 15 East, 35 ; 3 Camp. 142.

4. Deck Cargo.

Privity of Owner Insuring.]—A master of a ship, whose cargo consists of timber and wood goods, clearing out and sailing from a British port of North America for a port in the United Kingdom, with part of the cargo on deck, in violation of the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 107, ss. 170, 171, 172, does not vitiate a policy by the owner of the ship and cargo, unless at the time of the insurance he was privy to the act. Wilson v. Rankin, 35 L. J., Q. B. 87; L. R. 1 Q. B. 162; 13 L. T. 564; 14 W. R. 198—Ex. Ch.

What are.]—Where on such a voyage the whole of the cargo on freight is stowed below deck, but the captain took on deck a quantity of spars and other articles for the owner with the object of saving expense, in obtaining the materials necessary for refitting the vessel after the voyage, it is a violation of the statute. Ib.

Illegality of Whole Voyage.]—A ship sailing upon such a voyage without having obtained a certificate of having cleared out with no cargo on deck is not a statutory unseaworthiness. Wilson v. Rankin, supra.

By 16 & 17 Vict. c. 107, s. 170, before any clearing officer permits any ship, wholly or in part laden with timber, to clear out from any British port in North America after the 1st September and before the 1st May, he shall ascertain that the whole of the cargo is below deck, and give the master a certificate to that effect. By s. 172, the master shall not sail without such certificate, or place or permit to be upon the deck any part of the cargo, under a penalty of 100*l.* In an action upon a policy of insurance on the cargo and freight:—Held, that a plea that the master had acted in contravention of s. 172, "as the plaintiff well knew before and at the time of loading and of sailing," was no answer, inasmuch as the statute did not by reason thereof make the voyage illegal, and the plea did not shew privity and consent of the plaintiff. Cunard v. Hyde, El. Bl. & El. 670; 27 L. J., Q. B. 408; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 40.

After 1st September, 1856, orders were given for an insurance on cargo and freight by a ship from a port in North America to a port in the United Kingdom, and the insurance was effected thereupon. Both when the orders were given and when the insurance was effected, it was known to the persons interested in the cargo and freight, and who gave the orders, that much of the cargo was loaded on deck; they intended the ship to sail, so laden, from Miramichi for the United Kingdom before 1st May, 1857; and they ordered the insurance to be effected with an express purpose to cover the whole cargo and freight, including the portion of cargo above deck. On the 10th September, 1856, the ship sailed on the voyage insured, deck laden, and without a certificate to the master from the clearing officer, and the cargo was totally lost:—Held, that the whole voyage was illegal; that the illegality vitiated the insurance with respect to the whole cargo, not merely as to so much of it as was loaded on deck; and that the assured, who were privy to the illegality, could recover nothing from the underwriters. Cunard v. Hyde, 2 El. & El. 1; 29 L. J., Q. B. 6; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 14.

In an action upon a policy the defendant pleaded that the fact that the ship insured was to carry a deck cargo was not disclosed, and it was contended that such concealment avoided the policy:—Held, that it did not avoid the policy entirely, but only as regarded the cargo carried on deck. Clarkson v. Young, 22 L. T. 41.

An insurance broker effected an open policy on a cargo of cotton on board the ship of his principal. It was intended to ship the cotton on board at the shipper's risk, which should have been expressed in the bill of lading, but by a mistake of the shipowners' agent in the foreign port at which the cotton was put on board, a clean bill of lading was given. On the voyage the vessel encountered heavy weather, and the cotton, owing to its being carried on deck, was compelled to be jettisoned. The broker gave notice to the insurance company of the loss, but other open policies having been effected with the same insurance company by the same shipowners for cotton shipped subsequently, and declarations having been made on these policies by the broker, although no declaration had been made in respect of the cotton that had been lost, he, on discovering that a mistake had been made, and that, contrary to his instructions, a clean bill of lading had been given instead of one expressing that the cotton was shipped at the shipper's risk, altered the declarations on the policies by substituting for certain cotton therein the cotton which had been jettisoned:—Held, that the shipowners being liable for the loss of the goods by jettison through their being carried on deck, had an insurable interest in respect of which they, and therefore their agent, were entitled to recover. Stephens v. Australasian Ins. Co., 42 L. J., C. P. 12; L. R. 8 C. P. 18; 27 L. T. 585; 21 W. R. 228; 1 Asp. M. C. 458.

Held, also, that in the absence of proof of fraudulent intent, the assured's right to recover was not prejudiced by his having altered the declaration even after loss, a usage to that effect having been proved to exist, and which the court would not pronounce to be unreasonable. Ib.

5. Hostile Ports.

Legality.]—A policy to any port or ports in the Baltic was legal, though some of those ports were then in a state of war with this country, and though no licence had been obtained, provided the ship was not sailing to a hostile port. Wright v. Welbie, 1 Chit. 49; 22 R. R. 792.

A policy is not vitiated by giving leave to the ship to proceed to any port in a particular sea, in which there are both hostile and neutral ports, unless it can be shewn that it was intended the ship should, in fact, proceed to one of the former. Muller v. Thompson, 2 Camp. 610; 12 R. R. 753.

An order of council permitting the consignee of goods coming from an enemy's country, without a licence, to land them here on condition of immediately re-exporting them, does not so legalise the voyage as to enable the master of a ship to recover his freight. Muller v. Gernon, 3 Taunt. 394.

Expected Hostilities.]—Insurance on provisions "from London to Helsinburgh, the Sound, Copenhagen, all or either"; which provisions were intended for the supply of the British fleet and army engaged in the expedition against Copenhagen, of which they were then in possession, but were about to evacuate it, and were consigned to merchants there and at Elsinore—was good; although, in consequence of expected hostilities with Denmark, an order of the king in council had issued, prohibiting the clearing out of any British ships to a Danish port, and a clearance was in consequence taken out for Helsinburgh, a Swedish and neutral port in the neighbourhood of Denmark, the adventure being legal, and not contravening the spirit of the order of council. Atkinson v. Abbott, 11 East, 135; 1 Camp. 535.

Evidence.]—A licence to sail to a hostile port is primâ facie evidence that when a ship left her port of outfit she sailed upon the voyage insured. Marshall v. Parker, 2 Camp. 69; 11 R. R. 665.

Illegality—Onus on Defendant to Prove.]—If an insurance is made to a port or ports within a district of which part is hostile and part neutral, the presumption is that a neutral port was intended. Anon., 1 Chit. 53.

6. Ports under Embargo.

Voyage to, Illegal.]—A voyage contrary to the regulations of an embargo laid on ports by the king in time of war is illegal, and cannot be the subject of a policy. Delmada v. Motteux, 1 Term Rep. 85, n.

Knowledge of Blockade.]—A policy on goods from Liverpool to any port in the river Plata was effected, after notification in the "London Gazette" that such ports were blockaded. The ship, after such notification, sailed from Liverpool, and was taken:—Held, that the voyage insured was not illegal, as the vessel might sail for Buenos Ayres without contravening the laws of nations for the purpose of inquiring whether the blockade continued. Naylor v. Taylor, 4 M. & Ry. 526; 9 B. & C. 718.

A ship was destined to a port which was notified to be under blockade:—Held, that the voyage was not illegal in its inception, as the vessel might have sailed for the purpose of inquiring whether the blockade existed. Dalgleish v. Hodgson, 5 M. & P. 407; 7 Bing. 495; 9 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 138.

If a ship, the cargo of which is insured, sails from a British port, and notice is afterwards given in the Gazette that the foreign port to which she is bound is blockaded, it is a question of fact for the jury, in an action upon the policy, the ship having been captured, whether the captain knew of the blockade or not. Harratt v. Wise, 4 M. & Ry. 521; 9 B. & C. 712; 7 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 309.

7. Neutral Trading.

Documents.]—A neutral vessel is not seaworthy, unless she is provided with documents to prove her neutrality. Steel v. Lacy, 3 Taunt. 285; 12 R. R. 658.

Receiving Contraband.]—If a neutral, in consequence of an agreement made in England, meets a British vessel abroad, for the purpose of receiving gunpowder and arms, the voyage of the neutral is thereby rendered illegal and incapable of insurance, though the British vessel has had a licence to export such articles for the purposes of trade. Gibson v. Service, 1 Marsh. 119; 5 Taunt. 433; 15 R. R. 541. S. P., Gibson v. Mair, 1 Marsh. 39; 15 R. R. 668.

—— Carrying to Hostile Country.]—It is no breach of neutrality for a neutral ship to carry enemy's property from its own to the enemy's country; the voyage and commerce not being of a hostile description, nor otherwise expressly or impliedly forbidden by the law or policy of this country; though the neutral thereby subjects his ship to be detained and carried into a British port for the purpose of search; and therefore a British underwriter after condemnation of the enemy's goods found on board, and liberation of the ship and the rest of the cargo, is liable to the neutral owner of goods insured in the same ship, whose voyage was so interrupted, either as for a total loss, if notice of abandonment upon the loss of the voyage is given in reasonable time, or for an average loss, if such notice is given out of time. Barker v. Blakes, 9 East, 283; 9 R. R. 558.

Declaration on a policy on goods from London to Matamoras, alleging a loss in the course of the voyage by a peril insured against. A plea, that the goods were contraband of war, and were shipped for the purpose of being sent to and imported into a port in a state engaged in hostilities, and were liable to be seized by the cruisers of a state at war with that state as contraband of war; and that the ship was carrying goods and papers which rendered her liable to seizure by such cruisers, and that the ship and goods were seized accordingly; which is the loss complained of; of all which the defendant, at the time of subscribing the policy, was wholly ignorant:—Held, that the plea was no defence to the action; that the plea did not deny that the goods were sent from a neutral port to a neutral port in a neutral ship; that the allegation that the ultimate destination of the goods was an enemy's port was an allegation of a mental process only; and that the allegation that the ship was carrying goods and papers which made her liable to seizure was immaterial, it not being alleged that the goods were the plaintiff's goods, or that the plaintiff was in any way responsible for the ship's papers. Hobbs v. Henning, 17 C. B. (N.S.) 791; 34 L. J., C. P. 117; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 223; 12 L. T. 205; 13 W. R. 431.

A policy contained a warranty against contraband. Part of the goods consisted of artillery harness, and were shipped during a war between the United States of America and the Confederate States, with the intention of sending them on from a neutral port to the Confederate States:—Held, that such goods were contraband of war and that the whole insurance was void. Seymour v. London and Provincial Marine Insurance Co., 41 L. J., C. P. 193; 27 L. T. 417; 1 Asp. M. C. 423.

Neutral Goods to Hostile or Neutral Port.]—Semble, that an insurance on goods, the property of a neutral, to a port occupied by the enemy, is void. But though a neutral should himself be resident in a place occupied by the enemy, an insurance on goods (his property) to a neutral or friendly port, is valid. Bromley v. Hesseltine, 1 Camp. 75; 10 R. R. 635.

Confiscation by Neutral Government.]—A neutral insuring against all risks until safely warehoused in the warehouse of the consignee, an adventure, in furtherance of the objects of British commerce, was protected by the policy against confiscation by the act of his own government under the Berlin and Milan decrees. Bazett v. Meyer, 5 Taunt. 824.

Two neutral Prussians, one of them resident in England, the other at Königsberg, having a licence to export to all Baltic ports, some whereof were hostile, were not precluded from recovering on an insurance on goods exported, and confiscated by an act of the Prussian government, then neutral. Anthony v. Moline, 5 Taunt. 711.

Policy covering Illegal Adventure.]—If a policy is in its language large enough to comprise an illegal adventure, the underwriter is not entitled to sue for the premium; therefore, where a broker effected a policy with the plaintiff on goods on board a Spanish ship, at and from New Orleans and Pensacola, both or either, to her port of discharge in the United Kingdom, with a memorandum of receipt of the premium from P. (a merchant in London), which policy was on behalf of a Spanish merchant at Vera Cruz, and at the time of effecting it New Orleans belonged to the Americans, who were at war with this country, and Pensacola to the Spaniards, who were neutrals; and the object of the assured was to cover an importation of cotton wool in Spanish ships from New Orleans to Great Britain:—Held, that the underwriter could not recover from the broker the premium, inasmuch as such adventure from New Orleans with cotton wool was illegal; and if the plaintiff intended to protect it, his subscription was illegal; and if he did not, it was void. Jenkins v. Power, 6 M. & S. 282; 18 R. R. 375.

Colonial Trade of Enemy.]—Carrying on, by neutral, the colonial trade of the enemy, is illegal. The Maria, 5 C. Rob. 365.

8. Abandonment of Voyage.

Unreasonable Delay.]—Mere length of time elapsed between the signing of the policy and the sailing is not sufficient to avoid a policy; it is matter of evidence to be left to the jury, if such a time has elapsed as amounts to an abandonment. Grant v. King, 4 Esp. 275; 6 R. R. 849.

Though unnecessary delay may avoid a policy, that will not be deemed so which is employed in necessary repairs, if the policy is "at and from the place." Smith v. Surridge, 4 Esp. 25; 6 R. R. 837.

The defendant underwrote a policy on a pleasure yacht, on the 25th January, "at and from Bristol to London." The vessel was not got ready for sea until the 17th May:—Held, that this, if unaccounted for, was an unreasonable delay on the part of the insured. Palmer v. Fenning, 9 Bing. 460; 2 M. & Scott, 624.

—— Variation of Risk.]—A defendant executed, 28th February, 1824, a policy on freight from Singapore to Europe, with liberty to sail to, touch, and stay at any places whatsoever to load, unload, reload, and for all necessary purposes whatever. The ship sailed from London in September, 1823, and having been detained by the captain for his own purposes at Van Diemen's Land, did not arrive at Singapore till the 30th March, 1825; she sailed thence on the voyage insured, on the 3rd May, 1825:—Held, that by so long a postponement of the risk, the defendant was discharged, a jury having found the delay unreasonable. Mount v. Larkins, 8 Bing. 108; 1 M. & Scott, 165; 1 L. J., C. P. 20.

Insurance on a voyage from A. to B., from B. to C., and from C. to A.; the voyage from A. to B. was performed, but that from B. to C. being unavoidably prevented, the ship returned to A., where the captain wrote to his broker in London, requesting him to obtain the opinion of the underwriters as to his proceeding directly to C., if the charterer should insist upon it; and was answered by him that he thought the policy at an end; at the instance of the charterer the captain did proceed to C., and on his return from thence to A. the ship was captured:—Held, that the voyage insured was never abandoned. Driscol v. Bovil, 1 Bos. & P. 313.

A determination made by an agent duly authorised, not to sail upon the voyage insured, but upon a different voyage, is an abandonment of such voyage, and discharges the underwriters. Tasker v. Cunningham, 1 Bligh, 87; 20 R. R. 33.

A policy on a ship at and from Bristol to London attaches during the vessel's stay at Bristol; therefore, when the assured did not sail till three months after the execution of the policy:—Held, that the delay was a material variation of the risk, and avoided the policy. Palmer v. Marshall, 8 Bing. 79, 317; 1 M. & Scott, 161, 454; 1 L. J., C. P. 19.

The underwriters on a policy are not discharged by an act on the part of the assured, which to a certain degree increases the risk, if it does not amount to culpable negligence. Toulmin v. Inglis, 1 Camp. 421; 10 R. R. 715.

In an action on a policy it appeared that the ship stayed at a particular place for a period of 109 days, and whether this was an unreasonable time is a question of fact for the jury. Bain v. Case, 3 Car. & P. 496; M. & M. 262.

1. Generally.

Intention.]—A mere intention to deviate, not effected, will not vitiate the policy. Kewley v. Ryan, 2 H. Bl. 343; 3 R. R. 408.

And an intention to deviate, if the ship is taken before the dividing point, does not vacate the policy. Thellusson v. Fergusson, 1 Dougl. 361.

Goods were insured from Heligoland to Memel, with liberty to touch at any ports and to seek, join and exchange convoy; warranted free from capture in the port of Memel. The ship sailed with orders to go to Gottenburg to get orders for Anholt or Memel, and was captured on her passage to Gottenburg, which is in the track either for Anholt or Memel:—Held, that this was to be considered as a voyage to Memel, and that the risk had attached; and that the mere intention to deviate which did not avoid the policy; and that the underwriter was liable. Heselton v. Allnutt, 1 M. & S. 46.

Intention to deviate does not avoid the policy, when the loss is before deviation. Kingston v. Phelps, cited, 7 Term Rep. 165.

What Voyage.]—If a ship insured for one voyage sails upon another, though she is taken before the dividing point of the two voyages, the policy is discharged. Wooldridge v. Boydell, 1 Dougl. 16.

If the voyage described in a policy is "from A. to B. and C." and the ship goes to C. before B. (though C. is nearer to A. than B. is), it is a deviation, and the plaintiff cannot recover for any subsequent loss, if it is not the regular and settled course of the voyage to go to C. first. Beatson v. Haworth, 6 Term Rep. 533; 3 R. R. 258.

In an action on a voyage policy of insurance, it was proved that the loss occurred in the course of a voyage which was only collateral to, and not necessarily incident to, the voyage described in the policy:—Held, that the assured was not entitled to recover. Wingate v. Foster, 47 L. J., Q. B. 525; 3 Q. B. D. 582; 38 L. T. 737; 26 W. R. 650; 3 Asp. M. C. 598—C. A.

Premature Sailing.]—If a ship, insured from a certain time, sails before the time on a different voyage from that insured, the assured cannot recover though she afterwards gets into the course of the voyage described in the policy, and is lost after the day upon which the policy was to have attached. Way v. Modigliani, 2 Term Rep. 30; 1 R. R. 412.

Calling for Pass.]—Policy on goods for a voyage from Dunkirk to Leghorn. The ship called at Dover for a Mediterranean pass:—Held, a deviation. Townson v. Guyon, 2 Park, Ins. (8th ed.) 620.

Putting into Port on Voyage.]—A ship on a voyage from Dartmouth to Liverpool put into Looe, which she must necessarily pass on the voyage, and was afterwards lost at sea:—Held, a deviation, and underwriter not liable. Fox v. Black, 2 Park, Ins. (8th ed.) 620.

Necessity.]—A ship insured from A. to B., sailed with intent to touch at C., an intermediate point; to a certain point the voyage was the same, from that point there were three tracks to B., one by the way of C., the two others by different courses; there were advantages and disadvantages attending each, and the captain must elect according to circumstances. The ship took the track by C., with intent to put in there, but was taken before she actually came to the point where she must have turned out of the track to B., by the way of C., for the purpose of putting into the harbour of C., yet the underwriter was discharged, because he was entitled to the advantages of the captain's judgment in electing which of the three tracks it was best to pursue when he came to the first dividing point. Middlewood v. Blakes, 7 Term Rep. 162; 4 R. R. 405.

If an insured ship quits the courses described in the policy, from necessity, she must pursue such new voyage of necessity in the direct course and in the shortest time, otherwise the underwriters will be discharged. Lavabre v. Wilson, 1 Dougl. 284.

Implied Contract.]—The law implies a contract by the owner of a vessel, whether a general ship, or hired for the special purpose of the voyage, to proceed without unnecessary deviation in the usual and customary course. Davis v. Garrett, 4 M. & P. 540; 6 Bing. 716; 8 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 253.

For Necessary Repairs.]—If a ship needs repairs and goes to the nearest port for that purpose this is not deviation. Motteux v. London Assurance (Governor, &c. of), 1 Atk. 545.

Where a ship in distress put into a port to refit and took in 500 rolls of tobacco for ballast:—Held, not a deviation to avoid the policy. Guibert v. Readhaw, 2 Park, Ins. (8th ed.) 637.

Policy determined by.]—A wilful deviation in the course of the voyage insured determines the policy; for a loss after the deviation from whatever cause, the insurers are not liable. Elliot v. Wilson, 4 Brown, P. C. 470.

Partial Loss before Deviation.]—If a loss happens before deviation, the assured shall recover; for the policy is discharged from the deviation only. Green v. Young, 2 Salk. 444. S. P., Carter v. Royal Exchange Assurance Co., cited 2 Str. 1249.

Coming back on Voyage Insured after Deviation.]—A ship insured "from London to her port of discharge within the Straits as high as Messina" sailed for Marseilles, but with instructions to go also to Genoa, Leghorn and Naples. On arriving off Marseilles, the wind was foul for going in, and she went on to Genoa and Leghorn, and was on her way from there back to Marseilles when she was captured. It was found by the jury that the going no further up the Mediterranean than Leghorn was a deviation, and that the insurance was determined at Leghorn. Clason v. Simmonds, 6 Term Rep. 533, n.; 3 R. R. 260.

Delay.]—A ship from Stockholm to New York was by the course of the voyage to touch at Elsinore for convoy and to pay Sound dues; and the owner of sheep on board took a short stock of provinder for them at Stockholm and laid in the rest at Elsinore before the Sound dues could be paid:—Held, that the policy was not avoided, the voyage not having been delayed; and that the underwriters were liable for a subsequent loss. Cormack v. Gladstone, 11 East. 347; 10 R. R. 518. And see Parkinson v. Collier, post, col. 1219.

Goods shipped during the Voyage.]—Goods were insured "at and from G. to a port or ports in the Baltic, with liberty in case of non-admittance to unload at Carlshawn." After the ship had sailed with convoy and while she was lying in a roadstead under orders of the convoy, she took on board some goods which were no part of the original cargo. They were put on board without delay to the ship:—Held, no deviation. Laroche v. Oswin, 12 East, 131; 11 R. R. 337.

Ship employed as Receiving-ship for Slaves.]—Insurance on ship at and from the coast of Africa to the West Indies, with liberty to exchange goods for slaves. The ship stayed on the coast of Africa several months, and was employed as a receiving-ship for slaves, who were afterwards put on board other ships, being employed as a factory ship:—Held, that this was a deviation. Hartley v. Buggin, 3 Dougl. 39.

Master compelled by Crew to deviate.]—If the master is forced by the crew to go out of his course, that is not deviation to avoid the policy; nor is it barratry. Eton v. Brogden 2 Str. 1264.

Knowledge of Deviation by the Underwriter.]—Gourock Ropework Co. v. Fleming, 5 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (3rd ser.) 501.

2. Stress of Weather.

If a ship is driven out of her loading port into another port, and being there she does the best she can to get to her port of destination, she is not obliged to return to the port whence she was driven. Neither is it a deviation if she completes her lading at the port into which she was driven. Such a deviation may à fortiori be justified under a custom. Delaney v. Stoddart, 1 Term Rep. 22; 1 R. R. 139.

Where the captain, being delayed by adverse winds and danger, puts into a place of safety in his course, and sends ashore for provisions, it is not a deviation. Thomas v. Royal Exchange Assurance Co., 1 Price, 195.

If a ship is forced by stress of weather into any port, she is not protected in breaking bulk while at such port; if she does, it avoids the policy. Stitt v. Wardell, 2 Esp. 610.

3. Hostile Ports.

When Driven away.]—If a ship insured, on arriving off her port of destination, is prevented from entering it by its being in the hands of the enemy, or by being ordered away by the English commander there, the policy does not remain in force till she reaches a port of safety. Parkin v. Tunno, 2 Camp. 59; 11 East, 92; 10 R. R. 422. And see Neilson v. De La Cour, 2 Esp. 619, and Phelps v. Auldjo, 2 Camp. 350; 11 R. R. 725, infra.

Embargo.]—If a ship with goods on board insured to a foreign port, learning, in the course of her voyage, that an embargo is there laid on all ships of her nation, waits at some place as near thereto as she safely can, till the embargo is removed, the goods will in the meantime be protected by the policy, while the voyage remains legal. Blackenhagen v. London Assurance Co., 1 Camp. 454; 10 R. R. 729.

But if she might upon such an occasion put into a friendly port adjoining to her port of destination, and instead of doing so she sails back for her port of outfit, and is lost, she will be considered as having abandoned the voyage insured, and the underwriters will be discharged. Ib.

Final Port—Transhipment.]—Action on a policy upon goods on board the "P.," from Liverpool to Macao, Hong Kong, Canton and other ports in China, with leave to tranship and reship the goods on board the same or any other vessel, and with leave for the "P.," or other vessel on board of which the goods might have been transhipped, to proceed from any port in China, to any other port in China, and discharge at any or all of the said places, or remain at the same until it should be deemed expedient to proceed to the port of discharge, and continuing the risk until the goods should be arrived at their final port of destination. The premium was 5*l.* 5*s.* per cent., to return half if the ship discharged at a port in China in the usual course, the port being open. Plea, that whilst the "P." was lying at Hong Kong, it was determined by the agents of the assured that the goods should be finally discharged at Hong Kong; and thereupon the goods were discharged out of the "P." into another ship, appointed and used by them as a warehouse for receiving the goods; and that Hong Kong became the final place of destination of the "P.," and the goods were discharged at their final place of destination. The "P." was much injured by a storm on the voyage, and upon arrival at Macao, the consignees sent her to Hong Kong with the "J. L." which was chartered by them for the purpose of transhipping the cargo. On 21st July, 1841, whilst the cargo was in progress of transhipment, the "J. L." was wrecked, and all the goods on board of her were lost. There was no market at Hong Kong: the object of transhipping the goods was, in the first place, to examine them; in the next place to have them in a place of safety till they could be sent to Canton, or any other market. At that time there was great exasperation against the English. There had been no declaration of war by England against China. After the storming of Canton by the English, on the 24th of May, there was a suspension of hostilities. The English naval commander had no authority to prevent British ships going up to Canton, if they thought fit; they went at their own risk. In July, the "P." was advertised for England:—Held, that these facts did not prove that Hong Kong was made the final port of destination of the goods; that the voyage was not terminated by the transhipment, because it was within the terms of the policy; nor by the hostilities with the Chinese, because there would have been no infraction of British law in the "P." going to Canton. Oliverson v. Brightman, 8 Q. B. 781; 1 Car. & K. 360; 15 L. J., Q. B. 274; 10 Jur. 875.

In an action upon a similar policy upon other goods in the "P.," which did not give leave to tranship them, a case stated the same facts and evidence:—Held, that the transhipment was not necessary, and constituted a complete deviation not warranted by the policy. Bold v. Rotheram, 8 Q. B. 781; 1 Car. & K. 360; 15 L. J., Q. B. 274; 10 Jur. 875.

4. Restraint.

In what Cases.]—It is a deviation if the master leaves a port for a particular purpose, by the command of the captain of a king's ship lying there, without any remonstrance. Phelps v. Auldjo, 2 Camp. 350; 11 R. R. 725. And see Parkin v. Tunno, supra.

Policy on goods on board a particular ship from A. to B. "against sea risk and fire only"; in the course of the voyage from A. to B. the ship was carried out of the course of the voyage by a king's ship; but being afterwards released, she proceeded on the voyage insured, and while so proceeding the goods insured sustained sea-damage:—Held, that the underwriters were liable for this loss. Scott v. Thompson, 1 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 181. And see Tait v. Levi, 14 East, 481; 13 R. R. 289.

Fear of.]—A British ship insured from Hull to St. Petersburg, having sailed under convoy to the Sound, was afterwards stopped in her course by a king's ship in the Baltic, from an apprehension of hostilities, for eleven days, and then proceeded to a point of rendezvous for convoy, where she waited seven days longer, and then sailed under convoy, till the king's officer received intelligence that a hostile embargo was laid on British ships at St. Petersburg, when he ordered the fleet back to the rendezvous, from which place the ship returned to Hull:—Held, that this loss of the voyage was not attributable to the arrest or detainment of the king's officers; but immediately to the fear of the hostile embargo in the port of destination, and therefore not within the policy; though, if the ship had not been detained in the first instance by the king's officers she would have arrived in time at St. Petersburg to have delivered her cargo before the embargo. Forster v. Christie, 11 East, 205; 10 R. R. 470.

6. TRADING.

What is.]—By the terms of a policy the insurance was expressed to be an insurance on a vessel and cargo "at and from Liverpool to the west and (or) south-west coast of Africa during her stay and trade therein and back to a port of call or (and) discharge in the United Kingdom." The premium was eight guineas per cent. on the value insured. Twenty per cent. of the premium was to be returned for the risk ending in ten months and forty per cent. for the risk ending in eight months; and there was written in the margin "held covered at 13*s.* 4*d.* per cent. per month if longer than twelve months out." The vessel having stayed a month on the African coast for the purpose of earning salvage, and having been damaged there, and afterwards stranded on her voyage home, the owner sued for a total loss:—Held, that the words "stay and trade" meant "stay for the purpose of trade"; and that—no evidence being given that staying for salvage purposes was staying for an ordinary purpose of the South-West African coast trade—the risk had been substantially varied, that there was in the absence of such evidence no question for the jury, and that the jury was properly directed to find for the underwriters. African Merchants Co. v. British and Foreign Marine Ins. Co., 42 L. J., Ex. 60; L. R. 8 Ex. 154; 28 L. T. 233; 21 W. R. 484; 1 Asp. M. C. 588—Ex. Ch.

Implied Condition as to.]—It is not an implied condition in a common policy on ship and freight, that the ship shall not trade in the course of her voyage, if that may be done without deviation or delay, or otherwise increasing the risk of the insurers; and, therefore, where a ship was compelled in the course of her voyage to enter a port for the purpose of obtaining a necessary stock of provisions, which she could not obtain before in the usual course by reason of a scarcity at her landing ports, and during her justifiable stay in the port so entered for that purpose, she took on board bullion there on freight, which the jury found did not occasion any delay in the voyage:—Held, not to avoid the policy. Raine v. Bell, 9 East, 195; 9 R. R. 533.

On a policy at and from London to New South Wales, and from thence to the ship's loading port or ports in the East Indies, and elsewhere, and that she might proceed and sail to, and touch and stay at any ports or places whatsoever and wheresoever and for any purpose whatsoever; the ship sailed from London with convicts to New South Wales, where, having discharged them, she proceeded in ballast to Batavia, where she took on board a quanity of iron, and discharged the same at Sourabaya, and was there loaded with a full cargo of rice, with which she proceeded to the Mauritius, where it was discovered that she had sustained an injury, and she was accordingly broken up:—Held, to be no deviation, although it was insisted that, by the terms of the policy, the ship was only warranted to go to her loading ports and not to trade or take in a fresh cargo. Armet v. Innes, 4 Moore, 150; 21 R. R. 737.

Policy on a ship "from London to New South Wales, and from thence to all parts and places in the East Indies or South America, with liberty to take in and land goods and passengers and to trade backwards and forwards, and forwards and backwards." On arriving at New South Wales the captain was ordered by his owners to proceed on a trading voyage to New Zealand, and thence direct to South America. He proceeded to New Zealand with passengers, and was returning from thence to New South Wales, when the ship was totally lost:—Held, that the sailing from New South Wales to New Zealand and back was a deviation from the voyage insured, by which the insurers were discharged. Bottomley v. Bovill, 7 D. & R. 702; 5 B. & C. 210; 4 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 237; 29 R. R. 221.

Seeking a Cargo—Ports "from thence."]—Insurance on ship at and from Liverpool to ports and places in China and Manilla, all or any, during the ship's stay there for any purposes, and from thence to her port or ports of calling and discharge in the United Kingdom, with liberty to call and stay at all or any ports or places on either side of and at the Cape of Good Hope. The ship sailed from Liverpool direct to a port in China, having on board a cargo for that port and Manilla; and from thence she proceeded to Manilla, and there discharged the remainder of her outward cargo. At Manilla the captain took on board, on freight, 230 chests of opium, for Tongoo, another port in China (not being thereby a tenth part laden), and sailed for Tongoo, there to seek a freight for the United Kingdom and on her voyage thither was lost by perils of the sea. Tongoo is quite out of the direct course from Manilla to the United Kingdom:—Held, that the words "from thence," in the policy, meant not from Manilla only, but "from ports or places in China and Manilla, all or any," and that the sailing from Manilla to Tongoo for the purpose of seeking a homeward cargo was not a deviation. Pratt v. Ashley, 1 Ex. 257. Affirming S. C., sub. nom. Ashley v. Pratt, 16 M. & W. 471; 17 L. J., Ex. 135.

—— Delay at Port.]—In a policy on a seeking ship, a detention for a reasonable time, for the purposes of the seeking adventure, must be allowed; and whether the time is reasonable, is to be determined by the state of things at the port where the ship happens to be. Phillips v. Irving, 7 Man. & G. 325; 8 Scott (N.R.) 3; 13 L. J., C. P. 145.

A ship insured, with liberty to touch, stay and trade at several ports, arrived at one of them on the 3rd June, when some necessary repairs were done to her. On the 2nd September she was ready to take in cargo, but, owing to the state of the freight-market and other difficulties, no cargo was put on board till the 10th January following:—Held, that the delay was not unreasonable, so as to amount to a deviation. Ib.

Taking Goods on Board during Voyage.]—See Laroche v. Oswin, 12 East, 131; 11 R. R. 337; ante, col. 1214.

Convoy missed by Trading.]—Insurance on ship from London to Berbice, with liberty to touch and trade at all places. The ship put into Madeira and stayed there to land and ship goods after her convoy had sailed:—Held, a deviation which avoided the policy. Williams v. Shee, 3 Camp. 469; 14 R. R. 811.

Delay in Landing Goods during Barter.]—Where the policy was on goods until "discharged and safely landed," and the ship arrived on the coast of Africa on May 6th, and during the barter of the cargo in ordinary course the ship was captured on June 4th:—Held, that there had been no deviation. Parkinson v. Collier, 1 Park, Ins. (8th ed.) 653.

6. Liberty to Touch at Ports.

For what Purpose.]—Liberty to touch at a port for any purpose whatever includes liberty to touch for the purpose of taking on board part of the goods insured. Violett v. Allnutt, 3 Taunt. 419; 13 R. R. 676.

Under a liberty to touch and stay at all ports for all purposes whatsoever, the stay must be for some purpose connected with the furtherance of the adventure. Langhorn v. Allnutt, 4 Taunt. 511; 12 R. R. 660.

Whether the purpose is within the scope of the policy is a question for the court. Ib.

The policy not limiting the time of stay, whether a ship has stayed an unreasonable time for the purpose is purely a question for the jury. Ib.

If liberty is given to touch at a port, the contract not defining for what purpose, but a communication having been made to the underwriter that the ship was to touch for a purpose of trade, it will be intended as a liberty to touch for that purpose. Urquhart v. Barnard, 1 Taunt. 450; 10 R. R. 574.

A permission to touch and stay at a place confers no privilege to the insured to break bulk or to unload any part of the cargo, and if he does the policy is avoided. Stitt v. Wardell, 2 Esp. 610.

Policy on voyage at and from Africa to Canaries, Madeira and Lisbon, with liberty to touch, stay, and trade at all ports, &c., in the voyage:—Held, that, after mooring twenty-four hours on the African coast, proceeding south would be a deviation, the leave given being only upon the northwards voyage to Europe. Ranken v. Reeve, 1 Park. Ins. (8th ed.) 627.

So, a vessel having liberty to discharge goods at a particular place, is not at liberty to take in anywhere. Sheriff v. Potts, 5 Esp. 96.

On a policy at and from Para to New York, with leave to call at all or any of the Windward and Leeward Islands and colonies on her passage to New York, and to discharge, exchange and take on board the whole or any part of any cargo or cargoes at any ports or places she might call at or proceed to, particularly at all or any of the Windward and Leeward Islands, without being deemed any deviation:—Held, that the ship having proceeded to two of the Leeward Islands for a purpose totally unconnected with the voyage, it was a deviation. Hammond v. Reid, 4 B. & Ald. 72; 22 R. R. 629.

Where a ship, insured to Martinique, and all or any of the Windward and Leeward Islands, landed the greatest part of her cargo at Martinique, and sailed with the rest to Antigua, where she was wrecked while stopping, partly to dispose of the residue of the outward cargo, and partly to obtain a homeward cargo:—Held, that the underwriters were not liable. Inglis v. Vaux, 3 Camp. 447. See also ante, cols. 1055, 1058, seq.

What Ports.]—Where a vessel sailing from London to Grenada was insured on freight at and from Grenada to London, and arrived in safety, and proceeded to deliver her outward cargo in different bays of the island (where there is but one custom-house), and was lost in entering a bay, to which she was going for the double purpose of delivering the remainder of her outward, and taking in a homeward, cargo:—Held, that this was not a deviation, and that the underwriters were liable for the loss of the homeward freight. Warre v. Miller, 7 D. & R. 1; 4 B. & C. 538; 1 Car. & P. 237; 4 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 8.

Under a policy on goods at and from London to any port or ports, place or places, in the Baltic, backwards and forwards, with leave to touch and stay at any ports and places, for all purposes whatsoever; the assured may wait at any port for information as to what port in the Baltic the ship might safely proceed to to discharge her cargo; that being one of the objects of the adventure arising out of the troubled and shifting state of the different governments on the Baltic shore from the pressure of the French arms. Rucker v. Allnutt, 15 East, 278; 13 R. R. 465.

Policy on a ship "at and from Antigua to England, with liberty to touch at all or any of the West India islands," Jamaica included:—Held, that the ship, under the protection of this policy, might touch at any of the West India islands, although not in the direct course from Antigua to England, and stay at such as she visited the time necessary to complete her homeward cargo. Metcalfe v. Parry, 4 Camp. 123; 15 R. R. 734.

What is a Port.]—Under a policy insuring a brigantine "at and from L. to S., and thence to Barcelona, and at and from thence and two other ports in Spain to a port in Great Britain":—Held, that Salve, a place lying in a bay, having warehouses and a jetty, with a depth of water sufficient for feluccas but not for large ships, and a good roadstead anchorage, where ships lie and are loaded by means of small craft, having also a custom-house and officers, is a port within the meaning of the policy. Sea Insurance Co. of Scotland v. Gavin, 4 Bligh. (N.S.) 578; 2 Dow & C. 129.

Loading Port.]—A policy was effected "at and from Singapore, Penang, Malacca, and Batavia, all or any, to the ship's port of discharge in Europe, with leave to touch, stay and trade at all or any ports or places whatsoever and wheresoever, in the East Indies, Persia, or elsewhere, upon goods in certain vessels, beginning the adventure from the loading there of the ships as above." The ship took in part of her cargo at Batavia, then went to Sourabaya, another port in the East Indies (not in the course of a voyage from Batavia to Europe, and not specified by name in the policy), and took in other goods, then returned to Batavia, whence she afterwards sailed for Europe, and was lost by perils of the sea:—Held, that going to Sourabaya was no deviation, and that the goods there taken on board were protected, as that was a loading port within the policy. Hunter v. Leathley, 10 B. & C. 858; 8 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 274. Affirmed, Leathley v. Hunter, 5 M. & P. 457; 7 Bing. 517; 1 C. & J. 423; 1 Tyr. 355; 9 L. J. (o.s.) Ex. 118—Ex. Ch.

Insurance on a ship "at and from her port of lading in North America to Liverpool." She took in part of her cargo at K., in New Brunswick, and then sailed from thence to B. in the same province, seven miles distant, on the same bay of the sea. She there completed her cargo, and then returned to K. to receive provisions, &c.; after which she sailed for England, and was lost on the voyage. B. was not in the way from K. to Liverpool. B. and K. were situate on creeks, opening into the bay, and were spoken of by some persons as ports, but neither of them had a custom-house. They had custom-house officers, and were under the jurisdiction of the custom-house of St. John, New Brunswick:—Held, that after the ship had begun to load at K., that was her port of lading: that the term "port of lading" in the policy did not allow of her afterwards going to B., and that her doing so was a deviation. Brown v. Tayleur, 4 A. & E. 241; 5 N. & M. 472; 1 H. & Walms. 578; 5 L. J., K. B. 57.

On a policy at and from Pernambuco or any other port or ports in the Brazils to London, "beginning the adventure from the loading the goods on board ship, on the termination of her course, and preparing for her voyage to London." The ship on the termination of her cruise touched at Pernambuco, but failing to procure a cargo there, she proceeded for St. Salvador, and was lost on her voyage thither:—Held, that the ship's proceeding for St. Salvador, was no deviation. Lambert v. Liddard, 1 Marsh. 149; 5 Taunt. 480; 15 R. R. 557.

Where a ship was insured at and from Hull to her port or ports of loading in the Baltic Sea and Gulf of Finland, with liberty for her to proceed and sail to and touch and stay at any ports or places whatsoever, for all purposes, particularly at Elsinore, without being deemed a deviation; and she touched and stayed at Elsinore and Dantzic to deliver goods, Pillau being her place of loading:—Held, that this was a deviation. Solly v. Whitmore, 5 B. & Ald. 45; 24 R. R. 274; and see Forshaw v. Chabert, 6 Moore, 369; 3 Br. & B. 158; 23 R. R. 596.

Loss, at what Time.] — A policy on pearl-ashes contained the usual clause, that the goods were to be free from average under three per cent., and the voyage was described to be from Liverpool to London. The captain also took in goods at Liverpool for Southampton. The vessel met with bad weather before she reached Southampton, and the water pumped up took the colour out of the captain's clothes, which shewed it was much impregnated with the pearl-ash. On arriving at London (after discharging part of the cargo at Southampton), the pearl-ashes were for the first time examined, and it was discovered they had sustained a loss of sixty per cent., and were in a state of solution, which it was proved could not take place in less than three or four weeks. The vessel had fine weather, and was six days going from Southampton to London:—Held, first, that the voyage was the same as described in the policy up to the time of the ship's deviating from the direct course from Liverpool to London, in order to put in at Southampton; secondly, that it was properly left to the jury to say, whether, previously to the point of deviation, the pearl-ashes had suffered a loss of about three per cent. Hare v. Travis, 7 B. & C. 14; 9 D. & R. 748; 5 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 348; 31 R. R. 139.

Employment as Tender.]—Action on a policy on the goods of a vessel called the "Clipper," from Liverpool to any ports or places of loading and trade on the coast of Africa and African islands, during her stay and trade on that coast and islands, and thence to her port or ports of discharging in the United Kingdom, with leave to call at all ports and places, both backwards and forwards, without being deemed any deviation; with liberty for the ship on that voyage to proceed, and sail to and stay at any ports whatever; and with leave to load, unload, &c., goods wheresoever she might proceed to, with any ships, boats, &c., in loading and unloading included; particularly with liberty to tranship on board any vessel or craft in the same employ, with an agreement that the vessel might be employed or used as a tender to any other vessel or ship in the same employ. The vessel arrived at Benin, in Africa, and stayed there thirteen months, during which time she was employed in conveying goods from a vessel in the same employ, at the mouth of the river, to the Cameroons, and putting them on board another vessel, also in the same employ, but on her return with a homeward cargo, was lost:—Held, that the judge who tried the cause was right in telling the jury, that the voyage to the Cameroons was a deviation, and that it was not an acting as a tender within the meaning of the policy. Hamilton v. Sheddon, 3 M. & W. 49; M. & H. 334; 7 L. J., Ex. 1.

Held, also, that it was a proper question for the jury, whether her stay at Benin was unreasonable or not; and they having found in the affirmative, that it was warranted by the evidence. Ib.

Beginning of Adventure.]—In a policy at and from London to Berbice, after the clause "beginning the adventure," &c. were inserted the words "at sea"; and at the bottom of the policy, the words "on ship": the ship without express leave so to do, stopped at Madeira, by which means she lost her convoy, and was captured on her way from thence to Berbice:—Held, that the insertion of the above words did not imply that the risk commenced at sea, so as to justify the deviation; though, at the time of effecting the insurance, the underwriters were informed that the ship had been at Madeira. Redman v. London or Lowdon, 1 Marsh. 136; 5 Taunt. 462; 3 Camp. 503.

In what Order.]—Under a policy from London, to the ship's discharging port or ports in the Baltic, with liberty to touch at any port or ports for orders, or any other purpose; the ship, in touching for orders before she has selected her port of discharge, is not confined to take the ports in the successive order in which they lie in the course of the voyage, but may return to a port she has quitted for orders as to her port of discharge. Andrews v. Mellish, 5 Taunt. 496; 2 M. & S. 27; 16 East, 312. And see Driscol v. Bovil, 1 Bos. & P. 313.

After she has selected her port of discharge, she must touch at ports only in their successive order. Ib.

If ports of call are named in a policy in a successive order, the ship must take them in the same succession in which they are named. Gairdner v. Senhouse, 3 Taunt. 16; 12 R. R. 573. And see Bragg v. Anderson, 4 Taunt. 229; 13 R. R 584.

Under a policy on goods from A. to B., C. and D., the risk attached, where the ship, which was captured before the dividing point, sailed with intention to proceed directly to D., without first visiting the intermediate places. Though, if she meant to go to more than one of the places so named, she must visit them in the order in which they stand in the policy. Marsden v. Reid, 3 East, 572 ; 7 R. R. 516.

Intermediate Voyages.]—Liberty to touch and stay at any port, &c., in the voyage ; by usage of the trade may cover intermediate voyages. Farquharson v. Hunter, 1 Park, Ins. (8th ed.) 105.

7. Seeking Convoy.

It is not a deviation for a ship to leave the regular track for the purpose of seeking convoy, when bonâ fide for the benefit of all concerned, unless expressly prohibited by the terms of the policy. D'Aguilar v. Tobin, Holt, N. P. 185 ; 2 Marsh. 265.

Deviation for the purpose of joining convoy does not avoid the policy. Gordon v. Morley, 2 Str. 1265. S. P., Bond v. Gonsales, 2 Salk. 445 ; Holt, 469.

8. Cruising.

Out of Course of Voyage.]—Whether an insurance of a ship with or without letters of marque upon a certain voyage and commercial adventure from A. to B., enables her to chase for the purpose of hostile attack and capture any vessel she may happen to descry in the course of the voyage insured, in whatever direction, or to any limit, and whether known at the commencement of such chasing to be an enemy or not ; or whether those words are to be confined to a leave to employ force only for the purpose of defence (including a liberty of attack and chase only as far as they may be fairly supposed to promote ultimate security), must, in the absence of any legal decision as to their construction, depend upon the received practice and known sense of commercial men, if there is any such received practice in use among them. But at any rate such words do not appear to authorise direct cruising out of the course of the voyage in search of prize. Parr v. Anderson, 6 East, 202 ; 2 Smith, 316 ; 8 R. R. 461.

A policy on a ship on a certain commercial voyage, with or without letters of marque, giving leave to the assured to chase, capture, and man prizes, however it may warrant him in weighing anchor, while waiting at a place in the course of the commercial voyage, insured for the purpose of chasing an enemy, who had before anchored at the same place in sight of him, and was then endeavouring to escape, will not warrant him, after the capture, and in the course of the further prosecution of the voyage, in lying-to, in order to let the prize keep up with him, for the purpose of protecting her as a convoy into port, there to have her condemned ; though such port was within the voyage insured. Lawrence v. Sydebotham, 6 East, 45 ; 2 Smith, 214 ; 8 R. R. 385.

Repairing Prize.]—Leave granted in a policy on a fishing voyage to see prizes into port does not authorise the ship to remain in port till a prize receives necessary repairs, which she could not otherwise have had : and at most extends to seeing the prize moored safely, and giving the necessary orders for her final destination. Jarratt v. Ward, 1 Camp. 263 ; 10 R. R. 677.

Lying in Wait.]—Liberty given in a policy on a fishing voyage, to chase, capture, and man prizes, does not authorise the ship to lie by nine days off a port, waiting for an enemy's ship to come out when she should have completed her cargo ; although she lay in wait during that time within the limits of her fishing ground. Hibbert v. Halliday, 2 Taunt. 428 ; 11 R. R. 633.

Time.]—A liberty to "cruise six weeks," in a policy, means, "six weeks successively from the commencement of the cruise." Syeres v. Bridge, 2 Dougl. 527.

Chasing Enemy.]—Semble, a ship may chase an enemy, but may not cruise, without being guilty of deviation. Jolly v. Walker, 2 Park, Ins. (8th ed.) 630.

1. Total Loss.

Destruction of Vessel.]—A vessel is totally lost within the meaning of a policy, when it becomes as a ship of no use or value to the owner, and is as much lost as if it had gone to the bottom of the sea, or had been broken to pieces, and the whole or a great part of the fragments had reached the shore as wreck. Irving v. Manning, 1 H. L. Cas. 287 ; 6 C. B. 391.

When Repairs Possible.]—A loss is also to be considered as total, where a prudent owner, if uninsured, would not have repaired. Ib.

A ship was insured in a policy, in which the value was stated at 17,500*l.* The ship was injured by storms, was surveyed, and the repairs were estimated at 10,500*l.* When repaired, the vessel would have been of the marketable value of 9,000*l.* The assured abandoned, and claimed as for a total loss. The jury found, that, under the circumstances existing in the case, a prudent owner, uninsured, would not have repaired the vessel :—Held, that the assured could recover as for a total loss. Ib.

A Dutch ship, valued in the policy at 8,000*l.*, was injured on a voyage from Rotterdam to Java and Sumatra and back again to a port of discharge in Holland. After commencing her voyage she was stranded on the Goodwin Sands, and plundered : she was ultimately removed to London, and notice of abandonment was given to the underwriters. It was proved, that, at the time she was cast away, she was worth 5,833*l.*, that her value as she lay was 700*l.*, and that the salvage was 420*l.* The expense of repairing the ship in England would have been 4,615*l.* ; if she had been entitled to an English register she would have been worth, when repaired, from 4,500*l.* to 4,700*l.* ; and if she had been a British ship, it would have been prudent for a British owner to repair her. It was proved by Dutch witnesses, that the expense of repairing her in Holland would not have exceeded 2,915*l.*; and that the trading companies in Holland would not employ a vessel that had been stranded in the manner in which this vessel was stranded, however perfectly she might have been repaired, and that this circumstance would have affected her value in Holland. The judge told the jury that, in considering whether this was the case of a partial or total loss, they ought not to take into account the value stated in the policy; and that, in considering the same question, they ought to look at all the circumstances attending the ship, and to judge whether, under all those circumstances, a prudent owner, if uninsured, would have declined to repair the ship: and that, if so, they might find it a case of total loss:—Held, that this direction was right. Young v. Turing, 2 Scott (N.R.) 752; 2 Man. & G. 593.

A ship insured in a valued policy for 2,000*l.* was damaged by the perils of the sea; she might have been repaired for 1,400*l.*, but she was not worth repairing:—Held, a total loss. Allen v. Sugrue, 3 Man. & Ry. 9; 8 B. & C. 561; 7 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 53.

When a vessel, in consequence of a storm, is injured to such an extent that the cost of her repair would come to more than her value when repaired, the assured is entitled to recover as for a total loss, although the vessel, from the decayed state of some of her timber, requires it to be replaced with new timber, instead of fresh fastenings only; there being no reason to doubt but that the decayed parts were strong enough for the vessel to have safely performed her voyage, if she had not encountered severe weather. Phillips v. Nairne, 4 C. B. 343; 16 L. J., C. P. 194; 11 Jur. 455.

A ship which was insured ran aground and was much damaged. She was surveyed, and, in consequence of the report of the surveyors, was sold as she lay:—Held, that, to entitle the assured to recover for a total loss, they must satisfy the jury, that, as prudent men and exercising a sound discretion, they would, if they had been uninsured, have sold the vessel as they did; and that the jury must be satisfied, not only that the assured, if uninsured, would have acted as they did, but that they did prudently in so acting. Domett v. Young, Car. & M. 465. See Fleming v. Smith, 1 H. L. Cas. 513; Moss v. Smith, 9 C. B. 94; 19 L. J., C. P. 225; 14 Jur. 1003.

It is the duty of a master, in case of damage to the ship, to do all that can be reasonably done to repair it, bring home the cargo, and earn the freight. Benson v. Chapman, 2 H. L. Cas. 696; 8 C. B. 950; 13 Jur. 969.

The assured is never bound to abandon, he can always repair if he chooses, and refrain from insisting on a total loss. Pitman v. Universal Marine Insurance Co., 51 L. J., Q. B. 561; 9 Q. B. D. 192; 46 L. T. 863; 30 W. R. 906; 4 Asp. M. C. 544—C. A.

Seizure and Sale of Ship.]—Where a ship is seized and condemned by a foreign state, and purchased by the master on behalf of his owner, the owner can only recover as for a partial loss; for the property in the ship is not divested out of him. Wilson v. Foster, 1 Marsh. 425; 6 Taunt. 25; 16 R. R. 560.

Ship Stranded and not worth Repairing—Subsequent Loss by Fire.]—See Woodside v. Globe Marine Insurance Co., ante, col. 1104.

Cargo—Destruction of.]—Policy on fruit from Cadiz to London, with the usual memorandum: in the course of the voyage the fruit was so much damaged by sea water, that it became rotten and stunk; and on the ship's arrival at an intermediate port, into which she was driven, the government of the place prohibited the landing of the cargo: the ship also being too much damaged to proceed on the voyage, was sold, and the cargo necessarily thrown overboard:—Held, that the assured were entitled to recover for a total loss. Dyson v. Rowcroft, 3 Bos. & P. 474; 7 R. R. 809.

—— Injury to.]—A vessel was chartered for a voyage, and the cargo was insured against total loss. In the course of the voyage the vessel went aground, became hogged and sustained other injuries, and surveyors recommended her to be stripped with dispatch, and steps to be taken to save the cargo, but no attempt was made to do so; and after several days the master, fearing bad weather, sold the vessel and cargo for the benefit of all concerned. The vessel remained for some days in the same state, and the weather proving fine, the purchasers saved a large part of the cargo:—Held, that the charterers were not entitled to treat the cargo as having been totally lost. Currie v. Bombay Native Insurance Co., 6 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 302; 39 L. J., P. C. 1; L. R. 3 P. C. 72; 22 L. T. 317; 18 W. R. 296.

When a ship is obliged to put back, and the damage she has sustained is of such a nature that she cannot pursue her voyage, and other ships cannot be procured to take the cargo, it is a total loss of ship, cargo and freight, however inconsiderable the damage sustained may be, for the voyage in contemplation is lost. Wilson v. Royal Exchange Assurance Co., 2 Camp. 623; 12 R. R. 760.

Insurance on ship, cargo and freight from Tortola to London: the ship was driven back to Tortola; and, being found unfit for the voyage, and it being impossible to repair her, was sold. There were no vessels at Tortola by which the cargo could be forwarded, and it was accordingly sold for nearly the sum insured; the insured having abandoned:—Held, that this was a total loss. Manning v. Newnham, 3 Dougl. 130; 2 Camp. 624, n.; 12 R. R. 761.

A ship insured arrived in port a mere wreck, and was obliged to be lashed to a hulk to avoid sinking, and in attempting to remove her to the shore a few days afterwards she sank:—Held, that the assured might recover as for a total loss, though her cargo was saved and brought to a profitable market. Shaw v. Felton, 2 East, 109. See also Cases, post, col. 1226.

—— Cost of Drying and Warehousing—Freight.]—Where goods have been damaged by perils insured against and are lying at a place short of their destination in such a state that they may be dried and carried on, there is a total loss if the cost of drying and warehousing and other expenses consequent upon the sea damage exceed what they are worth; but the freight payable upon their arrival at their destination is not to be reckoned in this calculation, that being payable in any case. If the shipowner elects not to carry the goods to their destination, his own ship being damaged by sea perils and incapable, the excess only of the cost of carrying the goods from the port of distress to their destination over the cost of carriage, if there had been no sea damage, is to be considered. Farnworth v. Hyde, 36 L. J., C. P. 33; L. R. 2 C. P. 204; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 349; 15 L. T. 395; 15 W. R. 340—Ex. Ch.

Injury to Electric Cable.]—An electric telegraph company being about to lay down an electric cable between Ireland and Newfoundland, a shareholder in the company effected an insurance in the form of a marine policy of insurance, with the following words in the margin of the policy: "And to continue until the cable be laid in one continuous length between Ireland and Newfoundland, and until 100 words shall have been transmitted from Ireland to Newfoundland, and vice versâ. The risk of this policy then to cease and determine. This policy, in addition to all perils and casualties herein specified, shall cover every risk and contingency attending the conveyance and successful laying of the cable from and including its lading on board the "Great Eastern" until 100 words be transmitted from Ireland to Newfoundland, and vice versâ. And it is distinctly declared and agreed that the transmission of the 100 words shall be an essential condition of the policy." The ship sailed from Ireland with a cable on board of the length of 2,200 miles; and after about 1,200 miles of it had been laid down, in consequence of the electric current not acting, some of it was drawn back into the ship; and whilst this was being done a part of the cable which was on board broke, and the broken end fell into the sea. Some fruitless endeavour was made to raise it, but ultimately the ship returned with the remainder of the cable, about 1,200 miles in length, on board:—Held, first, that the insurance was not on the cable, but on the risk and contingency of successfully laying it down. Wilson v. Jones, 36 L. J., Ex. 78; L. R. 2 Ex. 139; 15 L. T. 669; 15 W. R. 435—Ex. Ch.

Held, secondly, that the insured was entitled to recover for a total loss. Ib.

A person possessed of a share in a telegraph company, established for the purpose of laying down a cable between the United Kingdom and America, insured the same by a policy in the form of a policy of marine insurance. The insurance was expressed to be "at and from the United Kingdom, say from London, and wheresoever the risk may commence, to the Atlantic Ocean, and at and thence, by or in one or more ship or ships, or steamer or steamers, to the place or places of destination, both in the United Kingdom $\frac{\text{and}}{\text{or}}$ the continent, island, or peninsula of America, $\frac{\text{and}}{\text{or}}$ the British or other possessions of America, including and containing all and every accident, danger and risk that may be incurred at sea or on land, in all or any boats, ships and craft whatsoever and wheresoever, until the final, complete and successful laying down of the Atlantic telegraph cable from shore to shore." The blank for the name of the ship was filled up thus: "any ship or ships, or steamer or steamers, or craft as above"; and in the valuation clause the subject of insurance was to be taken as "on one 1,000*l.* share in the Atlantic Telegraph Company, share valued at 1,100*l.* In case of loss the part saved to be sold or appraised for the benefit of the underwriters." The insurance contained the common memorandum, with the addition of a special agreement, in a memorandum annexed to the policy, that the insurance should "cover and include the successful working of the cable when laid down." A cable was finally laid down after a previously abortive attempt, during which a portion of it was lost by perils of the sea; and on the second attempt, during which some more cable was lost, a quantity of superfluous cable was taken out to meet contingencies. It was, however, found impossible to maintain electrical communication, and the telegraph was abandoned. The cause of the failure was the imperfect insulation of the copper wire, arising from defect in the outer covering, occasioned by accident prior to the shipment of the cable, and the commencement of the risk, aggravated by the chemical action of the sea water on the interior of the cable, and not from any mischief done by the mechanical action of the sea:—Held, with respect to the portion of the cable lost by perils of the sea, that the assured was entitled to recover as for a partial loss. Paterson v. Harris, 1 B. & S. 336; 30 L. J., Q. B. 354; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1276. And see S. C., 2 B. & S. 814; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 173.

Where several Packages.]—By a marine policy of insurance the insurance was described to be "on 1,711 packages teas, valued at one sum, on a voyage from New York to London," by a ship "warranted by the assured free from damage from dampness, change of flavour, or being spotted, or mouldy, except caused by actual contact of sea water with the articles damaged, occasioned by sea perils." In case of partial loss by sea damage to certain goods, not including tea, "the loss shall be ascertained by a separation and sale of the portion only of the contents of the packages so damaged, and not otherwise; and the same practice shall obtain as to all other merchandise as far as practicable." The ship met with very bad weather during the voyage, and 449 of the 1,711 packages of the tea were seriously damaged by actual contact of sea water. The rest of the packages arrived sound and in good condition, except by the injury to their reputation from having formed part of a shipment of which 449 packages had been damaged by sea water, and which was the cause, as was usual in such cases, of these packages, though sound and uninjured, not realising so high prices as they would have done if the 449 packages had not been damaged by sea water:—Held, that the packages insured by the policy were divisible, and that the assured was entitled to recover only in respect of the 449 packages which were actually damaged. Cater v. Great Western Insurance Co. of New York, 42 L. J., C. P. 266; L. R. 8 C. P. 552; 29 L. T. 136; 21 W. R. 850; 2 Asp. M. C. 90.

Where memorandum goods of the same species, shipped in packages, are insured, and it is not expressed, by distinct valuation or otherwise, in the policy, that the packages are separately insured, the ordinary memorandum exempts the underwriters from liability for a total loss or destruction of part only (not being general average), if there is no stranding, though one or more entire package or packages is or are entirely destroyed or otherwise totally lost, by the specified perils. Janson v. Ralli, 6 El. & Bl. 422; 25 L. J., Q. B. 300; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 566; 4 W. R. 568—Ex. Ch.

An insurance was effected on "master's effects, valued at 100*l.*, free from all average." Some of the articles thus insured were totally lost by the perils insured against, but others were saved :—Held, that the assured was entitled to recover in respect of the goods which had been totally lost, the word "effects" being obviously employed to save the enumeration of the different articles of which the subject-matter of insurance consisted. Duff v. Mackenzie, 3 C. B. (N.S.) 16 ; 26 L. J., C. P. 313 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1025.

By a policy of any kind of goods in a vessel, and which were stated to be valued at one entire sum, "the goods so valued" were insured "against total loss only." The goods which were shipped were, in fact, of different kinds and descriptions, and packed in separate packages :—Held, that it was not necessary that the insurer should be informed that it was intended to ship goods of different kinds, and separately packed, as he ought to have expected that all the goods would not be of the same kind ; and that he was liable for a total loss of each separate package, although some of the packages shipped were saved. Wilkinson v. Hyde, 3 C. B. (N.S.) 30 ; 27 L. J., C. P. 116 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 482.

—— Separate Insurances of Parts.] — On an insurance of goods in "ship or ships," which were declared to be, and to be valued "on rice to be declared free from particular average," the insurer cannot, by indorsing a declaration of interest with a separate valuation of each bag of rice, create a separate insurance on each bag. Entwisle v. Ellis, 2 H. & N. 549 ; 27 L. J., Ex. 105 ; 6 W. R. 76.

A policy having been effected on goods "in ship or ships," declared to be "on rice, to be declared free from particular average," the insured indorsed on the policy a declaration, which was afterwards marked with the initials of the underwriters as follows :—[R.] 500 bags rice, per "Laidmans," at 8*s.* 3*d.* per bag, 206*l.* 5*s.* ; [R.] 4,500 bags rice, per "Margaret Skelly," at 8*s.* 3*d.* per bag, 1,856*l.* 5*s.* From each ship certain of the bags of rice were safely landed at their port of destination, others were jettisoned, being cast into the sea to save the ship ; others, in the "Laidmans," on arriving at their port of destination, were cast into the sea, being unfit for consumption ; others in the "Margaret Skelly," were so much injured by sea damage as to be sold at the port of departure, to which that ship was obliged to put back. The underwriters had paid the loss on the goods jettisoned :—Held, that the assured were not entitled to recover the value of the bags of rice cast into the sea at the port of destination, or sold at the port of departure. Ib.

Mixture of Cargo.]—Several shippers respectively shipped bales of cotton on board a general ship. Part of the bales were lost on the voyage, part arrived with the marks obliterated, so that their respective owners could not be ascertained, and part arrived so as to be distinguishable and deliverable to the respective owners :—Held, as respects each shipper whose full number of bales could not be distinguished and delivered, that he must be taken to have sustained a total loss of part of his cotton, and a partial loss of the remainder, according to a calculation of the proportion that would be applicable to his cotton, with reference to the whole number of bales lost, and the whole number of bales which arrived indistinguishable. Spence v. Union Marine Insurance Co., 37 L. J., C. P. 169 ; L. R. 3 C. P. 427 ; 18 L. T. 632 ; 16 W. R. 1010.

Confiscation and Sale of Cargo.]—A cargo on board a ship bound from Liverpool to Matamoras was insured against the usual perils, including "takings at sea, arrests, restraints, and detainments of all kings, princes and people." The ship sailed and had nearly reached her destination when she was captured by a United States cruiser and taken into New Orleans, where a suit was instituted in the prize court for her condemnation. The insurers contested the suit, electing to treat the loss as a partial one. They obtained the judgment of the court, whereupon the captors appealed. The insured gave a formal notice of abandonment, which the insurers refused to accept. Upon the application of the captors, the ship and cargo were ordered to be sold unless bail were given by the insured. Upon receiving intelligence that this order had been made, they applied to the insurers for assistance in giving bail to prevent the sale. The insurers refused to give any assistance, and in the end the ship and cargo were sold by order of the prize court. The insured brought an action to recover from the insurers, as for a total loss:—Held, that they were entitled to recover the whole amount at which they were insured under the policy, inasmuch as the decree of the prize court, with the sale of the goods under it, was a deprivation of the ownership of the goods, and amounted to a total loss. Stringer v. English and Scottish Marine Insurance Co., 10 B. & S. 770 ; 39 L. J., Q. B. 214 ; L. R. 5 Q. B. 599 ; 22 L. T. 802 ; 18 W. R. 1201—Ex. Ch.

Partial Confiscation.]—A cargo insured by a valued policy was confiscated and sold ; but the enemy permitted the foreign consignee to retain from the proceeds the amount of his acceptances ; the assured not having abandoned, the loss became partial only, and the assured was entitled to recover from the underwriter a sum bearing the same proportion to his subscription as the loss ultimately sustained bore to the whole value in the policy. Goldsmid v. Gillies, 4 Taunt. 803 ; 14 R. R. 671.

Goods insured upon a valued policy having been seized, confiscated, and sold, by order of the enemy's government on their own account, but the necessary documents to verify the loss not having arrived here, the underwriters, on application to pay their subscriptions, agreed to adjust and pay immediately 50*l.* per cent. on account, but no abandonment was made by the assured ; and in the meantime the foreign consignees of the goods, in consequence of remonstrances to the enemy's government, obtained a restoration of half the proceeds of the goods which had been so seized and sold, which half amounted to more than the whole sum at which they were valued in the policy : yet held, that the underwriters were not entitled to recover back the 50*l.* per cent. they had paid on account ; the assured having in fact sustained a loss of half his goods, for which he was no more than indemnified by the 50*l.* per cent. he had received ; and there having been no abandonment to the underwriters ; and the superior value of the proceeds arising from the benefit of the market, in which the underwriters had no concern. Tunno v. Edwards, 12 East, 488 ; 11 R. R. 458.

Sale of Cargo by Court.]—A cargo of salt, of the value with prepaid freight of about 1,900*l.*, was insured from Liverpool to Calcutta, the policy containing the memorandum warranting

"corn, fish, salt, &c., free from average unless general or the ship be stranded." Having encountered bad weather, lost both her anchors, and had her masts cut away, the ship was taken in tow by salvors and placed on a bank out of the ordinary course of the voyage, where she lay on her port side for several tides, and sustained considerable further injury. The salt was landed in a damaged state, and the ship repaired, though at an expense which exceeded her value when repaired. About one-fifth of the salt might have been made salable, but would have realised no profit. Suits were instituted by the salvors in the admiralty court, and the salt sold under a decree, the entire proceeds being absorbed by the costs:—Held, that there was a partial loss of the salt, but not a total loss, the seizure and sale under the decree of the admiralty court not being a natural or necessary consequence of a peril insured against; and that there was a stranding within the meaning of the memorandum. De Mattos v. Saunders, L. R. 7 C. P. 570; 27 L. T. 120; 20 W. R. 801; 1 Asp. M. C. 377.

Insurers not Concluded by erroneous Judgment of Foreign Court.]—A cargo of rye, shipped on an Austrian ship for carriage from Ænos, a Turkish port, to Schiedam, was insured by a policy warranted free of particular average. The ship meeting with stormy weather, a portion of the cargo was damaged, and the ship had to put into the port of La Rochelle. Proceedings were taken, at the instance of the captain, in the tribunal of commerce at that port, and in consequence the cargo was landed and warehoused. It was necessary to sell a portion of the cargo immediately, which was accordingly done. On the 21st of February, the court, on the petition of the captain, ordered a sale of the residue, and notice of abandonment was given to the insurers on the ground that, in the opinion of the experts or surveyors, the rye could not be forwarded to its destination. This notice the insurers refused to accept; and on the 5th of March they summoned the captain before the tribunal of commerce for the purpose of having it decreed that there was no occasion to sell the residue of the rye. The court accordingly ordered the residue of the rye to be surveyed, and the surveyors reported that it could be reshipped and conveyed to its destination. This report was confirmed by the court, and notice of it given to the assured, together with notice that any course pursued with the cargo would be for their account and on their responsibility. The rye, however, was not forwarded, and remained until December warehoused at La Rochelle, although the captain might have procured a ship to carry it on. The captain having in the meantime procured advances to meet the expenses caused by the interruption of the voyage, was summoned, by the parties who had made the advances, before the tribunal of commerce; and on the 14th of September the court decreed a sale of the ship, and a statement of general and particular average of the ship and cargo to be drawn up, which was accordingly done. On the 21st of December the tribunal of commerce decreed the sale of the rest of the cargo, on the ground that the weather was unfavourable for its preservation. On the 25th of January the tribunal of commerce decreed that the full amount of the freight due upon the whole voyage was chargeable upon the proceeds of such sale; and an amended average statement, which proceeded on this footing, was confirmed by the court. If the proportion of freight so payable was to be added to the extra expenses incurred in respect of the residue of the cargo so sold, by reason of the interruption of the voyage, including the extra freight in respect of forwarding to the port of destination, the amount would exceed the value of the rye at the port of destination. It was admitted that neither the law of France nor of Austria was in accordance with the decree of the 25th of January, and if the proper proportion of freight had been charged to the residue of cargo sold, the value at the port of destination would have exceeded the expenses:—Held, that there was no constructive total loss of the cargo; inasmuch as the decree for the sale of the residue of the cargo was not due to the perils insured against, but was made for the purpose of paying advances incurred through the captain's breach of duty in not forwarding such rye to its destination; and the insurers were not concluded by the judgment of the French court from denying that there was no total loss, because it was admitted that such judgment was erroneous according to the law which it professed to administer. Meyer v. Ralli, 45 L. J., C. P. 741; 1 C. P. D. 358; 35 L. T. 838; 24 W. R. 963; 3 Asp. M. C. 324.

Fruit Cargo destroyed by Port Authority.]—Where a fruit cargo being damaged by sea water, was, by order of the authority of the port to which the ship was driven, thrown overboard:—Held, that the assurer was liable for a total loss. Dyson v. Rowcroft, 3 Bos. & P. 474; 7 R. R. 809.

Election.]—When it is uncertain whether the damage done to a cargo by a peril insured against will result in a partial or total loss, the assured is not bound to make his election how to treat it as soon as some incipient damage has occurred; and his right to claim indemnity for a total loss does not mature till the facts constituting such a loss are ascertained. Browning v. Provincial Insurance Co. of Canada, L. R. 5 P. C. 263; 28 L. T. 853; 21 W. R. 587; 2 Asp. M. C. 35—P. C.

Of Freight.]—When by the terms of a charterparty a part of the freight is made payable in advance, the charterer has a right to deduct the whole amount so paid by him from any freight which may actually be earned, in case of a loss of part of the cargo, and not only a proportionate part of it. Allison v. Bristol Marine Insurance Co., 1 App. Cas. 209; 34 L. T. 809; 24 W. R. 1039; 3 Asp. M. C. 178—H. L. (E.)

A shipowner chartered his ship for a voyage to Bombay. The charterparty provided that freight was to be paid on unloading, and right delivery of the cargo at the rate of 42*s.* per ton on the quantity delivered, "such freight to be paid one-half in cash on signing bills of lading, the remainder on right delivery of the cargo." Half of the estimated amount of freight was paid in London, and the shipowner insured the unpaid freight. The ship was lost, but half the cargo was saved, and delivered without any additional payment by the charterer. The shipowner then claimed as for a total loss of the unpaid half of the freight:—Held, that on the proper construction of the charterparty and policies he was entitled to recover as for a total loss. Ib.

Freight may be insured by a time policy, though for a period short of the time necessary to complete the voyage on which such freight is to be earned; and there is a total loss of freight if the cargo is so damaged by a peril of the sea in the course of the voyage as to render it impossible (except at an expense which would greatly exceed its value on arrival) to carry it to its port of destination. Michael v. Gillespy, 2 C. B. (N.S.) 627; 26 L. J., C. P. 306; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1219.

If a ship whose freight is insured against perils of the sea suffers sea damage, and can be repaired, so as to bring home her whole cargo, for a sum which, though it exceeds the amount of freight, is not more than a prudent owner, looking to the value of his ship, alone would incur, the underwriters are not liable as for a loss of freight by perils of the sea. Moss v. Smith, 9 C. B. 94; 19 L. J., C. P. 225; 14 Jur. 1003.

A ship valued at 12,000*l.* was insured from Valparaiso to England; the freight, valued at 4,000*l.*, was also insured by a separate policy. The ship having sailed with a full cargo, consisting of 800 tons of merchandise, was compelled by stress of weather to put back to Valparaiso, where the master, finding upon survey that to repair her, so as to enable her to bring home the entire cargo, would cost a sum exceeding the value of the freight, though less than the value of the ship when repaired, sold her:—Held, not a total loss of either ship or freight. Ib.

Freight under a charter was insured, for a voyage from the Cape of Good Hope to Hondeklip Bay, an open roadstead 180 miles up the coast, there to load a cargo of copper ore, to proceed therewith to Swansea, at a freight of 40*s.* per ton. Arrived at Hondeklip Bay, the master received on board a part of the cargo (the whole being ready), when a storm coming on, he was compelled to put to sea with the loss of an anchor and an injury to his windlass; and after beating about the offing, he deemed it expedient to sail for St. Helena, a distance of about 1,800 miles. Finding, on his arrival there, that he could not get an additional anchor or the requisite repairs, the master discharged the portion of the outward cargo which he had not landed at Hondeklip Bay, and proceeded to Swansea with the homeward cargo, short by about 120 tons of a full cargo. The jury, although the master did not run for the Cape, where the necessary repairs might have been obtained, found that the master acted throughout as a prudent owner, uninsured, would have done:—Held, that the underwriters were not responsible as for a total loss of the freight of the 120 tons by perils of the sea. Philpott v. Swann, 11 C. B. (N.S.) 270; 30 L. J., C. P. 358; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1291; 5 L. T. 183.

See also Rankin v. Potter, post, col. 1278.

Where, in case of damage to a ship, the master elects to repair it, the mere fact that the expenses of repair ultimately prove to be greater than the value of the ship, will not be sufficient to shew that he acted beyond the scope of his authority, or to entitle the owner, in an action on a policy of freight, to recover as for a total loss. Benson v. Chapman, 2 H. L. Cas. 696; 8 C. B. 950; 13 Jur. 969.

Rights of Underwriter on.]—In all cases of insurance on ship, in which the subject is not actually annihilated, the assured, claiming as for a total loss, must give up to the underwriters all the remains of the property recovered, together with all the benefit or advantage incident to it; or rather such property vests in the underwriters. Stewart v. Greenock Marine Insurance Co., 2 H. L. Cas. 159; 1 Macq. H. L. 382.

Freight, while the ship is in the course of earning it, is a benefit or an advantage incident to the ship, and therefore becomes the property of the underwriters, paying for a total loss. Ib.

Ship Condemned by Process of Law.]—There is no remedy upon the policy where the ship has been seized and condemned by process of law. Anon., 1 Ld. Raym. 724.

Sale of Ship by Court—Proceeds less than Salvage.]—To constitute a total loss it is not necessary that a ship should be actually annihilated or destroyed. If it is lost to the owner by an adverse valid transfer of his right of property and possession to a purchaser by sale under decree of a court of competent jurisdiction in consequence of a peril insured against, it is as much a total loss as if it had been totally annihilated. Cossman v. West or British America Assurance Co., 57 L. J., P. C. 17; 13 App. Cas. 160; 58 L. T. 122; 6 Asp. M. C. 233—P. C.

Where a ship had been deserted by her master and crew, having been previously placed by them in a sinking condition, but had been subsequently taken possession of by salvors, towed into port, and there sold together with the cargo, by order of the admiralty court, for less than the actual cost of the salvage services:—Held, in actions upon policies on the ship and freight respectively, that, assuming the possession by salvors of a derelict vessel to be only a constructive total loss, the subsequent sale constituted an actual total loss of both ship and cargo. Ib.

Salvage less than Freight.]—Where salvage falls short of the freight payable by the assured there is a total loss. Boyfield v. Brown, 2 Str. 1065.

Right to Compensation paid by Sovereign State.]—The respondents effected with underwriters valued policies of insurance (including war risks) on a cargo, which was afterwards destroyed by the "Alabama," a Confederate cruiser, and the underwriters paid to the respondents as on an actual total loss the valued amounts, which were less than the real value. The United States, out of a compensation fund created after the loss and distributed under an act of congress passed subsequently to the loss, paid to the respondents the difference between their real total loss and the sum received from the underwriters. Under the act of congress no claim was allowed for any loss for which the party injured should have received compensation from any insurer, but if such compensation should not have been equal to the loss actually suffered, allowance might be made for the difference; and no claim was allowed by or on behalf of any insurer either in his own right or in that of the party insured:—Held, that the underwriters were not entitled to recover the compensation from the respondents. Burnand v. Rodocanachi, 51 L. J., Q. B. 548; 7 App. Cas. 333; 47 L. T. 277; 31 W. R. 65; 4 Asp. M. C. 576—H. L. (E.)

Missing Ship.]—If a ship, for which the underwriters have paid as for a total loss, should chance to turn up, she is to be considered as abandoned and will belong to the underwriters. Houstman v. Thornton, Holt, 242; 17 R. R. 632.

Abandonment—Goods partly Saved.]—Insurance on 1,950 boxes of soap, at and from Liverpool to Oporto. The ship grounded on the bar at Oporto, and was bilged; seventeen boxes of soap were lost, and the rest were carried ashore in barges, the damage not exceeding 20 per cent. The underwriter being sued, paid into court 20 per cent. upon his subscription:—Held, a total loss, without abandonment, the ship having never arrived. Buller v. Christie, cited, 2 M. & S. 374; 15 R. R. 277 (not now law).

Capture and Recapture—Recovery as for Total Loss.]—See Pringle v. Hartley, post, col. 1292.

Warranty against Particular Average—Part of Goods Saved.]—Upon a policy upon hogsheads of sugar warranted against particular average, some part of the sugar in every hogshead being preserved, though less than 3 per cent. on the cargo, it was held that this could not be a total loss. Hedburg v. Pearson, 7 Taunt. 154.

Part of Cargo Damaged—Whole Sold.]—Bales of silk were insured free from average from Leghorn to Liverpool. The ship put into Gibraltar from stress of weather, and the cargo was necessarily unloaded. Some of the bales were damaged by water, and the master, acting reasonably, sold the whole. No one bale was so damaged as to be worthless. All might have been brought to England and sold as silk, though some was much damaged:—Held, not a total loss. Navone v. Haddon, 9 C. B. 36.

Fruit Cargo Damaged 80 per cent.]—Where a cargo of fruit was captured and recaptured and brought to its port of destination, but damaged 80 per cent. by delay:—Held, to be a partial loss. M'Andrews v. Vaughan, 1 Park, Ins. (8th ed.) 253.

Advances for Supplies for Passengers—Mutiny.]—Advances made for supplies to Chinese passengers were insured. On the voyage the Chinese mutinied, seized the ship, and refused to go to their destination:—Held, a total loss of the sums insured. Naylor v. Palmer, 8 Ex. 739; 10 Ex. 382.

Total or Partial Loss—Suing and Labouring—Conditioning Damaged Goods—Method of ascertaining Partial Loss.]—A Thames lighterman had effected a policy at Lloyd's on goods as interest might appear to cover risk of transit in his lighters between Tilbury and Hammersmith. A barge laden with bags of rice of the declared value of 450*l.* sank in the Thames, and was submerged for two tides. The consignees refused to take delivery, and the rice was kiln-dried at a cost of 68*l.* and sold for 111*l.*:—Held, that this was a partial, and not a total loss. The partial loss was to be ascertained by comparing the value of the rice when sound with the value of the damaged rice after it had been kiln-dried, and not with its value as it arrived damaged at Hammersmith. Under the suing and labouring clause the underwriter was liable for costs reasonably incurred in conditioning damaged goods, and as between him and the assured the loss for which he was liable was not to be calculated on the value of the goods when unconditioned. Francis v. Boulton, 65 L. J., Q. B. 153; 73 L. T. 578; 44 W. R. 222; 8 Asp. M. C. 79.

2. Constructive Total Loss.

What Damage.]—Where a ship, in consequence of the inability of the master to get it off the rocks where it has struck, has been actually sold, or where a cargo of a perishable nature has been so damaged by the sea that its substance is gone, and it can never reach the destined port in specie, the loss in each instance is an actual, and not a constructive, total loss. Fleming v. Smith, 1 H. L. Cas. 513.

Where a prudent owner uninsured would have sold, the case amounts to one of actual total loss. Ib.

Sale of Injured Cargo.]—Where the underwriter was not answerable for an average loss upon certain hides insured, and in the course of the voyage the hides became so damaged by one of the perils insured against, that they could not have been carried to the place of their destination (in consequence of their state of putridity), whereupon the hides were sold at the nearest port:—Held, that it amounted to a constructive total loss. Roux v. Salvador, 1 Bing. (N.C.) 526; 1 Scott, 491; 1 Hodges, 49; 4 L. J., C. P. 156. See Roux v. Salvador, 4 Scott, 1; 3 Bing. (N.C.) 266; 2 Hodges, 209; 7 L. J., Ex. 328.

As a general rule, where the whole or any part of a cargo (having suffered sea damage) is practically capable of being sent in a marketable state to its port of destination, the master cannot sell, nor can the assured recover as for a total loss. Rosetto v. Gurney, 11 C. B. 176; 20 L. J., C. P. 257; 15 Jur. 1177.

If the damage cannot be repaired without laying out more money than the thing is worth, the reparation is impracticable, and therefore, as between the underwriters and the assured, impossible; if it can, the cargo is then practically capable of being sent in a marketable state to its port of destination, the master cannot sell it, and the assured cannot recover as for a constructive total loss. The same rule applies, if a part only of the cargo can be saved. Ib.

Insurance confined to "absolute Damage caused by the Perils insured against."]—A policy of marine insurance on ship effected with a mutual insurance company incorporated certain by-laws of the company indorsed thereon. The policy (inter alia) expressed it to be thereby declared that the acts of the assurer or assured in recovering, saving, or preserving the property insured should not be considered a waiver or acceptance of abandonment. One of the by-laws provided that, in the event of any ship being stranded or damaged, and not taken into a place of safety, it should be lawful for the directors of the company to use every possible means in their power to procure the safety of the said ship, the owner bearing his proportion of the expense incurred; and that no acts of the company or its agents under or in pursuance of the power thereby reserved to the company should be deemed or taken to be an acceptance or recognition of any abandonment of which the assured might have given notice to such company; and the company, under any circumstances, should only pay for the absolute damage caused by the perils insured against, which was in no case to exceed the sum insured:—Held, that the effect of the by-law was not to exclude a constructive total loss, but that it contemplated a partial loss only, and was intended to deprive the assured of the right he would otherwise have to claim extraordinary expenditure, by way of salvage or otherwise in addition to the cost of repairs. Forwood v. North Wales Mutual Marine Insurance Co., or Forwood v. Provincial Mutual Marine Insurance Co., 49 L. J., Q. B. 593; 9 Q. B. D. 732: 42 L. T. 837; 28 W. R. 938; 4 Asp. M. C. 293—C. A.

"Total Loss only."]—A policy on a ship was against "total loss only." During the voyage the ship sustained damage, which amounted to constructive total loss:—Held, that a constructive total loss was within the terms of the policy. Adams v. Mackenzie, 13 C. B. (N.S.) 442: 32 L. J., C. P. 92; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 849; 7 L. T. 711; 11 W. R. 342.

Time of—Effect on Valued Time Policy.]—A time policy is not prevented from attaching by there having been a constructive total loss of the vessel before commencement of the risk insured. Barker v. Janson, 37 L. J., C. P. 105; L. R. 3 C. P. 303; 17 L. T. 473; 16 W. R. 399.

Sale by Foreign Tribunal—Cause of.]—A sale of the subject-matter of insurance ordered by a foreign tribunal within whose jurisdiction it has been originally thrown by perils insured against, does not amount to a constructive total loss where the sale is not due to perils insured against, such perils having ceased to operate, but is made for the purpose of repaying advances incurred through the captain's breach of duty in not transhipping the subject-matter of insurance to its destination. Meyer v. Ralli, 45 L. J., C. P. 741; 1 C. P. D. 358; 35 L. T. 838; 24 W. R. 963; 3 Asp. M. C. 324.

Unnecessary Sale by Master—Ship not irreparably Damaged.]—A ship was driven from her moorings by ice, went ashore, and was much, but not irreparably, injured. In the course of repairs a difficulty arose for want of materials, and the master sold her:—Held, not a total loss. Furneaux v. Bradley, 1 Park, Ins. (8th ed.) 365.

On Bottomry Bonds.]—The condition of a bottomry bond provided for its defeasance on payment of the amount of the bond, "or, in case of the loss of the ship or vessel, such an average as by custom shall have become due on the salvage, or if on the voyage the ship or vessel should be utterly lost, cast away, or destroyed." The ship having become a constructive total loss, the bondholder, by a decree in the admiralty court, obtained payment to him of the proceeds of the ship, which had been paid into court, and which were insufficient; the court holding that a bottomry bond was only discharged by payment or by an absolute total loss, and that the condition providing for defeasance on payment of such average as by custom should have become due, did not refer to the case of a constructive total loss. In an action by the bondholder on a policy of insurance upon the bond:—Held, that the doctrine of constructive total loss was not applicable to a policy of insurance on bottomry, and that the condition of defeasance did not apply to the case of a constructive total loss. Broomfield v. Southern Insurance Co., 39 L. J., Ex. 186; L. R. 5 Ex. 192; 22 L. T. 371; 18 W. R. 810.

Cost of Repairs.]—In June, 1859, the owners, of a ship valued at 17,000*l.* caused themselves to be insured by policies for 16,000*l.* from Bombay to Liverpool. When off Algoa Bay she encountered very severe weather, and such damage that it became necessary to put into Port Louis, in the Mauritius, where she arrived on the 21st August. She was sold by auction under the captain's orders, and afterwards broken up, notice of abandonment being given. The owners had bought the ship in 1855 for 20,000*l.*, and 20 per cent. would be a reasonable deduction in respect of wear and tear at the time when the policy attached. The cost of building such a ship at that time would have been 20,000*l.*, and the cost of repairing her 10,500*l.* Her value, after she had been repaired would have been 7,500*l.*, she being a vessel of exceptional size and class; but an owner wanting such a ship for the particular purposes of his trade, and having to elect either to sell, or to repair, or to purchase, would have elected to repair her, for such a vessel could not have been built or purchased at that time for so small a sum as 10,500*l.*:—Held, that there was only an average loss and not a constructive total loss. Grainger v. Martin, 4 B. & S. 9; 8 L. T. 796: 11 W. R. 758—Ex. Ch. Affirming 31 L. J., Q. B. 186; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 995.

Questions for Jury.]—Action on a policy as for a total loss of freight to be earned in carrying a cargo of coals and iron from Rio to San Francisco. On the voyage the ship received damage from heavy seas, which compelled her to put into Monte Video, having previously, for safety's sake, thrown overboard some portion of her cargo and landed another portion at the Falkland Islands. On the ship being surveyed at Monte Video, she was found to be incapable of pursuing the voyage with the cargo on board, and no other vessel could be found to take the cargo on. The cost of warehouse room was so great at Monte Video, that in a few months it would have equalled the value of the cargo, and owing to the town being in a state of siege and political revolution, it was unsafe to land the cargo and leave it unwarehoused; under these circumstantes, the captain, being in want of money, sold the cargo, and applied the proceeds to the ship's purposes, and afterwards brought her back in ballast to Liverpool for repairs. At the trial the judge left two questions to the jury: first, was there a constructive total loss of the ship? and secondly, was there a constructive total loss of the goods? The jury answered both questions in the negative, and found a verdict generally for the defendant:—Held, that there was no misdirection, and that the two questions submitted to the jury were, under the circumstances, proper for the determination of the case. Klingender v. Home and Colonial Insurance Co., 15 L. T. 16.

The rule is, that to entitle the assured to recover upon a policy, the loss must be the direct and immediate consequence of the peril insured against, and not a remote one. Ib.

On Abandonment.]—See XI. ABANDONMENT, post, cols. 1277, seq.

On Sale by Master.]—See XII. SALE, BY MASTER OF SHIP AND CARGO, post, cols. 1297, seq.

Continuous Perils.]—The mortgagees of a ship agreed with the mortgagors to effect an insurance on the ship at the mortgagors' expense, the policy to be held by them as part of their security. After the ship had sailed, the mortgagees effected an insurance against absolute total loss only. On the voyage the ship was driven ashore in a gale, and having become a constructive total loss, notice of abandonment was given by the mortgagees to the underwriters. The mortgagors immediately gave notice that they would look to the mortgagees as if they were their underwriters for a full insurance, and recovered from them the full value of the ship. The ship remained for two months exposed to the perils of the sea, when she became a complete wreck, and was then sold without prejudice to the rights of the parties. After the sale, but before this action, the mortgage was paid off:—Held, in an action by the mortgagees against the underwriters claiming for an absolute total loss, that as the ship when sold had become an absolute total loss from perils which were continuous, the plaintiffs were entitled to recover. Levy v. Merchants Marine Insurance Co., 1 Cab. & E. 474; 52 L. T. 263; 5 Asp., M. C. 407.

Notice of Abandonment — Reinsurance.]—Upon a constructive total loss happening to the ship insured, notice of abandonment need not be given to the underwriters of a policy of reinsurance. The owners of a ship insured her for twelve months in an ordinary Lloyd's policy, which contained a suing and labouring clause. The underwriters of the Lloyd's policy reinsured themselves with a French company which reinsured itself with the defendants. The policy underwritten for the French company by the defendants was for 1,000*l.*; bound them to pay the sum that might be paid on the original policy; was to cover the risk of total loss only, and contained a suing and labouring clause. Whilst the policy was in force, the ship went ashore and was much damaged. Her owners gave notice of abandonment to the underwriters of the Lloyd's policy, but notice of abandonment was not given to the defendants; the underwriters of the ship ultimately settled with her owners at 88 per cent. They expended more than 5,000*l.* in floating the ship, and sold her to a builder, who repaired her at a cost of 9,000*l.*, and resold her for 11,200*l.* The cost of floating the ship (after deducting the price paid by the shipbuilders) being added to the 88 per cent. represented a loss of 112 per cent. In an action by the French company as reinsurers against the defendants:—Held, that a constructive total loss had occurred, and that as the defendants had bound themselves to pay as might be paid on the original policy, they were liable to the extent of 1,000*l.*; but that they could not be held liable for more, as the underwriters of the Lloyd's policy were not the "factors, servants, or assigns" of the plaintiffs within the meaning of the suing and labouring clause, and that the defendants were not liable, at least by virtue of that clause, for any part of the expenses incurred in floating the ship. Uzielli v. Boston Marine Insurance Co., 54 L. J., Q. B. 142; 15 Q. B. D. 11; 52 L. T. 787; 33 W. R. 293; 5 Asp. M. C. 405—C. A.

Loss of Voyage, not of Ship.]—Insurance on ship at and from Jamaica to any port or ports, cruising, &c., for four months, without further account, &c., and free from average (before 19 Geo. 2, c. 37); the insured had interest in the ship to the amount insured. During the four months the crew mutinied, and the cruise (privateer's) was prevented. At the end of the four months the ship was at Jamaica in safety:—Held, that the assured could not recover. Pole v. Fitzgerald, Willes, 641; Ambl. 311; 4 Bro. P. C. 439.

Insurance of privateer for two months. The ship was captured and recaptured without material injury; but the cruise was lost:—Held, that the underwriter was liable. Jenkins v. Mackenzie, 4 Bro., P. C. 447, n. S. P., Fitzgerald v. Wainham. Ib.; Whitehead v. Bance, 4 Bro. P. C. 446, n.; Stoney v. Brown, 4 Bro. P. C. 445, n.; Barclay v. Collier. Ib.; Hanbury v. King. Ib.

Capture and Recapture.]—If a ship insured be taken by the enemy and after a possession of nine days, but before she is carried infra præsidia, be retaken by an English man-of-war the property is not changed. Asseriedo v. Cambridge, 10 Mod. 77. See, per Lord Mansfield, 2 Burr. 695.

Ship Derelict—Salvage Claim — Ship Sold Abroad.]—The cargo on board the s.s. "Celestina," owned by a merchant at Chili and insured for 3,300*l.*, took fire, and the ship was abandoned on high seas by her crew. She was soon after picked up by another English ship and towed into Rio, where, the fire being extinguished, she was placed in the hands of the judge to enforce a claim for salvage. This claim was at once settled in England, the underwriters on the cargo contributing the agreed sum of 1,250*l.* in various proportions, and the several policies were indorsed "Settled a claim on account without prejudice." Instructions were sent to Rio for the ship's release, but the Brazilian court refused to release her, and having sold both ship and cargo, retained the proceeds:—Held, that the underwriters must pay a total loss, and were not entitled to deduct the sum paid in settlement of the salvage claim. Buchanan v. London and Provincial Marine Insurance Co., 65 L. J., Q. B. 92.

3. Average Loss.

a. General Average.

Mast Cut away—Question for Jury.]—A ship being caught in a storm, portions of the rigging gave way to such an extent that the mainmast began to lurch violently. Whereupon, fearing that the mast would rip up the deck and thereby endanger the ship, the captain ordered it to be cut away, which was done. In an action by the owner of the ship to recover from the owners of the cargo their proportion of general average loss incurred by the sacrifice of the mast, the judge left to the jury the following questions: first, are you of opinion that the mast was virtually a wreck, and gone at the time it went over? secondly, do you find it was hopelessly lost? The jury answered both questions in the affirmative:—Held, that there had been no misdirection, and that substantially the right questions had been left to the jury. Shepherd v. Kottgen, 47 L. J., C. P. 67; 2 C. P. D. 585; 37 L. T. 618; 26 W. R. 126; 3 Asp., M. C. 544—C. A.

If anything on board a ship which is cut or cast away because it is endangering the whole adventure is in such a state or condition that it must itself certainly be lost, although the rest of the adventure should be saved without the cutting or casting away, then the destruction of the thing gives no claim for general average. Ib.

Tackle.]—An action lies by a shipowner to recover from the owner of the cargo his proportion of general average loss incurred by sacrificing the tackle belonging to a ship for an unusual purpose, or on an extraordinary occasion of danger, for the benefit of the whole concern. Birkley v. Presgrave, 1 East, 220; 6 R. R. 256.

Repairs and Expenses.]—A ship, in the course of her voyage, was run foul of by another ship, and damaged, and the captain was in consequence obliged to cut away part of the rigging, and to return to port to repair the damage and cutting away, without which the ship could not have prosecuted her voyage or safely kept the sea:—Held, that the expenses of repairs, so far as they were absolutely necessary to enable the ship to prosecute the voyage, but no farther, and of unloading the goods for the purpose of making the repairs, were a general average. Secus, the master's expenses during the unloading, repairing and reloading, and crimpage to replace deserters during the repairs. Plummer v. Wildman, 3 M. & S. 482; 16 R. R. 334. See also Grainger v. Martin, ante, col. 1238.

Where, for the safety of the ship, it becomes necessary, during the voyage, to put into a port to refit, the expense of refitting is not a general average. Jackson v. Charnock, 8 Term Rep. 509; 5 R. R. 425.

But where a ship is obliged to put into port for the benefit of the whole concern, the charges of loading and unloading the cargo, and taking care of it, and the wages and provisions of the workmen hired for the repairs, become general average. Da Costa v. Newnham, 2 Term Rep. 407. See also Cases post, col. 1247.

The wages and provisions of the crew, while the ship remained in port, whither she was compelled to go for the safety of ship and cargo, in order to repair a damage occasioned by tempest, were held not to be the subject of general average; nor the expenses of such repair; nor the wages and provisions of the crew during her detention in port, to which she returned, and was detained there on account of adverse winds and tempest; nor the damage occasioned to the ship and tackle, by standing out to sea with a press of sail in tempestuous weather; which press of sail was necessary for that purpose in order to avoid an impending peril of being driven on shore and stranded. Power v. Whitmore, 4 M. & S. 141; 16 R. R. 416,

The expenses of the wages and provisions of the crew of a ship while detained in repairing sea damage are excluded by the usual warranty as to average. De Vaux v. Salvador, 4 A. & E. 420; 6 N. & M. 713; 1 H. & W. 751; 5 L. J., K. B. 134.

Chartered Freight—General Average Charges payable as per Foreign Statement if required.]—Where the chartered freight of a vessel proceeding in ballast to a loading port in pursuance of a charterparty is insured, and the only persons interested in the vessel and the freight insured are the owners of the vessel, there cannot be any general average loss, or any loss to be treated as a general average loss, for which the underwriters are liable, and this is so even though the policy contains a clause providing that general average charges should be payable as per foreign statement if required. The Brigella, 62 L. J., Adm. 81; [1893] P. 189; 1 R. 616; 69 L. T. 834; 7 Asp. M. C. 337.

Ransom from Pirates.]—If goods be given up to pirates to save the rest, the loss is general average; aliter, where part are taken by pirates. Hicks v. Palington, Sir Francis Moore, 297.

Expenses of Steaming.]—A clipper sailing ship, fitted with an auxiliary screw, being on her voyage from Melbourne to England, came into collision with an iceberg, and received such damage that her sailing power was practically destroyed. By means of her screw and her steam power she reached Rio. The expense of repairing her at Rio would have been so great that the master properly determined to have her temporarily repaired, so as to bring her home under steam. It was necessary for this purpose to purchase coals at Rio and at Fayal, and the ship eventually reached home. An action was brought against the owners of a quantity of gold on board by the shipowner, to recover the contribution to general average alleged to be due from them in respect of the expense incurred in obtaining coals at Rio and at Fayal:—Held, that the action was not maintainable, as there was no right to charge this expense to general average. Wilson v. Bank of Victoria, 36 L. J., Q. B. 89; L. R. 2 Q. B. 203; 16 L. T. 9; 15 W. R. 693.

A sailing ship sailed from Melbourne, bound for London, properly fitted and manned, and seaworthy for the voyage, with coal enough for an ordinary voyage. She had on board, as was usual for such ships on that voyage, a donkey-engine equivalent, for the purposes of pumping and working the ship, to ten men. Without the engine ten more men would have been required. On the voyage severe weather caused the ship to spring a leak, which could only be kept down by constantly working the engine at the pumps. When the engine had thus consumed all the coal except one and a half ton, the captain, acting prudently for the preservation of the ship, cut up and used with the coal some spare spars and wood, part of the ship's stores, not intended to be used as fuel. There was no sudden emergency which rendered the cutting up of the spars and wood necessary, and the ship was exposed to no serious risk from the water she made while there was sufficient fuel on board to work the engine, but it would have been impossible to have kept the ship afloat with the crew alone without working the engine. The captain afterwards bought coal from another vessel, and also in a port into which he ran for that purpose, just enough coal to enable the vessel to reach London in safety. Without the aid of the engine the vessel could not have continued her voyage. The shipowner having sued a shipper of cargo for a general average contribution in respect of the cost of the spare spars and wood, and also of the bought coal:—Held, first, that the cost of the bought coal could not be charged to general average. Harrison v. Bank of Australasia, 41 L. J., Ex. 36; L. R. 7 Ex. 39; 25 L. T. 944; 20 W. R. 385; 1 Asp. M. C. 198.

Held, secondly, by Kelly, C.B., Bramwell, B., dissentientibus Martin, B., and Cleasby, B., that the cost of the spars and wood could be charged to general average. Ib.

Coals consumed in working Stranded Ship off the Ground.]—Where a ship or her tackle are intentionally put to an abnormal use involving an extraordinary risk of injury for the purpose of saving ship and cargo from imminent peril, any consequent loss to the ship is the subject of general average contribution. Working the engines of a ship whilst she is fast ashore is an abnormal use of them. Consequently, coal consumed in so working the engines is the subject of general average contribution. Per curiam: Injury to the engines in so working them is the subject of general average contribution. The Bona, English and American Shipping Co. v. Indemnity Mutual Marine Insurance Co., 64 L. J., Adm. 62; [1895] P. 125; 11 R. 707; 71 L. T. 870; 43 W. R. 290; 7 Asp. M. C. 557—C. A.

Resisting Attack.]—A ship being unable to escape from a privateer, resisted the attack, beat off the privateer, reached her port, and delivered her cargo in safety:—Held, that neither the expense of repairing the ship, nor of curing the wounds of the sailors, nor of the ammunition, was the subject of general average. Taylor v. Curtis, 2 Marsh. 309; 6 Taunt. 608; Holt, 192; 4 Camp. 337; 16 R. R. 686.

If a ship, in order to escape from a privateer, carries an unusual press of sail, and succeeds in getting away, but sustains damage in so doing, this is a sea risk, not a general average loss. Covington v. Roberts, 2 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 378; 9 R. R. 669.

Expenses of getting off Stranded Ship.]—Extraordinary expenses incurred in getting off a stranded ship, after the cargo has been removed to a place of safety, are not (in the absence of exceptional circumstances) general average to which the owner of cargo is liable to contribute, although the goods remain in the control of the shipowner's agents. Walthew v. Mavrojani, 39 L. J., Ex. 81; L. R. 5 Ex. 116; 22 L. T. 310—Ex. Ch.

Semble, that such expenses may, as against the owner of cargo so removed be general average, if the goods cannot be otherwise carried forward, or only at a great expense, or after a delay which would deteriorate the goods. Ib.

A ship laden with cargo, while in port, was driven ashore on the 5th of October; the cargo was unshipped, and by the 19th was landed and warehoused in safety under the superintendence and control of the shipowner's agents; an attempt was then made to float the vessel, which was abandoned on the 24th of November. Subsequently a second attempt was made, which, on the 31st of December, succeeded; the ship was taken into port and repaired, and after reshipping the cargo, proceeded to its destination:—Held, that the expenses of getting the vessel off were not general average to which the owners of cargo were bound to contribute. Ib.

Expenses incurred in getting off a stranded ship, and taking her to a port for repair, after the entire cargo has been discharged and in safety, are not chargeable to general average, but are chargeable to a particular average on the ship alone. Job v. Langton, 6 El. & Bl. 779; 26 L. J., Q. B. 97; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 109; 4 W. R. 641.

A ship was chartered to proceed from Liverpool to a foreign port, and there load a return cargo, for freight, payable on delivery of the home cargo. She took on board an outward cargo, sailed and was driven on a bank by a storm near Liverpool, and the cargo was rescued from her, and carried to Liverpool, and there warehoused; the ship still remaining ashore in a situation of peril. Some days afterwards, the ship was got off and taken to Liverpool, where she was repaired, and again took the cargo on board and proceeded on her voyage. It was agreed between the insured and the underwriters on chartered freight, that the freight was to be taken as liable to contribute to general average; and the only question for the court was, whether the expenses, incurred after the goods were in Liverpool, in getting the ship off without which she could not have proceeded on her voyage or earned the chartered freight, were general average to which the ship, freight and cargo were to contribute, or were chargeable to ship alone, or were chargeable on any other principle:—Held, that as the ship and freight were both in peril, and both saved, the freight must contribute as well as the ship, supposing the cargo not to contribute. Moran v. Jones, 7 El. & Bl. 523; 26 L. J., Q. B. 187; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 663; 5 W. R. 503.

But the court drew the inference of fact, that the whole saving of the cargo and ship was one continued transaction, and on that hypothesis:—Held, that the expenses were general average, to which ship, freight and cargo must contribute. Ib.

Raising Sunken Vessel.]—The remuneration which the shipowner is obliged to pay for services rendered in raising and repairing a sunken ship gives a claim to a general average contribution provided such services appear to be for the joint benefit of the ship and cargo. Kemp v. Halliday, 6 B. & S. 723; 35 L. J., Q. B. 156; L. R. 1 Q. B. 520; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 582; 14 L. T. 762; 14 W. R. 697—Ex. Ch.

Scuttling Ship to extinguish Fire.]—Damage to cargo by scuttling a ship to put out a fire is the subject of general average contribution. Achard v. Ring, 31 L. T. 647; 2 Asp. M. C. 422.

There is no valid custom excluding the loss from general average. Ib.

The plaintiff chartered a ship from the defendant, and by the charterparty it was provided, "all questions of general average to be settled according to the custom of the London underwriters at Lloyd's." A fire broke out on board, the ship was scuttled to extinguish it, and the cargo was damaged thereby. The loss was adjusted as general average, and the plaintiff brought his action to recover from the defendant the ship's contribution. The judge directed the jury that the loss was general average according to law, and the question was whether there was a valid custom excluding such loss from general average. The jury found that no such custom existed, and the verdict was entered for the plaintiff. Ib.

Ship on Fire in Harbour — Termination of Adventure.]—To pour water upon the cargo, pursuant to the master's orders, for the purpose of extinguishing a fire which had broken out in a ship's hold, is a general average act; and if the cargo is thereby injured, the owner is entitled to a contribution. Whilst the cargo remains on board a ship after her arrival at the port of destination, the maritime adventure is not terminated so as to absolve the owners of the cargo and the ship from mutual rights and liabilities. The defendants were the owners of the "H.," which, having arrived at her port of destination at the end of a voyage, unloaded about 1,300 tons of her cargo; about 100 tons remained on board. Whilst she was lying at a wharf, a fire broke out in her hold; and, in order to extinguish it, her master caused water to be poured into her, whereby some goods, forming part of the cargo and belonging to the plaintiffs, were damaged. The "H." might have been scuttled and raised again; but if the fire had not been extinguished, she would have been in peril of partial destruction:—Held, that the defendants were liable to contribute by way of general average for the damage done to the plaintiff's goods. Whitecross Wire Co. v. Savill, 51 L. J., Q. B. 426; 8 Q. B. D. 653; 46 L. T. 643; 30 W. R. 588; 4 Asp. M. C. 531—C. A.

Sale of Cargo.]—A claim for contribution to general average arises only where a part of the cargo is sacrificed for the preservation of the ship, and the rest of the cargo from an impending danger; not where a part of the cargo is sold to raise money at a port to which the ship has put back for the repair of damage incurred by ordinary perils of the sea. Hallett v. Wigram, 9 C. B. 580; 19 L. J., C. P. 281.

Deck Cargoes—General Principles as to Jettison.]—Where goods are jettisoned for the common good, the loss, as a rule, comes within general average, and must be borne proportionally "by those interested." To this rule there is an exception, viz. that deck cargo jettisoned is not entitled to general average contribution. To this exception, however, there are two exceptions, viz. that coasting vessels are without the exception, and also those cases where by custom the deck cargo is one customary in the trade, and, perhaps, also from the port. It is said that there is a further exception, viz. where by agreement with the shipper the cargo is shipped on deck. We are of a different opinion. Per cur. in Wright v. Marwood, 50 L. J., Q. B. 643; 7 Q. B. D. 62; 45 L. T. 297; 29 W. R. 673; 4 Asp. M. C. 451—C. A.

—— Legality.]—A declaration by shipowners, against an underwriter of a time policy, upon the hull and stores, alleged that on a certain voyage certain pigs were shipped on board the vessel, and that, from stress of weather, it became necessary, for the preservation of the vessel and her cargo, to throw the pigs overboard, by reason whereof the plaintiffs, in respect of their interest in the hull, had to pay a proportionable part of the value of the pigs, and sustained a general average loss. A plea, that the pigs thrown overboard had been stowed on the deck, by reason whereof the defendant was not liable to contribute any average loss sustained by their jettison, is bad, as the mere fact of stowing the pigs on deck is no answer to the action. Millward v. Hibbert, 2 G. & D. 142; 3 Q. B. 120; 11 L. J., Q. B. 137; 6 Jur. 706.

Deck-cargo (timber) lawfully laden, pursuant to charterparty, having broken adrift in consequence of stormy weather, and impeding the navigation and endangering the safety of the vessel, was necessarily thrown overboard:—Held, that the shipper was entitled to claim general average in respect thereof, as against the shipowner. Johnson v. Chapman, 19 C. B. (N.S.) 563; 35 L. J., C. P. 23; 15 L. T. 70; 14 W. R. 264.

In order to make the jettison of cargo the subject of a general average contribution, the facts must be established that there was a maritime peril; that the sacrifice made was to avert a danger common to the whole adventure, and that such sacrifice was voluntary. Ib.

The plaintiffs shipped certain cattle as a deck cargo on board the defendant's vessel; during the voyage a storm arose, and owing to stress of weather the master jettisoned the deck cargo by throwing the cattle overboard. The act of jettison was proper and necessary on the part of the master for the safety of the defendant's vessel:—Held, that the plaintiffs could not recover from the defendants a general average contribution for the loss of the cattle. Johnson v. Chapman (19 C. B. (N.S.) 563) commented on. Wright v. Marwood, supra.

—— Custom as to Liability in respect of.]—A custom that underwriters are not liable, under the ordinary form of policy, for general average in respect of the jettison of goods stowed on deck, is a valid custom, and does not contradict the terms of the policy. Miller v. Tetherington, 7 H. & N. 954; 31 L. J., Ex. 363; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1039; 9 L. T. 231; 10 W. R. 356—Ex. Ch. See also Harley v. Millward, 1 Jones & C. 224.

What Recoverable — "According to British Custom."]—A ship was lying at anchor in port with a general cargo on board, when a fire broke out in the forehold. Every effort was made, but without success, to extinguish the fire by throwing water down the hatchways and upon the cargo. Finally, a hole was cut in the side of the vessel, and her fore compartment filled with water. This extinguished the fire, and if it had not been done the cargo would have been destroyed, and the ship seriously damaged if not rendered a total wreck. Part of a quantity of bark shipped on board was damaged or destroyed by the water which was poured or let into the vessel to extinguish the fire. The bark was shipped under a bill of lading, which contained the words, "average, if any, to be adjusted according to British custom." It is the practice of British average adjusters in adjusting losses to treat a loss occasioned by water in the manner above described as not a general average loss:—Held, whether or not the loss was, according to the general law of England, the subject of a general average contribution, that the words "British custom" in the bill of lading must be taken to mean the practice of British average adjusters, so that the claim for general average was expressly excluded. Stewart v. West Indian and Pacific Steamship Co., 42 L. J., Q. B. 191; L. R. 8 Q. B. 362; 28 L. T. 742; 21 W. R. 953; 1 Asp. M. C. 528—Ex. Ch.

—— On Foreign Insurances.]—An insurer of goods in a foreign country is not liable to indemnify the assured (a subject of that country) who is obliged by the decree of a court there to pay contribution to a general average, which by the law of this country could not have been demanded, where it does not appear that the parties contracted upon the footing of some usage among merchants obtaining in the foreign country, to treat the same as general average, but such usage is to be collected merely from the recitals and assumption made in the decree. Power v. Whitmore, 4 M. & S. 141 ; 16 R. R. 416.

Practice of Average Adjusters is not Evidence of Custom of Trade.]—A long continued practice of average adjusters who prepare their statements according to the law as laid down by the courts is no evidence of such a custom or usage of trade as can be impliedly incorporated in a contract between a shipowner and owner of cargo. The defendants, who were the owners of cargo, in an action against them by the shipowner to recover a general average contribution in respect of expenses caused by the ship putting into a port of refuge, landing, storing, and reshipping the cargo, and leaving the port, alleged a custom of trade that in such a case the expenses incurred in and about warehousing the cargo were apportioned among the owners of the cargo alone, and the expenses of reshipping the cargo, port dues, &c., were borne by the owners of the ship and freight. Several witnesses were called who gave evidence to the effect that for sixty or seventy years the practice of average adjusters had been as stated by the defendants, but that, in consequence of the decision in Attwood v. Sellar, infra, some average adjusters had altered their mode of adjustment in such a case :—Held, that this was not evidence of a custom of trade which could be left to the jury. Svensdsen v. Wallace, 46 L. T. 742 ; 30 W. R. 841 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 550.

—— Expenses of Warehousing, &c., and Charges on Vessel leaving Port.]—Where a vessel goes into a port of refuge, in consequence of an injury to her which is itself the subject of general average, the expenses of warehousing and reloading goods necessarily unloaded for the purpose of repairing the injury, and expenses incurred for pilotage and other charges on the vessel leaving the port, are the subject of general average. The practice of average adjusters to the contrary held to be contrary to law. Attwood v. Sellar, 49 L. J., Q. B. 515 ; 5 Q. B. D. 286 ; 42 L. T. 644 ; 28 W. R. 604 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 283—C. A.

A ship on her voyage began to leak dangerously. The master, for the good of all concerned, put into a port of refuge for repairs ; where the cargo was for the benefit of all concerned, landed for repairs. It was then reloaded and the voyage completed :—Held, that the cargo owners were not chargeable with general average contribution in respect of the expenses of reshipping the cargo. Svensden v. Wallace, 54 L. J., Q. B. 497 ; 10 App. Cas. 404 ; 52 L. T. 901 ; 34 W. R. 369 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 453—H. L. (E.)

Wages and Expenses in Port of Distress, not General Average.]—Extraordinary wages and provisions expended whilst a ship is in a port of distress for repairs are not the subject of general average, except in case of urgent necessity. Lateward v. Curling, 1 Park, Ins. (8th ed.) 288 ; and see Fletcher v. Poole, ante, col. 1130.

Sue and Labour Clause.]—See 5, EXPENSES—SUE AND LABOUR CLAUSE, infra, col. 1224.

b. Warranty against.

Extent of.]—An insurance free from average, unless general does not extend to the damage received by goods in a storm. Wilson v. Smith, 1 W. Bl. 507 ; 3 Burr. 1550.

Memorandum—Rice.]—Rice is not corn within the meaning of the usual memorandum of a policy. Scott v. Bourdillon, 2 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 213.

Partial Loss—Memorandum — Peas — Corn—Malt.]—Peas arrived damaged and were sold for three-fourths less than the freight :—Held, that as the goods mentioned in the memorandum arrived the underwriters were not liable. Mason v. Skurray, 1 Park, Ins. (8th ed.) 253.

But the word "corn" includes peas and beans. Ib.

And malt is corn within the meaning of the clause in a policy to be free from average, &c. Moody v. Surridge, 2 Esp. 633 ; 5 R. R. 575.

On the memorandum "free from average under 3*l.* per. cent.," the underwriter is liable for the amount of the aggregate of several partial losses, each less than 3*l.* per cent., but amounting together to more. Blackett v. Royal Exchange Assurance Co., 2 C. & J. 244 ; 2 Tyr. 266 ; 1 L. J., Ex. 101.

Insurance on goods with the usual memorandum, "corn, fish, &c., warranted free from average, unless general, or the ship should be stranded." A quantity of fish, part of the goods insured, was so much damaged by the perils of the sea, that, on putting into the port of Lisbon, on a survey by the board of health at that place, the fish was declared to be, and in fact was, of no value :—Held, that this is not a total loss of the fish. Cocking v. Fraser, 4 Dougl. 295.

Under a similar memorandum in a policy of insurance on an electric cable, the subject of insurance in the valuation clause being expressed as "on one 1,000*l.* share in the A. B. Telegraph Company, said share valued at 1,100*l.*" ; where a portion of the cable was lost by peril of the sea, and a portion by perils not insured against :—Held, that the warranty against partial average was applicable, and consequently that the assured could not recover unless a loss of 3*l.* per cent. had been sustained. Paterson v. Harris, 1 B. & S. 336 ; 30 L. J., Q. B. 354 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1276 ; 5 L. T. 53 ; 9 W. R. 743.

Held, also, that in assessing the damages, the value of the whole cable that ever was exposed to peril, including the portion lost, must be ascertained according to its cost, when shipped free on board ; and that the proportion between that value and the loss actually incurred by the perils insured against would give the percentage payable by each underwriter on his subscription. Ib.

Held, also, that in applying this principle, that portion of the cable which was lost in a first attempt to lay down the cable, and which it became necessary to replace by new cable, should be estimated at the cost of the substituted cable ; but, as regarded a portion of the lost cable which was taken out as superfluous cable, by way of a provision against accident, it might be reasonable to consider how far such cable, if not lost, would have been depreciated in marketable value by having been coiled in the hold of a vessel or by other circumstances. Ib.

Damages for Collision.]—Insurance on a ship "V.," with the usual warranty as to average. The ship having come into collision with another ship, and proceedings being instituted for the damage done to the other ship, the matter was referred to arbitrators, who awarded that each ship should bear half of the aggregate loss. The ship "V." on the settlement, had to pay a balance to the other ship:—Held, not to be a loss to which the underwriters were liable. De Vaux v. Salvador, 4 A. & E. 420; 6 N. & M. 713; 1 H. & W. 751; 5 L. J., K. B. 134.

Expenses of Crew.]—Held, also, that the expense of the wages and provisions of the crew of the "V." during the time she was detained in repairing damage done to herself by perils of the sea, was not such a loss. Ib.

Stranding—Goods Insured in Ship and in Craft—Construction of Valued Policy—Advanced Freight included.]—By a policy of insurance certain maize was insured, as to part, from San Nicolas, and, as to the remainder, from Buenos Ayres, for a voyage to the United Kingdom, free from particular average, unless the ship or craft should be stranded. The policy included all risks of steam navigation, and in craft, transhipment, or while waiting transit. The maize was valued in the policy at 7,940*l.* "(included 1,361*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.* for advance on freight)." Between San Nicolas and Buenos Ayres the ship stranded, and a portion of the cargo was discharged into lighters, and part was wetted and part lost. The ship got off, and at Buenos Ayres was surveyed, and was admitted by both parties to be seaworthy to continue her voyage, and thereupon the discharged cargo was reshipped, together with the Buenos Ayres portion of the maize, which had been awaiting the ship in lighters. On the voyage to Europe a large part of the cargo was lost and the remainder damaged owing to perils of the seas. In an action raising the question as to the amount of damage recoverable by the assured under the policy:—Held, that, the stranding having occurred before the Buenos Ayres portion of the maize was on board, the assured were not entitled to recover for particular average loss in respect of it, but only in respect of the maize shipped at San Nicolas:—Held, also, that the assured were not entitled to have the particular average loss calculated on the valuation stated in the policy, without deduction of the amount of the freight advanced. Thames and Mersey Marine Insurance Co. v. Pitts, [1893] 1 Q. B. 476; 5 R. 168; 68 L. T. 524; 41 W. R. 346; 7 Asp. M. C. 302.

Damage to Goods.]—Where articles essentially different in nature and kind are insured under a general description, as "master's effects," warranted free from all average, the warranty is divisible, and means that the insurers are not to be liable for any partial loss, but are to be liable for a total loss of any of the specific articles insured under that description. Duff v. Mackenzie, 3 C. B. (N.S.) 16; 26 L. J., C. P. 313; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1025.

Insurance at and from C. to L. on goods in a ship by name, until the same should be there safely discharged and landed, rice free of particular average, and the ship, with rice and other goods, arrived within the limits of the port of L.: but before she could be brought to her moorings, or be at all unloaded, ran aground and was wrecked, and the whole cargo was greatly damaged, and was taken out of her in craft, and carried to the consignees at L. and sold, and produced upon the whole little more than sufficient to pay freight and salvage; but the rice did not produce sufficient to pay the freight:—Held, that this was a case of particular average only, and therefore, as to the rice, the underwriter was exempted by the warranty. Glennie v. London Assurance Co., 3 M. & S. 371; 15 R. R. 275.

Upon a policy on goods free from particular average, no damage short of the absolute destruction of the thing insured will amount to a total loss. Navone v. Haddon, 9 C. B. 30; 19 L. J., C. P. 161.

A cargo of corn was insured free from average, on a voyage from Dantzic to Hull, by the ship "Isabella." In the course of the voyage the vessel and cargo sustained damage by the sea, and in consequence the vessel was obliged to put into a port in Norway, and there the corn was taken out for the purpose of drying it, and repairing the vessel, and so enabling her to proceed to England with the corn when dried. The corn, however, when taken out appeared to have received considerable damage; and the master, after calling in advice, resolved to sell it, and it was accordingly sold (after having been partially dried) as damaged corn, in the port in Norway:—Held, that the insured could not recover as for a total loss, unless the corn was in such a state in the port in Norway as that, when brought home, it could not have been sold for an amount exceeding the expense of drying and bringing it home; and that it was not a proper question to leave to the jury, whether a prudent uninsured owner would, under similar circumstances, have sold the corn at the port in Norway. Reimer v. Ringrose, 6 Ex. 263; 20 L. J., Ex. 175.

An insurance was effected upon wheat shipped in bulk, and valued at 1,600*l.*, warranted free from average except general, or the ship were stranded. On the voyage the ship met with tempestuous weather, and made considerable water; and in pumping it out, wheat to the value of about 75*l.* was pumped out with the water and lost:—Held, that the assured could not recover as for a total loss of the part so lost. Hills v. London Assurance Corporation, 5 M. & W. 569; 9 L. J., Ex. 25.

A policy was effected on a ship and her cargo of guano, which contained the following clause:—"free from all average or claim arising from jettison or leakage, unless consequent upon stranding, sinking, or fire." During the voyage the ship, by tempestuous weather, became leaky, and was compelled to put into port, and was there found unfit to proceed on her voyage, which was abandoned, and the ship and goods sold:—Held, that the assured were entitled to recover as for an average loss. Carr v. Royal Exchange Assurance Corporation, 5 B. & S. 433; 33 L. J., Q. B. 63; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 316; 10 L. T. 265; 12 W. R. 127.

Freight.]—A policy contained a stipulation that "freight was warranted free from average under 5*l.* per cent. unless general." The interest assured was described as "money advanced to the assured as owner of the ship, on account of freight of the cargo loaded on board her and subject to the risk of the voyage":—Held, that this was an insurance of freight and liable to general average. Hall v. Janson, 4 El. & Bl. 500; 3 C. L. R. 737; 24 L. J., Q. B. 97; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 571; 3 W. R. 213.

As to what is a Stranding.]—See ante, col. 1093.

"Free from Average under 3 per cent. unless general"—Time Policy—Losses on separate Voyages.]—In a valued time-policy of marine insurance the ship and freight were warranted free from average under 3 per cent., unless general, or the ship be stranded, sunk, or burned. The ship made several voyages during the period insured, and incurred particular average losses. Such losses on any one voyage did not amount to 3 per cent., but the total of all the losses on all the voyages exceeded 3 per cent. In an action by the assured on the policy:—Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover, for although the separate losses on each voyage could be added together, yet the losses occurring on distinct and separate voyages could not be added together so as to bring the amount of the losses up to 3 per cent. Stewart v. Merchant Marine Insurance Co., 55 L. J., Q. B. 81; 16 Q. B. D. 619; 53 L. T. 892; 34 W. R. 208; 5 Asp. M. C. 506—C. A.

"Free from Particular Average unless the Ship be stranded"—Insured Goods not on Board at Time of Stranding.]—The stranding referred to in a policy on goods in the usual memorandum "warranted free from particular average unless the ship be stranded" is a "stranding of the ship" whilst the insured goods are on board her. The Alsace-Lorraine, 62 L. J., Adm. 107; [1893] P. 209; 1 R. 632; 69 L. T. 261; 42 W. R. 112; 7 Asp. M. C. 362.

Where, therefore, rice insured under a policy containing the above memorandum, was unloaded from the ship in which it had been originally shipped and taken on shore at a port of refuge in order that the ship might be repaired, and the ship stranded whilst the cargo was on shore:—Held, that the warranty prevented the underwriters being liable for a particular average loss on the rice occurring when the rice had been transhipped and was being carried to its destination in another bottom. Ib.

Free from Average under £3 per cent. unless Ship be "burnt."]—A ship was insured under a Lloyd's policy containing the usual form of memorandum—viz.: "And all other goods, also ship and freight, are warranted free from average under 3*l.* per cent., unless general, or the ship be stranded, sunk, or burnt":—Held, that a ship is not "burnt" within the meaning of the memorandum where fires that have broken out in the coal bunkers have consumed some of the ship's coals, and done some slight damage to the structure of the ship itself, but have occasioned no interruption of the voyage and no interference with the navigation of the ship. The Glenlivet 63 L. J., Adm. 45; [1894] P. 48; 6 R. 665; 69 L. T. 706; 42 W. R. 97; 7 Asp. M. C. 395—C. A.

It cannot be laid down as a definition applicable to every case that a ship is "burnt" within the meaning of the memorandum, whenever the injury by fire is sufficient to render the ship temporarily unnavigable. Whether a partial burning does or does not constitute the ship a "burnt" ship is an inference to be drawn in each particular case by the jury (or judge sitting as a jury) from the actual facts in each particular case. Ib.

Free from Average under Three per cent. unless General—General and Particular Average not added together.]—Under the memorandum in a marine policy by which the subject-matter of insurance is warranted free from average under a certain amount per cent., unless general, or the ship be stranded, sunk, or burnt, a general average loss cannot be added to a particular average loss to make up a loss amounting to the specified percentage. A ship was insured by a policy expressed to be against all losses which could not be recovered under an ordinary Lloyd's policy by reason of the insertion therein of the memorandum against average under three per cent., unless general, or the ship be stranded, sunk or burnt. The ship while covered by the policy through stress of weather; incurred a particular average loss; and further damage to her was incurred under such circumstances as to constitute a general average loss. The particular average loss did not amount to three per cent. of her value, but the general and particular average losses taken together did amount to such percentage:—Held, that the assured were entitled to recover the particular average loss under the policy. Price v. A1 Ships' Small Damage Insurance Association, 58 L. J., Q. B. 269; 22 Q. B. D. 580; 61 L. T. 278; 37 W. R. 566; 6 Asp. M. C. 435—C. A.

—— Mode of ascertaining whether Loss exceeded 3 per cent.]—A time policy on ship contained the warranty "free from average under 3 per cent." During a voyage covered by the policy the ship sustained (without its being discovered) a fracture of her stern-post owing to perils of the sea, being a particular average loss within the policy. The voyage having been completed and the cargo delivered, the ship was put into dry dock for the purpose only of being cleaned, scraped, and painted, being in such a state that no prudent owner would have put to sea again without having her cleaned and scraped. When the ship was put into dry dock the injury was for the first time discovered, and the necessary repairs were then effected, and the ship was discharged from dry dock on the eighth day, repaired, cleaned, scraped, and painted. Had she required nothing but cleaning, scraping, and painting, she might have been discharged on the evening of the third day. The repairs alone, without cleaning, &c., would have taken the whole eight days. If the whole or half of the dock dues for the first three days ought to be charged against the underwriters in account, there was a particular average loss exceeding 3 per cent. If the cost of the repairs plus the dock charges for the last five days were alone to be charged against the underwriters, there was not a particular average loss of 3 per cent. If the dock charges for the first three days ought to be attributed partly to the repairs and partly to the cleaning, &c., then (so far as the apportionment was a question of fact) it was to be taken that one-half of those charges should be attributed to each purpose:—Held, that although a contract of marine insurance is a contract of indemnity, and though the result would be that the shipowners would be relieved of part of the dock charges which they would otherwise have had to pay themselves, they were entitled to have the dock charges for the first three days apportioned between the repairs on the one hand and the cleaning, &c., on the other; that the apportionment should be one-half to each purpose, and that there had therefore been a particular average loss exceeding 3 per cent. Marine Insurance Co. v. China Trans-Pacific Steamship Co., 56 L. Ship Docked for Repairs—Survey in Dock—Apportionment of Expenses.]—During a voyage covered by a policy underwritten by the defendants a vessel sustained damage, and was subsequently put into dry dock for the purpose of effecting repairs. The survey of the vessel for the purpose of renewing her classification in Lloyd's Register was not due for some months, but the owners took advantage of her being in dry dock to have the survey made, and her classification was renewed :—Held, that the dock expenses, so far as they were common to the repairs and to the survey, ought to be apportioned in equal moieties between the owners and the underwriters. Marine Insurance Co. v. China Trans-Pacific Steamship Co. (supra) followed. Ruabon Steamship Co. v. London Assurance, 66 L. J., Q. B. 841 ; [1897] 2 Q. B. 456 ; 77 L. T. 402.

Average Payable upon Separate Packages—Loss on whole exceeding 3 per cent.]—By the terms of a policy the assurer binds himself to pay average separately on each package of the goods insured. This stipulation does not preclude the assured from recovering an average loss upon the whole exceeding 3 per cent. under the usual clause in the policy. And in such case, although several packages remain uninjured, they are to be included in the average. Hagedorn v. Whitmore, 1 Stark. 157.

4. ADJUSTMENT.

a. Persons Adjusting.

Agent.]—If it is established that an agent has authority to sign a policy for an underwriter, it follows that he has authority to adjust it. Richardson v. Anderson, 1 Camp. 43, n. ; 10 R. R. 628, n.

So, if a person allows his agent to underwrite and settle losses for him, he gives him an implied authority to refer a dispute about a loss to arbitration, and is bound by such act of the agent. Goodson v. Brooke, 4 Camp. 163.

A plea of payment to an action by A., upon a policy effected by A. as agent, is supported by an indorsement on the policy by A., purporting that the loss had been adjusted, and the balance due from the defendant to A. paid, although the principal has not authorised such a settlement. Gibson v. Winter, 2 N. & M. 737 ; 5 B. & Ad. 96.

Insurance Broker.]—If an insurance broker keeps a policy he has effected in his hands, he is bound to use reasonable diligence to procure the underwriters to settle and pay any loss that may happen upon it. Bousfield v. Creswell, 2 Camp. 545 ; 11 R. R. 794.

Where a policy was delivered to a broker for the purpose of settling a loss, which was adjusted by the underwriter, payable at a month, and the broker charged such underwriter in account for the loss, and transmitted an account to the assured, in which he stated himself to be debtor for the amount of the loss, and for the balance of that account, and the assured drew a bill on the broker, which the latter accepted, but did not pay, and the underwriter's name was not struck off the policy :—Held, that he was not discharged. Russell v. Bangley, 4 B. & Ald. 395.

Insurance brokers holding a policy for the purpose of adjusting a loss, suffered an underwriter's name to be struck out, upon his signing the adjustment ; he gave them credit in his books for the loss, and became bankrupt ; but they never took credit for the amount in their books ; on the contrary, they gave the assured notice of the bankruptcy ; and there was afterwards a settlement of accounts between the brokers and the assured, comprehending the policy in question, on which no demand was made upon them in respect of the bankrupt's subscription :—Held, that they were not liable to the assured for the sum due from the bankrupt on the policy. Orington v. Bell, 3 Camp. 237.

Insurance brokers, after a total loss and an adjustment, and whilst the policy remained in their hands, erased the name of the underwriter from the policy, debited him with the loss, and gave the assured credit for it ; but the latter never recognised the adjustment :—Held, that the underwriter still continued liable to him for the loss. Benson v. Maitland, Gow, 205.

Liability for Negligence.]—When parties, in order to ascertain average contribution in dispute, agree that an average adjuster for reward shall ascertain and adjust the amount, and agree to abide by his decision, such average adjuster, having given his decision, is not liable to an action for carelessness, negligence and unskilfulness, if he has acted in good faith. Tharsis Sulphur and Copper Co. v. Loftus, 42 L. J., C. P. 6 ; L. R. 8 C. P. 1 ; 27 L. T. 549 ; 21 W. R. 109 ; 1 Asp. M. C. 455.

Duty of Shipowner.]—Where a general average loss has occurred, a shipowner may be liable to an action for damages for delivering up the cargo without taking the necessary steps to procure an adjustment of the general average and to secure its payment. The plaintiff shipped goods on board a steamer belonging to the defendants under a bill of lading by which the defendants undertook to deliver the goods at the port of Montreal unto the Grand Trunk Railway, by them to be forwarded (upon the conditions before and after expressed) thence per railway to the station nearest to Toronto, &c. and among the conditions was the following : "The shipowner or railway company is not to be liable for any damage to any goods which are capable of being covered by insurance," &c. In the course of the voyage the plaintiff's goods sustained damage, which came under the heading of general average. The ship returned to Liverpool, and the cargo was discharged and handed over by the defendants to a company to be distributed and disposed for the benefit of the parties concerned, without giving any assistance to the bailees, the underwriters, or the persons whose goods were damaged to get an average statement made out, or taking any steps to enable the plaintiff to recover contribution:—Held, that the bill of lading did not relieve the defendants from contribution to general average; and that they were liable to an action by the plaintiffs for their omission to secure an adjustment and payment of the general average. Crookes v. Allen, 49 L. J., Q. B. 201; 5 Q. B. D. 38; 41 L. T. 800; 28 W. R. 304; 4 Asp. M. C. 216.

Notice.]—Where by a memorandum on a policy, the underwriter was to adjust a loss in three months after notice, a direct notice from the assured is not required, if he has had notice by other means. Abel v. Potts, 3 Esp. 242; 6 R. R. 826.

b. Computation.

By what Law.]—A loss by a general average is to be calculated according to the law of the port of discharge. Therefore, an action will not lie in this country to recover back money paid upon an average loss adjusted at St. Petersburg, according to the law of Russia (the consignor and consignee of the goods and the owner of the vessel being British subjects), although by the law of England an average loss would not be payable under the circumstances. Simonds v. White, 4 D. & R. 375; 2 B. & C. 805; 2 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 159; 26 R. R. 560. And see Smith v. Macneil, 2 Dow, 538.

Foreign Average Statement of Loss, binding Nature of.]—A cargo of rye was insured for 4,160*l.* from Taganrog to Bremen. The policy contained the usual memorandum, "Corn, &c. are warranted free from average unless general or the ship be stranded," &c. and in the margin were the following conditions,—"To pay general average as per foreign statement, if so made up. Warranted free from particular average unless the ship or craft be stranded, sunk, or burnt: but this warranty not to exonerate the underwriters from the liability to pay any special charges for mats, warehousing, forwarding, or otherwise, if incurred, as well as partial loss arising from transhipment. Warranted free from capture and seizure and the consequences of any attempt thereat." After leaving Taganrog, the vessel encountered severe weather, and was compelled to put into two several ports for repair, at each of which the captain, in order to enable him to obtain funds to put her in a condition to continue her voyage, gave a bottomry bond on ship, freight, and cargo, the aggregate of which, with interest, on the arrival of the ship at Bremen, amounted to 2,818*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.* The captain being unable to discharge this obligation, the consignees of the cargo, in order to obtain delivery, paid the amount. On the 3rd of August, 1868, a statement was prepared by an average-stater in Bremen, in which the loss arising upon the bottomry bonds was apportioned between the ship and freight and the cargo as follows:—1,088*l.* 14*s.* 11*d.* as falling upon the cargo, and 1,185*l.* 11*s.* upon the ship and freight. The captain being unable to pay or give security for the 1,185*l.* 11*s.*, so charged upon the ship and freight, the vessel was sold under an order of the Tribunal of Commerce of Bremen, and produced 729*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.*, leaving a balance due to the holders of the bonds (the 1,088*l.* 14*s.* 11*d.* having been paid) of 663*l.* 2*s.* 10*d.* On the 3rd of October, a further or supplemental average-statement was made by the average-stater, in which the last-mentioned sum was stated as "the amount which the cargo had to pay as additional bottomry debt" to the holders of the bonds. These average statements were admitted to be accurate, and correctly made up in accordance with the law in force in Bremen; and it was further admitted that "such a loss as that which occurred in this case is treated at Bremen as a general average loss, and not as a particular average loss":—Held, that the underwriters were bound by the average-statements so made, and consequently that the assured were entitled to recover the 663*l.* 2*s.* 10*d.* Harris v. Scaramanga, 41 L. J., C. P. 170; L. R. 7 C. P. 481; 26 L. T. 797; 20 W. R. 777; 1 Asp. M. C. 339.

Sugars (consisting of bags in series) were insured from Java to Holland by an English policy which contained this clause, "To cover only the risks excepted by the clause 'warranted free from particular average unless the vessel be stranded, sunk, or burnt': to pay all claims and losses on Dutch terms and according to statement made up by official dispacheur in Holland." There was already a policy effected in Holland on the same goods; but of this the English underwriters had no notice, except so far as it could be implied from the above words. On her voyage to Holland the vessel took the ground under circumstances which would amount to a stranding according to English, but not according to Dutch, law; and a Dutch average-stater (a particular average loss having been incurred) made up a statement of average, which statement it was admitted was properly made up according to the facts, and according to the law of Holland:—Held, that the terms of the policy sued on did not amount to notice to the insurers of an existing Dutch policy, and therefore it was to be construed as if it stood alone, and according to English law. Hendricks v. Australasian Insurance Co., 43 L. J., C. P. 188; L. R. 9 C. P. 460; 30 L. T. 419; 22 W. R. 947; 2 Asp. M. C. 44.

Held, also, that, by the latter words of the clause, the defendants were bound to pay according to the foreign average statement, and consequently that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Ib.

A policy on a cargo of wheat shipped from Varna to Marseilles contained the usual memorandum against average unless general, and the following term "general average as per foreign statement." The ship, after starting from Varna, met with heavy weather, and was forced to carry a great press of canvas to avoid a lee shore. This caused her to strain very much, and having sprung a leak and become otherwise disabled, she was brought to the port of Constantinople. It was found, on a survey, that a fifth of the wheat had been damaged; and the surveyors recommended that the voyage should end at Constantinople, and the damaged part of the wheat should be sold, and the rest transhipped to Marseilles. The repairs necessary for the ship would have taken from one to two months. Under these circumstances, the recommendation of the surveyors was carried out and an adjustment of average in respect of ship and cargo was made at Constantinople. In such adjustment the damage which the cargo of wheat had sustained was treated as general average, and in accordance with such average adjustment a certain sum of money became payable by the underwriters upon the policy. The law by which the adjustment ought to have been regulated according to the law and usages prevailing at Constantinople under the circumstances was the law of France, and the average adjustment was made up in all respects in conformity with such law. In an action on the policy by the owners of the wheat, the underwriters paid into court sufficient to cover the claim on all the items of the average adjustment except the damage to the wheat which, by the law of England, would not under the circumstances be a general average loss:—Held, that the voyage was rightly brought to an end at Constantinople, and the average adjusted there, and that the underwriters were liable in respect of the damage done to the wheat. Mavro v. Ocean Marine Insurance Co., 44 L. J., C. P. 229; L. R. 10 C. P. 414; 32 L. T. 743; 23 W. R. 758; 2 Asp. M. C. 590—Ex. Ch.

The insurer of goods to a foreign country is not liable to indemnify the assured (a subject of that country), who is obliged by the decree of a court there to pay contribution to a general average, which by the law of this country could not have been demanded, where it does not appear that the parties contracted upon the footing of some usage among merchants obtaining in the foreign country, to treat the same as general average; but such usage is to be collected merely from the recitals and assumption made in the decree. Power v. Whitmore, 4 M. & S. 141; 16 R. R. 416.

The plaintiff, on behalf of the finance minister of the Sultan of Turkey, on the 26th of November, 1858, effected an insurance with the defendant, in London, upon a quantity of gold in a ship called the "Dutchman," belonging to Waterford, and in the port of London. The next day she was sold by her owners to a Russian company, her name being changed to the "Dnieper"; and an entry of the sale was made in the registry at Waterford, but neither the plaintiff nor the defendant knew of the sale, or of her name being changed, until the termination of her voyage. The gold was put on board on the 4th of December, and while the ship was on her way to her destination at Constantinople she grounded on a shoal within the jurisdiction of that port. The gold was sent on shore before any expense was incurred in respect of saving the cargo, and the ship became a total wreck. The gold was deposited with the Russian consul, and the owner was forced, in order to get possession of it, to give security for the payment of any claim which might be made upon it according to the law which prevailed at Constantinople. The ship being Russian was subject to Russian law, which authorised the determination of maritime causes at Constantinople by reference to the French code de commerce. A court was duly appointed by the consul-general, and it was adjudged that the case was one which required a settlement of salvage, and ordered that the gold should contribute 7,149*l.* 6*s.* 1*d.* towards the expense of saving the cargo. Under English law the owner of the gold could not have been called upon to pay a great part of that amount, nor would he have had to pay it if the ship had been under an English flag; but the assured was forced to pay it:—Held, in an action to recover from the defendant the amount of his proportion of the sum so paid, that the court could not consider whether the decision of the court at Constantinople was correct or not. Dent v. Smith, 38 L. J., Q. B. 144; L. R. 4 Q. B. 414; 20 L. T. 868; 17 W. R. 646.

—— Sue and Labour Clause — Stranding — Expense of Re-shipping Cargo.]—See The Mary Thomas, infra, col. 1265.

—— Recovery of Sum paid under Foreign Sentence.]—The plaintiff having been compelled to pay under the sentence of a foreign court general average beyond what he would have had to pay by English law, held entitled to recover that sum against his insurer; usage to that effect being proved. Newman v. Cazalet, 2 Park, Ins. (8th ed.) 900.

—— Contributory Value.]—A policy effected on cargo valued at 825*l.* and 25*l.* cash advanced on freight, contained a clause: "General average payable according to foreign statement, if so made up." The ship was damaged on the voyage, and the master bottomried the ship and cargo for repairs and other expenses. At the port of destination, a general average statement was made up, in which 1,293*l.* was fixed as the contributory value of the cargo. The ship and freight being unable to pay their share of the bond, the residue was by German law payable by owners of cargo "on principles of general average":—Held, that the assured were entitled to recover from the underwriters the whole sum (being under 850*l.*) paid by them in respect of the bottomry bond. Robinows v. Ewing's Trustees, 3 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 1134.

—— Payment in respect of Bottomry Bond.]—A policy of marine insurance was effected with English underwriters by an English merchant upon goods shipped in a French ship, and it was thereby provided that general average was to be payable as per judicial foreign statement. The ship was damaged by a collision and put into port for repairs, the cargo, however, being uninjured. The master, not having funds to do the necessary repairs, gave a bottomry bond on ship, freight and cargo. The ship and freight proving insufficient to satisfy the bond, the assured had to pay the deficiency in order to obtain possession of his goods:—Held, that the policy was not to be construed according to French law, except so far as the parties had expressly stipulated that it should be, and that there being no loss by perils of the sea according to English law, the assured could not recover from the underwriters the amount which he had paid as above mentioned. Greer v. Poole, 49 L. J., Q. B. 463; 5 Q. B. D. 272; 42 L. T. 687; 28 W. R. 582; 4 Asp. M. C. 300.

By Foreign Agent of Lloyd's.]—The certificate of an agent for Lloyd's at a foreign port, ascertaining an average loss on a cargo damaged by sea-water, is not of itself admissible as to the amount of the loss in an action by the assured against the underwriters in this country. Drake v. Marryatt, 2 D. & R. 696; 1 B. & C. 473; 1 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 161; 25 R. R. 46.

Amount on Ship—Several Valued Policies.]—Where several valued policies are effected upon the same vessel valued differently, and upon a total loss, the assured receives under some of the policies part of the sums insured, in an action upon another policy he is only entitled to recover the difference between the amount received and the agreed value in that policy. Bruce v. Jones,

1 H. & C. 769; 32 L. J., Ex. 132; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 628; 7 L. T. 748; 11 W. R. 371.

—— Limit of Liability.]—The liability of the underwriter is not restricted to the single amount of his subscription, but he may be subject either to several average losses, or to an average loss and a total loss, or to money expended and labour bestowed about the defence, safeguard and recovery of the ship to a much greater amount than the subscription; and it will be recoverable as an average loss. Le Cheminant v. Pearson, 4 Taunt. 367; 13 R. R. 636.

—— When Accounts Complicated.]—In an action on a policy for an average loss, if the account is so complicated that it cannot be adjusted in court, the jury, by consent of the parties, may find for a total loss, the plaintiff entering into a rule to account upon oath for what part of the insured property he may recover. Barber v. French. 1 Dougl. 294. See also Cases 3. AVERAGE LOSS, ante, cols. 1240, seq.

Amount on Freight.]—A policy contained a stipulation that "freight was warranted free from average under 5*l.* per cent., unless general." The interest assured was described as "money advanced to the assured as owner of the ship, on account of freight of the cargo loaded on board her, and subject to the risk of the voyage":—Held, first, that this was an assurance on freight, and liable to general average. Hall v. Janson, 4 El. & Bl. 500; 3 C. L. R. 737; 24 L. J., Q. B. 97; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 571; 3 W. R. 213.

Held, also, that a custom alleged by plea to exist in London, where the policy was effected, that assurers of money advanced on freight were not liable to make good a general average loss, was no answer to such a policy, which, according to the previous interpretation, expressly stipulated that the assurer should be liable to make good such a loss. Ib.

Action on a policy on ship at and from London to the East Indies, until her arrival at her port of discharge on the outward voyage. Loss by perils of the sea. Ship was chartered from London to the East Indies, there to deliver her outward cargo, and return thence with a cargo for England into the Thames, and there make a true delivery, &c.; and it was agreed that the charterers should, upon condition that the ship performed her voyage and arrived at London, and not otherwise, pay freight for every ton of goods that should be brought home, at so much per ton; the ship sailed on the voyage insured, and in the course of her outward voyage incurred an average loss, but was repaired, and afterwards performed her voyage and the freight was received:—Held, that the freight was liable to contribute to general average, and that the underwriter was entitled to deduct in respect of such contribution. Williams v. London Assurance Co., 1 M. & S. 318; 14 R. R. 441.

—— Nett or Gross.]—The general principle, that the assured shall recover no more than an indemnity in case of loss, may be controlled by a mercantile usage clearly established to the contrary. Therefore, a usage, that the loss in an open policy on freight shall be adjusted on the gross and not on the nett amount of the freight is a legal usage. Palmer v. Blackburn, 1 Bing. 61; 7 Moore, 339; 1 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 1; 25 R. R. 599.

In the case of a total loss, on an open policy on freight, the assured is entitled to recover for the gross freight, free from all deductions; and evidence is admissible to shew that, although open policies on freight are of rare occurrence, still, that it is the practice at Lloyd's to pay the assured the amount of the gross and not of the nett freight. Ib.

Amount on Ship and Goods.]—A policy was effected for twelve months on ship and goods from Liverpool to the coast of Africa and back, on a barter voyage. The policy contained a stipulation that "outward cargo should be considered homeward, interest twenty-four hours after arrival at first port or place of trade"; and by a memorandum the insurance was stated to be "upon ship valued at 2,000*l.*, and cargo 8,000*l.*, with liberty to increase the valuation of the homeward cargo." The ship sailed to Kinsembo, on the African coast, and there discharged a third of her cargo, and after a stay there of more than twenty-four hours, proceeded towards other ports in order to take in homeward cargo, and was totally lost, together with the two-thirds of the outward cargo which remained on board:—Held, that the valuation applied to what was substantially a full cargo, and not to any quantity of goods substantially less than a full cargo, and entitled the assured to 8,000*l.* in the event of the total loss of a substantially full cargo, or to an indemnity in case of a partial loss, not in any case exceeding 8,000*l.*; and that the principle for the valuation of a partial loss was this:—If the value of the whole of the intended cargo was a datum, the partial loss would be adjusted to the common proportion; but where the value of the whole of the intended cargo could not be ascertained, the proportion which the part lost bore to the whole could not be known, and the mode of estimating a partial loss under a valued policy could not be adopted, and, consequently, that, under the circumstances, the assured would be entitled to the ordinary indemnity as under an open policy underwritten for 8,000*l.* Tobin v. Harford, 17 C. B. (N.S.) 528; 34 L. J., C. P. 37; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 859; 10 L. T. 817; 12 W. R. 1062—Ex. Ch. And see Forbes v. Aspinall, 13 East, 323; 12 R. R. 352.

Amount on Goods.]—A partial loss on a policy on goods by reason of sea damage is to be calculated by ascertaining the difference between the respective gross proceeds of the same goods when sound and when damaged, and not the nett proceeds. Hurry v. Royal Exchange Assurance Co., 3 Bos. & P. 308; 6 R. R. 804.

The rule for estimating any loss of goods insured by an open policy is to take the invoice price at the loading port, together with the premium of insurance and commission, as the basis of the calculation of the value of the goods; and the rule for estimating a partial loss in the like case is (the same as upon a valued policy) by taking the proportional difference between the selling price of the sound and that of the damaged part of the goods at the port of delivery, and applying that proportion (be it half, a quarter, an eighth, &c.) with reference to such estimated value at the loading port, to the damaged portion of the goods. Usher v. Noble, 12 East, 639; 11 R. R. 505. S. P., Langhorn v. Allnutt, 4 Taunt. 511; 13 R. R. 663.

Where goods were injured by perils insured against:—Held, that the loss in value of the goods depended on their value at the time of their arrival at the port of destination, and not at the time of sale, and the underwriters were therefore not liable for a fall in the market price between such arrival and the time of sale. Cater v. Great Western Insurance Co., 42 L. J., C. P. 266; L. R. 8 C. P. 552; 29 L. T. 136; 21 W. R. 850; 2 Asp. M. C. 90.

Where goods are shipped on an invoice, an average loss upon a policy must be calculated upon the invoice price, and not upon the price of the market at which the damaged goods arrived. Waldron v. Coombe, 3 Taunt. 162; 12 R. R. 629.

Average loss of a valued policy is to be estimated by the real value of the goods on board. Hamilton v. Mendez or Mendes, 1 W. Bl. 279; 2 Burr. 1198.

The rule by which to calculate a partial loss on a policy on goods, by reason of sea damage, is the difference between the respective gross proceeds of the same goods when sound and when damaged, and not the nett proceeds; it being settled that the underwriter is not to bear any loss from fluctuation of market or port duties, or charges after the arrival of the goods at their port of destination. Johnson v. Sheddon, 2 East, 581; 6 R. R. 516.

In ascertaining the general average contribution to be paid by the shipowner in respect of goods jettisoned, the value of such goods is to be taken to be the sum which it may fairly be assumed they would have been worth to the owner at the port of adjustment. If, from the circumstances, and the damaged condition of the rest of the cargo, it may fairly be assumed that the jettisoned goods would, if they had not been thrown overboard, have arrived in the like damaged condition, their value is to be taken to be the sum they would have realised as damaged goods. Fletcher v. Alexander, 37 L. J., C. P. 193; L. R. 3 C. P. 375; 18 L. T. 432; 16 W. R. 803.

A ship sailed from Liverpool for Calcutta with 2,000 tons of salt on board, all belonging to one merchant. The day after she sailed the ship struck on a bank on the Irish coast, and after throwing overboard 1,000 tons of the salt, was got off and put back to Liverpool, where the remainder of the cargo was unloaded and found to be all (with the exception of about 100 tons) so damaged as to be nearly unfit to be forwarded, and worthless. The charterer had paid 1,250*l.* in advance for freight. In an action by the owner against an underwriter on the ship, to recover a general average contribution in respect of the salt so jettisoned:—Held, that in ascertaining the contribution to be paid by the shipowner to the owner of the cargo, in respect of the salt jettisoned, it was to be valued at the price which it would have been worth at Liverpool had it been brought back there, the average-stater taking into account the probability of its arriving at the port of adjustment in a sound or damaged state, or in a state in which it could have been forwarded, so as to take advantage of the prepaid freight. Ib.

Stores.]—Provisions and stores for the use of convicts on board a ship chartered for their conveyance to New South Wales are not subject to general average. Brown v. Stapleton, 12 Moore, C. P. 334; 4 Bing. 119; 5 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 121; 29 R. R. 524.

Valuation of Goods—Advance Freight—Memorandum—Amount on which particular Average Loss calculated.]—Insurance on goods valued at 7,940*l.* "including 1,361*l.* 6*s.* for advance on freight; with warranty against particular average unless the ship be stranded. There was a stranding, and particular average loss:—Held, that the policy was one policy upon valued goods, and not a policy on advanced freight, and that the particular average loss was to be calculated upon the whole 7,940*l.* Thames and Mersey Marine Insurance Co. v. Pitts, [1893] 1 Q. B. 476; 5 R. 168; 68 L. T. 524; 41 W. R. 346; 7 Asp. M. C. 302.

—— Invoice Price.]—The value of the goods for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of an average loss is their fair invoice price—per Buller, J. Dick v. Allen, 1 Park, Ins. (8th ed.) 226.

—— Premiums included in Value of Goods.]—An assurer has goods worth 80*l.* 14*s.*; he pays premium 17*l.* 6*s.*, which makes his interest 98*l.* He may insure for 100*l.*, abating 2*l.* per cent.; so that upon a loss he recovers 98*l.*, the value of his interest including premium. Tuite v. Royal Exchange Assurance Co., 1 Park, Ins. (8th ed.) 224.

Amount of Loss—Expenses of Sale of Damaged Cargo—Question for Jury.]—Where, in an action on a policy of assurance, the jury found a verdict for an average loss, the court will not interfere or grant a new trial on the ground that it should have been left to the jury to determine whether the expenses of the sale of the damaged cargo should be borne by the underwriters or not; that fact being in the discretion of the arbitrator, by whom the amount of the loss was to be ascertained. Hudson v. Majoribanks, 7 Moore, 463.

c. Effect of.

Condition precedent to Action.]—Where losses were to be paid in three months after an adjustment by committee of the insurers, and the committee refused to adjust upon the request of the insured:—Held, he might sue on the policy, notwithstanding there had been no adjustment. Strong v. Harvey, 3 Bing. 304; 11 Moore, 72; 4 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 57.

Where Fraud or Concealment.]—An adjustment is not binding on an underwriter, although at the time of signing it he had the means of rendering himself acquainted with the history of the voyage and the manner of the loss, if his intention was not then drawn to circumstances he afterwards learns, by which the underwriters were discharged. Shepherd v. Chewter, 1 Camp. 274; 10 R. R. 681.

Although an adjustment is not conclusive evidence against an underwriter, it is so unless fraud or a misconception of the law or facts upon which it is made is proved. Christian v. Coombe, 2 Esp. 489. Rogers v. Maylor, Peake's Add. Cas. 37. And see Sheriff v. Potts, 5 Esp. 26.

A., as agent for a foreign owner, entered into a policy on a ship. At the time of effecting the insurance, A. was in possession of a letter from the captain, informing him that the ship had received injury, which fact he, without fraudulent intention to deceive, omitted to disclose to the underwriters. The ship was lost, and B., one of the underwriters, paid to A. his amount of the insurance; but having subsequently become acquainted with the above circumstance brought an action against him to recover it back. A., before he was aware of B.'s intention to dispute the policy, and acting bonâ fide throughout, transmitted to his principal the money he had received from the various underwriters; with the exception of a certain amount for which he had allowed the principal credit in a settled account, and of another which, with the authority of the principal, he had expended in a suit brought by him on behalf of the principal against C., another underwriter on the policy:—Held, first, that in consequence of the concealment from the underwriters of the fact stated in the captain's letter, the policy was voidable at the election of the underwriters. Holland v. Russell, 4 B. & S. 14; 32 L. J., Q. B. 297; 8 L. T. 468; 11 W. R. 757—Ex. Ch. Affirming 7 Jur. (N.S.) 842.

Held, secondly, that A. being only an agent, of which B. was aware, and having, without notice of B.'s intention to repudiate the contract, paid over to his principal the amount received from the underwriters, B. was not entitled to recover back from A. his amount of the insurance. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that there was no difference in this respect between the money actually paid over by A. to his principal, and the moneys which had either been allowed in account between them or expended in the suit against C. Ib.

—— Estoppel.]—An underwriter, who upon full disclosure of facts, has signed his initials to an adjustment on the policy, without paying the loss, is not precluded afterwards from taking advantage of circumstances with which he had been made acquainted before signing the adjustment. Herbert v. Champion, 1 Camp. 134; 10 R. R. 657.

After a total loss and an adjustment, and whilst the policy remained in the hands of the broker, the initials of the insurer were struck out of the adjustment to indicate payment, and the broker debited the insurer with the loss:—Held, that the insurer was still liable to the assured, as the principal was never estopped from recovering the amount, unless there was actual payment to the broker, or a credit given. Jell v. Pratt, 2 Stark. 67.

A ship was insured warranted free from capture in port. A letter announcing her capture stated it to be in port, on which the underwriter and assured adjusted, the former returned, and the latter received back the premium. It afterwards appeared the capture was not in port:—Held, that the assured was not precluded by the adjustment and repayment from recovering on the policy, whether the underwriter's name had been struck off the adjustment only, or off the policy also. Reyner v. Hall, 4 Taunt. 725; 14 R. R. 650.

Proof of Satisfaction.]—If a policy is produced by the agent of the plaintiff, through whom it was effected, and the defendant's name is struck out, and has written against it, "adjusted the general and particular averages at 30*l.* 9*s.* per cent."; this is proof that the policy had been adjusted, but not that it had been satisfied: but the plaintiff will not be allowed to go into evidence to shew that some of the sums allowed at the time of the adjustment were too small. Adams v. Saunders, 4 Car. & P. 25; M. & M. 373.

Compensation.]—An insurance was effected on goods on board a ship consigned to Buenos Ayres. The ship, with the cargo, was captured by the Brazilian government, and condemned for an attempted breach of blockade. Notice of the capture was given by the insured to the underwriters, and an offer was made by the insured to abandon. The underwriters declined the offer of abandonment; and after some negotiation it was arranged that, on payment by the underwriters of 35*l.* per cent. on the sum insured, the policy should be delivered up to be cancelled. The percentage was accordingly paid, and the policy cancelled. Some years afterwards, in pursuance of a convention between Great Britain and the Brazilian government, the goods were ordered by the latter government to be restored to the owners, and compensation to be made. A claim was made by the underwriters to the whole or a part of the sum awarded for compensation; but held, that the underwriters having declined the offer of abandonment, the payment of the 35*l.* per cent. was a compromise of their liability under the policy, and that they were not entitled to any portion of the sum awarded for compensation. Brooks v. MacDonnell, 1 Y. & C. 502. See also Burnand v. Rodocanachi, 51 L. J., Q. B. 548; 7 App. Cas. 833; 47 L. T. 277; 31 W. R. 65; 4 Asp. M. C. 576—H. L. (E.)

A. insured goods at Canton by a policy which included jettison among the perils insured against. The goods were jettisoned under circumstances which entitled him to a general average contribution from the owners of the ship and of the rest of the cargo, which arrived safely at London, the port of discharge. A. having sued the underwriters for the whole amount insured, without having first collected the contributions to which he was entitled from the other owners of the ship and cargo:—Held, that he was entitled to recover; and that the underwriters having paid him would be then entitled to stand in his place with respect to the general average contribution. Dickenson v. Jardine, 37 L. J., C. P. 321; L. R. 3 C. P. 639; 18 L. T. 717; 16 W. R. 1169.

Held, also, that the liability of the underwriters under the policy could not be varied by a custom, alleged to exist in the port of London between merchants and underwriters, to hold the latter liable only for the share of the loss cast upon the owner of jettisoned goods in the general average statement. Ib.

Settlement—Parol Evidence.]—By a memorandum indorsed on a policy, it was stated that a particular average loss of 54*l.* per cent. had been settled between the plaintiff (an underwriter) and the defendant:—Held, that parol evidence was admissible to shew, that by a previous arrangement it was agreed that, if the other underwriters paid a less sum, the surplus should be repaid. Russell v. Dunskey, 6 Moore, 233.

Conditional or Absolute.]—The defendant, with several other underwriters, in August, 1814, subscribed a policy on hides from Buenos Ayres to London; the ship was captured, and the plaintiffs abandoned the cargo to the underwriters and claimed a total loss. Some time after the ship was recaptured, and all the underwriters but the defendant, on the 19th October, 1814, adjusted a salvage loss, deducting short interest, to the amount of 64*l.* 18*s.* 3*d.* per cent., which they paid. The defendant, on the 7th February, 1815, adjusted 33*l.* per cent. on account of the subscription to the policy, until the account of the goods insured could be made up, when a final loss was to be paid to the same amount as by the other underwriters, and if the same exceeded 33*l.* per cent. the defendant was to pay the excess; if short, the insured to return the difference:—Held, in an action to recover such loss, that this was a conditional, and not an absolute adjustment, and as the plaintiffs had not proved that the account of the goods insured had been made up, they were not entitled to recover; and that the defendant was not bound by the former adjustment of the other underwriters. Gammon v. Beverley, 1 Moore, 563.

General Average payable per Foreign Statement—Sue and Labour Clause—Stranding—Expense of Discharging, Warehousing and Re-shipping Cargo.]—Two policies of insurances were effected by the owners on ship and freight respectively. Each policy provided that general average should be payable according to foreign statement if in accordance with contract of affreightment, and incorporated the ordinary sue and labour clause. On a voyage from Nicholaieff to Rotterdam the vessel stranded on the island of Malta. The cargo was discharged into lighters and the ship was towed into Malta, repaired, re-loaded and subsequently reached her destination. A general average statement was prepared in Holland, and the proportions due according to the law of Holland in respect of ship, cargo and freight were allocated. The underwriters paid their proportions in respect of ship and freight, but the shipowners failed to recover the cargo's proportion from the owners of the cargo, the courts in Holland having decided that the latter were not liable to contribute, inasmuch as the stranding had been occasioned by the negligence of the master, notwithstanding that the policy on the ship covered loss from such negligence:—Held, that the shipowners were not entitled to recover from the insurers either as a partial loss or under the sue and labour clause, the portion debited according to foreign statement to cargo in respect of the expenses incurred in the operations at Malta and in warehousing and re-shipping the cargo. The Mary Thomas, 63 L. J., Adm. 49; [1894] P. 108; 6 R. 792; 71 L. T. 104; 7 Asp. M. C. 495—C. A.

Part of Goods Saved—Adjustment of Salvage Loss.]—Indigo was insured on a valued policy at and from the loading port to the port of delivery. The ship sank at the loading port, and the indigo being wetted, was sold by auction at a loss of 71*l.* per cent. A verdict was found for the plaintiff as for a total loss, subject to a reference to an arbitration to ascertain the amount of such loss. The arbitrator awarded a loss of 41*l.* 15*s.* 10*d.* per cent. on the defendant's subscription. The court refused to set aside this award, although it appeared that the indigo was dried by the purchasers and shipped to the port of delivery, where it was sold at a small loss on its value as uninjured. Hardy v. Innes, 6 Moore, 574; 23 R. R. 630.

Adjustment—Recovery on.]—The underwriter signed an indorsement on the policy: "Adjusted this loss at fifty pounds per cent., to pay in one month"—the word "fifty" being struck out and "forty" inserted by the underwriter, the assured protesting against the alteration:—Held, that the assured could recover the 40 per cent. loss upon the adjustment. Hewett v. Fleeney, Beawes, Lex Mercator (5th ed.) 333.

Adjustment primâ facie Evidence of Loss.]—An underwriter adjusts a loss in these words:—"Adjusted the loss at 98 per cent., which I agree to pay one month after date":—Held, that no proof of loss was necessary. Hogg v. Gouldney, Beawes, Lex Mercator. 310; 1 Park, Ins. (8th ed.) 266.

d. Payment.

Discharge of Underwriter — Custom as to Settlement with Broker.] — An assured residing at Glasgow employed an insurance broker in London to recover a loss from the underwriter. The loss was settled in part by the underwriter setting off in account against it a debt due to him from the broker for premiums, and as to the residue, by his paying the broker in cash, and the underwriter then erased his name from the policy. The broker became bankrupt, and never paid the loss to the assured. Evidence was given of a usage, that an adjustment payment was generally in a month, and that the practice between the broker and the underwriter was to set off in account between them the amount of premiums due to the underwriter against the loss:—Held, first, that the underwriter was not entitled to treat the set-off in account between him and the broker as payment to the assured, the latter not being bound by a usage which he did not know of. Scott v. Irving, 1 B. & Ad. 605; 9 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 89.

Held, secondly, that the assured could not recover the sum which the underwriter had paid in money to the broker within the month, that being made to the broker pursuant to the general authority given to him by the assured. Ib.

So held in another case, where the assured lived at Plymouth, that the set-off in account between the underwriter and the broker was not payment to the assured, inasmuch as the broker had only authority to receive payment for the assured in money: that the custom which prevailed at Lloyd's coffee house was not binding on the assured, who were not proved to be cognisant of it, or to have assented to it; and that the erasure of the name of the underwriter from the policy, not having been done with the consent of the assured, did not discharge the former. Bartlett v. Pentland, 10 B. & C. 760; 8 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 264.

An insurance broker, as agent of the assured, is only entitled to received payment for them from the underwriters in money; and a custom to set off the general balance due from such broker to the underwriters in the settlement of a particular loss is illegal, as it in fact amounts to an attempt to pay the debt of one person with the money of another. Todd v. Reid, 4 B. & Ald. 210.

The plaintiff, a shipowner, employed brokers to effect an insurance upon his ship, and the brokers accordingly insured the ship at Lloyd's coffee house with the defendant. The policy was left with the brokers for safe custody. The ship was lost. Afterwards the plaintiff took the ship's papers to the brokers for the purpose of having the loss adjusted with the underwriters. The loss was adjusted, and the sum payable by the defendant, amounting to less than 50*l.*, was placed to his debit by the brokers in their books, in an account current between them. The defendant placed the like sum to the credit of the brokers in his books, and afterwards, before the end of the year, gave them fresh credit to an amount exceeding 50*l*. A credit note was sent to the plaintiff by the brokers. It was admitted that there was a custom or usage at Lloyd's, between the brokers and underwriters, to settle losses in this manner, and the jury found that the custom was generally known to merchants and shipowners effecting insurances, and it was admitted on behalf of the defendant that the plaintiff was ignorant of the custom :—Held, that the plaintiff was not bound by the custom, and therefore he was entitled to recover the amount of the policy from the defendant as underwriter. Sweeting v. Pearce, 9 C. B. (N.S.) 534 ; 30 L. J., C. P. 109 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 800 ; 5 L. T. 79 ; 9 W. R. 343—Ex. Ch.

When an insurance broker has been employed to receive money for his principal in the general course of his business, and where the known general course of business is for the broker to keep a running account with the principal, and to credit him with sums which he may have received by credits in account with debtors (with whom he also keeps running accounts), and not merely with moneys actually received, the original debtor is discharged, and the broker becomes the debtor according to the meaning and intention and with the authority of the principal. Stewart v. Aberdein, 4 M. & W. 211 ; 1 H. & H. 284 ; 7 L. J., Ex. 292.

The agents of the assured having, in accordance with the usage, adjusted the amount of the loss with the broker of the underwriter, and received from him a credit note for the amount, to be paid in a month, the broker having funds of the underwriter in his hands sufficient to meet the amount, but after it was due becoming insolvent :—Held, that the underwriter was not discharged. Macfarlane v. Giannacopulo, 3 H. & N. 860 ; 28 L. J., Ex. 72.

Set off — Premiums due to Executors of Assured.]—There is no right either at law or in equity to deduct a loss on a policy, underwritten by a testator with a broker, from the amount due to the executors for premiums from the same broker, though the circumstances are such as in case of bankruptcy would support a plea of mutual credit. Beckwith v. Bullen, 8 El. & Bl. 683 ; 27 L. J., Q. B. 162 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 558 ; 6 W. R. 286.

A custom that, in case of the death of an underwriter, the premiums should be retained till all the risks had run off, might give such a right. Ib.

But the court, where it had power to draw inferences of fact from the evidence, drew the inference that such a custom did not exist at Lloyd's. Ib.

Contract between Shipowner in Ireland and Underwriter in England.]—The plaintiff, owner of a vessel belonging to the port of Belfast, instructed N., a Belfast insurance agent, to effect a policy of insurance on the vessel ; the insurance agent, through his London agent R., effected the policy in London with the defendants, and the owner paid N. the premium in Belfast, and there received the policy from him. The defendants alleged that they carried on business at Lloyd's, in the city of London only ; that they neither accepted risks, received premiums, paid losses, nor had any agents out of London ; that the policy was underwritten at Lloyd's in consequence of a proposal made by R. at Lloyd's ; that the premium was paid and the policy delivered by and to R. in London ; that they did not, nor did N. or any other person on their behalf, receive the premium or deliver the policy at Belfast, and that, in accordance with a well-known custom of Lloyd's, any money which might become due under the policy was payable at Lloyd's, and not elsewhere. The plaintiff alleged that he had no notice or knowledge of that custom before effecting the policy. The defendants refused to pay the amount of the policy to the plaintiff :—Held, that the plaintiff, who had no knowledge or notice of the alleged custom before effecting the policy, was not bound thereby ; that the defendants were bound to pay the amount (if any) due on the policy to the plaintiff in Belfast ; that the nonpayment constituted a breach of their contract with the plaintiff, within the jurisdiction, and that he was entitled to an order for leave to serve a writ to recover the amount of the policy on the defendants out of the jurisdiction. Ward v. Harris, 8 L. R., Ir. 365—C. A.

Payment by Mistake—Recovery back.]—If the amount due upon a loss has been paid with full knowledge of the facts, it cannot be recovered back upon the ground of mistake of law. Bilbie v. Lumley, 2 East, 469 ; 6 R. R. 479. But see Buller v. Harrison, post, col. 1341.

5. Expenses—Sue and Labour Clause.

Cattle—"Mortality from Any Cause whatsoever"—Extra Fodder at Port of Refuge.]—Live cattle were insured under a policy of marine insurance against "all risks, including mortality from any cause whatsoever." During the voyage the vessel on which the cattle were shipped was compelled by perils of the sea to put into a port of refuge for repairs, and in consequence of the delay so occasioned it became necessary to provide an additional supply of fodder for the cattle. In an action against the underwriters to recover the expense of the extra fodder, under the suing and labouring clause in the policy :—Held, that the assured were entitled to recover. The Pomeranian, 65 L. J., Adm. 39 ; [1895] P. 349.

Drying Rice.]—See Francis v. Boulton, supra, col. 1235.

Salvage and Repairs.]—General average and salvage do not come within either the words or the object of the suing and labouring clause of a policy of marine insurance. Aitchison v. Lohre, 49 L. J., Q. B. 123 ; 4 App. Cas. 755 ; 41 L. T. 323 ; 28 W. R. 1 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 168—H. L. (E.)

Salvage expenses are not assessed upon the quantum meruit principle, but on the general principle of maritime law, rewarding persons who by great and perhaps dangerous exertions bring in a ship, for which exertions, if not successful, nothing would have been paid. Ib.

The assured who had not abandoned, but had elected to repair, after damage sustained from perils of the sea, was held, therefore, not entitled to recover under that clause the expenses of salvage. Ib.

Deduction of One-third.]—But held that, up to the amount insured, he was entitled to recover the cost of repair, with the reduction of one-third new for old, even although the amount calculated upon that principle should exceed the amount that would be payable upon a total loss with benefit of salvage, and should equal the whole sum insured. Ib.

The ship "Crimea" was insured with the defendant for 1,200*l.*, being valued in the policy at 2,600*l.* It encountered very bad weather and was in danger of sinking: it was rescued by a steamer, which obtained from the Irish court of admiralty 800*l.* as salvage money. The owner did not abandon, but elected to repair. The defendant's proportion of the repair expenses amounted (after the deduction of one-third new for old) to 1,200*l.*, the full sum he had insured, and he was held liable to that amount; but was held not to be liable to any part of the salvage expenses. Ib.

The expenses which may be recovered by the assured under the suing and labouring clause in a policy free of particular average, are confined to the expenses which are necessary to avert a total loss, for which the insurer would be liable. Meyer v. Ralli, 45 L. J., C. P. 741; 1 C. P. D. 358; 35 L. T. 838; 24 W. R. 963; 3 Asp. M. C. 324.

When a ship partially damaged has been repaired by the owners, the insurers are only liable to the amount of two-thirds of the cost of repair, unless circumstances are shewn to take the case out of the ordinary rule of deduction of one-third for the benefit of the owners from the repairs. Poingdestre v. Royal Exchange Assurance Co., Ry. & M. 378; 27 R. R. 759.

Where a ship has been repaired, the underwriters are not entitled to the usual deductions of one-third, new for old, the ship not having been put into the free possession of the owner again. Da Costa v. Newnham, 2 Term Rep. 407.

If a new ship is insured "on a voyage from Bristol to New York, during her stay there, and back to her port of discharge," and on her passage back from New York to England sustains an injury, which requires repairs, the underwriter is not entitled to deduct one-third new for old, as the whole is to be considered only one voyage. Fenwick v. Robinson, 3 Car. & P. 323.

A new ship was chartered and insured from London to New South Wales, and the freight made payable on her arrival there. Being unable to procure homeward freight, she went to Madras, and there took in freight to England, and a fresh policy was entered into. The ship was lost on the homeward voyage; the route being a common one for ships chartered to New South Wales:—Held, that the ship was on her first voyage, and that, consequently, the underwriters were not entitled to a new-for-old deduction of one-third. Pirie v. Steele, 2 M. & Rob. 49; 8 Car. & P. 200.

The rule of deducting one-third new for old, after the first voyage, has grown up to prevent controversy. Ib.

A policy contained the following clause: "The usual deduction of one-third of the amount of repairs will not be made by this company in the case of ships built within the limits of the United Kingdom, until after eighteen months, or in the case of colonial-built ships until after twelve months from the date of the builder's certificate, but after such dates respectively the deduction will be made." By custom underwriters make a deduction of one-third new for old only in respect of repairs made after the first voyage of a vessel:—Held, that the expression "usual deduction," had reference to the quantum only, and that in the case of a colonial-built ship the underwriters were entitled to make the deduction of one-third after twelve months from the date of the builder's certificate although the ship had not completed her first voyage. Byrne v. Mercantile Insurance Co., 4 H. & C. 506.

An Irish policy is not controlled by a practice prevailing in the Humber, that all ships are considered new ships, so as to exclude the rule of deducting one-third new for old, if they are less than twelve months old. Thompson v. Hunter, cited, 2 M. & Rob. 51.

Owner Selling instead of Repairing—Mode of estimating Liability.]—Where a ship that is insured is injured by perils insured against, and the owner instead of repairing sells her during the continuance of the risk, the loss to be made good by the underwriters depends on the depreciation in the value of the ship, and not on the amount that it would have cost to repair her with an allowance in respect of new materials for old. The estimated cost of repairs, though rejected as a direct measure of loss, might be the measure of the difference between the ship's sound and damaged values, if no other means can be found for arriving at the loss really sustained. The depreciation in value is to be ascertained by taking the value of the ship (if sound) at the port of distress, and her value there in her damaged condition. To ascertain the liability of the insurers, the proportion so arrived at should be applied to the real value of the ship at the commencement of the risk, if the policy be open, or to the agreed value if the policy be valued (Brett, L.J., dissenting). Pitman v. Universal Marine Insurance Co., 51 L. J., Q. B. 561; 9 Q. B. D. 192; 46 L. T. 863; 30 W. R. 906; 4 Asp. M. C. 544—C.A.

Held, by Brett, L.J., that the matter against which the owner was indemnified was the cost of repairs, and not any diminution in the salable value of the ship, and that therefore loss or gain by the sale of the ship was outside the contract of insurance, and was not a matter to be considered between the assured and the underwriter in adjusting either a total or a partial loss on the ship. Ib.

On Sale by Court.]—A ship, the "M.," was insured "including the risk of running down or doing damage to any other vessel, the same as the Indemnity Company's policy," valued at 3,000*l.* The Indemnity Company's running-down clause is, that if the ship, by negligence, shall run down any other vessel, "and the assured shall thereby become liable to pay, and shall pay, any sum not exceeding the value of the ship or vessel" (assured) "and her freight, by or in pursuance of judgment of any court of law or equity," the insurers shall pay "such proportion of three-fourths of the sum so paid as aforesaid, as the sum hereby assured shall bear to the value of the ship or vessel hereby assured, and her freight." The "M.," through negligence, ran down another vessel. She was sold under a decree of the court of admiralty, and the proceeds paid over for satisfying the damage. It was admitted that the insured lost his ship, which was of the value of 3,000*l.* and upwards, it being sold against his will, but that the proceeds which were paid over were only 2,110*l.*:—Held, that the underwriters were bound to make good three-fourths of the proceeds actually paid, viz. 2,110*l.*, and not three-fourths of the value of the ship. Thompson v. Reynolds, 7 El. & Bl. 172; 26 L. J., Q. B. 93; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 464.

Costs of Salvage.]—The plaintiff agreed with one W. for a sum of 10,000*l.* to transport the obelisk known as "Cleopatra's needle" from Alexandria to London, and there to erect it upon some public site to be afterwards selected. To cover the expenses (about 4,000*l.*) plaintiff caused two policies to be effected with the respective defendants "upon the goods and merchandises in the good ship or vessel called the "Cleopatra" iron vessel containing the obelisk . . . valued at 4,000*l.* . . . against the risks of total loss only"; the risks insured against being the ordinary sea-risks, and the suing and labouring clause being in the usual form. In the course of the voyage the "Cleopatra" got adrift in the Bay of Biscay; and was ultimately picked up by another steamer and carried into Ferrol, where the salvors detained her under a claim of salvage. The admiralty division awarded them 2,000*l.* and costs. In actions upon the policies:—Held, that under the suing and labouring clause, the assured was entitled to recover the 2,000*l.* awarded to the salvors, but not the costs of the proceedings in the admiralty court, nor the expenses incurred by him in refitting the "Cleopatra" at Ferrol and towing her to London. Dixon v. Whitworth, 48 L. J., C. P. 538; 4 C. P. D. 371; 40 L. T. 718; 28 W. R. 184; 4 Asp. M. C. 326.

Life Salvage—Lloyd's Policy—Liability of Underwriter.]—Life salvage paid by a shipowner under s. 544 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, cannot be recovered from an underwriter under a Lloyd's policy in the usual form with the running down clause attached. Nourse v. Liverpool Sailing Shipowners' Association, 65 L. J., Q. B. 507; [1896] 2 Q. B. 16; 74 L. T. 543; 44 W. R. 500; 8 Asp. M.C. 144—C.A.

Owner altering Obsolete Ship at less Cost instead of Reinstating.]—A ship, insured on a time policy, had above her main deck a saloon deck for passengers. During the time covered by the policy, the saloon deck was destroyed by fire. At the time of the fire the ship was engaged in carrying cargo, being obsolete as a passenger ship and useless for passenger traffic. After the expiration of the policy the ship was converted into a cargo-carrying ship, and the saloon deck for passengers was not reinstated. The cost of converting the ship was less than the cost of the reinstatement of the saloon deck would have been. The ship, after the alteration, was as valuable for sale or use as she was before the accident. In an action by the shipowners against the underwriters, to recover the cost of reinstatement of the saloon deck:—Held, that as the shipowners were not entitled to recover more than they had lost, they were not entitled to recover the cost of reinstatement, but only the actual cost of converting the ship. Bristol Steam Navigation Co. v. Indemnity Mutual Marine Insurance Co., 57 L. T. 101; 6 Asp. M. C. 173.

Costs and Damages.]—The ship "A.." insured in a club, by one of the conditions of which it was provided, that, "in case of damage or loss by contract which any ship in this association may do to others, this society shall be liable to contribute its proportion, but not beyond the sum insured, and also law costs given in any suit or action defended by the previous consent in writing of the managers upon this policy," ran into, and damaged the ship "B." The owners of the injured vessel caused the ship "A." to be arrested under process from the admiralty court; whereupon her owner and the club, in order to procure her release, agreed that they or one of them would pay them "the amount of damage which the ship 'B.' had received from the collision, and also the costs of the proceedings in the court of admiralty against the ship," to be ascertained, in case of dispute, by Mr. Richards, the average-stater:—Held, that the ship "B.," meant the owners of the ship "B.," and that they were entitled to recover the same measure of damages under the agreement that they would have been entitled to in the proceedings in the admiralty court; viz. the expenses of repairing their vessel, the costs incurred in the arrest and detention of the "A." and the loss of freight during the time the "B.'s" repairs were going on. Heard v. Holman, 19 C. B. (N.S.) 1; 34 L. J., C. P. 239; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 544; 12 L. T. 455; 13 W. R. 745.

A policy on a vessel in the ordinary form of a Lloyd's policy, with the usual suing and labouring clause, had a collision clause attached to it, by which the assurers agreed that in case the vessel should by accident or negligence run down or damage any other vessel, and the assured should thereby become liable to pay and should pay as damages any sum not exceeding the value of the vessel assured and her freight, by the judgment of any court given in a suit defended with the previous consent in writing of the assurers, they would pay such proportion of three-fourths of the sum so paid by the assured as the sum insured on the vessel bore to the value of such vessel and her freight. The assured having afterwards successfully defended, with the written consent of the assurers, a suit in a consular court abroad, in which the assured vessel was charged with negligence in running down another vessel, brought an action against an underwriter of such policy for his proportion of the costs incurred by the assured in defending such suit:—Held, that the assured was not entitled in such action to recover such costs, either on the policy under the collision, or suing and labouring clauses, or on the common count for money paid. Xenos v. Fox, 38 L. J., C. P. 351; L. R. 4 C. P. 665; 17 W. R. 893—Ex. Ch.

Costs of Compromise.]—Insurers are liable to pay the charge of a compromise bonâ fide made to prevent the ship from being condemned as lawful prize. Berens v. Rucker, 1 W. Bl. 313.

Cargo in Separate Packages—Damage to certain Packages only—Expense of examining sound Packages.]—Where a cargo of several packages is insured, and some of the packages are damaged by a peril of the sea, the shipper is not entitled to recover from the underwriters the expense of examining the whole cargo to ascertain which of the packages have been damaged. His claim must be restricted to the packages which have in fact been damaged and the expenses incurred in the examination and sale of them; the underwriters are accountable only for the direct operation of sea damage and not for consequential results; they do not guarantee that the goods shall be free from suspicion. Lysaght v. Coleman, 64 L. J., Q. B. 175; [1895] 1 Q. B. 49; 14 R. 22; 71 L. T. 830; 7 Asp. M. C. 552—C. A.

Expenses of Preserving and Forwarding Goods.]—A ship, with a cargo of palm oil for Liverpool, was stranded near Pwllheli, on the coast of Wales. It became necessary to land the cargo there, and this was properly done. The ship, after some temporary repair on the beach, was towed to Carnarvon, the nearest port, and there repaired so as to be seaworthy for the completion of the voyage. The oil was forwarded by railway to Liverpool, at a cost to the shipowner of 212*l.* 15*s.* 1*d.*; and the freight was received by him. The oil might have been kept at Pwllheli until the ship was repaired, and then re-shipped at T., a place about seven miles from Pwllheli. This would have been a reasonable course to adopt, and it would have cost 70*l.* In an action against the insurers on freight:—Held, that the shipowner, having incurred expense for the purpose of averting a loss of freight, was entitled to recover, under the suing and labouring clause, so much thereof as was reasonably incurred; and that the proper measure was the sum it would have cost to re-ship the oil at T. Lee v. Southern Insurance Co., 39 L. J., C. P. 218; L. R. 5 C. P. 397; 22 L. T. 443; 18 W. R. 863.

In a policy under the suing and labouring clause, may be recovered all expenses which have been incurred for the purpose of averting a loss or damage to the subject-matter of insurance, and not merely those expenses which are incurred where the insured abandons the subject-matter insured, and tries to save what has become the property of the insurers; and the effect of a warranty against particular average is merely to limit the operation of the insurance to a total loss of the subject-matter, and is not to prevent a recovery under the suing and labouring clause of extraordinary expense which may be incurred in preserving it. Kidston v. Empire Marine Insurance Co., 36 L. J., C. P. 156; L. R. 2 C. P. 357; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 665; 16 L. T. 119; 15 W. R. 769—Ex. Ch.

A., having chartered his vessel for a voyage, insured the chartered freight with B. by a policy containing a warranty against particular average and the usual suing and labouring clause. The ship was lost, and the goods landed, warehoused, and sent on at a less freight from an intermediate port:—Held, that there was a total loss of freight at the intermediate port, unless it could be averted by such forwarding; that such forwarding was a particular charge within the suing and labouring clause, and did not convert the total into a partial loss within the warranty against particular average, and that A. was therefore entitled to recover the expense of such forwarding from B. in an action on the policy. Ib.

A ship during her voyage from India to London was stranded on the coast of France. The shipowner dispatched his manager and other persons to take part in the necessary salvage operations, and the whole of the cargo was saved, transhipped, and brought forward to London and the freight earned. Part of the cargo which could not be identified was sold by the shipowner by arrangement with the consignees through a broker, who received his brokerage. The shipowner incurred considerable trouble in chartering ships to carry on the cargo from France to London, and in sending out lighters and necessary appliances to France, and in the identification of the cargo, preparing for the sale, and answering the inquiries of and arranging with the consignees. In the average statement a remuneration to the shipowner for "arranging for salvage operations, receiving cargo, meeting and arranging with consignees, and receiving and paying proceeds, and generally conducting the business," was charged partly to general average, and partly as particular average on the several interests ratably, the average-stater thinking that the amount was a reasonable remuneration to the shipowner for his services and for commission on the sale of unidentified cargo, and on disbursements:—Held, that under the circumstances the amount was improperly charged and could not be recovered, there being no contract on the part of the owners of the cargo to remunerate the shipowner for his services, a great part of which had been rendered with the object of earning his freight. Schuster v. Fletcher, 47 L. J., Q. B. 530; 3 Q. B. D. 418; 38 L. T. 605; 26 W. R. 756; 3 Asp. M. C. 577.

Where goods are insured by a policy in the ordinary form, the expression "warranted free from particular average" is not confined to losses arising from injury to, or deterioration of, the goods themselves, but is equivalent to a stipulation against total loss and general average only; and, consequently, includes expenses incurred in relation to the goods. Great Indian Peninsular Ry. v. Saunders, 2 B. & S. 266; 31 L. J., Q. B. 206; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 198; 6 L. T. 297; 10 W. R. 520—Ex. Ch.
